

ENCYCLOPEDIA OF MORMONISM

---

EDITORIAL BOARD

EDITOR IN CHIEF

Daniel H. Ludlow
Brigham Young University

SENIOR EDITORS

Robert J. Matthews
Brigham Young University

Charles D. Tate, Jr.
Brigham Young University

Robert K. Thomas
Brigham Young University

EDITORS

Stan L. Albrecht
Brigham Young University

S. Kent Brown
Brigham Young University

Richard L. Bushman
Columbia University

Ronald K. Esplin
Brigham Young University

Addie Fuhriman
University of Utah

Jeanne B. Inouye
Provo, Utah

Truman G. Madsen
Brigham Young University

Terrance D. Olson
Brigham Young University

Larry C. Porter
Brigham Young University

Noel B. Reynolds
Brigham Young University

John W. Welch
Brigham Young University

PROJECT COORDINATOR

Doris Bayly Brower

ENCYCLOPEDIA OF MORMONISM

---

Edited by Daniel H. Ludlow

Volume 1

The History, Scripture, Doctrine, and Procedure of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints

Macmillan Publishing Company
New York

Maxwell Macmillan Canada
Toronto

Maxwell Macmillan International
New York Oxford Singapore Sydney

Copyright © 1992 by Macmillan Publishing Company
A Division of Macmillan, Inc.

All rights reserved. No part of this book may be reproduced or transmitted in any form or by any means, electronic or mechanical, including photocopying, recording, or by any information storage and retrieval system, without permission in writing from the Publisher.

Macmillan Publishing Company
866 Third Avenue, New York, NY 10022

Maxwell Macmillan Canada, Inc.
1200 Eglinton Avenue East, Suite 200, Don Mills, Ontario M3C 3N1

Library of Congress Catalog Card No.:91-34255

Printed in the United States of America printing number

4 5 6 7 8 9 10

Macmillan Inc. is part of the Maxwell Communication Group of Companies.

Library of Congress Cataloging-in-Publication Data

Encyclopedia of Mormonism/edited by Daniel H. Ludlow.

p. cm.

Includes bibliographical references and index.

ISBN 0-02-879605-5 (4 vol. set).—ISBN 0-02-904040-X (5 vol. set).—ISBN 0-02-879600-4 (v. 1)

1. Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints—Encyclopedias.

2. Mormon Church—Encyclopedias. 3. Mormons—Encyclopedias.

I. Ludlow, Daniel H.

BX8605.5.E62 1992

289.3'03—dc20

91-34255

CIP

The paper used in this publication meets the minimum requirements of American National Standard for Information Sciences—Permanence of Paper for Printed Library Materials. ANSI Z39.48-1984.

---

EDITORIAL AND PRODUCTION STAFF

Philip Friedman
Publisher

Elly Dickason
Editor in Chief

Karin K. Vanderveer
Assistant Editor

Scott Kurtz
Special Project Editor

Jonathan Aretakis   Leland S. Lowther   Elizabeth I. Wilson
Copy Editors

William D. Drennan   Steven van Leeuwen   Donald Spanel
Proofreaders

AEIOU Indexers
Index

Terri Dieli
Production Manager

---

CONTENTS

List of Articles	ix
List of Contributors	xxxv
Preface	lxi
Acknowledgments	lxiii
Synoptic Outline	lxv
Key to Abbreviations	lxxxviii
Encyclopedia of Mormonism	1
Appendix 1 Biographical Register of General Church Officers	1631
Appendix 2 A Chronology of Church History	1652
Appendix 3 Church Periodicals	1659
Appendix 4 Doctrinal Expositions of the First Presidency	1665
Appendix 5 General Church Officers, A Chronology	1678
Appendix 6 A Selection of LDS Hymns	1686
Appendix 7 Joseph Smith Translation of the Bible (Selections)	1709
Appendix 8 Letters of the First Presidency	1724
Appendix 9 Letters of the Presiding Bishopric	1735
Appendix 10 Lines of Priesthood Authority	1739
Appendix 11 Temple Dedicatory Prayers (Excerpts)	1742
Appendix 12 The Wentworth Letter	1750
Appendix 13 Church Membership Figures	1756
Glossary	1764
Index	1775

---

LIST OF ARTICLES

AARON, BROTHER OF MOSES	Edward J. Brandt
AARONIC PRIESTHOOD
Powers and Offices	VerDon W. Ballantyne
Restoration	Larry C. Porter
ABEL	Steven D. Bennion
ABINADI	Lew W. Cramer
ABORTION	Mary K. Beard
ABRAHAM	E. Douglas Clark
ABRAHAMIC COVENANT	Ellis T. Rasmussen
ABUSE, SPOUSE AND CHILD	Jeanne B. Inouye
	Robert K. Thomas
	Harold R. Laycock
ACADEMIES	C. Terry Warner
ACCOUNTABILITY	Perry H. Cunningham
ACTIVITY IN THE CHURCH
ADAM
LDS Sources	Arthur A. Bailey
Ancient Sources	Martin J. Palmer
ADAMIC LANGUAGE	John S. Robertson
ADAM-ONDI-AHMAN	LaMar C. Berrett
ADOPTION OF CHILDREN	Ryan L. Thomas
ADULTERY	Bryce J. Christensen
AFRICA, THE CHURCH IN	E. Dale LeBaron
AFTERLIFE	June Leifson
AGENCY	C. Terry Warner
AGRICULTURE	Dean L. May
AHMAN	Edward J. Brandt
AIDS	Robert L. Leake
ALCOHOLIC BEVERAGES AND ALCOHOLISM	Joseph Lynn Lyon
ALLEGORY OF ZENOS	L. Gary Lambert
ALMA <sub>1</sub>	L. Gary Lambert
ALMA <sub>2</sub>	Robert L. Millet
ALMANACS	Dell Van Orden
ALTAR	Bruce H. Porter
AMEN	Daniel B. McKinlay
AMULEK	Norbert H. O. Duckwitz
ANCESTRAL FILE™	David M. Mayfield
ANGEL MORONI STATUE	Cory H. Maxwell

ANGELS
Angels	Oscar W. McConkie
Archangels	Jerry C. Giles
Guardian Angels	Oscar W. McConkie
ANIMALS	Sandra Bradford Packard
ANTHON TRANSCRIPT	Danel W. Bachman
ANTICHRISTS	Russell M. Frandsen
ANTI-MORMON PUBLICATIONS	William O. Nelson
ANTIPOLYGAMY LEGISLATION	Ray Jay Davis
APOCALYPTIC TEXTS	C. Wilfred Griggs
APOCRYPHA AND PSEUDEPIGRAPHA	C. Wilfred Griggs
APOSTASY	Todd Compton
APOSTATE	Gilbert W. Scharffs
APOSTLE	S. Kent Brown
APRIL 6	John Franklin Hall
ARCHAEOLOGY	David J. Johnson
ARCHITECTURE	Franklin T. Ferguson
AREA, AREA PRESIDENCY	Perry H. Cunningham
ARIZONA, PIONEER SETTLEMENTS IN	Charles S. Peterson
ARMAGEDDON	V. Daniel Rogers
ARTICLES OF FAITH	David J. Whittaker
ARTIFICIAL INSEMINATION	Frank O. May, Jr.
ARTISTS, VISUAL	Richard G. Oman
ART IN MORMONISM	Martha Moffit Peacock
ASIA, THE CHURCH IN
Asia, East	R. Lanier Britsch
Asia, South and Southeast	R. Lanier Britsch
ASSISTANTS TO THE TWELVE	Byron R. Merrill
ASTRONOMY, SCRIPTURAL REFERENCES TO	Erich Robert Paul
ATONEMENT OF JESUS CHRIST	Jeffrey R. Holland
AUSTRALIA, THE CHURCH IN	William G. Eggington
AUTHORITY	Kim S. Cameron
AUTOPSY	Frank D. Allan
AUXILIARY ORGANIZATIONS	Irene Hewette Ericksen
BALLANTYNE, RICHARD	J. Hugh Baird
BAPTISM	Carl S. Hawkins
BAPTISMAL COVENANT	Jerry A. Wilson
BAPTISMAL PRAYER	Jerry A. Wilson
BAPTISM FOR THE DEAD
LDS Practiee	H. David Burton
Ancient Sources	Krister Stendahl
BAPTISM OF FIRE AND OF THE HOLY GHOST	William S. Bradshaw
BEATITUDES	Thomas W. Mackay
BEEHIVE SYMBOL	Richard G. Oman
BENJAMIN	Stephen D. Ricks
BENSON, EZRA TAFT	Reed A. Benson
	Sheri L. Dew
BIBLE
Bible	Victor L. Ludlow
LDS Belief in the Bible	Paul Hedengren

King James Version	D. Kelly Ogden
LDS Publication of the Bible	William James Mortimer
BIBLE DICTIONARY	Gary P. Gillum
BIBLE SCHOLARSHIP	Stephen E. Robinson
BIOGRAPHY AND AUTOBIOGRAPHY	Maureen Ursenbach Beecher
BIRTH	Helen Lance Christianson
BIRTH CONTROL	Homer S. Ellsworth
BISHOP	Don M. Pearson
BISHOP, HISTORY OF THE OFFICE	William G. Hartley
BISHOPRIC	David C. Bradford
BISHOP'S STOREHOUSE	R. Quinn Gardner
BLACKS	Alan Cherry
	Jessie L. Embry
BLASPHEMY	Gary L. Browning
BLESSING ON FOOD	Christine Quinn Christensen
BLESSINGS	Bruce B. Clark
BLIND, MATERIALS FOR THE	Josiah W. Douglas
BLOOD ATONEMENT	Lowell M. Snow
BLOOD TRANSFUSIONS	Richard A. Nimer
BONNEVILLE INTERNATIONAL CORPORATION	Rodney H. Brady
BOOK OF ABRAHAM
Origin of the Book of Abraham	H. Donl Peterson
Translation and Publication of the Book of Abraham	H. Donl Peterson
Contents of the Book of Abraham	Stephen E. Thompson
Faesimiles from the Book of Abraham	Michael D. Rhodes
Studies About the Book of Abraham	Michael D. Rhodes
BOOK OF COMMANDMENTS	Robert J. Woodford
BOOK OF LIFE	J. Lewis Taylor
BOOK OF MORMON
Overview	Monte S. Nyman
	Lisa Bolin Hawkins
Title Page from the Book of Mormon	Eldin Ricks
First Book of Nephi	Rulon D. Eames
Second Book of Nephi	Terry B. Ball
Book of Jacob	Clyde J. Williams
Book of Enos	Marilyn Arnold
Book of Jarom	Marilyn Arnold
Book of Omni	Marilyn Arnold
The Words of Mormon	Eldin Ricks
Book of Mosiah	Alan Goff
Book of Alma	Cheryl Brown
Book of Helaman	Paul R. Cheesman
Third Nephi	Charles Randall Paul
Fourth Nephi	Rex C. Reeve, Jr.
Book of Mormon	Rex C. Reeve, Jr.
Book of Ether	Morgan W. Tanner
Book of Moroni	S. Michael Wilcox
BOOK OF MORMON, BIBLICAL PROPHECIES ABOUT	Keith H. Meservy

BOOK OF MORMON, GOVERNMENT AND LEGAL HISTORY IN THE
BOOK OF MORMON, HISTORY OF WARFARE IN
BOOK OF MORMON AUTHORSHIP

BOOK OF MORMON IN A BIBLICAL CULTURE
BOOK OF MORMON CHRONOLOGY
BOOK OF MORMON COMMENTARIES
BOOK OF MORMON ECONOMY AND TECHNOLOGY
BOOK OF MORMON EDITIONS (1830–1981)
BOOK OF MORMON GEOGRAPHY
BOOK OF MORMON LANGUAGE
BOOK OF MORMON LITERATURE

BOOK OF MORMON MANUSCRIPTS
BOOK OF MORMON NAMES
BOOK OF MORMON NEAR EASTERN BACKGROUND
BOOK OF MORMON PEOPLES
BOOK OF MORMON PLATES AND RECORDS

BOOK OF MORMON RELIGIOUS TEACHINGS AND PRACTICES
BOOK OF MORMON STUDIES
BOOK OF MORMON TRANSLATION BY JOSEPH SMITH

BOOK OF MORMON TRANSLATIONS
BOOK OF MORMON WITNESSES
BOOK OF MOSES
BOOK OF REMEMBRANCE
BORN IN THE COVENANT
BORN OF GOD
BRANCH, BRANCH PRESIDENT
BRIGHAM YOUNG COLLEGE
BRIGHAM YOUNG UNIVERSITY
Provo, Utah, Campus

Jerusalem Center for Near Eastern Studies
Brigham Young University—Hawaii Campus
BRITISH ISLES, THE CHURCH IN BROADCASTING
BROTHERHOOD
BROTHER OF JARED
BUFFETINGS OF SATAN
BUILDING PROGRAM

BULLETIN
BURIAL
BURNINGS, EVERLASTING

Noel B. Reynolds
William J. Hamblin
D. Brent Anderson
Diane E. Wirth
Timothy L. Smith
John P. Pratt
H. Donl Peterson
Daniel C. Peterson
Royal Skousen
John E. Clark
Brian D. Stubbs
Richard Dilworth Rust
Donald W. Parry
Royal Skousen
Paul Y. Hoskisson
Hugh W. Nibley
John L. Sorenson
Grant R. Hardy
Robert E. Parsons
John W. Welch
Stephen D. Ricks
John W. Welch
Tim Rathbone
Hugh G. Stocks
Richard Lloyd Anderson
Bruce T. Taylor
Cynthia M. Gardner
Ralph L. Cottrell, Jr.
Ed J. Pinegar
Richard O. Cowan
Arnold K. Garr

Eliot A. Butler
Neal E. Lambert
David B. Galbraith
Alton L. Wade
Bryan J. Grant
Bruce L. Christensen
Timothy W. Slover
Rex C. Reeve, Jr.
Dennis D. Flake
Paul L. Anderson
Richard W. Jackson
J. Hugh Baird
Charles D. Tate, Jr.
Rodney Turner

BUSINESS

LDS Attitudes Toward Business
Church Participation in Business

CAIN

CALAMITIES AND DISASTERS

CALIFORNIA, PIONEER SETTLEMENTS IN ## CALLING AND ELECTION

CALLINGS

CANADA, THE CHURCH IN ## CANADA, LDS PIONEER SETTLEMENTS IN ## CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

CARTHAGE JAIL

CATHOLICISM AND MORMONISM

CELEBRATIONS

CELESTIAL KINGDOM

CELIBACY

CENTENNIAL OBSERVANCES

CEREMONIES

CHAPLAINS

CHARITY

CHASTENING

CHASTITY, LAW OF ## CHILDREN

Roles of Children

Blessing of Children

Salvation of Children

CHILDREN'S FRIEND, THE

CHRISTIANS AND CHRISTIANITY

CHRISTMAS

CHRISTOLOGY

CHRISTUS STATUE

CHURCH EDUCATIONAL SYSTEM (CES)

CHURCH OF THE FIRSTBORN

CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER-DAY SAINTS, THE ## CHURCH NEWS

CHURCH AND STATE

CIRCUMCISION

CITY PLANNING

CIVIC DUTIES

CIVIL RIGHTS

CIVIL WAR PROPHECY

CLERGY

CLERK

COFFEE

COLESVILLE, NEW YORK

COLONIZATION

COLORADO, PIONEER SETTLEMENTS IN

Stephen D. Nadauld

Rodney H. Brady

James R. Harris

Reed H. Blake

Ted J. Warner

Roy W. Doxey

Brian L. Pitcher

Richard E. Bennett

Howard Palmer

Stuart W. Hinckley

Donald L. Enders

Alfred Benney

Roger R. Keller

Steven L. Olsen

Susan Easton Black

Dillon K. Inouye

Steven L. Olsen

John P. Hawkins

Robert E. Nelson, Jr.

Addie Fulriman

Gladys Clark Farmer

Bryce J. Christensen

Michaelene P. Grassli

Lowell Bangerter

Calvin P. Rudd

Vivian Paulsen

Roger R. Keller

Mary Ellen Stewart Jamison

Gary P. Gillum

Florence Smith Jacobsen

William E. Berrett

Ivan J. Barrett

Bruce Douglas Porter

"J" Malan Heslop

W. Cole Durham, Jr.

Gordon C. Thomasson

Richard H. Jackson

Mark W. Cannon

Robert E. Riggs

Paul H. Peterson

Roger R. Keller

Jeffrey C. Bateson

Joseph Lynn Lyon

Lamar E. Garrard

Richard L. Jensen

Richard L. Jensen

COLUMBUS, CHRISTOPHER	Louise G. Hanson
COMMANDMENTS	Dix S. Coons
COMMON CONSENT	Robert E. Quinn
COMMUNION	Paul B. Pixton
COMMUNITY	Richard H. Jackson
COMPASSIONATE SERVICE	Hulda P. Young
COMPREHENSIVE HISTORY OF THE CHURCH	Douglas D. Alder
COMPUTER SYSTEMS	Darwin A. John
CONDESCENSION OF GOD	Byron R. Merrill
CONFERENCE REPORTS	Charles D. Tate, Jr. CONFERENCES
Conferences	William Rolfe Kerr
General Conference	M. Dallas Burnett
Stake Conference	Merrill J. Bateman
CONFESSION OF SINS	Doug Sull Choi
CONFIDENTIAL RECORDS	Richard E. Turley, Jr.
CONFIRMATION	Rulon G. Craven
CONSCIENTIOUS OBJECTION	Charles D. Tate, Jr.
CONSECRATION
Law of Consecration	Frank W. Hirschi
Consecration in Ohio and Missouri	Karl Ricks Anderson
CONSTITUTIONAL LAW	Rex E. Lee
CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA	Ralph C. Haneock
CONTENTION	Celia Hokanson
CONTRIBUTOR	Petrea Gillespie Kelly
CONVERSION	Kay H. Smith
CORRELATION OF THE CHURCH, ADMINISTRATION	Frank O. May, Jr.
COUNCIL BLUFFS (KANESVILLE), IOWA	Richard E. Bennett
COUNCIL OF FIFTY	Kenneth W. Godfrey
COUNCIL OF THE FIRST PRESIDENCY AND THE QUORUM
OF THE TWELVE APOSTLES	W. Keith Warner
COUNCIL IN HEAVEN	John L. Lund
COURTS, ECCLESIASTICAL, NINETEENTH-CENTURY	James H. Backman
COVENANT ISRAEL, LATTER-DAY	James B. Mayfield
COVENANTS	Wouter Van Beek
COVENANTS IN BIBLICAL TIMES	George S. Tate
COWDERY, OLIVER	Richard Lloyd Anderson
CREATION, CREATION ACCOUNTS	F. Kent Nielsen
	Stephen D. Ricks
CREEDS	Gary P. Gillum
CREMATION	Bruce L. Olsen
CROSS	Roger R. Keller
CULT	Lawrence A. Young
CUMORAH	David A. Palmer
CUMORAH PAGEANT	Gerald S. Argetsinger
CURRICULUM	Wayne B. Lynn
CURSINGS	Sherwin W. Howard
DAMNATION	Richard Neitzel Holzapfel

DANCE	Phyllis C. Jacobson
DANIEL, PROPHECIES OF	Jeffrey R. Chadwick
DANITES	David J. Whittaker
DATING AND COURTSHIP	Brent C. Miller
	H. Wallace Goddard
DAVID, KING	Norman J. Barlow
DAVID, PROPHETIC FIGURE OF LAST DAYS	Victor L. Ludlow
DEACON, AARONIC PRIESTHOOD	Ronald L. Bramble
DEAD SEA SCROLLS
Overview	Frank Moore Cross, Jr.
LDS Perspective	Robert A. Cloward
DEAF, MATERIALS FOR THE	Douglas L. Hind
DEATH AND DYING	L. Kay Gillespie
DEDICATIONS	Tad R. Callister
DEGREES OF GLORY	Larry E. Dahl
DEIFICATION, EARLY CHRISTIAN	Keith E. Norman
DESERET	Stephen Parker
DESERET, STATE OF	Jeffery Ogden Johnson
DESERET ALPHABET	Samuel C. Monson
DESERET BOOK COMPANY	Eleanor Knowles
DESERET HOSPITAL	Scott Parker
DESERET INDUSTRIES	Michael C. Cannon
DESERET NEWS	Wendell J. Ashton
DEUTERONOMY	Ellis T. Rasmussen
DEVILS	Chauncey C. Riddle
DIPLOMATIC RELATIONS	Martin B. Hickman
DISCERNMENT, GIFT OF	Leon R. Hartshorn
DISCIPLESHIP	Stephen R. Covey
DISCIPLINARY PROCEDURES	Bruce C. Hafen
DISPENSATION OF THE FULNESS OF TIMES	Rand H. Packer
DISPENSATIONS OF THE GOSPEL	Courtney J. Lassetter
DISTRIBUTION CENTERS	John E. Carr
DISTRICT, DISTRICT PRESIDENT	William S. Evans
DIVORCE	Kristen L. Goodman
DOCTRINE
Meaning, Source, and History of Doctrine	M. Gerald Bradford
	Larry E. Dahl
Distinctive Teachings	Alma P. Burton
LDS Doctrine Compared with Other Christian Doctrines	Stephen E. Robinson
Harmonization of Paradox	David L. Paulsen
Treatises on Doctrine	Eleanor Knowles
DOCTRINE AND COVENANTS
Overview	Roy W. Doxey
Contents	C. Max Caldwell
Section 1	George W. Pace
Sections 20–22	Grant Underwood
Section 25	Klis Hale Volkening
Section 42	Victor L. Brown, Sr.

Section 45	C. Max Caldwell
Section 76	Donald Q. Cannon
Section 84	Leaun G. Otten
Section 88	Barbara R. Carter
Section 89	Paul H. Peterson
Section 93	Dan J. Workman
Section 107	Walter D. Bowen
Sections 109–110	S. Michael Wilcox
Sections 121–123	Susan Howe
Section 124	Paul C. Richards
Sections 127–128	George D. Durrant
Sections 131–132	Paul G. Grant
Sections 137–138	Leon R. Hartshorn
Official Declaration—2	Cardell K. Jacobson
DOCTRINE AND COVENANTS COMMENTARIES	H. Dean Garrett
DOCTRINE AND COVENANTS EDITIONS	Robert J. Woodford
DOCTRINE AND COVENANTS AS LITERATURE	Steven C. Walker
DOVE, SIGN OF THE	Robert L. Marrott
DRAMA	Charles L. Metten
DRUGS, ABUSE OF	Ray G. Schwartz
EARTH	Morris S. Petersen
EASTER	Mary Ellen Stewart Jamison
ECONOMIC AID	Stanley A. Taylor
ECONOMIC HISTORY OF THE CHURCH	Leonard J. Arrington
EDUCATION
Attitudes Toward Education	David P. Gardner
Educational Attainment	Terrell H. Bell
ELDER, MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOOD	R. Richard Vetterli
ELECT OF GOD	Arthur A. Bailey
ELIAS	George A. Horton, Jr.
ELIAS, SPIRIT OF	A. James Hudson
ELIJAH
LDS Sources	Franklin D. Day
Ancient Sources	R. J. Zvi Werblowsky
ELIJAH, SPIRIT OF	Mary Finlayson
ELOHIM	Keith H. Meservy
EMERGENCY PREPAREDNESS	Frank D. Richardson
ENDLESS AND ETERNAL	Arthur R. Bassett
ENDOWMENT	Alma P. Burton
ENDOWMENT HOUSES	LaMar C. Berrett
ENDURING TO THE END	John M. Madsen
ENOCH
LDS Sources	Rulon D. Eames
Ancient Sources	James H. Charlesworth
Book of Enoch	Lewis R. Church
ENSIGN	Jay M. Todd
EPHRAIM	Brian L. Smith
EPISTEMOLOGY	K. Codell Carter

EQUALITY	A. D. Sorensen
ETERNAL LIFE	Catherine Corman Parry
ETERNAL LIVES, ETERNAL INCREASE	Shirley S. Ricks
ETERNAL PROGRESSION	Lisa Ramsey Adams
ETHICS	F. Neil Brady
EUROPE, THE CHURCH IN	Douglas F. Tobler
EVANGELISTS	R. Douglas Phillips
EVE	Beverly Campbell
EVENING AND THE MORNING STAR, THE	Ronald D. Dennis
EVIL	David L. Paulsen
EVOLUTION	William E. Evenson
EXALTATION	Margaret McConkie Pope
EXHIBITIONS AND WORLD'S FAIRS	Richard J. Marshall
EXTERMINATION ORDER	Dale A. Whitman
EZEKIEL, PROPHECIES OF	Keith H. Meservy
EZIAS	Melvin J. Thorne
FAITH IN JESUS CHRIST	Douglas E. Brinley
FALL OF ADAM	Robert J. Matthews
FAMILY
Teachings About the Family	Reed H. Bradford
Family Life	Darwin L. Thomas
FAMILY HISTORY CENTERS	V. Ben Bloxham
FAMILY HISTORY, GENEALOGY	David H. Pratt
FAMILY HISTORY LIBRARY	Raymond S. Wright, III
FAMILY HOME EVENING	James P. Mitchell
	Terri Tanner Mitchell
FAMILY ORGANIZATIONS	Phillip R. Kunz
FAMILY PRAYER	Bruce L. Olsen
FAMILY REGISTRY™	John C. Jarman
FAMILYSEARCH®	L. Reynolds Cahoon
FAR WEST, MISSOURI	Larry C. Porter
FASTING	Dawn M. Hills
FAST OFFERINGS	Isaac C. Ferguson
FAST AND TESTIMONY MEETING	Mary Jolley
FATE	Gerald E. Jones
FATHERHOOD	A. Lynn Scoresby
FATHERS' BLESSINGS	Victor L. Brown, Jr.
FAYETTE, NEW YORK	Lamar E. Garrard
FEAR OF GOD	John R. Christiansen
FELLOWSHIPING MEMBERS	Lynn Reed Payne
FEMINISM	Mary Stovall Richards
FINANCES OF THE CHURCH	Richard C. Edgley
	Wilford G. Edling
FINANCIAL CONTRIBUTIONS	Stephen D. Nadauld
FIRESIDES	Ronald W. Patrick
FIRST ESTATE	Alexander L. Baugh
FIRST PRESIDENCY	J. Lynn England
	W. Keith Warner

FIRST PRINCIPLES OF THE GOSPEL	Marie Kartchner Hafen
FIRST VISION	Milton V. Backman, Jr.
FOLK ART	Martha Sonntag Bradley
FOLKLORE	William A. Wilson
FOLLOWING THE BRETHREN	Mark L. McConkie
FOREKNOWLEDGE OF GOD	James E. Faulconer
FOREORDINATION	Brent L. Top
FORGERIES OF HISTORICAL DOCUMENTS	Max J. Evans
FOX, RUTH MAY	Linda Thatcher
FREEDOM	David E. Bohn
FREEMASONRY IN NAUVOO	Kenneth W. Godfrey
FREEMASONRY AND THE TEMPLE	Kenneth W. Godfrey
FRIEND, THE	Elizabeth Wahlquist
FULNESS OF THE GOSPEL	Dean B. Farnsworth
“FUNDAMENTALISTS”	J. Max Anderson
GAMBLING	Charles D. Tate, Jr.
GARDEN OF EDEN	Graham W. Doxey
GARMENTS	Evelyn T. Marshall
GATES, SUSA YOUNG	Louise Plummer
GATHERING	Ronald D. Dennis
GENEALOGICAL SOCIETY OF UTAH	George D. Durrant
GENERAL AUTHORITIES	Marvin K. Gardner
GENERAL HANDBOOK OF INSTRUCTIONS	Frank O. May, Jr.
GENTILES, FULNESS OF	Monte S. Nyman
GETHSEMANE	S. Kent Brown
GIFT OF THE HOLY GHOST	Bruce D. Porter
GIFTS OF THE SPIRIT	H. George Bickerstaff
GOD	David H. Yarn, Jr.
GOD THE FATHER	Stephen E. Robinson
Overview	Glade L. Burgon
Names and Titles	Rodney Turner
Glory of God	Dennis L. Largey
Work and Glory of God	Paul E. Dahl
GODHEAD	K. Codell Carter
GODHOOD	Grant R. Hardy
GOLD PLATES	Joel A. Flake
GOSPEL OF ABRAHAM
GOSPEL OF JESUS CHRIST	Noel B. Reynolds
The Gospel in LDS Teaching	Noel B. Reynolds
Etymological Considerations for “Gospel”	Bruce C. Hafen
GRACE	Steven W. Baldridge
GRANITE MOUNTAIN RECORD VAULT	Ronald W. Walker
GRANT, HEBER J.	Dennis A. Wright
GREAT AND ABOMINABLE CHURCH	Howard A. Christy
HANDCART COMPANIES	Horace H. Christensen
HARMONY, PENNSYLVANIA	Rhett Stephens James
HARRIS, MARTIN	Alma R. Blair
HAUN’S MILL MASSACRE

HAWAII, THE CHURCH IN	R. Lanier Britsch
HEAD OF THE CHURCH	Burns R. Sabey
HEALTH, ATTITUDES TOWARD	James O. Mason
HEAVEN	Arthur Wallace
HEBREWS, EPISTLE TO THE	Richard D. Draper
HEIRS
Heirs of God	Joseph Grant Stevenson
Joint-Heirs with Christ	N. Gaylon Hopkins
HELAMAN <sub>1</sub>	Melvin J. Thorne
HELAMAN <sub>2</sub>	Paul R. Cheesman
HELAMAN <sub>3</sub>	Christine Purves Baker
HELL	M. Catherine Thomas
HIGH COUNCIL	Donovan E. Fleming
HIGH PRIEST	A. LeGrand Richards
HIRAM, OHIO	Karl Ricks Anderson
HISTORIANS, CHURCH	Howard C. Searle
HISTORICAL SITES	Richard H. Jackson
HISTORY, SIGNIFICANCE TO LATTER-DAY SAINTS	Douglas F. Tobler
	S. George Ellsworth
HISTORY OF THE CHURCH
c. 1820–1831, Background, Founding, New York Period	Richard L. Bushman
	Larry C. Porter
c. 1831–1844, Ohio, Missouri, and Nauvoo Periods	Milton V. Backman, Jr.
	Ronald K. Esplin
c. 1844–1877, Exodus and Early Utah Periods	Leonard J. Arrington
	Dean L. May
c. 1878–1898, Late Pioneer Utah Period	William G. Hartley
	Gene A. Sessions
c. 1898–1945, Transitions: Early-Twentieth-Century Period	Ronald W. Walker
	Richard W. Sadler
c. 1945–1990, Post–World War II International Era Period	James B. Allen
	Richard O. Cowan
HISTORY OF THE CHURCH (HISTORY OF JOSEPH SMITH)	Howard C. Searle
HOLINESS	Elonise M. Bell
HOLY GHOST	Joseph Fielding McConkie
HOLY OF HOLIES	Lysle R. Cahoon
HOLY SPIRIT	Jerry A. Wilson
HOLY SPIRIT OF PROMISE	Lawrence R. Flake
HOME INDUSTRIES	Maxine Lewis Rowley
HOME TEACHING	R. Wayne Boss
HOMOSEXUALITY	Victor L. Brown, Jr.
HOPE	James K. Lyon
HOPE OF ISRAEL	John M. Madsen
HORNE, MARY ISABELLA	Susan Arrington Madsen
HOSANNA SHOUT	Lael J. Woodbury
HOSPITALS	William N. Jones
HUMANITARIAN SERVICE	Isaac C. Ferguson
HUMILITY	Alice T. Clark

HUMOR	Margaret P. Baker
HYDE, ORSON	Howard H. Barron
HYMNS AND HYMNODY	Karen Lyum Davidson
IDAHO, PIONEER SETTLEMENTS IN	Robert D. Marcum
IMMACULATE CONCEPTION	Connie Lamb
IMMIGRATION AND EMIGRATION	Richard L. Jensen
	William G. Hartley
IMMORTALITY	Dan W. Andersen
IMMORTALITY AND ETERNAL LIFE	Leaun G. Otten
IMPROVEMENT ERA	Jay M. Todd
INDEPENDENCE, MISSOURI	LaMar C. Berrett
INDIAN STUDENT PLACEMENT SERVICES	Genevieve Delloyos
INDIVIDUALITY	Howard M. Bahr
INFANT BAPTISM
LDS Perspective	Robert E. Parsons
Early Christian Origins	Keith E. Norman
INSPIRATION	Carol L. Clark
INSTITUTES OF RELIGION	Stanley A. Peterson
INSTRUCTOR, THE	Ruel A. Allred
INTELLECTUAL HISTORY	Richard F. Haglund, Jr.
	David J. Whittaker
INTELLIGENCE	Dennis J. Packard
INTELLIGENCES	Paul Nolan Hyde
INTERFAITH RELATIONSHIPS
Christian	Richard P. Lindsay
Jewish	Joseph Rosenblatt
Other Faiths	Soren F. Cox
INTERNATIONAL GENEALOGICAL INDEX™ (IGI)	Gerald M. Haslam
INTERNATIONAL MAGAZINES	Brian K. Kelly
INTERVIEWS	Larry C. Farmer
ISAIAH
Authorship	Victor L. Ludlow
Texts in the Book of Mormon	LeGrande Davies
Interpretations in Modern Scripture	Monte S. Nyman
Commentaries on Isaiah	Ann N. Madsen
ISHMAEL	Christine Purves Baker
ISRAEL
Overview	S. Kent Brown
Scattering of Israel	Douglas A. Stewart
Lost Tribes of Israel	David L. Bolliger
Gathering of Israel	Terry L. Niederhauser
JACOB, SON OF LEHI	John S. Tanner
JAMES, EPISTLE OF	Thomas W. Mackay
JAMES THE APOSTLE	R. Douglas Phillips
JAREDITES	Morgan W. Tanner
JEHOVAH, JESUS CHRIST	David R. Seely
JEREMIAH, PROPHECIES OF	William J. Adams, Jr.
JERUSALEM	D. Kelly Ogden

JESUS CHRIST

Overview

Prophecies About Jesus Christ

Firstborn in the Spirit

Only Begotten in the Flesh

Birth of Jesus Christ

Baptism of Jesus Christ

Ministry of Jesus Christ

Crucifixion of Jesus Christ

Resurrection of Jesus Christ

Forty-Day Ministry and Other Post-Resurrection

Appearances of Jesus Christ

Latter-day Appearances of Jesus Christ

Second Coming of Jesus Christ

JESUS CHRIST, FATHERHOOD AND SONSHIP OF

JESUS CHRIST, NAMES AND TITLES OF

JESUS CHRIST, SECOND COMFORTER

JESUS CHRIST, SOURCES FOR WORDS OF

JESUS CHRIST, TAKING THE NAME OF, UPON ONESELF

JESUS CHRIST, TYPES AND SHADOWS OF

JESUS CHRIST IN THE SCRIPTURES

Jesus Christ in the Bible

Jesus Christ in the Book of Mormon

Jesus Christ in the Doctrine and Covenants

Jesus Christ in the Pearl of Great Price

JOHN, REVELATIONS OF

JOHN THE BAPTIST

JOHN THE BELOVED

JOINING THE CHURCH

JOSEPH OF EGYPT

Joseph, Son of Jacob

Writings of Joseph

Seed of Joseph

JOSEPH SMITH—HISTORY

JOSEPH SMITH—MATTHEW

JOSEPH SMITH TRANSLATION OF THE BIBLE (JST)

JOURNAL OF DISCOURSES

JOURNALS

JOY

JUDGMENT

JUDGMENT DAY, FINAL

JUSTICE AND MERCY

JUSTIFICATION

JUVENILE INSTRUCTOR

KANE, THOMAS L.

KEYS OF THE PRIESTHOOD

KIMBALL, HEBER C.

Robert L. Millet

Gary Lee Walker

Jerry C. Giles

Gerald Hansen, Jr.

Andrew C. Skinner

J. Philip Schaelling

Daniel C. Peterson

Merrill C. Oaks

Tad R. Callister

John Gee

Joel A. Flake

Gerald N. Lund

Robert L. Millet

Stephen E. Robinson

Thomas E. Sherry

J. Philip Schaelling

Paul R. Warner

Lenet Hadley Read

Robert J. Matthews

John W. Welch

Clark V. Johnson

James R. Harris

Gerald N. Lund

Loui Novak

C. Wilfred Griggs

Linda A. Charney

Joseph Fielding McConkie

James R. Clark

Liesel C. McBride

Joseph Grant Stevenson

David T. Giles

Robert J. Matthews

Ronald G. Watt

Dou E. Norton

Joanne Linnabary

Richard M. Eyre

Dean Jarman

Donald N. Wright

Bruce C. Hafen

Colin B. Douglas

Ruel A. Allred

Donald Q. Cannon

Alan K. Parrish

Edward L. Kimball

KIMBALL, SARAH GRANGER	Mary Stovall Richards
KIMBALL, SPENCER W.	Edward L. Kimball
KINDERHOOK PLATES	Stanley B. Kimball
KINGDOM OF GOD
In Heaven	George W. Pace
On Earth	George W. Pace
KING FOLLETT DISCOURSE	Donald Q. Cannon
KIRTLAND ECONOMY	Larry T. Wimmer
KIRTLAND, OHIO	Milton V. Backman, Jr.
KIRTLAND TEMPLE	Keith W. Perkins
KNOWLEDGE	Richard N. Williams
KSL RADIO	Arch L. Madsen
LAMAN	Alan K. Parrish
LAMANITE MISSION OF 1830–1831	Max H. Parkin
LAMANITES	Gordon C. Thomasson
LAST DAYS	Grant E. Barton
LATTER-DAY SAINTS (LDS)	Robert F. Bennett
LAW
Overview	John S. Welch
Divine and Eternal Law	Carl S. Hawkins
LAW OF ADOPTION	Douglas H. Parker
LAW OF MOSES	V. Ben Bloxham
LAWSUITS	Douglas H. Parker
LAYING ON OF HANDS	Ze'ev W. Falk
LAY PARTICIPATION AND LEADERSHIP	Gerald R. Williams
LDS BUSINESS COLLEGE	C. Kent Dunford
LDS FOUNDATION	Paul H. Thompson
LDS STUDENT ASSOCIATION	Kenneth H. Beesley
LEADERSHIP TRAINING	David A. Wanamaker
LECTURES ON FAITH	Elaine Anderson Cannon
LEE, HAROLD B.	William G. Dyer
LEGAL AND JUDICIAL HISTORY OF THE CHURCH	Larry E. Dahl
LEHI	L. Brent Goates
LEVITICAL PRIESTHOOD	Robert E. Riggs
LIAHONA	S. Kent Brown
LIAHONA THE ELDERS' JOURNAL	Terrence L. Szink
LIBERTY JAIL	VerDon W. Ballantyne
LIBRARIES AND ARCHIVES	Douglas Kent Ludlow
LIFE AND DEATH, SPIRITUAL	Arnold K. Garr
LIFESTYLE	Lawrence R. Flake
LIGHT OF CHRIST	Max J. Evans
LIGHT AND DARKNESS	Sue Bergin
LIGHT-MINDEDNESS	Jaroldeen Edwards
LITERATURE, MORMON WRITERS OF	C. Kent Dunford
Drama	Harold L. Miller, Jr.
	William L. Fillmore
	Robert A. Nelson

Novels	Richard H. Cracroft
Personal Essays	Donlu DeWitt Thayer
Poetry	Leslie Norris
Short Stories	Bruce W. Jorgensen
LORD'S PRAYER	Sue Bergin
LOST SCRIPTURE	Robert A. Cloward
LOVE	Vivian Paulsen
LYMAN, AMY BROWN	Ann Willardson Engar
	Amy Lyman Engar
	Richard Tice
	Janet Thomas
MAGAZINES	William E. Evenson
MAGIC	George A. Horton, Jr.
MAGNIFYING ONE'S CALLING	Gerald E. Jones
MALACHI, PROPHECIES OF	Paul H. Peterson
MAN OF HOLINESS	Steven C. Walker
MANIFESTO OF 1890	Peter N. Johnson
MANKIND	William J. Critchlow III
MAN'S SEARCH FOR HAPPINESS
MANUSCRIPT, LOST 116 PAGES
MARRIAGE	Thomas B. Holman
Social and Behavioral Perspectives	James T. Duke
Eternal Marriage	John M. Madsen
MARRIAGE SUPPER OF THE LAMB	Joseph I. Bentley
MARTYRDOM OF JOSEPH AND HYRUM SMITH	Robert C. Patch
MARTYRS	Camille Fronk
MARY, MOTHER OF JESUS	Elaine Thatcher
MATERIAL CULTURE	Christine Croft Waters
MATERNITY AND CHILD HEALTH CARE	David M. Grant
MATTER	Wm. Revell Phillips
MATTHEW, GOSPEL OF	James B. Allen
MCKAY, DAVID O.	Cecil O. Samuelson, Jr.
MEDICAL PRACTICES	C. Mark Hamilton
MEETINGHOUSE	Beth M. Marlow
MEETINGHOUSE LIBRARIES	William G. Dyer
MEETINGS, MAJOR CHURCH
MELCHIZEDEK
LDS Sources	Bruce Satterfield
Ancient Sources	Birger A. Pearson
MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOOD
Powers and Offices in the Melchizedek Priesthood	Jae R. Ballif
Restoration of Melchizedek Priesthood	Jae R. Ballif
MEMBERSHIP	Linda A. Charney
MEMBERSHIP RECORDS	Thomas E. Brown
MEN, ROLES OF	Victor L. Brown, Jr.
MENTAL HEALTH	Allen E. Bergin
MERIDIAN OF TIME	Marshall T. Burton
MESSENGER AND ADVOCATE	J. LeRoy Caldwell
MESSIAH
Messiah	David B. Galbraith
Messianic Concept and Hope	D. Kelly Ogden

METAPHYSICS	Dennis Rasmussen
MEXICO, PIONEER SETTLEMENTS IN	Shirley Taylor Robinson
MEXICO AND CENTRAL AMERICA, THE CHURCH IN	Boanerges Rubalcava
MIDDLE EAST, THE CHURCH IN THE	James A. Toronto
MILITARY AND THE CHURCH	Robert C. Oaks
MILLENARIANISM	Grant Underwood
MILLENNIAL STAR	Stanley A. Peterson
MILLENNIUM	Paul B. Pixton
MIRACLES	Paul C. Hedengren
MISSIONARY, MISSIONARY LIFE	Spencer J. Coudie
MISSIONARY TRAINING CENTERS	Richard O. Cowan
MISSION PRESIDENT	Gerald J. Day
MISSIONS	Dean B. Cleverly
MISSIONS OF THE TWELVE TO THE BRITISH ISLES	David J. Whittaker
	James R. Moss
MISSOURI
LDS Communities in Jackson and Clay Counties	Clark V. Johnson
LDS Communities in Caldwell and Daviess Counties	Leland H. Gentry
MISSOURI CONFLICT	Max H. Parkin
MODESTY IN DRESS	Michele Thompson-Holbrook
MORMON	Phyllis Ann Roundy
MORMON BATTALION	John F. Yurtinus
MORMON HANDICRAFT	Carol L. Clark
MORMONISM, AN INDEPENDENT INTERPRETATION	Jan Shipps
MORMONISM, MORMONS	Donald K. Jarvis
MORMON PIONEER TRAIL	Stanley B. Kimball
MORMONS, IMAGE OF
The Visual Arts	Virgie D. Day
Film	James V. D'Arc
Fiction	Neal E. Lambert
MORMON TABERNACLE CHOIR	K. Newell Dayley
MORMON TABERNACLE CHOIR BROADCAST
("THE SPOKEN WORD")	Paul H. Evans
MORMON YOUTH SYMPHONY AND CHORUS	Merrill Bradshaw
MORONI, ANGEL	Joseph B. Ronney
MORONI, VISITATIONS OF	Eldin Ricks
MORONI <sub>1</sub>	Melviu J. Thorne
MORONI <sub>2</sub>	H. Donl Peterson
MORTALITY	James P. Bell
MOSES	Andrew C. Skinner
MOSIAH <sub>1</sub>	Melvin J. Thorae
MOSIAH <sub>2</sub>	Paul Rytting
MOTHER IN HEAVEN	Elaine Anderson Cannon
MOTHERHOOD	Patricia Terry Holland
MOTHER IN ISRAEL	Sydney Smith Reynolds
MOTION PICTURES, LDS PRODUCTIONS	Peter N. Johnson
MOUNTAIN MEADOWS MASSACRE	Ronald K. Esplin
	Richard E. Turley, Jr.

MOUNT OF TRANSFIGURATION	Dale C. Mouritsen
MULEK	H. Curtis Wright
MURDER	W. Cole Durham, Jr.
MUSEUMS, LDS	Florence Smith Jacobsen
MUSIC	Michael D. Hicks
MUSICIANS	Michael F. Moody
MYSTERIES OF GOD	Clark D. Webb
NAME OF THE CHURCH	Susan Easton Black
NAME EXTRACTION PROGRAM	Kahlile Mehr
NAME OF GOD	Glade L. Burgon
NATIVE AMERICANS	Bruce A. Chadwick
	Thomas Garrow
NATURAL MAN	R. J. Snow
NATURE, LAW OF	Louis C. Midgley
NAUVOO	Glen M. Leonard
NAUVOO CHARTER	James L. Kimball, Jr.
NAUVOO ECONOMY	Robert B. Flanders
NAUVOO EXPOSITOR	Reed C. Durham, Jr.
NAUVOO HOUSE	Helene Holt
NAUVOO LEGION	Philip M. Flamner
NAUVOO NEIGHBOR	Darwin L. Hayes
NAUVOO POLITICS	Annette P. Hampshire
NAUVOO TEMPLE	Don F. Colvin
NEPHI <sub>1</sub>	Noel B. Reynolds
NEPHI <sub>2</sub>	Melvin J. Thorne
NEPHI <sub>3</sub>	Melvin J. Thorne
NEPHI <sub>4</sub>	Melvin J. Thorne
NEUM	Kent P. Jackson
NEVADA, PIONEER SETTLEMENTS IN	Ted J. Warner
NEW ERA	Richard M. Romney
NEW AND EVERLASTING COVENANT	D. Cecil Clark
NEW HEAVEN AND NEW EARTH	Thomas J. Riskas, Jr.
NEW JERUSALEM	Graham W. Doxey
NEW MEXICO, PIONEER SETTLEMENTS IN	Richard L. Jensen
NEWSPAPERS, LDS	Jack A. Nelson
NEW TESTAMENT	Robert C. Patch
NEW ZEALAND, THE CHURCH IN	Robert L. Simpson
NOAH	Andrew C. Skinner
NON-MORMONS, SOCIAL RELATIONS WITH	Darl Anderson
	David K. Udall
	Eleanor Park Jones
OATH AND COVENANT OF THE PRIESTHOOD	Michael K. Young
OATHS	Terrence L. Szink
OBEDIENCE	Cheryl Brown
OCCUPATIONAL STATUS	William G. Dyer
OCEANIA, THE CHURCH IN	R. Lanier Britsch
OIL, CONSECRATED	Paul Y. Hoskisson
OLD TESTAMENT	Ellis T. Rasmussen

OMNIPOTENT GOD; OMNIPRESENCE OF GOD;
OMNISCIENCE OF GOD	David L. Paulsen
OPPOSITION	Kay P. Edwards ORDINANCES
Overview	Immo Luschin
Administration of Ordinances	Immo Luschin
ORDINATION TO THE PRIESTHOOD	Hoyt W. Brewster, Jr.
ORGANIZATION
Organizational and Administrative History	William G. Hartley
Contemporary Organization	Lee Tom Perry
	Paul M. Bons
	Alan L. Wilkins
	John K. Carmack
ORGANIZATION OF THE CHURCH, 1830
ORGANIZATION OF THE CHURCH IN NEW TESTAMENT TIMES	Todd Compton
ORGAN TRANSPLANTS AND DONATIONS	Wayne A. Mineer
ORIGINAL SIN	Byron R. Merrill
ORIGIN OF MAN	John L. Sorenson
ORTHODOXY, HETERODOXY, HERESY	M. Gerald Bradford
PAGEANTS	Lael J. Woodbury
PALMYRA/MANCHESTER, NEW YORK	Larry C. Porter
PAPYRI, JOSEPH SMITH	Jay M. Todd
PARABLES	Susan Howe
PARADISE	M. Catherine Thomas
PARMLEY, LAVERN WATTS	Jessie L. Embry
PATRIARCH
Stake Patriarch	Ariel S. Ballif
Patriarch to the Church	Calvin R. Stephens
PATRIARCHAL BLESSINGS	William James Mortimer
PATRIARCHAL ORDER OF THE PRIESTHOOD	Lynn A. McKinlay
PATTEN, DAVID W.	Alexander L. Baugh
PAUL	J. Phillip Schaeelling
PEARL OF GREAT PRICE
Contents and Publication	Kenneth W. Baldridge
Literature	O. Glade Hunsaker
“PECULIAR” PEOPLE	Wilford E. Smith
PERFECTION	Carol Lee Hawkins
PERPETUAL EMIGRATING FUND (PEF)	David F. Boone
PERSECUTION	Lisa Bolin Hawkins
PERSONAL ANCESTRAL FILE®	David M. Mayfield
PETER	John Franklin Hall
PHILOSOPHY	Chauncey C. Riddle
PHYSICAL BODY	Kent M. Van De Graaff
PHYSICAL FITNESS AND RECREATION	Clark T. Thorstenson
PIONEER DAY	D. James Cannon
PIONEER ECONOMY	Leonard J. Arrington
PIONEER LIFE AND WORSHIP	Ronald W. Walker
PLAN OF SALVATION, PLAN OF REDEMPTION	Gerald N. Lund

PLURAL MARRIAGE	Danel W. Bachman
	Ronald K. Esplin
POLICIES, PRACTICES, AND PROCEDURES	Frank O. May, Jr.
POLITICS
Political History	Roger M. Barrus
Political Teachings	Gary C. Bryner
Political Culture	Wm. Clayton Kimball
Contemporary American Politics	David B. Magleby
POLYNESIAN CULTURAL CENTER	Charles Jay Fox
POLYNESIANS	Eric B. Shumway
PORNOGRAPHY	Victor B. Cline
POVERTY, ATTITUDES TOWARD	David J. Cherrington
PRATT, ORSON	David J. Whittaker
PRATT, PARLEY PARKER	Larry C. Porter
PRAYER	Mae Blanch
PRAYER CIRCLE	George S. Tate
PREACHING THE GOSPEL	Max L. Pinegar
PREDESTINATION	Richard D. Draper
PREMARITAL SEX	H. Reese Hansen
PREMORTAL LIFE	Gayle Oblad Brown
PRESIDENCY, CONCEPT OF	J. Bonner Ritchie
PRESIDENT OF THE CHURCH	J. Lynn England
	W. Keith Warner
	H. David Burton
PRESIDING BISHOPRIC	Wm. Gibb Dyer, Jr.
	Roy W. Doxey
PRESIDING HIGH PRIEST	Paul Alfred Pratte
PRESS, NEWS MEDIA, AND THE CHURCH	Reed A. Benson
PRIDE	W. Ladd Hollist
PRIEST, AARONIC PRIESTHOOD	Charles D. Tate, Jr.
PRIESTCRAFT	Richard G. Ellsworth
PRIESTHOOD	Melvin J. Luthy
	Victor L. Ludlow
	J. Elliot Cameron
	J. Bonner Ritchie
PRIESTHOOD IN BIBLICAL TIMES PRIESTHOOD BLESSINGS
PRIESTHOOD COUNCILS
PRIESTHOOD EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE,
STAKE AND WARD	David C. Bradford
PRIESTHOOD INTERVIEW	R. Wayne Boss
PRIESTHOOD OFFICES	Bruce T. Harper
PRIESTHOOD QUORUMS	Sherman N. Tingey
PRIMARY	Naomi M. Shumway
PROCLAMATIONS OF THE FIRST PRESIDENCY
AND THE QUORUM OF THE TWELVE APOSTLES	Robert J. Matthews
PROCREATION	Brent A. Barlow
PROFANITY	Grant Von Harrison
PROHIBITION	Brent G. Thompson
PROLONGING LIFE	Donald B. Doty
PROMISED LAND, CONCEPT OF A	Clarissa Katherine Cole

PROPHECY	David R. Seely
PROPHECY IN BIBLICAL TIMES	David R. Seely
PROPHECY IN THE BOOK OF MORMON	Camille Frouk PROPHET
Prophets	Ralph A. Britsch
	Todd A. Britsch
Biblical Prophets	David Noel Freedman
PROPHET, SEER, AND REVELATOR	Lewis R. Church
PROTESTANTISM	John Dillenberger
	Roger Keller
PROTESTANT REFORMATION	De Lamar Jensen
PSALMS, MESSIANIC PROPHECIES IN	Gerald E. Jones
PUBLICATIONS	Larry W. Draper
PUBLIC COMMUNICATIONS	Arch L. Madsen
PUBLIC RELATIONS	Elizabeth M. Haglund
PUBLIC SPEAKING	Lael J. Woodbury
PURPOSE OF EARTH LIFE
LDS Perspective	James P. Bell
Comparative Perspective	Daniel C. Peterson
	Huston Smith
QUORUM OF THE TWELVE APOSTLES	William O. Nelson
RACE, RACISM	Rita de Cassia Flores
	Enoc Q. Flores
RAISING THE DEAD	Dennis D. Flake
REASON AND REVELATION	Ralph C. Hancock
REBAPTISM	H. Dean Garrett
RECORD KEEPING	Beverly J. Norton
REFORMATION (LDS) OF 1856–1857	Paul H. Peterson
REGION, REGIONAL REPRESENTATIVE	Douglas L. Callister
	Gerald J. Day
REINCARNATION	Spencer J. Palmer
RELIEF SOCIETY	Janaath Russell Cannon
	Jill Mulvay Derr
RELIEF SOCIETY MAGAZINE	Marianne Clark Sharp
RELIEF SOCIETY IN NAUVOO	Barbara W. Winder
RELIGIOUS EXPERIENCE	Truman G. Madsen
REMISSION OF SINS	William S. Bradshaw
REORGANIZED CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS (RLDS CHURCH)	Richard P. Howard
REPENTANCE	James K. Lyon
RESTORATION OF ALL THINGS	Cory H. Maxwell
RESTORATION OF THE GOSPEL OF JESUS CHRIST	R. Wayne Shute
RESTORATIONISM, PROTESTANT	John Dillenberger
	Roger R. Keller
RESURRECTION	Douglas L. Callister
RETRENCHMENT ASSOCIATION	Carol Cornwall Madsen
REVELATION	Chauncey C. Riddle
REVELATIONS, UNPUBLISHED	C. Max Caldwell

REVERENCE	Lynn A. McKinlay
REYNOLDS V. UNITED STATES	Robert E. Riggs
RICHES OF ETERNITY	Catherine Corman Parry
RICHMOND JAIL	Howard A. Christy
RICKS COLLEGE	Scott Samuelson
RIGDON, SIDNEY	Bruce A. Van Orden
RIGHTEOUSNESS	Marvin K. Gardner
ROBISON, LOUISE YATES	Janath Russell Cannon
ROGERS, AURELIA SPENCER	Shirley A. Cazier
RUTH	Francine R. Bennion
SABBATH DAY	William B. Smart
SACRAMENT
Sacrament	Paul B. Pixton
Sacrament Prayers	John S. Tanner
SACRAMENT MEETING	Crawford Gates
	Georgia Gates
SACRED GROVE	Donald L. Enders
SACRIFICE	Gloria Jean Thomas
SACRIFICE IN BIBLICAL TIMES	Richard D. Draper
SAINTS	James K. Lyon
SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH	Thomas G. Alexander
	Ted L. Wilson
SALT LAKE TEMPLE	Marion D. Hanks
SALT LAKE THEATRE	Charles L. Metten
SALT LAKE VALLEY	LaMar C. Berrett
SALVATION	Alma P. Burton
SALVATION OF THE DEAD	Elma W. Fugal
SAMUEL THE LAMANITE	S. Michael Wilcox
SANCTIFICATION	C. Eric Ott
SARAH	Louise Gardiner Durham
SATANISM	Janet Thomas
SATELLITE COMMUNICATIONS SYSTEM	Bruce L. Christensen
SCANDINAVIA, THE CHURCH IN	John Langeland
SCHISMATIC GROUPS	Martin S. Tanner
SCHOOLS	A. Garr Cranney
SCHOOLS OF THE PROPHETS	Steven R. Sorensen
SCIENCE AND RELIGION	Erich Robert Paul
SCIENCE AND SCIENTISTS	Robert L. Miller
SCOUTING	Lowell M. Snow
SCRIPTURE
Scriptures	W. D. Davies
	Truman G. Madsen
Authority of Scripture	Kent P. Jackson
Words of Living Prophets	A. Gary Anderson
Forthcoming Scripture	Robert A. Cloward
SCRIPTURE, INTERPRETATION WITHIN SCRIPTURE	M. Catherine Thomas
SCRIPTURE STUDY	Dennis J. Packard
SCULPTORS	Richard G. Oman

SEAGULLS, MIRACLE OF	Richard W. Sadler SEALING
Sealing Power	David H. Yarn, Jr.
Temple Sealings	Paul V. Hyer
Cancellation of Sealings	Ronald E. Poehuan
SECOND ESTATE	Alexander L. Baugh
SECRET COMBINATIONS	Ray C. Hillam
SECT	Lawrence A. Young
SEED OF ABRAHAM	Allen C. Ostergar, Jr.
SEER	Steven C. Walker
SEER STONES	Richard E. Turley, Jr.
SELF-SUFFICIENCY (SELF-RELIANCE)	Val Dan MacMurray
SEMINARIES	Joe J. Christensen
SENIOR CITIZENS	Evan T. Peterson
SERMON ON THE MOUNT	Robert Timothy Updegraff
SETH	L. LaMar Adams
SETTING APART	Dennis L. Thompson
SEVENTY
Overview	Alan K. Parrish
First Council of the Seventy	Richard C. Roberts
Quorums of Seventy	Dean L. Larsen
SEX EDUCATION	Darlene Chidester Hutchison
SEXUALITY	Terrance D. Olson
SICK, BLESSING THE	Nephi K. Kezerian
SIGNS AS DIVINE WITNESS	R. Wayne Shute
SIGN SEEKING	R. Wayne Shute
SIGNS OF THE TIMES	David F. Boone
SIGNS OF THE TRUE CHURCH	Leon R. Hartshorn
SILK CULTURE	Elizabeth H. Hall
SIN	Bruce L. Brown
	Terrance D. Olson
SINGLE ADULTS	Lawrence A. Young
SISTERHOOD	Janath Russell Cannon
	Jill Mulvay Derr
SMITH, BATHSHEBA BIGLER	Harriet Horne Arrington
SMITH, EMMA HALE	Carol Cornwall Madsen
SMITH, GEORGE ALBERT	S. George Ellsworth
SMITH, HYRUM	Bruce A. Van Orden
SMITH, JOSEPH
The Prophet	Richard L. Bushman
	Dean C. Jessee
Teachings of Joseph Smith	Truman G. Madsen
Writings of Joseph Smith	Dean C. Jessee
Legal Trials of Joseph Smith	Joseph I. Bentley
SMITH, JOSEPH, SR.	A. Gary Anderson
SMITH, JOSEPH F.	Bruce A. Van Orden
SMITH, JOSEPH FIELDING	Amelia S. McConkie
	Mark L. McConkie

SMITH, LUCY MACK	Richard Lloyd Anderson
SMITH, MARY FIELDING	Susan Arrington Madsen
SMITH FAMILY	Sydney Smith Reynolds
SMITH FAMILY ANCESTORS	A. Gary Anderson
SMOOTH HEARINGS	Harvard S. Heath
SNOW, ELIZA R.	Maureen Ursenbach Beecher
SNOW, LORENZO	Maureen Ursenbach Beecher
	Paul Thomas Smith
SOCIAL CHARACTERISTICS	Stephen J. Bahr
SOCIAL AND CULTURAL HISTORY	Dean L. May
SOCIALIZATION	Darwin L. Thomas
SOCIAL SERVICES	C. Ross Clement
SOCIETIES AND ORGANIZATIONS	David J. Cherrington
SOLEMN ASSEMBLIES	Richard E. Turley, Jr.
SONS OF PERDITION	Rodney Turner
SOUL	Richard N. Williams
SOUTH AMERICA, THE CHURCH IN
Brazil	Flavia Garcia Erboloto
South America, North	Julio E. Dávila
South America, South	Tomás F. Lindheimer
SOUTH BAINBRIDGE (AFTON), NEW YORK	Gordon A. Madsen
SPAFFORD, BELLE SMITH	Maren M. Mouritsen
SPAULDING MANUSCRIPT	Lance D. Chase
SPIRIT	Jay E. Jensen
SPIRIT BODY	Wilson K. Andersen
SPIRIT PRISON	Robert J. Parsons
SPIRIT OF PROPHECY	Louise Plummer
SPIRITUAL DEATH	Richard M. Romney
SPIRIT WORLD	Walter D. Bowen
SPORTS	Clayne R. Jensen
STAKE	Stan L. Albrecht
STAKE PRESIDENT, STAKE PRESIDENCY	Kim S. Cameron
STANDARD WORKS	Clyde J. Williams
STEREOTYPING OF LATTER-DAY SAINTS	Gary L. Bunker
STERILIZATION	Lorry E. Rytting
STEWARDSHIP	J. Lynn England
STILLBORN CHILDREN	Jeanne B. Inouye
STRAIT AND NARROW	Daniel B. McKinlay
SUCCESSION IN THE PRESIDENCY	Martin B. Hickman
SUFFERING IN THE WORLD	Carlfred Broderick
SUICIDE	Chyde E. Sullivan
SUNDAY	Glen E. Barksdale
SUNDAY SCHOOL	B. Lloyd Poelman
SWORD OF LABAN	Reed A. Benson
SYMBOLISM	Todd Compton
SYMBOLS, CULTURAL AND ARTISTIC	Rex E. Cooper
TABERNACLE, SALT LAKE CITY	Paul L. Anderson
TABERNACLE ORGAN	Jack M. Bethards

TAYLOR, ELMINA SHEPARD
TAYLOR, JOHN
TEA
TEACHER, AARONIC PRIESTHOOD
TEACHERS, TEACHER DEVELOPMENT
TEACHING THE GOSPEL
TELESTIAL KINGDOM
TEMPLE ORDINANCES
TEMPLE PRESIDENT AND MATRON

TEMPLE RECOMMEND

TEMPLES

Latter-day Saint Temple Worship and Activity
History of LDS Temples from 1831 to 1990
LDS Temple Dedications
Administration of Temples
Meanings and Functions of Temples Temples Through the Ages

TEMPLE SQUARE

TEMPTATION

TEN COMMANDMENTS

TERRESTRIAL KINGDOM

TESTATOR

TESTIMONY BEARING

TESTIMONY OF JESUS CHRIST

THANKFULNESS

THEODICY

THEOGONY

THEOLOGY

“THIS IS THE PLACE” MONUMENT

THREE NEPHITES

TIME AND ETERNITY

TIMES AND SEASONS

TITHING

TOBACCO

TOLERANCE

TOPICAL GUIDE

TRANSFIGURATION

TRANSLATED BEINGS

TREE OF LIFE

TRIALS

TRUE AND LIVING CHURCH

TRUTH

UNITED ORDERS

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

UNITY

UNIVERSITY OF DESERET

*Florence Smith Jacobsen
Paul Thomas Smith
Joseph Lynn Lyon
Jack R. Christianson
Harley K. Adamson
Adrian P. Van Mondfrans
Clyde J. Williams
Allen Claire Rozsa
David H. Yarn, Jr.
Marilyn S. Yarn
Robert A. Tucker*

*Immo Luschin
Richard O. Cowan
D. Arthur Haycock
Robert L. Simpson
Hugh W. Nibley
Stephen D. Ricks
Carolyn J. Rasmus
David L. Paulsen
Bruce T. Verhaaren
Susan Easton Black
Robert L. Marrott
Clayton Christensen
Dennis Rasmussen
Gary L. Browning
John Cobb, Jr.
Truman G. Madsen
Charles R. Harrell
Louis C. Midgley
James L. Kimball, Jr.
William A. Wilson
Kent E. Robson
Reed C. Durham, Jr.
Howard D. Swainston
Joseph Lynn Lyon
George Romney
Bruce T. Harper
Dale C. Mouritsen
Mark L. McConkie
Martin Raish
Christie H. Frandsen
Soren F. Cox
C. Terry Warner
L. Dwight Israelsen
Roger B. Porter
F. Neil Brady
Grethe Ballif Peterson*

UNPARDONABLE SIN	Rodney Turner
URIM AND THUMMIM	Paul Y. Hoskisson
UTAH EXPEDITION	Richard D. Poll
UTAH GENEALOGICAL AND HISTORICAL MAGAZINE	Raymond S. Wright III
UTAH STATEHOOD	Edward Leo Lyman
UTAH TERRITORY	Allan Kent Powell
VALUES, TRANSMISSION OF	Stan E. Weed
VIEW OF THE HEBREWS	Richard C. Roberts
VIRGIN BIRTH	Eleanor Colton
VISIONS	Allen E. Bergin
VISIONS OF JOSEPH SMITH	Larry C. Porter
VISITING TEACHING	Marian R. Boyer
VISITORS CENTERS	Gareth W. Seastrand
VITAL STATISTICS	Tim B. Heaton
VOCABULARY, LATTER-DAY SAINT	Robert W. Blair
“VOICE FROM THE DUST”	William Sheffield
VOICE OF WARNING	Neil J. Flinders
VOLUNTEERISM	Maribeth Christensen
WARD	Douglas D. Alder
WARD BUDGET	Robert J. Smith
WARD COUNCIL	Dennis L Thompson
WARD ORGANIZATION	L. Robert Webb
WARD WELFARE COMMITTEE	John H. Cox
WAR IN HEAVEN	Brent L. Top
WAR AND PEACE	Robert S. Wood
WASHING OF FEET	Douglas A. Wangsgard
WASHINGS AND ANOINTINGS	Donald W. Parry
WEALTH, ATTITUDES TOWARD	R. Thayne Robson
WELFARE FARMS	T. Glenn Haws
WELFARE SERVICES	Garth L. Mangum
WELFARE SQUARE	T. Glenn Haws
WELLS, EMMELINE B.	Carol Cornwall Madsen
WELLS, JUNIUS F.	Mary Stovall Richards
WENTWORTH LETTER	Paul Thomas Smith
WEST INDIES, THE CHURCH IN	Edward J. Brandt
WESTWARD MIGRATION, PLANNING AND PROPHECY	Edwin O. Haroldsen
WHITMER, DAVID	Reed C. Durham, Jr.
WHITNEY STORE	Keith W. Perkins
WILLIAMS, CLARISSA	Keith W. Perkins
WINTER QUARTERS	Evalyn Darger Bennett
WITNESSES, LAW OF	Richard E. Bennett
WOMAN’S EXPONENT	Robert L. Marrott
WOMAN SUFFRAGE	Shirley W. Thomas
WOMEN, ROLES OF	Carol Cornwall Madsen
Historical and Sociological Development	Martha Nibley Beck
Gospel Principles and the Roles of Women	Barbara B. Smith
	Shirley W. Thomas

WOMEN IN THE BOOK OF MORMON

Donna Lee Bowen

Camille S. Williams

Dean C. Jessee

WOODRUFF, WILFORD

Joseph Lynn Lyon

WORD OF WISDOM

David J. Cherrington

WORK, ROLE OF

C. Richard Chidester

WORLDLY, WORLDLINESS

Doris Bayly Brower

WORLD CONFERENCES ON RECORDS

WORLD RELIGIONS (NON-CHRISTIAN) AND MORMONISM

Overview

Spencer J. Palmer

Buddhism

Spencer J. Palmer

Confucianism

Spencer J. Palmer

Hinduism

Spencer J. Palmer

Islam

Arnold H. Green

Judaism

Arnold H. Green

Shinto

Spencer J. Palmer

WORLDS

Hollis R. Johnson

WORSHIP

Johann A. Wondra

WRATH OF GOD

Donald B. Gilchrist

WYOMING, PIONEER SETTLEMENTS IN

Ted J. Warner

YOUNG, BRIGHAM

Brigham Young

Leonard J. Arrington

Teachings of Brigham Young

Hugh W. Nibley

YOUNG, ZINA D. H.

Mary Firmage Woodward

YOUNG MEN

Charles E. Mitchener

Mark E. Hurst

YOUNG WOMAN'S JOURNAL

Petrea Gillespie Kelly

YOUNG WOMEN

Elaine Anderson Cannon

YOUTH

Ardeth Greene Kapp

ZENOCK

Kent P. Jackson

ZENOS

Daniel H. Ludlow

ZION

A. D. Sorensen

ZIONISM

Truman G. Madsen

ZION'S CAMP

Lance D. Chase

ZORAM

Monte S. Nynan

---

LIST OF CONTRIBUTORS

- |  |   |  |
|--|---|--|
| L. LaMar AdamsBrigham Young UniversitySeth  | Ruel A. AllredBrigham Young UniversityInstructor, TheJuvenile Instructor                                       | Paul L. AndersonMuseum of Church History andArt, Salt Lake CityBuilding ProgramTabernacle, Salt Lake City  |
| Lisa Ramsey AdamsAttorney, Salt Lake CityEternal Progression  | Dan W. AndersenBrigham Young UniversityImmortality   | Richard Lloyd AndersonBrigham Young UniversityBook of Mormon WitnessesCowdery, OliverSmith, Lucy Mack   |
| William J. Adams, Jr.Granite Community Education, SaltLake CityJeremiah, Prophecies of         | Wilson K. AndersenBrigham Young UniversitySpirit Body  | Gerald S. ArgetsingerRochester Institute of Technology,Rochester, NYCumorah Pageant  |
| Harley K. AdamsonWeber State University, Ogden, UTTeachers, Teacher Development                           | A. Gary AndersonBrigham Young UniversityScripture: Words of LivingProphetsSmith Family AncestorsSmith, Joseph, Sr.   | Marilyn ArnoldBrigham Young UniversityBook of Mormon: Book of EnosBook of Mormon: Book of JaromBook of Mormon: Book of Omni                                       |
| Stan L. AlbrechtBrigham Young UniversityStake   | D. Brent AndersonBusiness Consultant, Salt Lake CityBook of Mormon Authorship  | Harriet Horne ArringtonHistorian, Salt Lake CitySmith, Bathsheba Bigler   |
| Douglas D. AlderDixie College, St. George, UTComprehensive History of theChurchWard | Darl AndersonBusinessman, Mesa, AZNon-Mormons, Social Relationswith  | Leonard J. ArringtonBrigham Young UniversityEconomic History of the ChurchHistory of the Church: c. 1844–1877Pioneer EconomyYoung, Brigham: Brigham Young |
| Thomas G. AlexanderBrigham Young UniversitySalt Lake City, Utah   | J. Max AndersonState of Utah, Salt Lake City“Fundamentalists”  | Wendell J. AshtonDeseret News, Salt Lake CityDeseret News  |
| Frank D. AllanGeorge Washington Medical SchoolAutopsy   | Karl Ricks AndersonBusiness Consultant, Lyndhurst,OHConsecration: Consecration inOhio and MissouriHiram, Ohio |  |
| James B. AllenBrigham Young UniversityHistory of the Church:c. 1945–1990McKay, David O.           |   |  |

- Danel W. Bachman
Church Educational System, Salt Lake City
Anthon Transcript
Plural Marriage
- James H. Backman
Brigham Young University
Courts, Ecclesiastical, Nineteenth-Century
- Milton V. Backman, Jr.
Brigham Young University
History of the Church: c. 1831–1844
First Vision
Kirtland, Ohio
- Howard M. Bahr
Brigham Young University
Individuality
- Stephen J. Bahr
Brigham Young University
Social Characteristics
- Arthur A. Bailey
Church Educational System, Ephraim, Utah
Adam: LDS Sources
Elect of God
- J. Hugh Baird
Brigham Young University
Ballantyne, Richard
Bulletin
- Christine Purves Baker
Church Educational System, Peoria, AZ
Helaman<sub>3</sub>
Ishmael
- Margaret P. Baker
Brigham Young University—Hawaii
Humor
- Kenneth W. Baldrige
Brigham Young University—Hawaii
Pearl of Great Price: Contents and Publication
- Steven W. Baldrige
Brigham Young University
Granite Mountain Record Vault
- Terry B. Ball
Brigham Young University
Book of Mormon: Second Book of Nephi
- VerDon W. Ballantyne
Brigham Young University
Aaronic Priesthood: Powers and Offices
Levitical Priesthood
- Ariel S. Ballif
Brigham Young University
Patriarch: Stake Patriarch
- Jae R. Ballif
Brigham Young University
Melchizedek Priesthood: Powers and Offices in the Melchizedek Priesthood Melchizedek Priesthood: Restoration of Melchizedek Priesthood
- Lowell Bangerter
University of Wyoming
Children: Blessing of Children
- Glen E. Barksdale
Pleasant Grove, Utah Jr. High
Sunday
- Brent A. Barlow
Brigham Young University
Procreation
- Norman J. Barlow
Church Educational System, Los Angeles
David, King
- Ivan J. Barrett
Brigham Young University
Church of the Firstborn
- Howard H. Barron
Brigham Young University
Hyde, Orson
- Roger M. Barrus
Hamden-Sydney College, VA
Politics: Political History
- Grant E. Barton
Church Missionary Training Center, Provo, UT
Last Days
- Arthur R. Bassett
Brigham Young University
Endless and Eternal
- Merrill J. Bateman
Brigham Young University
Conferences: Stake Conference
- Jeffrey C. Bateson
Church Finance and Records Dept., Salt Lake City
Clerk
- Alexander L. Baugh
Church Educational System, Columbia, SC
First Estate
Patten, David W.
Second Estate
- Mary K. Beard
Physician, Salt Lake City
Abortion
- Martha Nibley Beck
Writer, Provo, UT
Women, Roles of: Historical and Sociological Development
- Maureen Ursenbach Beecher
Brigham Young University
Biography and Autobiography
Snow, Eliza R.
Snow, Lorenzo
- Kenneth H. Beesley
LDS Business College, Salt Lake City
LDS Business College
- Elouise M. Bell
Brigham Young University
Holiness

- |  |  |  |
|--|--|--|
| James P. BellBrigham Young UniversityMortalityPurpose of Earth Life: LDSPerspective   | Allen E. BerginBrigham Young UniversityMental HealthVisions   | V. Ben BloxhamBrigham Young UniversityFamily History CentersLaw of Adoption   |
| Terrell H. BellFormer U.S. Commissioner of EducationEducation: EducationalAttainment  | Sue BerginWriter, Editor, Santa Monica, CALife and Death, SpiritualLord's Prayer                                      | David E. BohnBrigham Young UniversityFreedom  |
| Evalyn Darger BennettWriter, Lecturer, Salt Lake CityWilliams, Clarissa   | LaMar C. BerrettBrigham Young UniversityAdam-Ondi-AhmanEndowment HousesIndependence, MissouriSalt Lake Valley | David L. BolligerChurch Educational System, Salt Lake CityIsrael: Lost Tribes of Israel                                 |
| Richard E. BennettUniversity of Manitoba, Winnipeg, ManitobaCanada, The Church inCouncil Bluffs (Kanesville), IowaWinter Quarters | William E. BerrettBrigham Young UniversityChurch Educational System(CES)  | Paul M. BonsChurch Personnel Dept., Salt Lake CityOrganization: ContemporaryOrganization                            |
| Robert F. BennettFranklin Institute, Inc., Salt Lake CityLatter-day Saints (LDS)  | Jack M. BethardsSchoenstein Organ Co., San FranciscoTabernacle Organ  | David F. BooneBrigham Young UniversityPerpetual Emigrating Fund (PEF)Signs of the Times                             |
| Alfred BenneyFairfield College, Fairfield, CTCatholicism and Mormonism  | H. George BickerstaffBookcraft Publishing Co., Salt Lake CityGifts of the Spirit  | R. Wayne BossUniversity of ColoradoHome TeachingPriesthood Interview  |
| Francine Russell BennionRicks College, Rexburg, IDRuth  | Susan Easton BlackBrigham Young UniversityCelestial KingdomName of the ChurchTerrestrial Kingdom                  | Donna Lee BowenBrigham Young UniversityWomen in the Book of Mormon  |
| Steven D. BennionRicks College, Rexburg, IDAbel   | Alma R. BlairGraceland College, Lamoni, IAHaun's Mill Massacre  | Walter D. BowenBrigham Young UniversityDoctrine and Covenants: Section107Spirit World                           |
| Reed A. BensonBrigham Young UniversityBenson, Ezra TaftPrideSword of Laban  | Robert W. BlairBrigham Young UniversityVocabulary, Latter-day Saint   | Marian R. BoyerFormer Counselor in General Presidency, Church Relief Society, Salt Lake CityVisiting Teaching           |
| Joseph Ivins BentleyAttorney, Newport Beach, CAMartyrdom of Joseph and HyrumSmithSmith, Joseph: Legal Trials ofJoseph Smith   | Reed H. BlakeBrigham Young UniversityCalamities and Disasters   | David C. BradfordChurch Correlation Dept., Salt Lake CityBishopricPriesthood Executive Committee,Stake and Ward |
|  | Mae BlanchBrigham Young UniversityPrayer  |  |

- M. Gerald Bradford
University of California at Irvine
Doctrine: Meaning, Source, and History of Doctrine
Orthodoxy, Heterodoxy, Heresy
- Reed H. Bradford
Brigham Young University
Family: Teachings About the Family
- Martha Sonntag Bradley
Brigham Young University
Folk Art
- Merrill Bradshaw
Brigham Young University
Mormon Youth Symphony and Chorus
- William S. Bradshaw
Brigham Young University
Baptism of Fire and of the Holy Ghost
Remission of Sins
- F. Neil Brady
San Diego State University
Ethics
Unity
- Rodney H. Brady
Bonneville International Corp., Salt Lake City
Bonneville International Corporation
Business: Church Participation in Business
- Ronald L. Bramble
Boy Scouts of America, Los Angeles
Deacon, Aaronic Priesthood
- Edward J. Brandt
Church Correlation Dept., Salt Lake City
Aaron, Brother of Moses
Ahman
Wentworth Letter
- Hoyt W. Brewster, Jr.
Church Curriculum Dept., Salt Lake City
Ordination to the Priesthood
- Douglas E. Brinley
Brigham Young University
Faith in Jesus Christ
- R. Lanier Britsch
Brigham Young University
Asia, The Church in: Asia, East Asia, The Church in: Asia, South and Southeast Hawaii, The Church in Oceania, The Church in
- Ralph A. Britsch
Brigham Young University
Prophet: Prophets
- Todd A. Britsch
Brigham Young University
Prophet: Prophets
- Carlfred Broderick
University of Southern California
Suffering in the World
- Doris Bayly Brower
Brigham Young University
World Conferences on Records
- Bruce L. Brown
Brigham Young University
Sin
- Cheryl Brown
Brigham Young University
Book of Mormon: Book of Alma Obedience
- Gayle Oblad Brown
Writer, Arabic Translator, Orem, UT
Premortal Life
- S. Kent Brown
Brigham Young University
Apostle
Gethsemane
Israel: Overview
Lehi
- Thomas E. Brown
Audio Visual Dept., Salt Lake City
Membership Records
- Victor L. Brown, Jr.
Church Welfare Services, Citrus Heights, CA
Fathers' Blessings
Homosexuality Men, Roles of
- Victor L. Brown, Sr.
General Authority, Salt Lake City
Doctrine and Covenants: Section 42
- Gary L. Browning
Brigham Young University
Blasphemy
Thankfulness
- Gary C. Bryner
Brigham Young University
Politics: Political Teachings
- Gary L. Bunker
Brigham Young University
Stereotyping of Latter-day Saints
- Glade L. Burgon
Church Educational System, Bountiful, UT
God the Father: Names and Titles
Name of God
- M. Dallas Burnett
Brigham Young University
Conferences: General Conference
- Alma P. Burton
Church Educational System, Provo, UT
Doctrine: Distinctive Teachings Endowment
Salvation
- H. David Burton
Church Presiding Bishopric's Office, Salt Lake City
Baptism for the Dead: LDS Practice
Presiding Bishopric

- Marshall T. Burton
Church Educational System, Orem, UT
Meridian of Time
- Richard L. Bushman
Columbia University
History of the Church:
c. 1820–1831
Smith, Joseph: The Prophet
- Eliot A. Butler
Brigham Young University
Brigham Young University:
Provo, Utah, Campus
- L. Reynolds Cahoon
Church Family History Dept., Salt Lake City
FamilySearch®
- Lysle R. Cahoon
Former Church Temple President, Chicago, IL
Holy of Holies
- C. Max Caldwell
Brigham Young University
Doctrine and Covenants:
Contents
Doctrine and Covenants: Section 45
Revelations, Unpublished
- J. LeRoy Caldwell
Brigham Young University
Messenger and Advocate
- Douglas L. Callister
Attorney, Glendale, CA
Resurrection
- Tad R. Callister
Attorney, Glendale, CA
Dedications
Jesus Christ: Resurrection of Jesus Christ
- J. Elliot Cameron
Church Temple President, Provo, UT
Priesthood Blessings
- Kim S. Cameron
Michigan State University
Authority
Stake President, Stake Presidency
- Beverly Campbell
Campbell Associates, Washington, DC
Eve
- D. James Cannon
Consultant, Salt Lake City
Pioneer Day
- Donald Q. Cannon
Brigham Young University
Doctrine and Covenants:
Section 76
Kane, Thomas L.
King Follett Discourse
- Elaine Anderson Cannon
Author, St. George, UT
LDS Student Associations
Mother in Heaven
Young Women
- Janath Russell Cannon
Church Temple Matron, Frankfurt, Germany
Relief Society
Robison, Louise Yates
Sisterhood
- Mark W. Cannon
Consultant, Washington, DC
Civic Duties
- Michael C. Cannon
Church News, Salt Lake City
Deseret Industries
- John K. Carmack
General Authority, Salt Lake City
Organization of the Church, 1830
- John Carr
Former Director Church Internal Communications, Salt Lake City
Distribution Centers
- Barbara R. Carter
Writer, Provo, UT
Doctrine and Covenants:
Section 88
- K. Codell Carter
Brigham Young University
Epistemology
Godhood
- Shirley A. Cazier
Writer, Logan, UT
Rogers, Aurelia Spencer
- Bruce A. Chadwick
Brigham Young University
Native Americans
- Jeffrey R. Chadwick
Church Educational System, Ogden UT
Daniel, Prophecies of
- James H. Charlesworth
Princeton Theological Seminary
Enoch: Ancient Sources
- Linda A. Charney
Church Correlation Dept., Salt Lake City
Joining the Church
Membership
- Lance D. Chase
Brigham Young University—Hawaii
Spaulding Manuscript
Zion's Camp
- Paul R. Cheesman [deceased]
Brigham Young University
Book of Mormon: Book of Helaman
Helaman<sub>2</sub>
- David J. Cherrington
Brigham Young University
Poverty, Attitudes Toward Societies and Organizations
Work, Role of
- Alan Cherry
Oral History Researcher, Provo, UT
Blacks

C. Richard Chidester
Church Educational System, Salt Lake City

Worldly, Worldliness

Dong Sull Choi
Brigham Young University

Confession of Sins

Bruce L. Christensen
Public Broadcasting System, Alexandria, VA

Broadcasting

Satellite Communications System

Bryce J. Christensen
Rockford Institute Center on the Family in America, Rockford, IL

Adultery

Chastity, Law of

Christine Quinn Christensen
Writer, Belmont, MA

Blessing on Food

Clayton Christensen
Ceramics Process Systems Corp., Belmont, MA

Testimony Bearing

Horace H. Christensen
IBM, Endwell, NY

Harmony, Pennsylvania

Joe J. Christensen
General Authority, Salt Lake City
Seminaries

Maribeth Christensen
Ricks College, Rexburg, ID

Volunteerism

John R. Christiansen
Brigham Young University

Fear of God

Helen Lance Christianson
Writer, Provo, UT

Birth

Jack R. Christianson
Church Educational System, Orem, UT

Teacher, Aaronic Priesthood

Howard A. Christy
Brigham Young University

Handcart Companies

Richmond Jail

Lewis R. Church
Church Educational System, Pleasant Grove, UT

Enoch: Book of Enoch

Prophet, Seer, and Revelator

Alice T. Clark
University of North Dakota

Humility

Bruce B. Clark
Brigham Young University

Blessings

Carol L. Clark
Church General Relief Society Office, Salt Lake City

Inspiration

Mormon Handicraft

D. Cecil Clark
Brigham Young University
New and Everlasting Covenant

E. Douglas Clark
Attorney, Salt Lake City

Abraham

James R. Clark
Brigham Young University
Joseph of Egypt: Writings of Joseph

John E. Clark
Brigham Young University

Book of Mormon Geography

C. Ross Clement
Church Social Services, Salt Lake City

Social Services

Dean B. Cleverly
Church Missionary Dept., Salt Lake City

Missions

Victor B. Cline
University of Utah

Pornography

Robert A. Cloward
Church Educational System, Cedar City, UT

Dead Sea Scrolls: LDS

Perspective

Lost Scripture

Scripture: Forthcoming Scripture

John Cobb, Jr.
Claremont College

Theodicy

Clarissa Katherine Cole
Writer, Provo, UT

Promised Land, Concept of a

Eleanor (Elly) Colton
Writer, Bethesda, MD

Virgin Birth

Don F. Colvin
Church Educational System, Ogden, UT

Nauvoo Temple

Todd Compton
California State University, Northridge

Apostasy

Organization of the Church in New Testament Times

Symbolism

Spencer J. Condie
General Authority, Salt Lake City

Missionary, Missionary Life

Dix S. Coons
Rhode Island College, Warwick, RI

Commandments

Rex E. Cooper
Church Correlation Dept., Salt Lake City

Symbols, Cultural and Artistic

Ralph L. Cottrell, Jr.
Church Educational System, Ogden, UT

Born in the Covenant

- Stephen R. Covey
Stephen R. Covey Associates,
Provo, UT
Discipleship
- Richard O. Cowan
Brigham Young University
Branch, Branch President
History of the Church: c. 1945–1990
Missionary Training Centers Temples: History of LDS
Temples from 1831 to 1990
- John H. Cox
Church Ecclesiastical Support
System, Salt Lake City
Ward Welfare Committee
- Soren F. Cox
Brigham Young University
Interfaith Relationships: Other Faiths
True and Living Church
- Richard H. Craeroft
Brigham Young University
Literature, Mormon Writers of:
Novels
- Lew W. Cramer
U. S. Commerce Dept.,
Washington, DC
Abinadi
- A. Garr Cranney
Brigham Young University
Schools
- Rulon C. Craven
General Authority, Salt Lake City
Confirmation
- William K. Critchlow III
Attorney, Ogden, UT
Manuscript, Lost 116 Pages
- Frank Moore Cross, Jr.
Harvard University
Dead Sea Serolls: Overview
- Perry H. Cunningham
Church Correlation Dept., Salt
Lake City
Activity in the Church
Area, Area Presidency
- James V. D'Arc
Brigham Young University
Mormons, Image of: Film
- Larry E. Dahl
Brigham Young University
Degrees of Glory
Doctrine: Meaning, Source, and History of Doctrine
Lectures on Faith
- Paul E. Dahl
Church Educational System, La
Mesa, CA
Godhead
- Karen Lynn Davidson
Writer, Pasadena, CA
Hymns and Hymnody
- LeCrande Davies
Central Davis Jr. High, Layton, UT
Isaiah: Texts in the Book of Mormon
- W. D. Davies
Duke University
Scripture: Scriptures
- Julio Enrique Dávila
General Authority, Salt Lake City
South America, The Church in:
South America, North
- Ray Jay Davis
Brigham Young University
Antipolygamy Legislation
- Franklin D. Day
Church Educational System, Orem,
UT
Elijah: LDS Sources
- Gerald J. Day
Snow College, Ephraim, UT
Mission President
Region, Regional Representative
- Virgie D. Day
Brigham Young University
Mormons, Image of: The Visual Arts
- K. Newell Dayley
Brigham Young University
Mormon Tabernacle Choir
- Cenevieve DeHoyos
Brigham Young University
Indian Student Placement
Services
- Ronald D. Dennis
Brigham Young University
Evening and the Morning Star,
The Cathering
- Jill Mulvay Derr
Brigham Young University
Relief Society
Sisterhood
- Sheri L. Dew
Deseret Book Co., Salt Lake City
Benson, Ezra Taft
- John Dillenberger
Graduate Theological Union
Protestantism
Restorationism, Protestant
- Donald B. Doty
Physician, Bountiful, UT
Prolonging Life
- Colin B. Douglas
Church Curriculum Dept., Salt
Lake City
Justification
- Josiah W. Douglas
Church Curriculum Dept., Salt
Lake City
Blind, Materials for the
- Graham W. Doxey
General Authority, Salt Lake City
Garden of Eden
New Jerusalem

- |   |  |  |
|---|--|--|
| Roy W. DoxeyChurch Correlation Dept., Salt Lake CityCalling and ElectionDoctrine and Covenants: OverviewPresiding High Priest            | George D. DurrantBrigham Young UniversityDoctrine and Covenants: Sections 127–128Genealogical Society of Utah     | Homer S. EllsworthPhysician, Lehi, UTBirth Control  |
| Larry W. DraperChurch Historical Dept., Salt Lake CityPublications   | William G. DyerBrigham Young UniversityLeadership TrainingMeetings, Major ChurchOccupational Status           | Richard G. EllsworthBrigham Young UniversityPriesthood  |
| Richard D. DraperBrigham Young UniversityHebrews, Epistle to thePredestinationSacrifice in Biblical Times                                | Wm. Gibb Dyer, Jr.Brigham Young UniversityPresiding Bishopric   | Jessie L. EmbryBrigham Young UniversityBlacksParnley, LaVern Watts  |
| Norbert H. O. DuckwitzBrigham Young UniversityAmulek   | Rulon D. EamesChurch Educational System, West Jordan, UTBook of Mormon: First Book of NephiEnoch: LDS Sources     | Donald L. EndersMuseum of Church History and Art, Salt Lake CityCarthage JailSacred Grove                               |
| James T. DukeBrigham Young UniversityMarriage: Eternal Marriage  | Richard C. EdgleyChurch Finance and Records, Salt Lake CityFinances of the Church                                     | Amy Lyman EngarWriter, Salt Lake CityLyman, Amy Brown   |
| C. Kent DymondChurch Educational System, Belmont, MALaying on of HandsLight of Christ  | Wilford G. EdlingChurch Finance and Records, Salt Lake City [deceased]Finances of the Church                          | Ann Willardson EngarUniversity of UtahLyman, Amy Brown  |
| Louise Gardiner DurhamAuthor, Provo, UTSarah   | Jaroldeen EdwardsAuthor, Los AngelesLifestyle   | J. Lynn EnglandBrigham Young UniversityFirst PresidencyPresident of the ChurchStewardship                           |
| Reed C. Durham, Jr.Church Educational System, Logan, UTNauvoo ExpositorTimes and SeasonsWestward Migration, Planning and Prophecy | Kay P. EdwardsBrigham Young UniversityOpposition  | Flavia Garcia ErbolatoChurch Area Historian, São Paulo, BrazilSouth America, The Church in: Brazil                          |
| W. Cole Durham, Jr.Brigham Young UniversityChurch and StateMurder  | William G. EggintonBrigham Young UniversityAustralia, The Church in   | Irene Hewette EricksonChurch Correlation Dept., Salt Lake CityAuxiliary Organizations                                       |
|   | S. George EllsworthUtah State University, Logan, UTHistory, Significance to Latter-day SaintsSmith, George Albert | Ronald K. EsplinBrigham Young UniversityHistory of the Church: c. 1831–1844Mountain Meadows MassacrePlural Marriage |

- |   |  |  |
|---|--|--|
| Max J. EvansUtah State Historical Society, Salt Lake CityForgeries of Historical DocumentsLibraries and Archives | Isaac C. FergusonChurch Welfare Services, Salt Lake CityFast OfferingsHumanitarian Service                                  | Rita de Cassia FloresWriter, Provo, UTRace, Racism  |
| Paul H. EvansChurch Public Communications, Salt Lake CityMormon Tabernacle Choir Broadcast ("The Spoken Word")       | William L. FillmoreAttorney, Provo, UTLight-Mindedness  | Charles Jay FoxBrigham Young UniversityPolynesian Cultural Center   |
| William S. EvansChurch Public Communications, Salt Lake CityDistrict, District President                             | Mary FinlaysonAuthor, Woodside, CAElijah, Spirit of   | Christie H. FrandsenAuthor, La Canada, CATrials   |
| William E. EvensonBrigham Young UniversityEvolutionMagnifying One's Calling                                      | Dennis D. FlakeChurch Educational System, Fresno, CABuffetings of SatanRaising the Dead                                     | Russell M. FrandsenAttorney, La Canada, CAAntichrists   |
| Richard M. EyreAuthor, Salt Lake CityJoy   | Joel A. FlakeChurch Educational System, Morgantown, WVGospel of AbrahamJesus Christ: Latter-day Appearances of Jesus Christ | David Noel FreedmanUniversity of MichiganProphet: Biblical Prophets   |
| Ze'ev W. FalkHebrew University, Jerusalem, IsraelLaw of Moses  | Lawrence R. FlakeChurch Educational System, Missoula, MTHoly Spirit of PromiseLiberty Jail                                  | Camille FronkLDS Business College, Salt Lake CityMary, Mother of JesusProphecy in the Book of Mormon                          |
| Gladys Clark FarmerBrigham Young UniversityChastening  | Philip M. FlammerBrigham Young UniversityNauvoo Legion  | Elma Widdison FugalGenealogist, Lindon, UTSalvation of the Dead   |
| Larry C. FarmerBrigham Young UniversityInterviews  | Robert B. FlandersSouthwest Missouri State University, Springfield, MONauvoo Economy  | Addie FuhrmanUniversity of UtahCharity  |
| Dean B. FarnsworthBrigham Young UniversityFulness of the Gospel  | Donovan E. FlemingBrigham Young UniversityHigh Council  | David B. GalbraithBrigham Young UniversityBrigham Young University: Jerusalem Center for Near Eastern StudiesMessiah: Messiah |
| James E. FaulconerBrigham Young UniversityForeknowledge of God   | Neil J. FlindersBrigham Young UniversityVoice of Warning  | Cynthia M. GardnerGenealogist, Provo, UTBook of Remembrance   |
| Franklin T. FergusonArchitect, Salt Lake CityArchitecture  | Enoc Q. FloresBrigham Young UniversityRace, Racism  | David P. GardnerUniversity of California, Berkeley, CAEducation: Attitudes Toward Education                                       |
|   |  | Marvin K. GardnerEnsign, Salt Lake CityGeneral AuthoritiesRighteousness   |

- |  |  |  |
|--|--|--|
| R. Quinn GardnerBusiness Consultant, Salt Lake CityBishop's Storehouse  | David T. GilesChurch Educational System, Salt Lake CityJoseph Smith—Matthew   | Paul G. GrantThird District Court, Salt Lake CityDoctrine and Covenants: Sections 131–132   |
| Arnold Kent GarrBrigham Young UniversityBrigham Young CollegeLiahona the Elders' Journal   | Jerry C. GilesChurch Educational System, Fairfield, MTAngels: ArchangelsJesus Christ: Firstborn in the Spirit             | Michaelene P. CrassliGeneral President, Church Primary, Salt Lake CityChildren: Roles of Children   |
| Lamar E. GarrardBrigham Young UniversityColesville, New YorkFayette, New York   | L. Kay GillespieWeber State University, Ogden, UTDeath and Dying  | Arnold H. GreenBrigham Young UniversityWorld Religions (Non-Christian) and Mormonism: IslamWorld Religions (Non-Christian) and Mormonism: Judaism |
| H. Dean GarrettBrigham Young UniversityDoctrine and CovenantsCommentariesRebaptism  | Gary P. GillumBrigham Young UniversityBible DictionaryChristologyCreeds   | C. Wilfred GriggsBrigham Young UniversityApocalyptic TextsApocrypha and PseudepigraphaJohn the Beloved  |
| Thomas GarrowSocial Services, Navajo Nation, Shiprock, NMNative Americans   | L. Brent CoatesLDS Hospital, Salt Lake CityLee, Harold B.   | Bruce C. HafenBrigham Young UniversityDisciplinary ProceduresGraceJustice and Mercy   |
| Crawford GatesBeloit College, Beloit, WISacrament Meeting   | H. Wallace GoddardUtah State University, Logan, UTDating and Courtship  | Marie Kartchner HafenBrigham Young UniversityFirst Principles of the Gospel   |
| Georgia GatesWriter, Beloit, WISacrament Meeting  | Kenneth W. GodfreyChurch Educational System, Logan, UTCouncil of FiftyFreemasonry and the TempleFreemasonry in Nauvoo | Elizabeth M. HaglundUniversity of UtahPublic Relations  |
| John GeeMaster's student, University of California-BerkeleyJesus Christ: Forty-Day Ministry and Other Post-Resurrection Appearances of Jesus Christ | Alan GoffCornell UniversityBook of Mormon: Book of Mosiah   | Richard F. Haglund, Jr.Vanderbilt UniversityIntellectual History  |
| Leland H. GentryChurch Educational System, Salt Lake CityMissouri: LDS Communities in Caldwell and Daviess Counties                                 | Kristen L. GoodmanChurch Correlation Dept., Salt Lake CityDivorce   | Elizabeth H. HallWriter, Orem, UTSilk Culture   |
| Donald B. GilchristChurch Educational System, Sandy, UTWrath of God   | Bryan J. GrantChurch Public Communications, Nuneaton, Warks, EnglandBritish Isles, The Church in                              | John Franklin HallBrigham Young UniversityApril 6Peter  |
|  | David M. CrantUniversity of UtahMatter  |  |

- William K. Hamblin
Brigham Young University
Book of Mormon, History of Warfare in
- C. Mark Hamilton
Brigham Young University
Meetinghouse
- Annette P. Hampshire
Writer, Upminster, Essex, England
Nauvoo Politics
- Ralph C. Hancock
Brigham Young University
Constitution of the United States of America Reason and Revelation
- Marion D. Hanks
General Authority, Salt Lake City
Salt Lake Temple
- Gerald Hansen, Jr.
Ricks College, Rexburg, ID
Jesus Christ: Only Begotten in the Flesh
- H. Reese Hansen
Brigham Young University
Premarital Sex
- Louise G. Hanson
Brigham Young University
Columbus, Christopher
- Grant R. Hardy
Brigham Young University
Book of Mormon Plates and Records
Gold Plates
- Edwin O. Haroldsen
Brigham Young University
West Indies, The Church in
- Bruce T. Harper
Church Missionary Dept., Salt Lake City
Priesthood Offices
Topical Guide
- Charles R. Harrell
Brigham Young University
Theogony
- James R. Harris, Sr.
Brigham Young University
Cain
Jesus Christ in the Scriptures:
Jesus Christ in the Pearl of Great Price
- Grant Von Harrison
Brigham Young University
Profanity
- William C. Hartley
Brigham Young University
Bishop, History of the Office
History of the Church: c. 1878–1898
Immigration and Emigration
Organization: Organizational and Administrative History
- Leon R. Hartshorn
Brigham Young University
Discernment, Gift of Doctrine and Covenants: Sections 137–138
Signs of the True Church
- Gerald M. Haslam
Brigham Young University
International Genealogical Index™ (IGI)
- Carl S. Hawkins
Brigham Young University
Baptism
Law: Divine and Eternal Law
- Carol Lee Hawkins
Brigham Young University
Perfection
- John P. Hawkins
Brigham Young University
Ceremonies
- Lisa Bolin Hawkins
Brigham Young University
Book of Mormon: Overview
Persecution
- T. Glenn Haws
Church Educational System, Portland, OR Welfare Farms
Welfare Square
- D. Arthur Haycock
Former Church Temple President, Laie, HI
Temples: LDS Temple Dedications
- Darwin L. Hayes
Brigham Young University
Nauvoo Neighbor
- Harvard S. Heath
Brigham Young University
Smoot Hearings
- Tim B. Heaton
Brigham Young University
Vital Statistics
- Paul C. Hedengren
Brigham Young University
Bible: LDS Belief in the Bible Miracles
- “J” Malan Heslop
Deseret News, Salt Lake City
Church News
- Martin B. Hickman [deceased]
Brigham Young University
Diplomatic Relations Succession in the Presidency
- Michael D. Hicks
Brigham Young University
Music
- Ray C. Hillam
Brigham Young University
Secret Combinations
- Dawn M. Hills
Surgeon, Pasadena, CA
Fasting

Stuart W. Hineckley Attorney, Salt Lake City Capital Punishment	Paul Y. Hoskisson Brigham Young University Book of Mormon Names	Dillon K. Inouye Brigham Young University Celibacy
Douglas L. Hind Church Curriculum Dept., Salt Lake City Deaf, Materials for the	Oil, Consecrated Urim and Thummim	Jeanne B. Inouye Attorney, Provo, UT Abuse, Spouse and Child Stillborn Children
Frank W. Hirschi Church Educational System, Centerville, UT Consecration: Law of Consecration	Richard P. Howard Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, Independence, MO Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints (RLDS Church)	L. Dwight Israelsen Utah State University, Logan, UT United Orders
Celia Hokanson Writer, Provo, UT Contention	Sherwin W. Howard Weber State University, Ogden, UT Cursings	Kent P. Jackson Brigham Young University Neum Scripture: Authority of Scripture Zenock
Jeffrey R. Holland General Authority, Salt Lake City Atonement of Jesus Christ	Susan Howe Brigham Young University Doctrine and Covenants: Sections 121–123 Parables	Richard H. Jackson Brigham Young University City Planning Community Historical Sites
Patricia Terry Holland Author, Salt Lake City Motherhood	A. James Hudson Church Educational System, Boise, ID Elias, Spirit of	Richard W. Jackson Architect, Salt Lake City Building Program
W. Ladd Hollist Brigham Young University Priest, Aaronic Priesthood	O. Glade Hunsaker Brigham Young University Pearl of Great Price: Literature	Florence Smith Jacobsen Formerly with Church Arts and Sites, Salt Lake City Christus Statue Museums, LDS Taylor, Elmina Shepard
Thomas B. Holman Brigham Young University Marriage: Social and Behavioral Perspectives	Mark E. Hurst Aaronic Priesthood Dept., Salt Lake City Young Men	Cardell K. Jacobson Brigham Young University Doctrine and Covenants: Official Declaration—2
Helene Holt Brigham Young University Nauvoo House	Darlene Chidester Hutchison Church Public Communications, Salt Lake City Sex Education	Phyllis C. Jacobson Brigham Young University Dance
Richard Neitzel Holzapfel Church Educational System, Irvine, CA Damnation	Paul Nolan Hyde Church Educational System, Simi Valley, CA Intelligences	Rhett Stephens James Church Educational System, Logan, UT Harris, Martin
N. Gaylon Hopkins Church Educational System, Logan, UT Heirs: Joint-Heirs with Christ	Paul V. Hyer Brigham Young University Sealing: Temple Sealings
George A. Horton, Jr. Brigham Young University Elias Malachi, Prophecies of

Mary Ellen Stewart Jamison
Writer, Glendale, CA

Christmas

Easter

Dean Jarman
Church Educational System, Salt Lake City

Judgment

John C. Jarman
Church Family History Dept., Salt Lake City

Family Registry™

Donald K. Jarvis
Brigham Young University

Mormonism, Mormons

Clayne R. Jensen
Brigham Young University

Sports

De Lamar Jensen
Brigham Young University

Protestant Reformation

Jay E. Jensen
Church Curriculum Dept., Salt Lake City

Spirit

Richard L. Jensen
Brigham Young University

Colonization

Colorado, Pioneer Settlements in
Immigration and Emigration
New Mexico, Pioneer Settlements in

Dean C. Jessee
Brigham Young University

Smith, Joseph: The Prophet

Smith, Joseph: Writings of Joseph Smith

Woodruff, Wilford

Darwin A. John
Church Information Systems, Salt Lake City

Computer Systems

Clark V. Johnson
Brigham Young University

Jesus Christ in the Scriptures:
Jesus Christ in the Doctrine and Covenants

Missouri: LDS Communities in Jackson and Clay Counties

David J. Johnson
Brigham Young University

Archaeology

Hollis R. Johnson
Indiana University

Worlds

Jeffery Ogden Johnson
Utah State Archives, Salt Lake City

Deseret, State of

Peter N. Johnson
Brigham Young University

Man's Search for Happiness

Motion Pictures, LDS Productions

Mary Jolley
Writer, Salt Lake City
Fast and Testimony Meeting

Eleanor Park Jones
Writer, Salt Lake City

Non-Mormons, Social Relations with

Gerald E. Jones
*Church Educational System,
Concord, CA*

Fate

Man of Holiness

Psalms, Messianic Prophecies in

William N. Jones
*Intermountain Health Care, Inc.,
Salt Lake City*

Hospitals

Bruce W. Jorgensen
Brigham Young University

Literature, Mormon Writers of:
Short Stories

Ardeth Greene Kapp
General President, Church Young Women, Salt Lake City

Youth

Roger R. Keller
Brigham Young University

Catholicism and Mormonism

Christians and Christianity

Clergy

Cross

Protestantism

Restorationism, Protestant

Brian K. Kelly
*Church International Magazines,
Salt Lake City*

International Magazines

Petrea Gillespie Kelly
Author, Highland, UT

Contributor

Young Woman's Journal

William Rolfe Kerr
Utah Commission on Higher Education, Salt Lake City
Conferences: Conferences

Nephi K. Kezerian
Surgeon, Provo, UT
Sick, Blessing the

Edward L. Kimball
Brigham Young University

Kimball, Heber C.

Kimball, Spencer W.

James L. Kimball, Jr.
Church Historical Dept., Salt Lake City

Nauvoo Charter

"This Is the Place" Monument

Stanley B. Kimball
Southern Illinois University, Edwardsville, IL

Kinderhook Plates

Mormon Pioneer Trail

- |   |  |   |
|---|--|---|
| Wm. Clayton KimballBentley College, Waltham, MAPolitics: Political Culture                             | E. Dale LeBaronBrigham Young UniversityAfrica, The Church in  | John L. LundChurch Educational System,Fountain Valley, CACouncil in Heaven  |
| Eleanor KnowlesDeseret Book Co., Salt Lake CityDeseret Book CompanyDoctrine: Treatises on Doctrine | Rex E. LeeBrigham Young UniversityConstitutional Law  | Immo LuschinChurch Translation Dept.,Frankfurt, GermanyOrdinances: Administration ofOrdinancesOrdinances: OverviewTemples: LDS Temple Worshipand Activity |
| Phillip R. KunzBrigham Young UniversityFamily Organizations  | June LeifsonBrigham Young UniversityAfterlife   | Melvin J. LuthyBrigham Young UniversityPriesthood  |
| Connie LambBrigham Young UniversityImmaculate Conception   | Glen M. LeonardMuseum of Church History andArt, Salt Lake CityNauvoo   | Edward Leo LymanVictor Valley Collegeand California State University,San BernardinoUtah Statehood  |
| L. Gary LambertBrigham Young UniversityAllegory of ZenosAlma <sub>1</sub>                          | Tomás F. LindheimerWriter, Buenos Aires, ArgentinaSouth America, the Church in:South America, South   | Wayne B. LynnChurch Curriculum Dept., SaltLake CityCurriculum   |
| Neal E. LambertBrigham Young UniversityBrigham Young University: ProvoMormons, Image of: Fiction   | Richard P. LindsayGeneral Authority, Salt Lake CityInterfaith Relationships: Christian  | James K. LyonUniversity of California, San DiegoHopeRepentanceSaints   |
| John LangelandZions First National Bank, SaltLake CityScandinavia, The Church in            | Joanne LinnabaryEditor, Provo, UTJournals   | Joseph Lynn LyonUniversity of Utah Medical School,Salt Lake CityAlcoholic Beverages andAlcoholismCoffeeTeaTobaccoWord of Wisdom                       |
| Dennis L. LargeyBrigham Young UniversityGod the Father: Work and Gloryof God                       | Daniel H. LudlowBrigham Young UniversityZenos   | Thomas W. MackayBrigham Young UniversityBeatitudesJames, Epistle of  |
| Dean L. LarsenGeneral Authority, Salt Lake CitySeventy: Quorums of Seventy                             | Douglas Kent LudlowUniversity of North DakotaLiahona  |   |
| Courtney J. LassetterBusinessman, Phoenix, AZDispensations of the Gospel                               | Vietor L. LudlowBrigham Young UniversityBible: BibleDavid, Prophetic Figure of LastDaysIsaiah: AuthorshipPriesthood in Biblical Times                               |   |
| Harold R. LaycockBrigham Young UniversityAcademics   | Gerald N. LundChurch Educational System, SaltLake CityJesus Christ: Second Coming ofJesus ChristJohn, Revelations ofPlan of Salvation, Plan ofRedemption |   |
| Robert L. LeakeChurch Melchizedek PriesthoodDept., Salt Lake CityAIDS                       |  |   |

- |   |  |   |
|---|--|---|
| Val Dan MacMurrayThruler Foundation, Salt Lake CitySelf-Sufficiency (Self-Reliance)  | David B. MaglebyBrigham Young UniversityPolitics: Contemporary AmericanPolitics   | Cory H. MaxwellBookcraft Publishing Co., Salt LakeCityAngel Moroni StatueRestoration of All Things  |
| Ann N. MadsenBrigham Young UniversityCenter for Near Eastern Studies,Jerusalem, IsraelIsaiah: Commentaries on Isaiah   | Garth L. MangumUniversity of UtahWelfare Services   | Dean L. MayUniversity of UtahAgricultureHistory of the Church: c. 1844–1877Social and Cultural History   |
| Arch L. MadsenBonneville International Corp., SaltLake CityKSL RadioPublic Communications   | Robert D. MarcumChurch Educational System,Rexburg, IDIdaho, Pioneer Settlements in   | Frank O. May, Jr.Church Curriculum Dept., SaltLake CityArtificial InseminationCorrelation of the Church,AdministrationGeneral Handbook of InstructionsPolicies, Practices, andProcedures |
| Carol Cornwall MadsenBrigham Young UniversityRetrenchment AssociationSmith, Emma HaleWells, Emmeline B.Woman Suffrage  | Beth M. MarlowEditor, Orem UTMeetinghouse Libraries   | David M. MayfieldFamily History Dept., SaltLake CityAncestral File™Personal Ancestral File®   |
| Gordon A. MadsenAttorney, Salt Lake CitySouth Bainbridge (Afton), NewYork  | Robert L. MarrottChurch Educational System,Bloomington, INDove, Sign of theTestatorWitnesses, Law of   | James B. MayfieldUniversity of UtahCovenant Israel, Latter-day   |
| John M. MadsenBrigham Young UniversityEnduring to the EndHope of IsraelMarriage Supper of the Lamb   | Evelyn T. MarshallGeneral Board of the Relief Society,Salt Lake CityGarments   | Liesel C. McBrideWriter, Orem, UTJoseph of Egypt: Seed of Joseph   |
| Susan Arrington MadsenAuthor, Hyde Park, UTHorne, Mary IsabellaSmith, Mary Fielding  | Richard J. MarshallEvans Communications, Inc., SaltLake CityExhibitions and World's Fairs  | Amelia S. McConkieWriter, Salt Lake CitySmith, Joseph Fielding   |
| Truman G. MadsenBrigham Young University Centerfor Near Eastern Studies,Jerusalem, IsraelReligious ExperienceScripture: ScripturesSmith, Joseph: Teachings ofJoseph SmithTheodicyZionism | James O. MasonU.S. Health Education and WelfareDept., Washington, DCHealth, Attitudes Toward   | Joseph Fielding McConkieBrigham Young UniversityHoly GhostJoseph of Egypt: Joseph, Son ofJacob   |
|   | Robert J. MatthewsBrigham Young UniversityFall of AdamJesus Christ in the Scriptures:Jesus Christ in the BibleJoseph Smith Translation of theBible (JST)Proclamations of the FirstPresidency and the Quorum ofthe Twelve Apostles | Mark L. McConkieUniversity of Colorado at ColoradoSpringsFollowing the Brethren   |

- |  |  |   |
|--|--|---|
| Smith, Joseph FieldingTranslated Beings  | Harold L. Miller, Jr.Brigham Young UniversityLight and Darkness   | Dale C. MouritsenChurch Educational System, Sunnyvale, CAMount of TransfigurationTransfiguration   |
| Oscar W. McConkieAttorney, Salt Lake CityAngels: AngelsAngels: Guardian Angels                                    | Robert L. MillerUniversity of UtahScience and Scientists  | Maren M. MouritsenBrigham Young UniversitySpafford, Belle Smith  |
| Daniel B. McKinlayWriter, Provo, UTAmenStrait and Narrow  | Robert L. MilletBrigham Young UniversityAlma <sub>2</sub>Jesus Christ: OverviewJesus Christ, Fatherhood and Sonship of      | Stephen D. NadauldGeneral Authority, Salt Lake CityBusiness: LDS Attitudes Toward BusinessFinancial Contributions  |
| Lynn A. McKinlayBrigham Young UniversityPatriarchal Order of the PriesthoodReverence                              | Wayne A. MineerPhysician, Orem, UTOrgan Transplants and Donations   | Jack A. NelsonBrigham Young UniversityNewspapers, LDS  |
| Kahlile MehrChurch Family History Dept., Salt Lake CityName Extraction Program  | James P. MitchellChurch Educational System, Logan, UTFamily Home Evening  | Robert A. NelsonBrigham Young UniversityLiterature, Mormon Writers of: Drama   |
| Byron R. MerrillBrigham Young UniversityAssistants to the TwelveCondescension of GodOriginal Sin              | Terri Tanner MitchellWriter, Hyde Park, UTFamily Home Evening   | Robert E. Nelson, Jr.U.S. ArmyChaplains  |
| Keith H. MeservyBrigham Young UniversityBook of Mormon, Biblical Prophecies aboutElohimEzekiel, Prophecies of | Charles E. MitchenerChurch Sunday School, Salt Lake CityYoung Men   | William O. NelsonChurch Correlation Dept., Salt Lake CityAnti-Mormon PublicationsQuorum of the Twelve Apostles   |
| Charles L. MettenBrigham Young UniversityDramaSalt Lake Theatre   | Samuel C. MonsonBrigham Young UniversityDeseret Alphabet  | Hugh W. NibleyBrigham Young UniversityBook of Mormon Near Eastern BackgroundTemples: Meanings and Functions of TemplesYoung, Brigham: Teachings of Brigham Young |
| Louis C. MidgleyBrigham Young UniversityNature, Law ofTheology  | Michael F. MoodyChurch Music Committee, Salt Lake CityMusicians   | Terry L. NiederhauserChurch Educational System, Powell, WYIsrael: Gathering of Israel  |
| Brent C. MillerUtah State University, Logan, UTDating and Courtship   | William James MortimerDeseret News, Salt Lake CityBible: LDS Publication of the BiblePatriarchal Blessing                       | F. Kent NielsenBrigham Young UniversityCreation, Creation Accounts   |
|  | James R. MossFormer Utah State Superintendent of Education, Salt Lake City[deceased]Missions of the Twelve to the British Isles |   |

Richard A. Nimer
Physician, Pleasant Grove, UT
Blood Transfusions

Keith E. Norman
*Employee Development,
BP America, Solon, OH*
Deification, Early Christian
Infant Baptism: Early Christian Origins

Leslie Norris
Brigham Young University
Literature, Mormon Writers of:
Poetry

Beverly J. Norton
Brigham Young University
Record Keeping

Don E. Norton
Brigham Young University
Journals

Loui Novak
*Church Educational System,
Pocatello, ID*
John the Baptist

Monte S. Nyman
Brigham Young University
Book of Mormon: Overview
Gentiles, Fulness of Isaiah: Interpretations in Modern Scripture
Zoram

Merrill C. Oaks
Physician, Provo, UT
Jesus Christ: Crucifixion of Jesus Christ

Gen. Robert C. Oaks
U.S. Air Force
Military and the Church

D. Kelly Ogden
Brigham Young University
Bible: King James Version
Jerusalem
Messiah: Messianic Concept and Hope

Bruce L. Olsen
Church Public Communications Dept., Salt Lake City

Cremation
Family Prayer

Steven L. Olsen
*Museum of Church History and
Art, Salt Lake City*

Celebrations
Centennial Observances

Terrance D. Olson
Brigham Young University
Sexuality

Sin

Richard G. Oman
Museum of Church History and Art, Salt Lake City

Artists, Visual
Beehive Symbol
Sculptors

Allen C. Ostergar, Jr.
Church Missionary Training Center, Provo, UT

Seed of Abraham

C. Eric Ott
Church Missionary Training Center, Provo, UT

Sanetification

Leaun G. Otten
Brigham Young University

Doctrine and Covenants:
Section 84
Immortality and Eternal Life

George W. Pace
Brigham Young University

Doctrine and Covenants:
Section 1
Kingdom of God: in Heaven
Kingdom of God: on Earth

Dennis J. Packard
Brigham Young University

Intelligence
Scripture Study

Sandra Bradford Packard
Brigham Young University
Animals

Rand H. Packer
*Church Educational System, Provo,
UT*
Dispensation of the Fulness of Times

David A. Palmer
*Amaco Chemicals Corp.,
Naperville, IL*
Cumorah

Howard Palmer
University of Calgary [deceased]
Canada, LDS Pioneer Settlements in

Martin J. Palmer
Delta Airlines, Salt Lake City
Adam: Ancient Sources

Spencer J. Palmer
Brigham Young University
Reincarnation
World Religions (Non-Christian)
and Mormonism: Overview
World Religions (Non-Christian) and Mormonism: Buddhism
World Religions (Non-Christian) and Mormonism: Confucianism
World Religions (Non-Christian) and Mormonism: Hinduism
World Religions (Non-Christian) and Mormonism: Shinto

Douglas H. Parker
Brigham Young University
Law of Moses
Law: Divine and Eternal Law

Scott Parker
*Intermountain Health Care, Inc.,
Salt Lake City*
Deseret Hospital

Stephen Parker
Doctoral Candidate, University of Chicago
Deseret

Max H. Parkin
Church Educational System, Salt Lake City

Lamanite Mission of 1830–1831
Missouri Conflict

Alan K. Parrish
Brigham Young University

Keys of the Priesthood
Laman
Seventy: Overview

Catherine Corman Parry
Brigham Young University

Eternal Life
Riches of Eternity

Donald W. Parry
Brigham Young University

Book of Mormon Literature
Washings and Anointings

Robert E. Parsons
Brigham Young University

Book of Mormon Plates and Records
Infant Baptism: LDS Perspective

Robert J. Parsons
Brigham Young University

Spirit Prison

Robert C. Patch
Brigham Young University

Martyrs
New Testament

Ronald W. Patrick
Church Educational System, Stirling, Alberta, Canada

Firesides

Charles Randall Paul
Businessman, Pleasant Grove, UT

Book of Mormon: Third Nephi

Erich Robert Paul
Dickinson College, Carlisle, PA

Astronomy, Scriptural References to Science and Religion

David L. Paulsen
Brigham Young University

Doctrine: Harmonization of Paradox
Evil
Omnipotent God; Omnipresence of God; Omniscience of God
Temptation

Vivian Paulsen
Friend Magazine, Salt Lake City

Children's Friend, The Love

Lynn Reed Payne
Church Correlation Dept., Salt Lake City

Fellowshipping Members

Martha Moffit Peacock
Brigham Young University

Art in Mormonism

Birger A. Pearson
University of California, Santa Barbara

Melchizedek: Ancient Sources

Don M. Pearson
Attorney, Los Angeles

Bishop

Keith W. Perkins
Brigham Young University

Kirtland Temple
Whitmer, David
Whitney Store

Lee Tom Perry
Brigham Young University
Organization: Contemporary Organization

Morris S. Petersen
Brigham Young University
Earth

Charles S. Peterson
Utah State University, Logan, UT
Arizona, Pioneer Settlements in

Daniel C. Peterson
Brigham Young University

Book of Mormon Economy and Technology
Jesus Christ: Ministry of Jesus Christ
Purpose of Earth Life: Comparative Perspective

Evan T. Peterson
Brigham Young University

Senior Citizens

Grethe Ballif Peterson
University of Utah

University of Deseret

H. Donl Peterson
Brigham Young University

Book of Abraham: Origin of the Book of Abraham
Book of Abraham: Translation and Publication of the Book of Abraham
Book of Mormon Commentaries
Moroni<sub>2</sub>

Paul H. Peterson
Brigham Young University

Civil War Prophecy
Doctrine and Covenants: Section 89
Manifesto of 1890
Reformation (LDS) of 1856–1857

Stanley A. Peterson
Church Educational System, Salt Lake City

Institutes of Religion
Millennial Star

R. Douglas Phillips
Brigham Young University

Evangelists
James the Apostle

Wm. Revell Phillips
Brigham Young University

Matthew, Gospel of

Ed J. Pinegar
Church Educational System, Provo, UT

Born of God

Max L. Pinegar
Nu Skin International, Provo, UT

Preaching the Gospel

Brian L. Pitcher
Utah State University, Logan, UT

Callings

Paul B. Pixton
Brigham Young University

Communion

Millennium

Sacrament: Sacrament

Louise Plummer
Brigham Young University

Gates, Susa Young

Spirit of Prophecy

B. Lloyd Poelman
Attorney, Salt Lake City

Sunday School

Ronald E. Poelman
General Authority, Salt Lake City

Sealing: Cancellation of Sealings

Richard D. Poll
Western Illinois University, Macouba, Illinois

Utah Expedition

Margaret McConkie Pope
Brigham Young University

Exaltation

Bruce Douglas Porter
International Broadcasting, Springfield, VA

Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, The Gift of the Holy Ghost

Bruce H. Porter
Church Educational System, San Marcos, CA

Altar

Larry C. Porter
Brigham Young University

Aaronic Priesthood: Restoration

Far West, Missouri

History of the Church: c. 1820–1831

Palmyra/Manchester, New York

Pratt, Parley Parker

Visions of Joseph Smith

Roger B. Porter
White House, Washington, DC

United States of America

Allan Kent Powell
Utah State Historical Society, Salt Lake City

Utah Territory

David H. Pratt
Brigham Young University

Family History, Genealogy

John P. Pratt
Ashton Research Corporation, Orem, UT

Book of Mormon Chronology

Paul Alfred Pratte
Brigham Young University

Press, News Media and the Church

Robert E. Quinn
University of Michigan

Common Consent

Martin Raish
State University of New York, Binghamton

Tree of Life

Carolyn J. Rasmus
Brigham Young University

Temple Square

Dennis Rasmussen
Brigham Young University

Metaphysics

Testimony of Jesus Christ

Ellis T. Rasmussen
Brigham Young University

Abrahamic Covenant

Deuteronomy

Old Testament

Tim Rathbone
Lockheed Aircraft Corp., Hesperia, CA

Book of Mormon Translation by Joseph Smith

Lenet Hadley Read
Author, San Francisco, CA

Jesus Christ, Types and Shadows of

Rex C. Reeve, Jr.
Brigham Young University

Book of Mormon: Book of Mormon

Book of Mormon: Fourth Nephi Brother of Jared

Noel B. Reynolds
Brigham Young University

Book of Mormon, Government and Legal History in Gospel of Jesus Christ

Nephi<sub>1</sub>

Sydney Smith Reynolds Author, Orem, UT

Mother in Israel

Smith Family

Michael D. Rhodes
Air Force Academy, Colorado Springs, CO

Book of Abraham: Facsimiles from the Book of Abraham

Book of Abraham: Studies About the Book of Abraham

A. LeGrand Richards
Businessman, Provo, UT

High Priest

- |   |   |   |
|---|---|---|
| Mary Stovall RichardsBrigham Young UniversityFeminismKinball, Sarah GrangerWells, Emmeline B.  | J. Bonner RitchieBrigham Young UniversityPresidency, Concept ofPriesthood Councils   | Joseph RosenblattBusinessman, Salt Lake CityInterfaith Relationships: Jewish                                     |
| Paul C. RichardsBrigham Young UniversityDoctrine and Covenants:Section 124   | Richard C. RobertsWeber State University, Ogden, UTSeventy: First Council of SeventyView of the Hebrews   | Phyllis Ann RoundlyChurch Educational System, Orem, UTMormon   |
| Frank D. RichardsonChurch Welfare Services, Salt Lake CityEmergency Preparedness   | John S. RobertsonBrigham Young UniversityAdamic Language   | Maxine Lewis RowleyBrigham Young UniversityHome Industries   |
| Eldin RicksBrigham Young UniversityBook of Mormon: Title PageBook of Mormon: The Words of MormonMoroni, Visitations of                 | Shirley Taylor RobinsonWriter, Chihuahua, MexicoMexico, Pioneer Settlements in   | Allen Claire RozsaFormer Church Temple President, Los AngelesTemple Ordinances                                   |
| Shirley S. RicksWriter, Provo, UTEternal Lives, Eternal Increase   | Stephen E. RobinsonBrigham Young UniversityBible ScholarshipDoctrine: LDS Compared with Other Christian DoctrinesGod the Father: OverviewJesus Christ, Names and Titles of | Boanerges RubalcavaMedical Research, Barcelona, SpainMexico and Central America, The Church in                   |
| Stephen D. RicksBrigham Young UniversityBenjaminBook of Mormon StudiesCreation, Creation AccountsTemples: Temples Through the Ages | Kent E. RobsonUtah State University, Logan, UTTime and Eternity  | Calvin P. RuddChurch Educational System, Salt Lake CityChildren: Salvation of Children                           |
| Chauncey C. RiddleBrigham Young UniversityDevilsPhilosophyRevelation   | R. Thayne RobsonUniversity of UtahWealth, Attitudes Toward   | Richard Dilworth RustUniversity of North Carolina, Chapel Hill, NCBook of Mormon Literature                      |
| Robert E. RiggsBrigham Young UniversityCivil RightsLegal and Judicial History of the ChurchReynolds v. United States            | V. Daniel RogersChurch Educational System, Boulder, COArmageddon   | Lorry E. RyttingChurch Public Communications, Dept. Salt Lake City[deceased]Sterilization                    |
| Thomas J. Riskas, Jr.Business Consultant, Tempe, AZNew Heaven and New Earth  | George RomneyFormer Governor of MichiganTolerance  | Paul RyttingAttorney, Redmond, WAMosiah <sub>2</sub>   |
|   | Joseph B. RomneyRicks College, Rexburg, IDMoroni, Angel  | Burns R. SabeyColorado State University, Ft. Collins, COHead of the Church                                       |
|   | Richard M. RomneyNew Era Magazine, Salt Lake CityNew EraSpiritual Death   | Richard W. SadlerWeber State University, Ogden, UTHistory of the Church:c. 1898–1945Seagulls, Miracle of |

- Cecil O. Samuelson, Jr.
University of Utah Medical School
Medical Practices
- Scott Samuelson
Ricks College, Rexburg, ID
Ricks College
- Bruce Satterfield
Church Educational System, Iona, ID
Melchizedek: LDS Sources
- J. Philip Schaelling
Church Educational System, Austin, TX
Jesus Christ: Baptism of Jesus Christ
Jesus Christ, Sources for Words of Paul
- Gilbert W. Scharffs
Church Educational System, Salt Lake City
Apostate
- Ray G. Schwartz
Daily Herald, Provo, UT
Drugs, Abuse of
- A. Lynn Scoresby
Brigham Young University
Fatherhood
- Howard C. Searle
Church Educational System, Salt Lake City
Historians, Church
History of the Church
- Careth W. Seastrand
Alpine School District, American Fork, UT
Visitors Centers
- David R. Seely
Brigham Young University
Jehovah, Jesus Christ
Prophecy
Prophecy in Biblical Times
- Cene A. Sessions
Weber State University, Ogden, UT
History of the Church:
c. 1878–1898
- Marianne Clark Sharp
Former Counselor in General Presidency, Church Relief Society, Salt Lake City [deceased]
Relief Society Magazine
- William Sheffield
Attorney, San Juan Capistrano, CA
“Voice from the Dust”
- Thomas E. Sherry
Oregon State University
Jesus Christ, Second Comforter
- Jan Shipps
Indiana University—Purdue University at Indianapolis
Mormonism, An Independent Interpretation
- Eric B. Shumway
Brigham Young University—Hawaii
Polynesians
- Naomi M. Shumway
Former General President, Church Primary, Salt Lake City
Primary
- R. Wayne Shute
Brigham Young University
Restoration of the Gospel of Jesus Christ Sign Seeking
Signs as Divine Witness
- Robert L. Simpson
General Authority, Salt Lake City
New Zealand, The Church in Temples: Administration of Temples
- Andrew C. Skinner
Ricks College, Rexburg, ID
Jesus Christ: Birth of Jesus Christ
Moses
Noah
- Royal Skousen
Brigham Young University
Book of Mormon Editions (1830–1981)
Book of Mormon Manuscripts
- Timothy W. Slover
Brigham Young University
Brotherhood
- William B. Smart
This People Magazine
Sabbath Day
- Barbara B. Smith
Former General President, Church Relief Society, Salt Lake City
Women, Roles of: Cospel Principles and the Roles of Women
- Brian L. Smith
Church Educational System, Aloha, OR Ephraim
- Huston Smith
Graduate Theological Union, Berkeley, CA
Purpose of Earth Life: Comparative Perspective
- Kay H. Smith
Brigham Young University
Conversion
- Paul Thomas Smith
Church Educational System, Salt Lake City
Snow, Lorenzo
Taylor, John
Wells, Junius F.
- Robert J. Smith
Brigham Young University
Ward Budget
- Timothy L. Smith
Johns Hopkins University
Book of Mormon in a Biblical Culture

- |  |   |  |
|--|---|--|
| Wilford E. SmithBrigham Young University“Peculiar” People                                     | Brian D. StubbsCollege of Eastern Utah, San Juan Campus, Blanding, UTBook of Mormon Language                                   | Stanley A. TaylorBrigham Young UniversityEconomic Aid   |
| Lowell M. SnowAttorney, Salt Lake CityBlood AtonementScouting                             | Clyde E. SullivanBrigham Young UniversitySuicide   | Elaine ThatcherConsultant, Salt Lake CityMaterial Culture   |
| R. J. SnowBrigham Young UniversityNatural Man   | Howard D. SwainstonAttorney, Los AngelesTitling  | Linda ThatcherUtah Historical Society, Salt Lake CityFox, Ruth May  |
| A. D. SorensenBrigham Young UniversityEqualityZion  | Terrence L. SzinkDoctoral Candidate, UCLALehiOaths   | Donlu DeWitt ThayerBrigham Young UniversityLiterature, Mormon Writers of:Personal Essays  |
| Steven R. SorensenChurch Historical Dept., Salt Lake CitySchools of the Prophets              | John S. TannerBrigham Young UniversityJacob, Son of LehiSacrament: Sacrament Prayers                                       | Darwin L. ThomasBrigham Young UniversityFamily: Family LifeSocialization  |
| John L. SorensonBrigham Young UniversityBook of Mormon PeoplesOrigin of Man               | Martin S. TannerAttorney, Salt Lake CitySchismatic Groups  | Gloria Jean ThomasUniversity of North DakotaSacrifice   |
| Krister StendahlHarvard Divinity SchoolBaptism for the Dead: Ancient Sources                  | Morgan W. TannerDoctoral Candidate, UCLABook of Mormon: Book of EtherJaredites   | Janet ThomasChurch Magazines, Salt Lake CityMagicSatanism   |
| Calvin R. StephensChurch College Curriculum, Salt Lake CityPatriarch: Patriarch to the Church | Charles D. Tate, Jr.Brigham Young UniversityBurialConference ReportsConscientious ObjectionGamblingPriestcraft | M. Catherine ThomasBrigham Young UniversityHellParadiseScripture, Interpretation WithinScripture                              |
| Joseph Grant StevensonBrigham Young UniversityHeirs: Heirs of GodJoseph Smith—History     | George S. TateBrigham Young UniversityCovenants in Biblical TimesPrayer Circle   | Robert K. ThomasBrigham Young UniversityAbuse, Spouse and Child   |
| Douglas A. StewartChurch Educational System, Sandy, UTIsrael: Scattering of Israel            | Bruce Thomas TaylorPhysician, Spanish Fork, UTBook of Moses  | Ryan L. ThomasBrigham Young UniversityAdoption of Children  |
| Hugh G. StocksUniversity of Southern CaliforniaBook of Mormon Translations                    | J. Lewis TaylorChurch Educational System, Salt Lake CityBook of Life   | Shirley W. ThomasFormer Counselor in General Presidency, Church Relief Society, Salt Lake CityWoman's ExponentWomen, Roles of: Gospel |

- Principles and the Roles of Women
- Gordon C. Thomasson
School for International Training, Brattleboro, VT
- Circumcision
- Lamanites
- Brent C. Thompson
Church Historical Dept., Salt Lake City
- Prohibition
- Dennis L. Thompson
Brigham Young University
- Setting Apart
- Ward Council
- Paul H. Thompson
Weber State University, Ogden, UT
- Lay Participation and Leadership
- Stephen E. Thompson
Post-Doctoral Fellowship, Brown University, Providence, RI
- Book of Abraham: Contents
- Michele Thompson-Holbrook
Writer, Cape Elizabeth, ME
- Modesty in Dress
- Melvin J. Thorne
F.A.R.M.S., Provo, UT
- Ezias
- Helaman<sub>1</sub>
- Moroni<sub>1</sub>
- Mosiah<sub>1</sub>
- Nephi<sub>2</sub>
- Nephi<sub>3</sub>
- Nephi<sub>4</sub>
- Clark T. Thorstenson
Brigham Young University
- Physical Fitness and Recreation
- Richard Tice
Deseret Book Co., Salt Lake City
- Magazines
- Sherman N. Tingey
Arizona State University, Tempe
- Priesthood Quorums
- Douglas F. Tobler
Brigham Young University
- Europe, The Church in History, Significance to Latter-day Saints
- Jay M. Todd
Ensign, Salt Lake City
- Ensign Magazine*
- Improvement Era*
- Papyri, Joseph Smith
- Brent L. Top
Brigham Young University
- Foreordination
- War in Heaven
- James A. Toronto
Brigham Young University
- Middle East, The Church in
- Robert A. Tucker
General Authority Office, Salt Lake City
- Temple Recommend
- Richard E. Turley, Jr.
Church Historical Dept., Salt Lake City
- Confidential Records
- Mountain Meadows Massacre
- Seer Stones
- Solemn Assemblies
- Rodney Turner
Brigham Young University
- Burnings, Everlasting
- God the Father: Glory of God
- Sons of Perdition
- Unpardonable Sin
- David K. Udall
Attorney, Mesa, AZ
- Non-Mormons, Social Relations with
- Grant Underwood
Church Educational System, Pomona, CA
- Doctrine and Covenants: Sections 20–22
- Millenarianism
- Robert Timothy Updegraff
Businessman, North Huntingdon, PA
- Sermon on the Mount
- Wouter van Beek
Utrecht University, Netherlands
- Covenants
- Kent M. Van De Graaff
Brigham Young University
- Physical Body
- Adrian P. Van Mondfrans
Brigham Young University
- Teaching the Gospel
- Bruce A. Van Orden
Brigham Young University
- Rigdon, Sidney
- Smith, Hyrum
- Smith, Joseph F.
- Dell Van Orden
Church News, Salt Lake City
- Almanacs
- Bruce T. Verhaaren
Northeastern Illinois University, Chicago
- Ten Commandments
- R. Richard Vetterli
Brigham Young University
- Elder, Melchizedek Priesthood
- Klis Hale Volkening
Author and designer, Salt Lake City
- Doctrine and Covenants: Section 25
- Alton L. Wade
Brigham Young University—Hawaii
- Brigham Young University: Hawaii Campus

- |   |  |   |
|---|--|---|
| Elizabeth WahlquistBrigham Young UniversityFriend, The  | Nevada, Pioneer Settlements inWyoming, Pioneer Settlements in  | Dale A. WhitmanUniversity of Missouri, Columbia, MOExtermination Order   |
| Gary Lee WalkerBrigham Young UniversityJesus Christ: Prophecies AboutJesus Christ  | W. Keith WarnerBrigham Young UniversityCouncil of the First Presidencyand the Quorum of the TwelveApostlesFirst PresidencyPresident of the Church   | David J. WhittakerBrigham Young UniversityArticles of FaithDanitesIntellectual HistoryMissions of the Twelve to theBritish IslesPratt, Orson |
| Ronald W. WalkerBrigham Young UniversityGrant, Heber J.History of the Church: c. 1898–1945Pioneer Life and Worship | Christine Croft WatersSalt Lake Community CollegeMaternity and Child Health Care  | S. Michael WilcoxChurch Educational System, Salt Lake CityBook of Mormon: Book of MoroniDoctrine and Covenants:Sections 109–110Samuel the Lamanite   |
| Steven C. WalkerBrigham Young UniversityDoctrine and Covenants asLiteratureMankindSeer                             | Ronald G. WattChurch Historical Dept., Salt Lake CityJournal of Discourses   | Alan L. WilkinsBrigham Young UniversityOrganization: ContemporaryOrganization  |
| Arthur WallaceUniversity of California at Los AngelesHeaven  | Clark D. WebbBrigham Young UniversityMysteries of God   | Camille S. WilliamsBrigham Young UniversityWomen in the Book of Mormon   |
| David A. WanamakerLDS Foundation, Orem, UTLDS Foundation   | L. Robert WebbBrigham Young UniversityWard Organization   | Clyde J. WilliamsBrigham Young UniversityBook of Mormon: Book of JacobStandard WorksTelestial Kingdom  |
| Douglas A. WangsgardChurch Educational System, Warrenton, VAWashing of Feet  | Stan E. WeedInstitute for Research and Evaluation, Salt Lake CityValues, Transmission of  | Gerald R. WilliamsBrigham Young UniversityLawsuits   |
| C. Terry WarnerBrigham Young UniversityAccountabilityAgencyTruth   | John S. WelchAttorney, Los AngelesLaw: Overview   | Richard N. WilliamsBrigham Young UniversityKnowledgeSoul   |
| Paul R. WarnerChurch Educational System, Orem, UTJesus Christ, Taking the Name of,Upon Oneself                             | John W. WelchBrigham Young UniversityBook of Mormon ReligiousTeachings and PracticesBook of Mormon Translation byJoseph SmithJesus Christ in the Scriptures:Jesus Christ in the Book ofMormon | Jerry A. WilsonChurch Educational System, Logan, UTBaptismal CovenantBaptismal PrayerHoly Spirit   |
| Ted J. WarnerBrigham Young UniversityCalifornia, Pioneer Settlements in  | R. J. Zvi WerblowskyHebrew University, Jerusalem, IsraelElijah: Ancient Sources   |   |

Ted L. Wilson
University of Utah
 Salt Lake City, Utah

William A. Wilson
Brigham Young University
 Folklore
 Three Nephites

Larry T. Wimmer
Brigham Young University
 Kirtland Economy

Barbara W. Winder
Former General President, Church Relief Society, Salt Lake City
 Relief Society in Nauvoo

Diane E. Wirth
Museum of Ancient Civilizations, Westford, MA
 Book of Mormon Authorship

Johann A. Wondra
Vienna Theatre, Vienna, Austria
 Worship

Robert S. Wood
Naval War College, Newport, RI
 War and Peace

Lael J. Woodbury
Brigham Young University
 Hosanna Shout
 Pageants
 Public Speaking

Robert J. Woodford
Church Educational System, Salt Lake City
 Book of Commandments
 Doctrine and Covenants Editions

Mary Firmage Woodward
Writer, Provo, UT
 Young, Zina D. H.

Dan J. Workman
Church Educational System, Orem, UT
 Doctrine and Covenants:
 Section 93

Dennis A. Wright
Church Educational System, Surrey, British Columbia
 Great and Abominable Church

Donald N. Wright
Brigham Young University
 Judgment Day, Final

H. Curtis Wright
Brigham Young University
 Mulek

Raymond S. Wright, III
Brigham Young University
 Family History Library
Utah Genealogical and Historical Magazine

David H. Yarn, Jr.
Brigham Young University
 God
 Sealing; Sealing Power
 Temple President and Matron

Marilyn S. Yarn
Former Temple Matron, Atlanta, GA
 Temple President and Matron

Hulda P. Young
Author, Salt Lake City
 Compassionate Service

Lawrence A. Young
Brigham Young University
 Cult
 Sect
 Single Adults

Michael K. Young
Columbia University
 Oath and Covenant of the Priesthood

John F. Yurtinus
University of Nevada, Carson City
 Mormon Battalion

---

PREFACE

According to a standard definition, an encyclopedia is to “treat comprehensively all the various branches of knowledge” pertaining to a particular subject. The subject of this Encyclopedia is The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, widely known as the Mormon church. This is the first major encyclopedia published about the Mormons. It presents the work of hundreds of Latter-day Saint (LDS) lay scholars and others from throughout the world and provides a comprehensive reporting of Mormon history, scripture, doctrines, life, and knowledge, intended for both the non-Mormon and the LDS reader. Readers will find an article on almost any topic conceivably related to the general topic of Mormonism, but no article is exhaustive because of space limitations. Most articles include bibliographic references; cross-references to other articles in the Encyclopedia are indicated by small capital letters.

When Macmillan Publishing Company asked authorities at Brigham Young University whether they would be interested in developing an encyclopedia about The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, President Jeffrey R. Holland took the query to his Board of Trustees. They instructed him to proceed. Working closely with Church authorities and Macmillan, President Holland chose an editor in chief and a board of editors. Discussion of possible titles concluded that the work should be called the Encyclopedia of Mormonism since that is the term by which the Church is most widely known, though unofficially.

The contract called for a work of one million words in about 1,500 articles in four volumes including pictures, maps, charts, appendixes, indexes, and a glossary. It soon became apparent that references to what the Church calls the standard works—the Bible, the Book of Mormon, the Doctrine and Covenants, and the Pearl of Great Price—would be so frequent that readers who did not have ready access to those works would be at a serious disadvantage in using the Encyclopedia. A fifth volume was decided upon to include all the LDS standard works except the Bible, which is readily available everywhere.

The Church does not have a paid clergy or a battery of theologians to write the articles. It functions with a lay ministry, and all members are encouraged to become scholars of the gospel. Over 730 men and women were asked to write articles on topics assigned because of previous interest and study.

Six major articles unfold the history of the Church: (1) the background and founding period in New York; (2) the Ohio, Missouri, and Illinois periods ending with the martyrdom of Joseph Smith; (3) the exodus west and the early pioneer period under Brigham Young; (4) the late pioneer Utah period ending at the turn of the century and statehood; (5) a transitional period during the early twentieth century; and (6) the post–World War II period of international growth. The history of the Church has been dramatic and moving, considering its brief span of just over 160 years. Compared to Catholicism, Judaism, ancient Far East religions, and many Protestant churches, the Church has a very short history.

Nearly 250 articles explain the doctrines of the Church, with special emphasis on basic principles and ordinances of the gospel of Jesus Christ. Twenty-four articles are clustered under the title “Jesus Christ,” and another sixteen include his name in the title or relate directly to his divine mission and atonement.

Over 150 articles relate the details on such topics as the First Vision, Zion’s Camp, Handcart Companies, Plural Marriage, the Salt Lake Temple, Temple Square, and the Church throughout the world. Biographies cover men and women contemporary in the life of Joseph Smith, Presidents of the Church, and auxiliary founders and past presidents. The only biography of a person living at the time of publication is on the present prophet and President of the Church, Ezra Taft Benson.

And finally, there are over a hundred articles primarily concerned with how Latter-day Saints relate to their families, the Church, and to society in general. It is said there is a “Mormon culture,” and several articles explore Mormon lifestyle, folklore, folk art, artists, literature, and other facets that distinguish Latter-day Saints.

It may be that the growth of the Church in the last decades has mandated the encyclopedic account that is presented here. Yet, even as the most recent programs were set down and the latest figures listed, there is an acute awareness that the basic tenet of the Church is that its canon is open-ended. The contemporary President of the Church is sustained as a “prophet, seer, and revelator.” While this makes some theological discussion moot, the basic beliefs of the Latter-day Saints, summarized in the Articles of Faith (see Glossary) do not change.

In several areas, the Church shares beliefs held by other Christians, and a number of scholars from other faiths were asked to present articles. However, the most distinctive tenets of the Church—those regarding the pre-mortal and postmortal life, living prophets who receive continuous and current revelation from God, sacred ordinances for deceased ancestors, moral and health codes that provide increasingly well-documented benefits, and the potential within man for progression into an infinite future—are all treated primarily by writers selected from among Latter-day Saints.

Lest the role of the Encyclopedia be given more weight than it deserves, the editors make it clear that those who have written and edited have only tried to explain their understanding of Church history, doctrines, and procedures; their statements and opinions remain their own. The Encyclopedia of Mormonism is a joint product of Brigham Young University and Macmillan Publishing Company, and its contents do not necessarily represent the official position of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. In no sense does the Encyclopedia have the force and authority of scripture.

DANIEL H. LUDLOW

---

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

The support and assistance of many persons and groups are necessary to produce a work as extensive as an encyclopedia. Special thanks are extended to the executives of Macmillan Publishing Company who introduced the idea of the Encyclopedia of Mormonism to Brigham Young University. Charles E. Smith made initial contacts on the project, while Philip Friedman, President and Publisher of Macmillan Reference, and Elly Dickason, Editor in Chief of Macmillan Reference, have followed through on the multitudinous details, demonstrating skill and patience in working with us in the preparation of this five-volume work.

The editors also wish to thank the General Authorities of the Church for designating Brigham Young University (BYU) as the contractual Author of the Encyclopedia. Two members of the Board of Trustees of the university, who are also members of the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles, were appointed by the First Presidency to serve as advisers to the project: Elder Neal A. Maxwell and Elder Dallin H. Oaks. Other General Authorities who accepted special assignments related to the project include four members of the Quorum of Seventy: Elders Dean L. Larsen, Carlos E. Asay, Marlin K. Jensen, and Jeffrey R. Holland.

Special support also came from the administration of BYU. Jeffrey R. Holland, president of BYU at the time the project was initiated, was instrumental in appointing the Board of Editors and in developing early guidelines. Rex E. Lee, current president of BYU, has continued this support.

The efforts of the Board of Editors and the Project Coordinator, whose names are listed at the front of each volume, have shaped and fashioned every aspect of the project. We offer special thanks to them, and to companions and family members for graciously supporting our efforts over many months. Others who shared in final editing include Bruce B. Clark, Soren F. Cox, Marshall R. Craig, and Ellis T. Rasmussen.

Many others have provided assistance in specialized areas, including Mary Lynn Bahr, Larry E. Dahl, Robert O. Davis, Gary R. Gillespie, Lisa Bolin Hawkins, McRay Magleby, Daniel B. McKinlay, Frank O. May, Robert L. Millet, Don E. Norton, Monte S. Nyman, Bruce A. Patrick, Charlotte A. Pollard, Merle Romer, Amy Rossiter, Evelyn E. Schiess, William W. Slaughter, J. Grant Stevenson, Jay M. Todd, and John Sutton Welch.

Appreciation is gratefully extended to the following individuals and institutions for providing the illustrations for this Encyclopedia. Where no credit line appears at the end of a picture's caption, the photograph is used courtesy of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, Salt Lake City, Utah, or one of its departments or divisions, including Church Education, Church Historical Department, Church Archives, Museum of Church History and Art, Church Public Communications, Visual Resources Library, and Young Women.

As indicated in the captions, specific photographs are used courtesy of the following individuals and institutions: Warren Aston; Robert E. Barrett; LaMar C. Berrett; Brigham Young University; Brigham Young University Museum of Fine Arts; Brigham Young University, Rare Books and Manuscripts; Paul R. Cheesman; Chicago Historical Society, Decorative and Industrial Arts Department; James C. Christensen; Deseret News; Craig Dimond; the government of Egypt; Foundation for Ancient Research and Mormon Studies (F.A.R.M.S.), Provo, Utah; Stephen Fletcher; Frederiksborg Museum, Hillerød, Denmark; C. Wilfred Griggs; Hagen G. Haltern; W. Dee Halverson; Wm. Floyd Holdman; Blaine T. Hudson; Winifred Cannon Jardine; Peggy Jellinghausen; Edward L. Kimball; Craig Law; Ann Laemmlen Lewis; Library of Congress; Doug Martin; Edith W. Morgan; Peabody Museum of Salem, Massachusetts; Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, Library-Archives, The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri; Merle Greene Robertson; Alvin E. Rust; Salt Lake Convention and Visitors Bureau; Springville Museum of Art, Springville, Utah; Union Pacific Railroad, Omaha, Nebraska; University of Utah, Special Collections Department, University Libraries; Utah State Historical Society; Utah State University; Nelson Wadsworth; John W. Welch; Frederick G. Williams III; William West Woodland family; Marjorie Woods; and Buddy Youngreen. The maps and charts were produced by Jeffry S. Bird, Brigham Young University Geography Department, under direction of Richard H. Jackson.

Finally, we express appreciation to the 738 authors who contributed their knowledge and insights. The hopes of all who were involved with this project will be realized if the Encyclopedia assists readers to come to a greater understanding and appreciation of the history, scriptures, doctrines, practices, and procedures of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

---

SYNOPTIC OUTLINE

The Synoptic Outline is designed to help the reader locate the main articles related to a particular subject. The title of every entry and of every item in the Appendix is listed in the outline at least once. The simple three-tiered outline follows this pattern (with the style of type, capitalization, and emphasis noted here in parentheses):

- I. (REGULAR TYPE, CAPITAL LETTERS, BOLD)
  - A. (Regular type, capital and lower case letters, bold)
    - 1. (Italic type, capital and lower case letters, bold)
    - 2.
  - B.
- II.

The materials in the Encyclopedia are organized and listed in this outline under five major headings: (I) History of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints; (II) Scriptures of the Church; (III) Doctrines of the Church; (IV) Organization and government of the Church; and (V) Procedures and practices of the Church and its members as they relate to themselves and to society in general.

- I. HISTORY OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER-DAY SAINTS including references to the (A) major persons associated with the organization and development of the Church, and (B) major events and places associated with the establishment and development of the Church. [See also in the Appendix BIOGRAPHICAL REGISTER OF GENERAL CHURCH OFFICERS; A CHRONOLOGY OF CHURCH HISTORY; CHURCH PERIODICALS; GENERAL CHURCH OFFICERS, A CHRONOLOGY; THE WENTWORTH LETTER.]

- A. Major persons associated with the organization and development of the Church.

- 1. Joseph Smith, his forebears and immediate family members: Smith, Emma Hale; Smith Family; Smith Family Ancestors; Smith, Hyrum; Smith, Joseph* (see also Prophet Joseph Smith); Smith, Joseph, Sr.; Smith, Lucy Mack.
    - 2. Close associates of the Prophet Joseph Smith: Cowdery, Oliver; Harris, Martin; Hyde, Orson; Kimball, Heber C.; Patten, David W.; Pratt, Orson; Pratt, Parley P.; Rigdon, Sidney; Smith, Mary Fielding; Snow, Eliza R.; Snow, Lorenzo; Taylor, John; Whitmer, David; Woodruff, Wilford; Young, Brigham.

---

*Indicates additional related articles are clustered under that entry title.

3. Subsequent presidents of the Church (listed alphabetically): Benson, Ezra Taft; Grant, Heber J.; Kimball, Spencer W.; Lee, Harold B.; McKay, David O.; Smith, George Albert; Smith, Joseph F.; Smith, Joseph Fielding; Snow, Lorenzo; Taylor, John; Woodruff, Wilford; Young, Brigham*.
  4. Biographies of other leaders and of friends of the Church, including some founders and presidents of auxiliary organizations: Ballantyne, Richard; Fox, Ruth May; Gates, Susa Young; Horne, Mary Isabella; Kane, Thomas L.; Kimball, Sarah Granger; Lyman, Amy Brown; Parmley, LaVern Watts; Robison, Louise Yates; Rogers, Aurelia Spencer; Smith, Bathsheba Bigler; Spafford, Belle Smith; Taylor, Elmina Shepard; Wells, Emmeline B.; Wells, Junius F.; Williams, Clarissa; Young, Zina D. H.
- B. Major events and places associated with the establishment and development of the Church.
1. The First Vision (1820): First Vision; God*; God the Father*; Jesus Christ*; Revelation; Sacred Grove; Visions; Visions of Joseph Smith.
  2. The acquisition, translation, and publication of the Book of Mormon (1823–1830): Anthon Transcript; Book of Mormon*; Book of Mormon Witnesses; Cumorah; Fayette, New York; Harmony, Pennsylvania; Manuscript, Lost 116 pages; Moroni, Visitations of; Native Americans; Palmyra/Manchester, New York; Plates, Metal; Spaulding Manuscript; Stick of Joseph; Urim and Thummim; View of the Hebrews; “Voice from the Dust”; Witnesses, Law of.
  3. The establishment and organization of the Church: Aaronic Priesthood*; April 6; Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, The; Fayette, New York; Head of the Church; Keys of the Priesthood; Kingdom of God*; Melchizedek Priesthood*; Name of the Church; Organization of the Church, 1830; Priesthood; Prophet Joseph Smith; Prophet, Seer, and Revelator; True and Living Church.
  4. The development of quorums, groups, and auxiliary organizations of the Church: Apostle; Area, Area Presidency; Authority; Bishop; Bishop, History of the Office; Bishopric; Branch, Branch President; Callings; Clerk; Council of the First Presidency and the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles; Deacon, Aaronic Priesthood; Elder, Melchizedek Priesthood; Evangelists; First Presidency; General Authorities; High Council; High Priest; Lay Participation and Leadership; Missions; Patriarch*; President of the Church; Presiding Bishopric; Presiding High Priest; Priest, Aaronic Priesthood; Priesthood Councils; Priesthood Offices; Priesthood Quorums; Primary; Quorum of the Twelve Apostles; Region, Regional Representative; Relief Society; Relief Society in Nauvoo; Seventy*; Stake; Stake President, Stake Presidency; Succession in the Presidency; Sunday School; Teacher, Aaronic Priesthood; Ward; Young Men; Young Women.

5. Entries associated with the western New York area around Palmyra (1820–1831): Aaronic Priesthood*; Angel Moroni Statue; Anthon Transcript; April 6; Book of Mormon*; Book of Mormon Editions (1830–1981); Book of Mormon Manuscripts; Book of Mormon Plates and Records; Book of Mormon Translation by Joseph Smith; Book of Mormon Witnesses; Book of Moses; Canada, The Church in; Colesville, New York; Conferences*; Cumorah; Cumorah Pageant; Fayette, New York; Gold Plates; Harmony, Pennsylvania; Harris, Martin; Historical Sites; History of the Church*; Joseph Smith Translation of the Bible (JST); Lamanite Mission; Manuscript, Lost 116 Pages; Moroni, Visitations of; New York, Early LDS Sites in; Palmyra/Manchester, New York; Sacred Grove; Smith, Joseph*; South Bainbridge (Afton), New York.
6. Entries associated with the Ohio area around Kirtland (1831–1838): Book of Abraham*; British Isles, The Church in; Canada, The Church in; Consecration*; Doctrine and Covenants Editions; Hiram, Ohio; Historical Sites; History of the Church*; Joseph Smith Translation of the Bible; Kirtland, Ohio; Kirtland Economy; Kirtland Temple; Lamanite Mission; Lectures on Faith; Messenger and Advocate; Ohio, LDS Communities in; Schools of the Prophets; Smith, Joseph*; Whitney Store; Zion's Camp.
7. Entries associated with the Missouri area around Independence, Jackson County (1831–1839): Adam-ondi-Ahman; Book of Commandments; Canada, The Church in; City Planning; Consecration*; Danites; Evening and the Morning Star, The; Extermination Order; Far West, Missouri; Garden of Eden; Haun's Mill Massacre; Historical Sites; History of the Church*; Independence, Missouri; Lamanite Mission; Liberty Jail; Missouri*; Missouri Conflict; New Jerusalem; Patten, David W.; Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints (RLDS); Richmond Jail; Smith, Joseph*; Zion; Zion's Camp.
8. Entries associated with the Illinois area around Nauvoo (1839–1846): Articles of Faith; Baptism for the Dead*; Book of Abraham*; British Isles, The Church in; Carthage Jail; City Planning; Council of Fifty; Doctrine and Covenants*; Endowment; Freemasonry in Nauvoo; Historical Sites; History of the Church*; Illinois, LDS Communities in; Iowa, LDS Communities in; Kinderhook Plates; King Follett Discourse; Martyrdom of Joseph and Hyrum Smith; Nauvoo; Nauvoo Charter; Nauvoo Economy; Nauvoo Expositor; Nauvoo House; Nauvoo Legion; Nauvoo Neighbor; Nauvoo Politics; Nauvoo Temple; Plural Marriage; Proclamations of the First Presidency and Council of the Twelve Apostles; Relief Society in Nauvoo; Succession in the Presidency; Times and Seasons; Wentworth Letter.

9. Entries associated with the exodus from Nauvoo, Illinois, and the migration to the Great Basin (1846–1869): Council Bluffs (Kanesville), Iowa; Council of Fifty; Handcart Companies; Historical Sites; History of the Church*; Immigration and Emigration; Iowa, LDS Communities in; Kane, Thomas L.; Mormon Battalion; Mormon Pioneer Trail; Perpetual Emigrating Fund; “This Is the Place” Monument; Westward Migration, Planning and Prophecy; Winter Quarters.
10. Entries associated with the pioneering work of Brigham Young, with the Territory of Deseret, and with the establishment of the State of Utah (1846–1896): Academies; Agriculture; Anti-Mormon Publications; Antipolygamy Legislation; Arizona, Pioneer Settlements in; Auxiliary Organizations; Beehive Symbol; Brigham Young College; California, Pioneer Settlements in; Canada, LDS Pioneer Settlements in; Centennial Observances; Church and State; Colonization; Colorado, Pioneer Settlements in; Constitution of the United States of America; Danites; Deseret Alphabet; Deseret News; Deseret, State of; Genealogical Society of Utah; Historical Sites; History of the Church*; Home Industries; Idaho, Pioneer Settlements in; Mexico, Pioneer Settlements in; Mountain Meadows Massacre; Nevada, Pioneer Settlements in; New Mexico, Pioneer Settlements in; Pioneer Day; Pioneer Economy; Pioneer Life and Worship; Plural Marriage; Polygamy; Primary; Reformation (LDS) of 1856–1857; Retrenchment Association; Reynolds v. United States; Salt Lake City, Utah; Salt Lake Temple; Salt Lake Theatre; Salt Lake Valley; Seagulls, Miracle of; Silk Culture; Sunday School; Tabernacle Organ; Tabernacle, Salt Lake City; Temple Square; United Orders; University of Deseret; Utah Expedition; Utah Territory; Utah Statehood; Wyoming, Pioneer Settlements in; Young, Brigham*.
11. Entries about the growth of the Church in the twentieth century: Africa, The Church in; Asia, The Church in*; Australia, The Church in; British Isles, The Church in; Canada, The Church in; Church in the World; Europe, The Church in; Granite Mountain Record Vault; Hawaii, The Church in; Historical Sites; History of the Church*; Mexico and Central America, The Church in; Middle East, The Church in; New Zealand, The Church in; Oceania, The Church in; Polynesians; Scandinavia, The Church in; South America, The Church in*; West Indies, The Church in.
12. General items pertaining to the history of the Church: Biography and Autobiography; Blacks; Forgeries of Historical Documents; Historians, Church; History, Significance to Latter-day Saints; Intellectual History; Legal and Judicial History of the Church; Material Culture; Museums; Newspapers, LDS; Pageants; Persecution; Press, News Media and the Church; Promised Land, Concept of a; Prophet*; Publications; Public Communications; Public Relations; Schismatic Groups; Schools of the Prophets; Social and Cultural History; Social Characteristics; Societies and Organizations; Stereotyping of Mormons; Temples*; Visitors Centers; Women, Roles of.

II. SCRIPTURES OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER-DAY SAINTS that the Church and its members have accepted as “standard works” include (A) the Bible, both Old Testament and New Testament; (B) the Book of Mormon; (C) the Doctrine and Covenants; and (D) the Pearl of Great Price. [See also in the Appendix JOSEPH SMITH TRANSLATION OF THE BIBLE (SELECTIONS).]

A. The Bible, both Old Testament and New Testament, is an extremely important scripture for members of the Church.

1. Persons, places, and events of the Bible: Aaron, Brother of Moses; Abel; Abraham; Adam*; Armageddon; Cain; Daniel, Prophecies of; David, King; David, Prophetic Figure of Last Days; Elias; Elijah*; Elohim; Enoch*; Ephraim; Eve; Ezekiel, Prophecies of; Garden of Eden; Gethsemane; Isaiah*; Israel*; James, the Apostle; Jehovah, Jesus Christ; Jeremiah, Prophecies of; Jesus Christ*; John the Baptist; John the Beloved; Joseph of Egypt*; Malachi, Prophecies of; Mary, Mother of Jesus; Melchizedek*; Moses; Noah; Paul; Peter; Ruth; Sarah; Sermon on the Mount; Seth.
2. Messages and teachings related to the Bible and early Christianity: Abrahamic Covenant; Angels*; Atonement of Jesus Christ; Baptism; Baptism of Fire and of the Holy Ghost; Beatitudes; Blasphemy; Charity; Christology; Circumcision; Covenants in Biblical Times; Creation, Creation Accounts; Cross; Daniel, Prophecies of; Degrees of Glory; Deification, Early Christian; Discipleship; Doctrine*; Elias, Spirit of; Elijah, Spirit of; Enoch*; Eternal Life; Evangelists; Evil; Ezekiel, Prophecies of; Faith in Jesus Christ; Fall of Adam; Fasting; Fear of God; First Principles of the Gospel; Foreknowledge of God; Foreordination; Fullness of the Gospel; Gift of the Holy Ghost; Gifts of the Spirit; God; God the Father*; Godhead; Godhood; Gospel of Abraham; Gospel of Jesus Christ; Grace; Heaven; Heirs*; Hell; High Priest; Holiness; Holy Ghost; Holy Spirit; Holy Spirit of Promise; Hope of Israel; Humility; Immortality; Immortality and Eternal Life; Isaiah*; Israel*; Jeremiah, Prophecies of; Jesus Christ*; Judgment; Judgment Day, Final; Kingdom of God*; Laying on of Hands; Light of Christ; Lord’s Prayer; Love; Prayer; Prophecy*; Prophecy in Biblical Times; Prophet*; Remission of Sins; Repentance; Restoration of All Things; Restoration of the Gospel of Jesus Christ; Resurrection; Revelation; Sabbath Day; Sacrament*; Sacrifice in Biblical Times; Second Coming of Jesus Christ; Sin; Sons of Perdition; Soul; Spirit; Spirit Body; Spirit of Prophecy; Spirit World; Spiritual Death; Ten Commandments; Tithing; Transfiguration; Unpardonable Sin.

3. General topics related to the Bible and biblical studies: Adamic Language; Altar; Apocalyptic Texts; Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha; Apostle; Armageddon; Bible*; Bible Dictionary; Bible, LDS; Bible Scholarship; Canon; Deuteronomy; Devils; Dispensations of the Gospel; Dove, Sign of the; Epistemology; Foreordination; Gathering; Gentiles; Gentiles, Fulness of; Hebrews, Epistle to the; Holy of Holies; Inspiration; James, Epistle of; Jerusalem; Jesus Christ, Names and Titles of; Jesus Christ, Sources for Words of; Jesus Christ, Taking the Name of, Upon Oneself; Jesus Christ, Types and Shadows of; Jews; John, Revelations of; Joseph Smith Translation of the Bible (JST); Justice and Mercy; Justification; Last Days; Law of Moses; Levitical Priesthood; Marriage Supper of the Lamb; Matthew, Gospel of; Meridian of Time; Messiah*; Millennium; Miracles; Mount of Transfiguration; Mysteries of God; New Heaven and New Earth; New Jerusalem; New Testament; Old Testament; Omnipotent God, Omnipresence of God, Omniscience of God; Original Sin; Parables; Paradise; Perfection; Persecution; Polygamy; Preaching the Gospel; Predestination; Pre-existence (Pre-earthly Existence); Premortal Life; Priesthood in Biblical Times; Promised Land, Concept of a; Psalms, Messianic Prophecies in; Raising the Dead; Saints; Salvation; Sanctification; Scripture*; Scripture, Interpretation within Scripture; Scripture Study; Seed of Abraham; Sermon on the Mount; Seventy*; Sick, Blessing the; Sign Seeking; Signs; Signs as Divine Witness; Signs of the True Church; Stick of Joseph; Stick of Judah; Strait and Narrow; Symbolism; Teaching the Gospel; Temples*; Testimony of Jesus Christ; Theodicy; Theogony; Topical Guide; Urim and Thummim; Virgin Birth; War in Heaven; Washing of Feet; Witnesses, Law of; Works; Worship; Wrath of God.

- B. The Book of Mormon is recognized by Latter-day Saints as another testament of the divinity of Jesus Christ as it contains an account of the visit of the resurrected Jesus Christ to the peoples of the Western Hemisphere.

1. Persons, peoples, and places mentioned in the Book of Mormon: Abinadi; Adam*; Alma<sub>1</sub>; Alma<sub>2</sub>; Amulek; Benjamin; Brother of Jared; Cumorah; Ephraim; Ezias; Helaman<sub>1</sub>; Helaman<sub>2</sub>; Helaman<sub>3</sub>; Ishmael; Jacob, Son of Lehi; Jaredites; Jerusalem; Joseph of Egypt*; Laman; Lamanites; Lehi; Mormon; Moroni<sub>1</sub>; Moroni<sub>2</sub>; Moses; Mosiah<sub>1</sub>; Mosiah<sub>2</sub>; Mulek; Nephi<sub>1</sub>; Nephi<sub>2</sub>; Nephi<sub>3</sub>; Nephi<sub>4</sub>; Nephites; Neum; Samuel the Lamanite; Smith, Joseph*; Three Nephites; Women in the Book of Mormon; Zenock; Zoram.

2. Messages and teachings of the Book of Mormon: Agency; Allegory of Zenos; Atonement of Jesus Christ; Baptism; Baptismal Covenant; Baptismal Prayer; Beatitudes; Born of God; Condescension of God; Damnation; Evil; Faith in Jesus Christ; Fall of Adam; Fasting; Foreknowledge of God; Freedom; Fulness of the Gospel; Gathering; Gift of the Holy Ghost; Gifts of the Spirit; God; Gospel of Jesus Christ; Grace; Heaven; Hell; Holiness; Holy Ghost; Holy Spirit; Hope; Humility; Jehovah, Jesus Christ; Jesus Christ*; Jesus Christ, Types and Shadows; Jews; Joy; Justice and Mercy; Justification; Law of Moses; Lord's Prayer; New Heaven and New Earth; New Jerusalem; Oaths; Obedience; Omnipotent God, Omnipresence of God, Omniscience of God; Opposition; Paradise; Persecution; Plan of Salvation, Plan of Redemption; Prayer; Preaching the Gospel; Pride; Priestcraft; Promised Land, Concept of a; Prophecy; Prophecy in the Book of Mormon; Prophet*; Purpose of Earth Life*; Record Keeping; Remission of Sins; Repentance; Resurrection; Revelation; Sacrament*; Salvation; Sanctification; Sign Seeking; Signs; Signs as Divine Witness; Sin; Spiritual Death; Translated Beings; Tree of Life; Unpardonable Sin; Virgin Birth; Visions; Wealth, Attitudes Toward.

3. General topics related to the Book of Mormon: Angel Moroni Statue; Angels*; Anthon Transcript; AntiChrists; Blessings; Book of Mormon*; Book of Mormon, Authorship; Book of Mormon, Biblical Prophecies about; Book of Mormon Chronology; Book of Mormon Commentaries; Book of Mormon Economy and Technology; Book of Mormon Editions (1830-1981); Book of Mormon Geography; Book of Mormon, Government and Legal History in; Book of Mormon, History of Warfare in; Book of Mormon in a Biblical Culture; Book of Mormon Language; Book of Mormon Literature; Book of Mormon Manuscripts; Book of Mormon Names; Book of Mormon Near Eastern Background; Book of Mormon Peoples; Book of Mormon Personalities; Book of Mormon Plates and Records; Book of Mormon Religious Teachings and Practices; Book of Mormon Studies; Book of Mormon Translation by Joseph Smith; Book of Mormon Translations; Book of Mormon Witnesses; Canon; Chastening; Columbus, Christopher; Contention; Covenant Israel, Latter-day; Covenants; Cowdery, Oliver; Cumorah Pageant; Dead Sea Scrolls*; Deseret; Fayette, New York; Gentiles; Gold Plates; Grace; Great and Abominable Church; Harmony, Pennsylvania; Harris, Martin; Isaiah*; Israel*; Joseph Smith—History; Judgment; Judgment Day, Final; Kinderhook Plates; Lamanite Mission; Law*; Liahona; Malachi, Prophecies of; Manuscript, Lost 116 Pages; Melchizedek*; Messiah*; Miracles; Moroni, Angel; Moroni, Visitations of; Name of the Church; Native Americans; Natural Man; Palmyra/Manchester, New York; Polynesians; Scripture*; Scripture, Interpretation within Scripture;

Scripture Study; Seeret Combinations; Seer; Seer Stones; Smith, Joseph*; Spaulding Manuscript; Standard Works; Stick of Joseph; Suffering in the World; Sword of Laban; Symbolism; Temples*; Temptation; Ten Commandments; Testimony of Jesus Christ; Urim and Thummim; View of the Hebrews; “Voice from the Dust”; Whitmer, David; Witnesses, Law of; Women in the Book of Mormon; Works.

C. The Doctrine and Covenants contains many revelations from the Lord and other items pertaining to The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints and its members.

1. Persons and places mentioned in the Doctrine and Covenants or associated with it: Abraham; Adam; Adam-ondi-Ahman; Ahman; Carthage Jail; Colesville, New York; Cowdery, Oliver; Elias; Elijah; Enoch*; Far West, Missouri; Fayette, New York; Harmony, Pennsylvania; Harris, Martin; Hiram, Ohio; Hyde, Orson; Independence, Missouri; John the Baptist; John the Beloved; Kimball, Heber C.; Kirtland, Ohio; Kirtland Temple; Liberty Jail; Malachi, Prophecies of; Melchizedek*; Missouri*; Moses; Nauvoo; Nauvoo House; Nauvoo Temple; New Jerusalem; Noah; Palmyra/Manchester, New York; Pratt, Orson; Pratt, Parley P.; Rigdon, Sidney; Sarah; Smith, Emma Hale; Smith, Hyrum; Smith, Joseph; Smith, Joseph, Sr.; Smith, Joseph F.; Snow, Lorenzo; Taylor, John; Whitmer, David; Woodruff, Wilford; Young, Brigham; Zion.

2. Messages and teachings of the Doctrine and Covenants: Aaronic Priesthood*; Abrahamic Covenant; Afterlife; Alcoholic Beverages and Alcoholism; Apostle; April 6; Atonement of Jesus Christ; Baptism; Baptism for the Dead*; Baptism of Fire and of the Holy Ghost; Baptismal Covenant; Baptismal Prayer; Bishop; Born in the Covenant; Born of God; Burnings, Everlasting; Calling and Election; Callings; Celestial Kingdom; Chastening; Chastity, Law of; Children*; Church and State; Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, The; Church of the Firstborn; Common Consent; Confirmation; Consecration*; Covenants; Damnation; Deacon, Aaronic Priesthood; Degrees of Glory; Devils; Discernment, Gift of; Discipleship; Dispensation of the Fullness of Times; Dispensations of the Gospel; Divoree; Doctrine*; Elder, Melchizedek Priesthood; Elect of God; Elias, Spirit of; Elijah, Spirit of; Endless and Eternal; Endowment; Eternal Life; Eternal Lives, Eternal Increase; Eternal Progression; Exaltation; Faith in Jesus Christ; Family*; Fast and Testimony Meeting; Fast Offerings; Fasting; Father’s Blessings; First Presidency; First Principles of the Gospel; Foreknowledge of God; Foreordination; Fulness of the Gospel; Gift of the Holy Ghost; Gifts of the Spirit; God; God the Father*; Godhead; Godhood; Gospel of Abraham; Gospel of Jesus Christ; Head of the Church; Heirs*; Hell; High Council; High Priest; Holiness; Holy Ghost; Holy Spirit; Holy Spirit of Promise; Immortality and Eternal Life; Jesus Christ*; John, Revelations of; Justice and Mercy; Justification; Keys of the Priesthood; Lay Participation and Leadership; Laying on of Hands; Levitical Priesthood; Magnifying One's Calling; Man of Holiness; Marriage*; Melchizedek Priesthood*; Millennium; Name of God; Name of the Church; New and Everlasting Covenant; New Heaven and New Earth; Oath and Covenant of the Priesthood; Oaths; Obedience; Ordinances*; Organization*; Patriarch*; Patriarchal Blessings; Patriarchal Order of the Priesthood; Plan of Salvation, Plan of Redemption; Plural Marriage; Prayer; Preaching the Gospel; Pre-existence, Pre-earthly Existence; Premortal Life; Presidency, Concept of; President of the Church; Presiding Bishopric; Presiding High Priest; Priest, Aaronic Priesthood; Priesthood; Priesthood Blessings; Priesthood Offices; Priesthood Quorums; Prophet, Seer, and Revelator; Quorum of the Twelve Apostles; Record Keeping; Remission of Sins; Repentance; Restoration of All Things; Restoration of the Gospel of Jesus Christ; Resurrection; Revelation; Riches of Eternity; Sabbath Day; Sacrament Meeting; Sacrament*; Sacrifice; Saints; Salvation; Salvation of the Dead; Sanctification; Sealing*; Second Coming of Jesus Christ; Seed of Abraham; Setting Apart; Seventy*; Sick, Blessing the; Signs of the True Church; Solemn Assemblies; Sons of Perdition; Soul; Spirit; Spirit Body; Spirit of Prophecy; Spirit Prison; Spirit World; Spiritual Death; Stake; Stake President; Stewardship; Sunday; Teacher, Aaronic Priesthood; Teaching the Gospel; Telestial Kingdom; Temple Ordinances; Temple Recommend; Temples*; Terrestrial Kingdom; Testator; Testimony; Testimony Bearing; Testimony of Jesus Christ; Time and Eternity; Tithing; Tobacco; True and Living Church; Truth; United Orders; Unpardonable Sin; Ward; Ward Organization; Washing and Anointing; Washing of Feet; Welfare; Word of Wisdom; Work, Role of; Works; Zion.

3. General topics related to the Doctrine and Covenants:

Adam-ondi-Ahman; Agency; Apostasy; Authority; Bishop; Bishop, History of the Office; Bishop's Storehouse; Bishopric; Book of Commandments; Canon; Capital Punishment; Civil War Prophecy; Clerk; Coffee; Commandments; Conferences*; Confession of Sins; Constitution of the United States of America; Constitutional Law; Correlation of the Church, Administration; Council of the First Presidency and the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles; Courts, Ecclesiastical, Nineteenth-Century; Disciplinary Procedures; Doctrine and Covenants*; Doctrine and Covenants Commentaries; Doctrine and Covenants Editions; Doctrine and Covenants as Literature; Drugs, Abuse of; Enduring to the End; Finances of the Church; Financial Contributions; Following the Brethren; Freedom; Freemasonry and the Temple; Freemasonry in Nauvoo; Genealogy; General Authorities; Gentiles; Gentiles, Fulness of; Health, Attitudes toward; Heaven; History of the Church*; Holy of Holies; Home; Home Teaching; Hosanna Shout; Interviews; Israel*; Joining the Church; Judgment Day, Final; Kingdom of God*; Knowledge; Last Days; Latter-day Saints (LDS); Law*; Law of Adoption; Lawsuits; Lectures on Faith; Light and Darkness; Light of Christ; Light-Mindedness; Manifesto of 1890; Martyrdom of Joseph and Hyrum Smith; Martyrs; Meetings, Major Church; Membership; Membership Records; Men, Roles of; Meridian of Time; Mission President; Missionary, Missionary Life; Missions; Missouri Conflict; Motherhood; Murder; Mysteries of God; Oil, Consecrated; Organization of the Church in New Testament Times; Orthodoxy, Heterodoxy, and Heresy; Persecution; Policies, Practices, and Procedures; Polygamy; Poverty, Attitudes toward; Prayer Circle; Priesthood Councils; Priesthood Interview; Prophecy*; Prophet*; Purpose of Earth Life*; Reason and Revelation; Righteousness; Sabbath Day; Schools of the Prophets; Scripture*; Scripture, Interpretation within Scripture; Scripture Study; Sign Seeking; Signs; Signs as Divine Witnesses; Signs of the Times; Sin; Succession in the Presidency; Tea; Ten Commandments; Thankfulness; Tolerance; Translated Beings; Trials; Visions of Joseph Smith; Visiting Teaching; Voice of Warning; Wealth, Attitudes toward; Welfare Services; Women, Roles of*; Worldliness; Worship; Wrath of God; Zionism; Zion's Camp.

D. The Pearl of Great Price is the shortest of the standard works. However, it contains very important information on several basic principles, doctrines, and ordinances of the Gospel.

1. Persons, places, and events mentioned in the Pearl of Great Price or associated with this scripture: Aaronic Priesthood*; Abel; Abraham; Adam*; Cain; Cowdery, Oliver; Creation, Creation Accounts; Cumorah; Elijah*; Enoch*; Eve; First Vision; Garden of Eden; Harmony, Pennsylvania; Harris, Martin; James the Apostle; John the Baptist; John the Beloved; Malachi, Prophecies of; Melchizedek*; Moroni, Angel; Moroni, Visitations of; Moses; Noah; Palmyra/Manchester, New York; Peter; Sacred Grove; Sarah; Seth; Smith, Emma Hale; Smith, Joseph; Smith, Joseph, Sr.; Smith, Lucy Mack; South Bainbridge (Afton), New York; Zion.
2. Messages and teachings of the Pearl of Great Price: Abrahamic Covenant; Agency; Atonement of Jesus Christ; Baptism; Baptismal Covenant; Book of Remembrance; Consecration*; Council in Heaven; Covenant Israel, Latter-day; Creation, Creation Accounts; Cursings; Devils; Discernment, Gift of; Dispensations of the Gospel; Doctrine*; Earth; Faith in Jesus Christ; Fall of Adam; Father's Blessings; First Estate; Foreknowledge of God; Foreordination;

God; God the Father*; Godhead; Godhood; Gospel of Abraham; Gospel of Jesus Christ; Heaven; Heirs*; Immortality and Eternal Life; Intelligences; Jehovah, Jesus Christ; Jesus Christ*; Last Days; Millennium; Origin of Man; Plan of Salvation, Plan of Redemption; Prayer; Preaching the Gospel; Pre-existence, Pre-earthly Existence; Premortal Life; Priesthood; Priesthood Blessings: Prophet, Seer, and Revelator; Purpose of Earth Life*; Remission of Sins; Repentance; Revelation; Second Coming of Jesus Christ; Second Estate; Seer; Signs as Divine Witnesses; Sin; Soul; Spirit; Spirit Body; Spiritual Death; Translated Beings; Truth; Visions; Zion.

3. General topics related to the Pearl of Great Price: Book of Abraham*; Book of Moses; Elohim; Endless and Eternal; Garden of Eden; Gift of the Holy Ghost; Holiness; Holy Ghost; James, Epistle of; Joseph Smith—History; Joseph Smith—Matthew; Life and Death, Spiritual; Lost Scripture; Mysteries of God; Natural Man; Nature, Law of; New Heaven and New Earth; Obedience; Papyri, Joseph Smith; Patriarchal Order of the Priesthood; Pearl of Great Price*; Priesthood in Biblical Times; Prophecy*; Prophet*; Restoration of the Gospel of Jesus Christ; Resurrection; Righteousness; Sacrifice; Sacrifice in Biblical Times; Salvation; Scripture*; Scripture, Interpretation within Scripture; Sons of Perdition; Spirit of Prophecy; Standard Works; Teaching the Gospel; Testimony; Testimony of Jesus Christ; War in Heaven; Worlds.

III. DOCTRINES OF THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER-DAY SAINTS are the essential teachings associated with God's plan of salvation, progression, and eternal life for his children, including the basic principles and ordinances of the gospel of Jesus Christ. The many entries in the Encyclopedia related to these areas are listed under (A) the nature and characteristics of God and of the two other members of the Godhead; (B) the pre-earthly existence; (C) purposes of a mortal, physical, earthly existence; (D) the birth, life, mission and atonement of Jesus Christ; (E) basic principles and ordinances of the gospel of Jesus Christ; (F) other principles and ordinances pertaining to exaltation and eternal life. [See also in the Appendix: DOCTRINAL EXPOSITIONS OF THE FIRST PRESIDENCY; JOSEPH SMITH TRANSLATION OF THE BIBLE (SELECTIONS); LETTERS OF THE FIRST PRESIDENCY; LETTERS OF THE PRESIDING BISHOPRIC; LINES OF PRIESTHOOD AUTHORITY; TEMPLE DEDICATORY PRAYERS (EXCERPTS); THE WENTWORTH LETTER.]

A. The nature and characteristics of God and of the two other members of the Godhead.

1. God the Father: Ahman; Condescension of God; Elohim; Endless and Eternal; Fear of God; Foreknowledge of God; God; God the Father*; Godhead; Godhood; Heaven; Holiness; Man of Holiness; Name of God; Omnipotent God, Omnipresence of God, Omniscience of God; Worship; Wrath of God.

2. Jesus Christ the Son: Atonement of Jesus Christ; Condescension of God; Faith in Jesus Christ; Godhead; Gospel of Jesus Christ; Head of the Church; Heirs*; Holy Spirit of Promise; Hope of Israel; Jehovah, Jesus Christ; Jesus Christ*; Jesus Christ, Fatherhood and Sonship; Jesus Christ in the Scriptures*; Jesus Christ, Names and Titles of; Jesus Christ, Second Comforter; Jesus Christ, Sources for Words of; Jesus Christ, Taking the Name of, Upon Oneself; Jesus Christ, Types and Shadows of; Light of Christ; Mary, Mother of Jesus; Messiah*; Second Coming of Jesus Christ; Testimony of Jesus Christ; Virgin Birth.
  3. The Holy Ghost (or Holy Spirit): Godhead; Holy Ghost; Holy Spirit; Holy Spirit of Promise.
- B. The pre-earthly existence is one of the least understood stages of the plan of progression and eternal life, although both ancient and modern scriptures refer to this vital period of the existence of all human beings.
1. The pre-earthly spiritual existence as sons and daughters of our Heavenly Father: Born of God; Brotherhood; Council in Heaven; First Estate; Intelligences; Kingdom of God*; Mother in Heaven; Origin of Man; Paradise; Pre-existence (Pre-earthly Existence); Premortal life; Sisterhood; Spirit; Spirit Body.
  2. The grand council in heaven and items discussed there: Accountability; Agency; Atonement of Jesus Christ; Authority; Celestial Kingdom; Council in Heaven; Creation and Creation Accounts; Devils; Doctrine*; Elohim; Fall of Adam; First Estate; Foreknowledge of God; Foreordination; Jehovah; Life and Death, Spiritual; Meridian of Time; Millennium; Mortality; Oaths; Obedience; Perfection; Physical Body; Plan of Salvation, Plan of Redemption; Priesthood; Procreation; Prophet*; Purpose of Earth Life*; Resurrection; Revelation; Reverence; Sacrifice; Salvation; Second Estate; Soul; Telestial Kingdom; Terrestrial Kingdom; War in Heaven.
  3. The devil and other evil spirits: Antichrists; Buffetings of Satan; Council in Heaven; Damnation; Devils; Evil; Hell; Satanism; Sons of Perdition; Spirit Prison; Spiritual Death; Unpardonable Sin.
- C. Purposes of a mortal, physical, earthly existence.
1. The creation of a physical earth: Adam*; Creation and Creation Accounts; Earth; Jehovah, Jesus Christ; Jesus Christ*.
  2. The importance of a physical body: Birth; Mankind; Mortality; Physical Body; Physical Fitness, Recreation; Procreation; Purpose of Earth Life*; Second Estate; Work, Role of.

3. The spirit and the physical body constitute the soul of man: Mankind; Physical Body; Resurrection; Soul; Spirit; Spirit Body; Spirit World.

D. The birth, life, ministry, and atonement of Jesus Christ.

1. Persons and events associated with the birth of Jesus Christ: Birth; Condescension of God; God; God the Father*; Heirs*; Holy Ghost; Jesus Christ*; Jesus Christ in the Scriptures*; Mary, Mother of Jesus; Meridian of Time.
2. Entries associated with the life and ministry of Jesus Christ: Beatitudes; Dove, Sign of the; Gospel of Jesus Christ; Jesus Christ*; Jesus Christ in the Scriptures*; Jesus Christ, Names and Titles of; Jesus Christ, Second Comforter; Jesus Christ, Sources for Words of; Jesus Christ, Types and Shadows of; John the Baptist; Kingdom of God*; Matthew, Gospel of; Messiah*; Miracles; New Testament; Organization of the Church in New Testament Times; Preaching the Gospel; Sacrament; Sermon on the Mount; Transfiguration; Washing of Feet.
3. Entries associated with the atonement of Jesus Christ, including his becoming the Savior and Redeemer of all mankind: Atonement of Jesus Christ; Blood Atonement; Cross; Death and Dying; Gethsemane; Grace; Jesus Christ*; Jesus Christ in the Scriptures*; Resurrection; Second Coming of Jesus Christ.

E. Basic principles and ordinances of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

1. Faith in the Lord Jesus Christ: Faith in Jesus Christ; Charity; Hope; Jesus Christ*.
2. Repentance: Confession; Remission of Sins; Repentance.
3. Baptism by immersion for the remission of sins: Baptism; Baptism for the Dead*; Baptismal Covenant; Baptismal Prayer.
4. Receiving the gift of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of hands: Baptism of Fire and of the Holy Ghost; Born of God; Confirmation; Discernment, Gift of; Gift of the Holy Ghost; Gifts of the Spirit; Holy Ghost; Laying on of Hands.
5. Other topics associated with the gospel of Jesus Christ: Afterlife; Amen; Articles of Faith; Atonement of Jesus Christ; Authority; Beatitudes; Book of Life; Christians and Christianity; Commandments; Conversion; Covenants; Covenants in Biblical Times; Deification, Early Christian; Elect of God; Endless and Eternal; Endowment; Enduring to the End; Fasting; First Principles of the Gospel; Foreordination; Fulness of the Gospel; Gospel of Jesus Christ; Grace; Head of the Church; Jehovah, Jesus Christ; Jesus Christ*; Jesus Christ in the Scriptures*; Jesus Christ, Second Comforter; Judgment; Judgment Day, Final; Justice and Mercy; Justification; Kingdom of God*; Law*; Light of Christ;

Lord's Prayer; Love; Matthew, Gospel of; Messiah; Millennium; Miracles; Mount of Transfiguration; New and Everlasting Covenant; New Testament; Ordinances; Organization of the Church in New Testament Times; Parables; Paradise; Plan of Salvation, Plan of Redemption; Prayer; Preaching the Gospel; Prophecy*; Prophet*; Purpose of Earth Life; Restoration of All Things; Restoration of the Gospel of Jesus Christ; Revelation; Reverence; Righteousness; Sabbath Day; Sacrament*; Sacrifice; Sacrifice in Biblical Times; Sanctification; Second Coming of Jesus Christ; Tithing; Works.

F. Other principles and ordinances pertaining to exaltation and eternal life.

1. Blessing and naming children: Adoption of Children; Blessings; Born in the Covenant; Children*; Father's Blessings.
2. Confirmation as a member of the Church: Common Consent; Confirmation; Gift of the Holy Ghost; Holy Ghost; Holy Spirit; Law of Adoption; Laying on of Hands; Spirit of Prophecy; Testimony; Testimony of Jesus Christ.
3. Ordination to the priesthood: Aaronic Priesthood*; Apostle; Bishop; Deacon, Aaronic Priesthood; Elder, Melchizedek Priesthood; High Priest; Keys of the Priesthood; Levitical Priesthood; Melchizedek Priesthood*; Patriarch; Oath and Covenant of the Priesthood; Patriarchal Order of the Priesthood; Priest, Aaronic Priesthood; Priesthood; Priesthood Offices; Priesthood Quorums; Setting Apart; Seventy*; Teacher, Aaronic Priesthood.
4. The Holy Endowment: Endowment; Endowment Houses; Salvation for the Dead; Temple Ordinances; Temples*.
5. Marriage of husband and wife, and the sealing of children to parents: Eternal Life; Eternal Lives, Eternal Increase; Family*; Fatherhood; Marriage*; Motherhood; New and Everlasting Covenant; Sealing*; Temple Ordinances; Temples*; Time and Eternity.
6. Other topics associated with exaltation and eternal life and with the eternal nature of the family: Abrahamic Covenant; Ancestral File™; Book of Remembrance; Brotherhood; Calling and Election; Celestial Kingdom; Dating and Courtship; Degrees of Glory; Eternal Progression; Exaltation; Family*; Family History, Genealogy; Family History Centers; Family History Library; Family Home Evening; Family Organizations; Family Prayer; Family Registry™; FamilySearch™; Feminism; Genealogical Society of Utah; Godhood; Heaven; Heirs*; Immortality; Immortality and Eternal Life; International Genealogical Index™ (IGI); Journals; Joy; Judgment Day, Final; Justification; Magnifying One's Calling; Mysteries of God; Name Extraction Program; Oaths; Obedience; Personal Ancestral File®; Plan of Salvation, Plan of Redemption; Purpose of Earth Life*; Resurrection; Salvation; Sanctification; Sisterhood; Stillborn Children.

IV. ORGANIZATION AND GOVERNMENT OF THE CHURCH are listed under the following: (A) the restoration of priesthood authority, keys, and offices; (B) the organization of the Church on April 6, 1830; (C) the development of priesthood quorums and councils; (D) the development of Church units, and the leaders basic to those units; (E) the development of auxiliary organizations (auxiliary to the priesthood), and (F) policies, procedures, and practices in administering the units and activities of the Church. [See also in the Appendix: BIOGRAPHICAL REGISTER OF GENERAL CHURCH OFFICES; A CHRONOLOGY OF CHURCH HISTORY; CHURCH PERIODICALS; GENERAL CHURCH OFFICERS, A CHRONOLOGY; LINES OF PRIESTHOOD AUTHORITY.]

A. The restoration of priesthood authority, keys, and offices.

1. Restoration of the Aaronic Priesthood, its authority, keys, and offices: Aaron, Brother of Moses; Aaronic Priesthood*; Harmony, Pennsylvania; John the Baptist; Keys of the Priesthood; Laying on of Hands; Levitical Priesthood; Ordination to the Priesthood; Priesthood; Priesthood Offices; Priesthood Quorums.
2. Restoration of the Melchizedek Priesthood, its authority, keys, and offices: James, the Apostle; John the Beloved; Keys of the Priesthood; Melchizedek*; Melchizedek Priesthood*; Oath and Covenant of the Priesthood; Ordination to the Priesthood; Peter; Priesthood; Priesthood Offices; Priesthood Quorums.

B. The organization of the Church on April 6, 1830.

1. Date of the organization: April 6.
2. Circumstances of the organization: Organization of the Church, 1830.

C. The development of the priesthood quorums and councils.

1. The First Presidency: Council of the First Presidency and the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles; Cowdery, Oliver; First Presidency; Head of the Church; Presidency, Concept of; President of the Church; Presiding High Priest; Prophet, Seer, and Revelator; Prophet*; Smith, Hyrum; Smith, Joseph; Succession in the Presidency.
2. The Quorum of the Twelve Apostles: Apostle; Council of the First Presidency and Quorum of the Twelve; Prophet, Seer, and Revelator; Prophet*; Quorum of the Twelve Apostles.
3. The First Council of the Seventy, The First Quorum of the Seventy, and additional quorums of Seventy: Area, Area Presidency; Assistants to the Twelve; Seventy*.

4. The Presiding Bishopric: Bishop; Bishop, History of the Office; Bishopric; Presiding Bishopric.
5. The Patriarch to the Church and other patriarchs: Evangelists; Patriarch*; Patriarchal Blessings.
6. High Priests, and High Priests Quorums and Groups: High Priest; Priesthood Quorums.
7. Elders, and the Elders Quorum: Elder, Melchizedek Priesthood; Priesthood Quorums.
8. Bishops, and the calling of a ward bishop: Bishop; Bishop, History of the Office; Bishopric; Branch, Branch President.
9. Priests, and the Priests Quorum: Priest, Aaronic Priesthood; Priesthood Quorums.
10. Teachers, and the Teachers Quorum: Priesthood Quorums; Teacher, Aaronic Priesthood.
11. Deacons, and the Deacons Quorum: Deacon, Aaronic Priesthood; Priesthood Quorums.
12. Other topics associated with the restoration and development of priesthood quorums and groups: Brotherhood; Callings; Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, The; Common Consent; Conferences*; Correlation of the Church, Administration; Discipleship; Following the Brethren; General Authorities; General Handbook of Instructions; Heirs*; Home Teaching; Keys of the Priesthood; Kingdom of God*; Laying on of Hands; Magnifying One's Calling; Melchizedek Priesthood*; Oath and Covenant of the Priesthood; Ordinances*; Organization*; Patriarchal Order of the Priesthood; Priesthood; Priesthood Blessings; Priesthood Councils; Priesthood Executive Committee, Stake and Ward; Priesthood in Biblical Times; Priesthood Interview; Priesthood Offices; Restoration of All Things; Setting Apart; Spirit of Prophecy; True and Living Church;

D. The development of Church units, and the leaders basic to those units.

1. Missions and Mission Presidents: Mission President; Missionary, Missionary Life; Missionary Training Centers; Missions; Missions of the Twelve to the British Isles.
2. Areas and Area Presidencies: Area, Area Presidency.
3. Regions and Regional Representatives: Region, Regional Representative.
4. Stakes and Stake Presidencies: High Council; Stake; Stake President, Stake Presidency.
5. Districts and District Presidencies: District, District President.

6. Wards and Ward Bishops: Bishop; Ward; Ward Budget; Ward Council; Ward Organization; Ward Welfare Committee.
  7. Branches and Branch Presidents: Branch, Branch President.
- E. The development of auxiliary organizations (auxiliary to the priesthood).
1. Relief Society: Compassionate Service; Lyman, Amy Brown; Relief Society; Relief Society in Nauvoo; Relief Society Magazine; Robison, Louise Yates; Smith, Bathsheba Bigler; Smith, Emma Hale; Snow, Eliza R.; Spafford, Belle Smith; Visiting Teaching; Wells, Emmeline B.; Williams, Clarissa; Woman's Exponent; Women, Roles of; Young, Zina D. H.
  2. Sunday School: Ballantyne, Richard; Instructor, The; Juvenile Instructor; Sunday School.
  3. Young Women Organization: Fox, Ruth May; Retrenchment Association; Taylor, Elmina Shepard; Young Woman's Journal; Young Women; Youth.
  4. Young Men Organization: Aaronic Priesthood; Contributor; Improvement Era; Wells, Junius F.; Young Men; Youth.
  5. Primary: Children; Children's Friend, The; Friend, The; Parmley, LaVern Watts; Primary; Rogers, Aurelia Spencer.
  6. In general: Auxiliary Organizations; Ensign; New Era.
- F. Policies, procedures, and practices in administering the units and activities of the Church.
1. Priesthood authority and direction: Area, Area Presidency; Authority; Bishop; Bishopric; Branch, Branch President; Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, The; Clerk; Council of the First Presidency and the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles; First Presidency; General Authorities; General Handbook of Instructions; Head of the Church; High Council; Keys of the Priesthood; Kingdom of God*; Missions; Organization*; Organization of the Church in New Testament Times; President of the Church; Presiding Bishopric; Presiding High Priest; Priesthood; Priesthood Councils; Priesthood Executive Committee, Stake and Ward; Prophet, Seer, and Revelator; Prophet*; Quorum of the Twelve Apostles; Region, Regional Representative; Seer; Seventy*; Stake; Stake President, Stake Presidency; Succession in the Presidency; Ward; Ward Council; Ward Organization; Ward Welfare Committee.
  2. Administration of Church units and activities: Area, Area Presidency; Bishop; Bishopric; Branch, Branch President; Clerk; Common Consent; Conferences*; Correlation of the Church, Administration; Council of the First Presidency and the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles; First Presidency; Following the Brethren; General Handbook of Instructions; High Council; Organization*; Organization of the Church in New Testament Times; Presidency, Concept of; President of the Church; Priesthood Executive Committee, Stake and Ward; Priesthood Quorums; Quorum of Twelve Apostles; Region, Regional Representative; Setting Apart; Seventy*; Stake; Stake President, Stake Presidency; Stewardship; Ward; Ward Council; Ward Organization; Ward Welfare Committee.

3. Means of communicating with local units and with members of the Church: Almanacs; Bulletin; Callings; Church News; Common Consent; Conference Reports; Conferencees*; Distribution Centers; Ensign; Fast and Testimony Meetings; Friend, The; General Handbook of Instructions; Home Teaching; Magazines; Meetings, Major Church; Membership Records; New Era; Policies, Practices, and Procedures; Proclamations of the First Presidency and Council of the Twelve Apostles; Publications; Public Communications; Sacrament Meeting; Satellite Communication System; Solemn Assemblies; Visiting Teaching.

V. PROCEDURES AND PRACTICES OF THE CHURCH AND ITS MEMBERS AS THEY RELATE TO THEMSELVES AND TO SOCIETY IN GENERAL include (A) Church members as they perceive themselves and relate to other members of the Church; (B) Church members as they are perceived by others and as they relate to other churches and groups, and (C) Studies comparing Church members with others, including the vital statistics (demographies) of the Church and its members. [See also in the Appendix: A CHRONOLOGY OF CHURCH HISTORY; CHURCH MEMBERSHIP FIGURES; CHURCH PERIODICALS; DOCTRINAL EXPOSITIONS OF THE FIRST PRESIDENCY; GENERAL CHURCH OFFICERS, A CHRONOLOGY; GLOSSARY; LETTERS OF THE FIRST PRESIDENCY; LETTERS OF THE PRESIDING BISHOPRIC; LINES OF PRIESTHOOD AUTHORITY; A SELECTION OF LDS HYMNS; TEMPLE DEDICATORY PRAYERS (EXCERPTS).]

A. Church members as they perceive themselves and relate to other members of the Church.

1. Emphasis on the importance and eternal nature of the family and on family history (genealogy): Adoption of Children; Afterlife; Ancestral File™; Biography and Autobiography; Book of Remembrance; Born in the Covenant; Brotherhood; Children*; Dating and Courtship; Family*; Family History, Genealogy; Family History Centers; Family History Library; Family Home Evening; Family Organizations; Family Prayer; Family Registry™; FamilySearch™; Fatherhood; Feminism; Genealogical Society of Utah; Genealogy; God the Father*; Home; International Genealogical Index™ (IGI); Journals; Libraries and Archives; Maternity and Child Health Care; Men, Roles of; Motherhood; Name Extraction Program; Personal Ancestral File®; Sisterhood; Stillborn Children; Utah Genealogical and Historical Magazine; Woman Suffrage; Women, Roles of*; Women's Topics; World Conferences on Records.

2. Belief in a plan of progression and eternal life leading from a pre-earthly existence to the resurrection and, for the faithful righteous, to Godhood: Celestial Kingdom; Council in Heaven; Degrees of Glory; Eternal Life; Eternal Lives, Eternal Increase; Eternal Progression; Exaltation; First Estate; God the Father; Godhood; Heaven; Heirs*; Immortality and Eternal Life; Individuality; Intelligences; Judgment Day, Final; Mankind; Marriage*; Mortality; Mother in Heaven; Origin of Man; Perfection; Physical Body; Plan of Salvation, Plan of Redemption; Pre-existence (Pre-earthly Existence); Premortal Life; Purpose of Earth Life*; Resurrection; Salvation of the Dead; Sealing*; Second Estate; Soul; Spirit; Spirit Body; Spirit World; Telestial Kingdom; Terrestrial Kingdom.
3. Temple ordinances and administration: Baptism for the Dead; Endowment; Garments; Kirtland Temple; Nauvoo Temple; Salt Lake Temple; Sealing*; Temple Ordinances; Temple President and Matron; Temple Recommend; Temples*.
4. Missionary service and proselytizing: Mission President; Missionary, Missionary Life; Missionary Training Centers; Missions; Missions of the Twelve to the British Isles; Preaching the Gospel.
5. Health codes and care: Alcoholic Beverages and Alcoholism; Coffee; Deseret Hospital; Health, Attitudes Toward; Hospitals; Maternity and Child Health Care; Medical Practices; Mental Health; Tea; Tobacco; Word of Wisdom.
6. Principle of continuing revelation to a living prophet: First Presidency; First Vision; Head of the Church; President of the Church; Presiding High Priest; Prophet Joseph Smith; Prophet, Seer, and Revelator; Prophet*; Revelation; Revelations, Unpublished; Seer; Spirit of Prophecy; Visions; Visions of Joseph Smith.
7. Principle of the Church [Kingdom of God on the earth] being governed by Apostles with priesthood authority directly from Jesus Christ: Apostle; Authority; Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, The; Church of the First-born; Council of the First Presidency and the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles; Keys of the Priesthood; Latter-day Saints (LDS); Priesthood; Priesthood in Biblical Times; Priesthood Offices; Priesthood Quorums; Quorum of the Twelve Apostles; Restoration of All Things; Restoration of the Gospel of Jesus Christ.

8. Movies, radio and television programming: Bonneville International; Broadcasting; KSL Radio; Man's Search for Happiness; Mormon Tabernacle Choir; Mormon Tabernacle Choir Broadcast ("The Spoken Word"); Motion Pictures, LDS Productions; Public Communications; Satellite Communication System.
9. Participation in world's fairs, exhibitions, visitors centers, and development of historical sites: Christus Statue; Exhibitions and World's Fairs; Historical Sites; Pageants; Polynesian Cultural Center; Sacred Grove; Visitors Centers.
10. Church educational system and Church curricula: Academies; Brigham Young College; Brigham Young University*; Church Educational System (CES); Curriculum; Distribution Centers; Education*; Institutes of Religion; Intelligence; Knowledge; LDS Business College; LDS Foundation; LDS Student Associations; Meetinghouse Libraries; Ricks College; Schools; Schools of the Prophets; Seminaries; Teachers, Teacher Development; Teaching the Gospel; University of Deseret; Values, Transmission of.
11. Libraries and archives: Brigham Young University*; Family History Centers; Family History Library; Libraries and Archives; Meetinghouse Libraries.
12. Programs and materials for special groups: Blind, Materials for the; Deaf, Materials for the; Firesides; Hospitals; Indian Student Placement Services; Lamanite Mission; Leadership Training; Senior Citizens; Single Adults; Social Services; Sports; Welfare Services; Youth.
13. Arts and music: Architecture; Art in Mormonism; Artists, Visual; Dance; Drama; Fine Arts; Folk Art; Folklore; Humor; Hymns and Hymnody; Literature, Mormon Writers of*; Mormon Handicraft; Mormon Tabernacle Choir; Mormon Youth Symphony and Chorus; Mormons, Image of*; Motion Pictures, LDS Productions; Museums; Music; Musicians; Pageants; Public Speaking; Sculptors; Symbols, Cultural and Artistic; "This Is the Place" Monument.
14. Magazines, newspapers, and other periodicals: Almanacs; Children's Friend, The; Church News; Contributor; Deseret News; Ensign; Evening and the Morning Star, The; Friend, The; Improvement Era; Instructor, The; International Magazines; Journal of Discourses; Juvenile Instructor; Lectures on Faith; Liahona The Elders' Journal; Magazines; Messenger and Advocate; Millennial Star; New Era; Relief Society Magazine; Times and Seasons; Utah Genealogical and Historical Magazine; Woman's Exponent; Young Woman's Journal.
15. Official letters, bulletins, and handbooks: Bulletin; General Handbook of Instructions; Policies, Practices, and Proceedures; Proclamations of the First Presidency and Council of the Twelve Apostles; Publications; Wentworth Letter.

16. Welfare assistance and programs: Calamities and Disasters; Charity; Deseret Industries; Economic Aid; Economic History of the Church; Emergency Preparedness; Fast Offerings; Humanitarian Services; Self-Sufficiency (Self-Reliance); Social Services; Welfare; Welfare Farms; Welfare Services; Welfare Square; Work, Role of.
  17. Construction and architecture of Church buildings: Architecture; Building Program; City Planning; Meetinghouses; Temples*.
  18. Books and materials on Church history: Almanacs; Comprehensive History of the Church, A; History of the Church*; History of the Church (History of Joseph Smith); History, Significance to LDS; Joseph Smith—History; Journal of Discourses; Legal and Judicial History of the Church.
  19. Symbols, celebrations, observances, and dedications: Angel Moroni Statue; Beehive Symbol; Burial; Celebrations; Centennial Observances; Ceremonies; Christmas; Christus Statue; Dedications; Easter; Pioneer Day; Pioneer Life and Worship; Symbols, Cultural and Artistic; Temple Square; “This Is the Place” Monument; Vocabulary, LDS.
  20. Worship practices and Church activities: Activity in the Church; Callings; Centennial Observances; Conferences*; Confidential Records; Dedications; Family Home Evening; Fast and Testimony Meeting; Fellowshiping Members; Firesides; Home Teaching; Hymns and Hymnody; Inspiration; Joining the Church; Laying on of Hands; Leadership Training; Meetings, Major Church; Membership; Music; Pioneer Life and Worship; Policies, Practices, and Procedures; Preaching the Gospel; Primary; Public Speaking; Relief Society; Reverence; Sacrament; Sacrament Meeting; Setting Apart; Single Adults; Solemn Assemblies; Sports; Sunday School; Temple Ordinances; Visiting Teaching; Word of Wisdom; Young Men; Young Women.
- B. Church members as they are perceived by others and as they relate to other churches and groups.
1. Anti-LDS beliefs, publications, and legal actions: Anti-Mormon Publications; Antipolygamy Legislation; Cult; “Fundamentalists”; Reynolds v. United States; Seet; Smoot Hearings; Stereotyping of Mormons.
  2. Church beliefs and practices in selected areas shared with other groups in society: Agency; Animals; Archaeology; Astronomy, Scriptural References to; Blacks; Blessing on Food; Brotherhood; Catholicism and Mormonism; Chaplains; Children*; Church and State; Church in the World; Civic Duties; Civil Rights; Communion; Community; Compassionate Service; Constitution of the United States of America; Constitutional Law; Diplomatic Relations; Economic Aid; Education*; Emergency Preparedness; Equality; Ethics; Family History, Genealogy; Family Organizations; Fate; Fatherhood; Forgeries of Historical Documents; Freedom; Gentiles; Gentiles, Fulness of; Home; Humanitarian Services; Individuality; Interfaith Relationships*; Jews; Law; Lifestyle; Love; Mankind; Matter; Men, Roles of; Military and the Church; Minorities; Mormonism, An Independent Interpretation; Mormonism, Mormons; Motherhood; Music; Native Americans; Natural Man; Nature, Law of; Non-Mormons, Social Relations with; Origin of Man; "Peculiar" People; Philosophy; Politics*; Poverty, Attitudes toward; Press and Publications; Press, News Media and the Church; Protestant Reformation; Protestantism; Public Communications; Public Relations; Purpose of Earth Life*; Race, Racism; Religious Experience; Religious Freedom; Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints; Restorationism, Protestant; Schismatic Groups; Science and Religion; Science and Scientists; Scouting; Senior Citizens; Single Adults; Social Services; Socialization; Societies and Organizations; Society; United States of America; Unity; Values, Transmission of; Volunteerism; War and Peace; Wealth, Attitudes toward; Welfare Services; Woman Suffrage; Women, Roles of*; Women's Topics; Word of Wisdom; Work, Role of; World Religions*; Worldliness.

3. The position of the Church on some of the traditional teachings of Christianity: Aaronic Priesthood; Apocalyptic Texts; Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha; Apostasy; Apostate; Armageddon; Articles of Faith; Christians and Christianity; Christology; Clergy; Confession of Sins; Creation, Creation Accounts; Creeds; Cross; Cult; Damnation; Deification, Early Christian; Devils; Divorce; Epistemology; Foreknowledge of God; Foreordination; Garden of Eden; Godhead; Grace; Heaven; Hell; Immaculate Conception; Infant Baptism*; Isaiah*; Israel*; James, Epistle of; Jesus Christ*; John, Revelations of; John the Baptist; John the Beloved; Joseph of Egypt*; Judgment Day, Final; Justice and Mercy; Justification; Last Days; Law of Moses; Laying on of Hands; Levitical Priesthood; Light of Christ; Lord's Prayer; Malachi, Prophecies of; Mary, Mother of Jesus; Melchizedek; Melchizedek Priesthood; Metaphysics; Millenarianism; Millennium; Miracles; Moses; Mother in Israel; Mount of Transfiguration; Mysteries of God; Name of God; Name of the Church; New and Everlasting Covenant; Omnipotent God, Omnipresence of God, Omniscience of God; Origin of Man; Original Sin; Orthodoxy, Heterodoxy, and Heresy;

Paradise; Peter; Predestination; Rebaptism; Reincarnation; Sacrament; Sacrifice; Sacrifice in Biblical Times; Saints; Salvation; Salvation of the Dead; Sanctification; Science and Religion; Scripture; Scripture, Interpretation Within Scripture; Second Coming of Jesus Christ; Sect; Sermon on the Mount; Seventy; Sick, Blessing the; Sign Seeking; Signs; Signs as Divine Witness; Signs of the Times; Signs of the True Church; Sin; Sons of Perdition; Soul; Spirit; Spirit Body; Spirit of Prophecy; Spirit World; Spiritual Death; Teaching the Gospel; Ten Commandments; Testimony Bearing; Testimony of Jesus Christ; Theodicy; Theogony; Theology; Transfiguration; Translated Beings; Truth; Unpardonable Sin; Virgin Birth; War in Heaven; Washing of Feet; Works; Worship; Wrath of God; Zion.

4. The position of the Church on moral and other sensitive issues related directly to society: Abortion; Abuse, Spouse and Child; Adultery; AIDS; Alcoholic Beverages and Alcoholism; Artificial Insemination; Autopsy; Birth Control; Blacks; Blood Transfusions; Capital Punishment; Celibacy; Chastity, Law of; Coffee; Conscientious Objection; Cremation; Divorce; Drugs, Abuse of; Evolution; Feminism; Gambling; Health, Attitudes Toward; Homosexuality; Lifestyle; Magic; Modesty; Modesty in Dress; Murder; Organ Transplants and Donations; Policies, Practices, and Procedures; Pornography; Poverty, Attitudes Toward; Premarital Sex; Procreation; Profanity; Prohibition; Prolonging Life; Race, Racism; Reincarnation; Satanism; Sex Education; Sexuality; Sterilization; Stillborn Children; Suicide; Tea; Tobacco; Values, Transmission of; War and Peace; Wealth, Attitudes Toward; Welfare Services; Women, Roles of*; Work, Role of.
5. Business and financial interests of the Church: Business*; Computer Systems; Deseret Book Company; Economic History of the Church; Finances of the Church; Financial Contributions; LDS Foundation.

C. Studies comparing Church members with others, including the vital statistics (demographics) of the Church and its members.

1. Studies comparing Church members with others: Activity in the Church; Latter-day Saints (LDS); Medical Practices; Occupational Status; Social and Cultural History; Social Characteristics; Social Services.
2. Vital statistics (demographics) of the Church and its members: Vital Statistics.

---

KEY TO ABBREVIATIONS

AF	Talmage, James E. Articles of Faith . Salt Lake City, 1890. (All references are to pagination in printings before 1960).
CHC	Comprehensive History of the Church , 6 vols., ed. B. H. Roberts. Salt Lake City, 1930.
CR	Conference Reports . Salt Lake City, 1898–.
CWHN	Collected Works of Hugh Nibley , ed. S. Ricks, J. Welch, et al. Salt Lake City, 1985–.
Dialogue	Dialogue: A Journal of Mormon Thought , 1965–.
DS	Smith, Joseph Fielding. Doctrines of Salvation , 3 vols. Salt Lake City, 1954–1956.
ER	Encyclopedia of Religion , 16 vols., ed. M. Eliade. New York, 1987.
F.A.R.M.S.	Foundation for Ancient Research and Mormon Studies. Provo, Utah.
HC	History of the Church , 7 vols., ed. B. H. Roberts. Salt Lake City, 1st ed., 1902; 2nd ed., 1950. (All references are to pagination in the 2nd edition.)
HDC	Historical Department of the Church, Salt Lake City.
IE	Improvement Era , 1897–1970.
JC	Talmage, James E. Jesus the Christ . Salt Lake City, 1915.
JD	Journal of Discourses , 26 vols., ed. J. Watt. Liverpool, 1854–1886.
JST	Joseph Smith Translation of the Bible .
MD	McConkie, Bruce R. Mormon Doctrine , 2nd ed. Salt Lake City, 1966.
MFP	Messages of the First Presidency , 5 vols., ed. J. Clark. Salt Lake City, 1965–1975.
PJS	Papers of Joseph Smith , ed. D. Jessee. Salt Lake City, 1989.
PWJS	The Personal Writings of Joseph Smith , ed. D. Jessee. Salt Lake City, 1984.
T&amp;S	Times and Seasons , 1839–1846.
TPJS	Teachings of the Prophet Joseph Smith , comp. Joseph Fielding Smith. Salt Lake City, 1938.
WJS	Words of Joseph Smith , ed. A. Ehat and L. Cook. Provo, Utah, 1980.

---

A

---

---

AARON, BROTHER OF MOSES

Aaron was a son of Amram and Jochebed of the tribe of Levi (Ex. 6:20), and a brother of Moses and Miriam (Ex. 4:14; 15:20). God directed him to meet his brother at the “mount of God” (Ex. 4:27–28), and appointed him spokesman for Moses (Ex. 4:14–16; 7:1–2; 2 Ne. 3:17). The AARONIC PRIESTHOOD, or lesser priesthood in The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, takes its name from Aaron.

While the Israelites were encamped at Sinai, Aaron, two of his sons, and seventy elders accompanied Moses to the holy mountain, where they saw God (Ex. 24:1, 9–11). Aaron and his sons were called by God through the prophet Moses to serve in the priest’s office (Ex. 28:1), Aaron becoming the “high,” or chief, priest over the Levitical order (Num. 3:32). His call from God through a prophet is used as an example for all who receive any PRIESTHOOD appointment of God (Heb. 5:4). He held the MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOOD, but as chief priest of the lesser priesthood he served in a lesser position equivalent to that of the modern Presiding Bishop (John Taylor, Items on the Priesthood, p. 5, Salt Lake City, 1881). Direct descendants of the firstborn son of Aaron have a legal right to the presidency of this priesthood (i.e., BISHOP; D&C 68:15–18; 107:16–17), but such an appointment requires a call from the FIRST PRESIDENCY of the Church (D&C 68:20).

Aaron was not privileged to enter the land of promise (Num. 20:7–13). Malachi prophesied that, in the latter days, the sons of Levi—which would include Aaron’s descendants—would again offer an offering in righteousness (Mal. 3:1–3; cf D&C 13:1). Moreover, all who receive both the Aaronic and Melchizedek priesthoods and magnify their CALLINGS through sacrifice and righteous lives are spoken of as the sons of Moses and of Aaron (D&C 84:18, 27, 30–32, 34).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Palmer, Lee A. Aaronic Priesthood Through the Centuries. Salt Lake City, 1964.

EDWARD J. BRANDT

---

AARONIC PRIESTHOOD

POWERS AND OFFICES

The two divisions of PRIESTHOOD in The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints are the Aaronic and the Melchizedek. Young men twelve to eighteen years of age, and older men who are new converts, are ordained to offices in the Aaronic Priesthood, “which holds the keys [governing or

---

AARON, BROTHER OF MOSES

Aaron was a son of Amram and Jochebed of the tribe of Levi (Ex. 6:20), and a brother of Moses and Miriam (Ex. 4:14; 15:20). God directed him to meet his brother at the “mount of God” (Ex. 4:27–28), and appointed him spokesman for Moses (Ex. 4:14–16; 7:1–2; 2 Ne. 3:17). The AARONIC PRIESTHOOD, or lesser priesthood in The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, takes its name from Aaron.

While the Israelites were encamped at Sinai, Aaron, two of his sons, and seventy elders accompanied Moses to the holy mountain, where they saw God (Ex. 24:1, 9–11). Aaron and his sons were called by God through the prophet Moses to serve in the priest’s office (Ex. 28:1), Aaron becoming the “high,” or chief, priest over the Levitical order (Num. 3:32). His call from God through a prophet is used as an example for all who receive any PRIESTHOOD appointment of God (Heb. 5:4). He held the MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOOD, but as chief priest of the lesser priesthood he served in a lesser position equivalent to that of the modern Presiding Bishop (John Taylor, Items on the Priesthood, p. 5, Salt Lake City, 1881). Direct descendants of the firstborn son of Aaron have a legal right to the presidency of this priesthood (i.e., BISHOP; D&C 68:15–18; 107:16–17), but such an appointment requires a call from the FIRST PRESIDENCY of the Church (D&C 68:20).

Aaron was not privileged to enter the land of promise (Num. 20:7–13). Malachi prophesied that, in the latter days, the sons of Levi—which would include Aaron’s descendants—would again offer an offering in righteousness (Mal. 3:1–3; cf D&C 13:1). Moreover, all who receive both the Aaronic and Melchizedek priesthoods and magnify their CALLINGS through sacrifice and righteous lives are spoken of as the sons of Moses and of Aaron (D&C 84:18, 27, 30–32, 34).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Palmer, Lee A. Aaronic Priesthood Through the Centuries. Salt Lake City, 1964.

EDWARD J. BRANDT

---

AARONIC PRIESTHOOD

POWERS AND OFFICES

The two divisions of PRIESTHOOD in The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints are the Aaronic and the Melchizedek. Young men twelve to eighteen years of age, and older men who are new converts, are ordained to offices in the Aaronic Priesthood, “which holds the keys [governing or delegating authority] of the ministering of angels, and of the gospel of repentance, and of baptism by immersion for the remission of sins” (D&C 13). It is the priesthood authority by which JOHN THE BAPTIST prepared the way for Jesus Christ, teaching faith, repentance, and baptism for the remission of sins (Matt. 3:1–17; Mark 1:1–11; Luke 1:5–80; John 1:15–34; Acts 8:14–17; D&C 84:25–28). The Aaronic Priesthood does not have the power to confer the Holy Ghost (Matt. 3:11; Mark 1:7–8; John 1:33–34; JS—H 1:70) or to administer totally the affairs of the kingdom of God. It is power and authority God has given to man to prepare him and those to whom he ministers to receive the greater power, authority, and blessings of the MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOOD.

Distinctive LDS insights into the origins of the Aaronic Priesthood stem from modern revelations indicating that when Moses led Israel out of Egypt, the Lord purposed to confer upon worthy men of all tribes the higher Melchizedek Priesthood. Disobedience and loss of faith and worthiness, however, caused the Israelites to harden their hearts against the Lord and Moses. Therefore, the Lord eventually took Moses out of their midst, and the Holy Priesthood also; and the lesser priesthood continued, which priesthood holdeth the key of the ministering of angels and the preparatory gospel; which gospel is the gospel of repentance and of baptism, and the remission of sins, and the law of carnal commandments, which the Lord in his wrath caused to continue with the house of Aaron among the children of Israel until John [the Baptist], whom God raised up [D&C 84:25–27].

The Israelites, unwilling to abide by the higher law of the fulness of the gospel with its greater priesthood, were given the law of carnal commandments, as a portion of the LAW OF MOSES, with its emphasis on offering symbolic, redemptive sacrifices to prepare them to receive the divine Redeemer, and they were given the lesser priesthood to administer that law. The Lord called AARON and his sons to be the priests and preside over this lesser priesthood (Num. 8). Only direct descendants of Aaron could be ordained priests. The first-born among the sons of Aaron would preside over the other priests. To assist Aaron and his posterity, particularly with the tabernacle and the preparing and offering of sacrifices, the Lord also called other male members of the tribe of Levi (not of the family of Aaron) to receive and carry out assignments in the lesser priesthood (Num. 3:5–13). The Levites held lesser offices of the Aaronic Priesthood and functioned under the keys or directive authority of that priesthood conferred upon Aaron and his sons (Widtsoe, pp. 12–17). Hence, the lesser priesthood was called the Aaronic Priesthood, after Aaron, but a portion of that priesthood was also called the LEVITICAL PRIESTHOOD because all those to whom it was given belonged to the tribe of Levi. This type of priesthood organization and service continued in Israel until Jesus Christ came.

John the Baptist, a descendant of Aaron through both parents and thus a Levite, was the son of Zacharias, a righteous priest in Israel at the time of the birth of Christ. It was this John whom God chose to prepare the way for Christ’s ministry on earth. From John’s birth his mission was set and his priesthood functions anticipated (D&C 84:28; Luke 1:5–17).

After being baptized by John, Jesus called his apostles (some of them from among John’s disciples) and ordained them (John 15:16); later he conferred upon Peter, James, and John the keys of the kingdom of God and a higher priesthood (see MOUNT OF TRANSFIGURATION). Following his death, resurrection, and ascension, Christ continued to direct his Church by giving commandments to the apostles through the power of the Holy Ghost (Acts 1:2) and through the authority of the higher Melchizedek Priesthood that he had conferred upon them. After the death of the apostles there followed a general apostasy, during which many gospel principles were lost and all the powers of the priesthood were withdrawn from the earth (2 Thes. 2:1–4; 2 Tim. 3:1–5).

On May 15, 1829, John the Baptist appeared to Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery as a resurrected messenger from God and conferred the ancient “Priesthood of Aaron” upon them (D&C 13). As the organization of the Church proceeded through the following months and years, many male members received the Aaronic Priesthood and were organized into quorums of priests, teachers, and deacons. In the Restoration, the Aaronic Priesthood has not been restricted to those who are literal descendants of Aaron or of Levi, since those lineages are not at present identified and the priesthood authority that implemented the ordinances of the law of Moses has been replaced by the higher priesthood and laws and ordinances of the gospel of Jesus Christ. Beginning with the reorganization of the priesthood in 1877, the Church established the current practice of ordaining boys to the Aaronic Priesthood during their early teenage years, organizing them at the ward level into PRIESTHOOD QUORUMS by age group and PRIESTHOOD OFFICE, and advancing them periodically to higher offices and eventually to the higher priesthood. The BISHOP of each ward presides over the Aaronic Priesthood in the ward.

Over the Aaronic Priesthood, the “president is to be a bishop; for this is one of the duties of this priesthood” (D&C 107:88), but bishops are also ordained high priests of the Melchizedek Priesthood because they preside and are not literal descendants of Aaron. The other three offices of the Aaronic Priesthood are deacon, teacher, and priest. Under the direction of the bishop, someone with proper authority confers the Aaronic Priesthood upon a worthy young man when he is twelve years old, ordaining him to the office of deacon. If he remains faithful and worthy, he is ordained to the office of teacher when he is fourteen years old and is given additional responsibilities. If he continues to remain faithful and worthy, he is ordained to the office of priest in the Aaronic Priesthood when he is sixteen years old, again receiving increased responsibilities. As young men progress in the priesthood, they retain all the rights and duties of lower offices.

The Lord has instructed the Church that bearers of the priesthood be organized into quorums (D&C 107:85–88). Some reasons for this are to establish order, to facilitate effective instruction in gospel principles and priesthood duties, and to prepare them for greater service and leadership in the Church. In the Aaronic Priesthood, a president and two counselors, chosen from the quorum members, preside over each quorum of deacons and teachers. This presidency is set apart (given powers of presidency) to preside over, sit in council with, and teach the members of the quorum their duty. The bishop is president of the priests quorum. He selects one or more boys as leaders under his presiding leadership and trains them to direct the other members of the quorum. Though the bishop and his two counselors in the bishopric hold all of the keys of the Aaronic Priesthood for the ward, the bishop usually calls an adult adviser to help train the boy leaders and to help instruct quorum members. However, the adviser has no presiding authority.

Thus the Aaronic Priesthood continues in its role as a preparatory priesthood, training young men in gospel principles and priesthood powers as they mature in service related to the preparatory gospel: faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, repentance, baptism for the remission of sins, and love of God and fellow beings. These responsibilities are most evident as the young men prepare, bless, and pass the SACRAMENT of the Lord’s Supper each Sabbath day in the SACRAMENT MEETINGS of the Church and as they otherwise assist the bishop in serving the people of the ward.

Today the Aaronic Priesthood gives young men experience and prepares them to receive the Melchizedek Priesthood when they are eighteen years old, with the greater privileges and responsibilities of its oath and covenant (D&C 84:33–40). The Melchizedek Priesthood increases their capacity to serve, perform the saving ordinances of the gospel, and direct the Church when called to do so.

A major activity program for Aaronic Priesthood boys in many areas of the world is SCOUTING. To effectively correlate priesthood and scouting activities, the bishop organizes the YOUNG MEN program in the ward. An adult man is called to serve as president of the Young Men under the bishop’s direction. Where scouting is organized, he and his two counselors generally also serve as the scout leaders. In wards with many boys, additional adults may be called to assist in the scouting program.

The bishop also organizes the girls of the ward into a YOUNG WOMEN program, with adult women advisers, and in age groups that correspond with ages of boys in Aaronic Priesthood quorums. Joint activities are planned and carried out regularly with the young men of the Aaronic Priesthood.

[For a more detailed history of the Aaronic Priesthood, see also Bishop, History of.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Hartley, William G. “The Priesthood Reorganization of 1877: Brigham Young’s Last Achievement.” BYU Studies 20 (Fall 1979):3–36.
- McConkie, Oscar W. Aaronic Priesthood. Salt Lake City, 1977.
- Palmer, Lee A. Aaronic Priesthood Through the Centuries. Salt Lake City, 1964.
- Widtsoe, John A. Priesthood and Church Government, revised ed. Salt Lake City, 1954.

VERDON W. BALLANTYNE

RESTORATION

On May 15, 1829, JOHN THE BAPTIST appeared to Joseph SMITH and Oliver COWDERY near Harmony, Pennsylvania, and bestowed the Aaronic Priesthood on them (see AARONIC PRIESTHOOD:

POWERS AND OFFICES). This ordination gave the two men AUTHORITY to baptize (see BAPTISM), and they immediately performed that ORDINANCE for one another in the Susquehannah River. The Prophet Joseph Smith had received no previous REVELATIONS authorizing him to baptize; to perform that ordinance properly required specific authorization from God. The return of John to bestow the Aaronic Priesthood confirmed that divine authority had been lost from the earth and that a heavenly visitation was necessary to restore it.

Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery were engaged in translating the Book of Mormon (see BOOK OF MORMON TRANSLATION BY JOSEPH SMITH) at the Prophet's homestead on the Susquehannah River in Harmony when the question of baptism arose. A passage in 3 Nephi 11 (see BOOK OF MORMON: THIRD NEPHI), in which the resurrected Savior instructed the Nephites on the subject, led the two men to wonder about their own baptism. Determining to pray about it, they went to the woods, where, as Oliver later recounted, "on a sudden, as from the midst of eternity, the voice of the Redeemer spake peace to us, while the veil was parted and the angel of God came down clothed with glory, and delivered the anxiously looked for message, and the keys of the Gospel of repentance" (JS—H 1:71n). Joseph said that the angel placed his hands on them and ordained them, saying: "Upon you my fellow servants, in the name of Messiah, I confer the Priesthood of Aaron, which holds the keys of the ministering of angels, and of the gospel of repentance, and of baptism by immersion for the remission of sins; and this shall never be taken again from the earth until the sons of Levi do offer again an offering unto the Lord in righteousness" (JS—H 1:69; D&C 13).

The angel informed them that the Aaronic Priesthood did not have the power of laying on of hands for the GIFT OF THE HOLY GHOST, but that that authority would be given to them later. He told Joseph to baptize Oliver, and Oliver to baptize Joseph, and each to ordain the other to the Aaronic Priesthood. The messenger said "that his name was John, the same that is called John the Baptist in the New Testament, and that he acted under the direction of Peter, James and John, who held the keys of the Priesthood of Melchizedek," which would be conferred later (JS—H 1:72; see MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOOD: RESTORATION).

In the time of Jesus, John the Baptist preached repentance to the Jews and baptized in the Jordan River. He baptized Jesus (Matt. 3:13–17; cf. 2 Ne. 31:4–13). John was a direct descendant of AARON, through both his priestly father Zacharias and his mother Elisabeth, one of the "daughters of Aaron" (Luke 1:5). A later revelation to Joseph Smith said that an angel bestowed authority on John to perform his earthly mission when he was eight days old (D&C 84:28).

By ordination and calling, John the Baptist held the KEYS of the Aaronic Priesthood. These include the keys of the "ministering of angels," meaning that holders of the Aaronic Priesthood are eligible to have angels minister to them. This priesthood also has the keys of the preparatory gospel, which embraces the "gospel of repentance and of baptism, and the remission of sins, and the law of eternal commandments" (D&C 84:27).

As others were also to enjoy the blessings associated with baptism for the remission of sins administered under priesthood authority, a revelation was given in 1829 regarding the exact words and procedure that were to be followed in conducting the ordinance for those who repent and ask for baptism.

Behold ye shall go down & stand in the water & in my name shall ye baptize them. And now behold these are the words which ye shall say calling them by name saying, Having authority given me of Jesus Christ I baptize you in the name of the Father & the Son & of the Holy Ghost Amen. And then shall ye immerse them in water [Cowdery, 1829 Ms.].

In the LDS Church today, only those having either the office of priest in the Aaronic Priesthood or the Melchizedek Priesthood may baptize people.

Monuments commemorating the restoration of the Aaronic Priesthood have been erected at TEMPLE SQUARE, Salt Lake City (1958), and in Harmony, Pennsylvania (1960).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Cowdery, Oliver. "Written in the year of our Lord & Savior 1829—A True copy of the articles of the Church of Christ." Ms. in handwriting of Oliver Cowdery, LDS Church Archives.
- McConkie, Oscar W. Aaronic Priesthood. Salt Lake City, 1977.
- Palmer, Lee A. The Aaronic Priesthood Through the Centuries. Salt Lake City, 1964.
- Porter, Larry C. "The Priesthood Restored." In Studies in Scripture, ed. R. Millet and K. Jackson, Vol. 2, pp. 389–409. Salt Lake City, 1985.

LARRY C. PORTER

ABEL

Latter-day scripture reveals much about Abel beyond what is contained in the Bible. He and CAIN had older brothers and sisters (Moses 5:2), and Abel “was a keeper of sheep” (Gen. 4:2; Moses 5:17). To his parents, the Lord had given “commandments, that they should worship the Lord their God, and should offer the firstlings of their flocks, for an offering unto the Lord” (Moses 5:5). ADAM and EVE were obedient to the Lord’s commands (Moses 5:6), and Abel also “hearkened unto the voice of the Lord. . . . And the Lord had respect unto Abel, and to his offering” (Moses 5:17, 20). On the other hand, Cain specifically at Satan’s behest brought an unacceptable offering (Moses 5:18–19, 21; cf. TPJS, pp. 58–60).

The book of Moses clarifies the Lord’s differing responses to Abel and Cain, and indicates that Adam and Eve had taught their children about the things of God: “And Adam and Eve . . . made all things [of God] known unto their sons and their daughters” (Moses 5:12). Subsequently, Abel “walked in holiness before the Lord” (Moses 5:26), but Cain “loved Satan more than God” (Moses 5:18). When his offering was not accepted, Cain “rejected the greater counsel which was had from God” and “listened not any more to the voice of the Lord, neither to Abel, his brother” (Moses 5:25–26). When Satan promised Cain that “I will deliver thy brother Abel into thine hands,” Cain exulted “that I may murder and get gain” (Moses 5:29–31; cf. Hel. 6:27). As a result, Cain “rose up against Abel his brother, and slew him” (Gen. 4:8; Moses 5:32), and said, “I am free; surely the flocks of my brother falleth into my hands” (Moses 5:33). The unconscionable nature of Cain’s murder of Abel is underscored by the fact that thereafter “Cain was shut out from the presence of the Lord” (Moses 5:41).

The New Testament affirms Abel’s faithfulness and obedience to God: “By faith Abel offered unto God a more excellent sacrifice than Cain, by which he obtained witness that he was righteous, God testifying of his gifts: and by it he being dead yet speaketh” (Heb. 11:4). Joseph SMITH taught that “God spoke to [Abel]: indeed it is said that God talked with him; and if He did, would He not, seeing that Abel was righteous, deliver to him the whole plan of the Gospel? . . . How could Abel offer a sacrifice and look forward with faith on the Son of God, for a remission of his sins, and not understand the Gospel?” (TPJS, p. 59; cf. Moses 5:6–12). Latter-day scripture also states that the priesthood among the ancients had been passed down through Abel, who was ordained by Adam (D&C 84:6–17).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

McConkie, Bruce R. A New Witness for the Articles of Faith, pp. 167–68, 340, 658–59. Salt Lake City, 1985.

STEVEN D. BENNION

ABINADI

Abinadi was a courageous prophet (150 B.C.), and the best known martyr in the Book of Mormon. His ministry and execution recounted at the heart of the Book of Mosiah sharpen the contrast between righteous King BENJAMIN and wicked King Noah. ALMA<sub>1</sub>, a converted eyewitness, recorded Abinadi’s main words shortly after they were spoken (Mosiah 17:4).

Abinadi belonged to a small group of reactionary NEPHITES who had returned from Zarahemla a generation earlier to repossess from the LAMANITES the city of Nephi, the traditional Nephite capital, and its temple. When the excesses of the apostate Nephite king and priests grew intolerable, Abinadi was commanded of the Lord to denounce publicly their abominations; he prophesied their coming captivity and affliction. Abinadi was condemned to death by Noah for this, but escaped.

Where he lived in exile is unknown. Similarities between his and Benjamin’s words (cf. Mosiah 16:1; 3:20; 16:5; 2:38; 16:10–11; 3:24–25) could mean that he spent some time in Zarahemla with king Benjamin and his people (W of M 1:16–17), or received similar revelation during this period.

After two years, having been commanded again by the Lord to prophesy, Abinadi reentered the city of Nephi in disguise. Before a crowd, he pronounced a curse in the name of the Lord upon the unrepentant people, their land, and their grain, with forthright predictions of destruction and humiliating bondage, reminiscent of Israel’s suffering in Egypt. In a potent curse, like those used in the ancient Near East to condemn covenant breakers, he testified that Noah’s life would “be valued even as a garment in a hot furnace” (Mosiah 12:3).

ABEL

Latter-day scripture reveals much about Abel beyond what is contained in the Bible. He and CAIN had older brothers and sisters (Moses 5:2), and Abel “was a keeper of sheep” (Gen. 4:2; Moses 5:17). To his parents, the Lord had given “commandments, that they should worship the Lord their God, and should offer the firstlings of their flocks, for an offering unto the Lord” (Moses 5:5). ADAM and EVE were obedient to the Lord’s commands (Moses 5:6), and Abel also “hearkened unto the voice of the Lord. . . . And the Lord had respect unto Abel, and to his offering” (Moses 5:17, 20). On the other hand, Cain specifically at Satan’s behest brought an unacceptable offering (Moses 5:18–19, 21; cf. TPJS, pp. 58–60).

The book of Moses clarifies the Lord’s differing responses to Abel and Cain, and indicates that Adam and Eve had taught their children about the things of God: “And Adam and Eve . . . made all things [of God] known unto their sons and their daughters” (Moses 5:12). Subsequently, Abel “walked in holiness before the Lord” (Moses 5:26), but Cain “loved Satan more than God” (Moses 5:18). When his offering was not accepted, Cain “rejected the greater counsel which was had from God” and “listened not any more to the voice of the Lord, neither to Abel, his brother” (Moses 5:25–26). When Satan promised Cain that “I will deliver thy brother Abel into thine hands,” Cain exulted “that I may murder and get gain” (Moses 5:29–31; cf. Hel. 6:27). As a result, Cain “rose up against Abel his brother, and slew him” (Gen. 4:8; Moses 5:32), and said, “I am free; surely the flocks of my brother falleth into my hands” (Moses 5:33). The unconscionable nature of Cain’s murder of Abel is underscored by the fact that thereafter “Cain was shut out from the presence of the Lord” (Moses 5:41).

The New Testament affirms Abel’s faithfulness and obedience to God: “By faith Abel offered unto God a more excellent sacrifice than Cain, by which he obtained witness that he was righteous, God testifying of his gifts: and by it he being dead yet speaketh” (Heb. 11:4). Joseph SMITH taught that “God spoke to [Abel]: indeed it is said that God talked with him; and if He did, would He not, seeing that Abel was righteous, deliver to him the whole plan of the Gospel? . . . How could Abel offer a sacrifice and look forward with faith on the Son of God, for a remission of his sins, and not understand the Gospel?” (TPJS, p. 59; cf. Moses 5:6–12). Latter-day scripture also states that the priesthood among the ancients had been passed down through Abel, who was ordained by Adam (D&C 84:6–17).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

McConkie, Bruce R. A New Witness for the Articles of Faith, pp. 167–68, 340, 658–59. Salt Lake City, 1985.

STEVEN D. BENNION

ABINADI

Abinadi was a courageous prophet (150 B.C.), and the best known martyr in the Book of Mormon. His ministry and execution recounted at the heart of the Book of Mosiah sharpen the contrast between righteous King BENJAMIN and wicked King Noah. ALMA<sub>1</sub>, a converted eyewitness, recorded Abinadi’s main words shortly after they were spoken (Mosiah 17:4).

Abinadi belonged to a small group of reactionary NEPHITES who had returned from Zarahemla a generation earlier to repossess from the LAMANITES the city of Nephi, the traditional Nephite capital, and its temple. When the excesses of the apostate Nephite king and priests grew intolerable, Abinadi was commanded of the Lord to denounce publicly their abominations; he prophesied their coming captivity and affliction. Abinadi was condemned to death by Noah for this, but escaped.

Where he lived in exile is unknown. Similarities between his and Benjamin’s words (cf. Mosiah 16:1; 3:20; 16:5; 2:38; 16:10–11; 3:24–25) could mean that he spent some time in Zarahemla with king Benjamin and his people (W of M 1:16–17), or received similar revelation during this period.

After two years, having been commanded again by the Lord to prophesy, Abinadi reentered the city of Nephi in disguise. Before a crowd, he pronounced a curse in the name of the Lord upon the unrepentant people, their land, and their grain, with forthright predictions of destruction and humiliating bondage, reminiscent of Israel’s suffering in Egypt. In a potent curse, like those used in the ancient Near East to condemn covenant breakers, he testified that Noah’s life would “be valued even as a garment in a hot furnace” (Mosiah 12:3).

Abinadi was apprehended by the people, bound, delivered to Noah, and accused of lying about the king and prophesying falsely. Both accusations were violations under their law, the LAW OF MOSES (Mosiah 13:23; Ex. 20:16; Dent. 18:20–22). The dual nature of the charges appears to have complicated the ensuing trial, the king typically having jurisdiction over political charges, and the priests over religious matters.

The trial first focused on the charge of false prophecy. The priests challenged Abinadi to interpret Isaiah 52:7–10. They presumably thought this text showed that God had spoken “comfort” to their own people, who had seen the land “redeemed.” They contended that whereas Isaiah extolled those who brought “good tidings,” Abinadi spoke ill. Under such interpretation, Abinadi’s curses conflicted with Isaiah and were held by the priests to be false and unlawful.

Abinadi rebutted the priests in several ways. He accused them of misunderstanding and disobeying the law. He extracted from them an admission that salvation requires obedience to the law and then rehearsed to them the TEN COMMANDMENTS, the basic law of the covenant that they had not kept. He miraculously withstood the king’s attempt to silence him, “and his face shone with exceeding luster, even as Moses’ did while in the mount of Sinai” (Mosiah 13:5). He then quoted Isaiah 53 and explained its relation to the coming MESSIAH.

Abinadi’s prophetic words are among the most powerful in the Book of Mormon. He explained the “form” and coming of God mentioned in Isaiah 52:14 and 53:2 (Mosiah 13:34; 14:2) as the coming of a son in the flesh, thus “being the Father and the Son” (Mosiah 15:1–5). He also taught that God would suffer as the “sheep before her shearers” (Isa. 53:7; Mosiah 14:7). Abinadi was then in a position to answer the priests’ question about Isaiah 52:7–10. He proclaimed that those “who shall declare his generation” (cf. Mosiah 15:10) and “publish peace” (Mosiah 15:14) are God’s prophets and that they and all who hearken unto their words are his “seed” (Mosiah 15:11, 13). They are the ones who truly bring “good tidings” of salvation, redemption, comfort through Christ, and the reign of God at the Judgment Day.

Using Isaiah’s text, Abinadi showed that God could not redeem Noah’s people who had willfully rebelled against deity, and that true redemption comes only through repentance and acceptance of Christ. He also showed that his prophecies did not contradict the Isaiah text quoted by the priests.

Noah desired that Abinadi should be put to death, evidently on the charge of bearing false witness against him as the king. A young priest named Alma valiantly attested to the truthfulness of Abinadi’s testimony, whereupon he was expelled and the trial recessed for three days while Abinadi was held in prison.

When the trial reconvened, Abinadi was presumably accused of blasphemy (Mosiah 17:8), another capital offense under the law of Moses (Lev. 24:10–16). Noah gave him the opportunity to recant, but Abinadi refused to change God’s message, even on threats of death.

Noah was intimidated and desired to release Abinadi. The priests, however, accused Abinadi of a fourth crime, that of reviling against the king (Mosiah 17:12; Ex. 22:28). On this ground Noah condemned Abinadi, and his priestly accusers scourged and burned him. It was normal under Mosaic law for the accusers to inflict the punishment, but burning was an extraordinary form of execution. It mirrored Abinadi’s alleged crime: he was burned just as he had said Noah’s life would be valued as a garment in a furnace. As Abinadi died, he prophesied that the same fate would befall his accusers. This prophecy was soon fulfilled (Mosiah 17:15–18; 19:20; Alma 25:7–12).

Abinadi was remembered by the Nephites in at least three roles:

1. To Alma, his main convert, Abinadi was a prophet of Christ. Alma taught Abinadi’s words concerning the death and resurrection of Christ, the RESURRECTION of the dead, the redemption of God’s people (Mosiah 18:1–2), and the mighty change of heart through their conversion (Alma 5:12). Through Alma’s descendants, Abinadi influenced the Nephites for centuries.
2. To Ammon, who beheld the martyrdom of 1,005 of his own converts (Alma 24:22), Abinadi was recalled as the prime martyr “because of his belief in God” (Alma 25:11; cf. Mosiah 17:20; see also Mosiah 7:26–28). This was recognized as the real reason for Abinadi’s death, since the priests’ charge of reviling proved to be a false pretext.
3. To MORMON, who witnessed the decadence and destruction of the Nephites 500 years later, Abinadi was remembered for prophesying that because of wickedness evil would come upon the land and that the wicked would be utterly destroyed (Morm. 1:19; cf. Mosiah 12:7–8).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Welch, John W. "Judicial Process in the Trial of Abinadi." Provo, Utah, 1981.

LEW W. CRAMER

---

ABORTION

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints considers the elective termination of pregnancy "one of the most . . . sinful practices of this day" (General Handbook of Instructions, 11-4), although not necessarily murder. The Lord has said, "Thou shalt not . . . kill, nor do anything like unto it" (D&C 59:6; emphasis added in Packer, p. 85).

Members of the Church must not "submit to, be a party to, or perform an abortion" (General Handbook, 11-4). The only exceptions are where "incest or rape was involved, or where competent medical authorities certify that the life of the mother is in jeopardy, or that a severely defective fetus cannot survive birth" (Packer, p. 85). Even these exceptions do not justify abortion automatically. Church members are counseled that they should consider abortion in such cases only after consulting with their BISHOP and receiving divine confirmation through prayer.

"Church members who encourage, perform, or submit to an abortion are subject to Church discipline as appropriate" to help them repent (General Handbook, 11-4). As far as has been revealed, the sin of abortion is one for which a person may repent and gain forgiveness (General Handbook, 11-4; Packer, p. 86).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

General Handbook of Instructions. Salt Lake City, 1989.
Packer, Boyd K. "Covenants." Ensign 20 (Nov. 90):84–86.

MARY K. BEARD

---

ABRAHAM

Few biblical characters figure so prominently in LDS faith as does Abraham. Belief that he was a real person is shared by others, but the LDS approach is unique: Revelations received by the Prophet Joseph SMITH confirm the basic historicity of Genesis and add information echoed in ancient sources, many of which have emerged since his day.

The BOOK OF ABRAHAM as restored by Joseph SMITH autobiographically recounts Abraham's early life, explaining why he was singled out as the pivotal recipient of divine promises for the blessing of mankind. Not only had he been foreordained in PREMORTAL LIFE (Abr. 3:23; cf. Apocalypse of Abraham 22:1–5), but as a young man in Ur he opposed idolatry and human sacrifice, ironically turning him into an intended victim (Abr. 1:5–20; cf. Genesis Rabbah 38:13). The irony increases when God's last-minute rescue of Abraham foreshadowed what would transpire at Abraham's offering of Isaac.

After marrying SARAH and learning of his lin- cal right to the PATRIARCHIAL ORDER OF THE PRIESTHOOD as disclosed in the "records of the fathers" (Abr. 1:2–4, 26, 31; 2:2; Jubilees 12:27; cf. D&C 107:40–57), Abraham traveled to Haran, where he apparently received his ORDINATION (Abr. 2:9–11; WJS, pp. 245, 303). He also saw the Lord, who gave him remarkable promises: Abraham would be blessed above measure; his posterity would carry the gospel to all nations; and all who received it would bear his name, be accounted his posterity, and bless him as their father (Abr. 2:6–11; cf. Gen. 12:1–3).

Accompanied by their converts, Abraham and Sarah proceeded to Canaan (Abr. 2:15; Genesis Rabbah 39:14). Famine soon forced them to Egypt, but not before God commanded Abraham to ask Sarah to pose as his sister (Abr. 2:22–25; Genesis Apocryphon 19:14–21), and then showed him a vision of the cosmos and creation so that he could teach these things to the Egyptians (Abr. 3–5; cf. Sefer Yetsirah).

The book of Abraham narrative ends here, but the book's last facsimile (no. 3) depicts Pharaoh—who traditionally claimed exclusive possession of priesthood and kingship (Abr. 1:25–27)—honoring Abraham's priesthood by allowing him to occupy the throne and instruct the court in astronomy (cf. Pseudo-Eupolemus; Josephus, Antiquities 1.viii.2). Pharaoh's recognition of Abraham's priesthood was unknown in any other ancient source until the 1947 discovery of the Genesis Apocryphon, purporting, like the book of Abraham, to contain an autobiographical account of Abraham but continuland and that the wicked would be utterly destroyed (Morm. 1:19; cf. Mosiah 12:7–8).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Welch, John W. "Judicial Process in the Trial of Abinadi." Provo, Utah, 1981.

LEW W. CRAMER

---

ABORTION

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints considers the elective termination of pregnancy "one of the most . . . sinful practices of this day" (General Handbook of Instructions, 11-4), although not necessarily murder. The Lord has said, "Thou shalt not . . . kill, nor do anything like unto it" (D&C 59:6; emphasis added in Packer, p. 85).

Members of the Church must not "submit to, be a party to, or perform an abortion" (General Handbook, 11-4). The only exceptions are where "incest or rape was involved, or where competent medical authorities certify that the life of the mother is in jeopardy, or that a severely defective fetus cannot survive birth" (Packer, p. 85). Even these exceptions do not justify abortion automatically. Church members are counseled that they should consider abortion in such cases only after consulting with their BISHOP and receiving divine confirmation through prayer.

"Church members who encourage, perform, or submit to an abortion are subject to Church discipline as appropriate" to help them repent (General Handbook, 11-4). As far as has been revealed, the sin of abortion is one for which a person may repent and gain forgiveness (General Handbook, 11-4; Packer, p. 86).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

General Handbook of Instructions. Salt Lake City, 1989.
Packer, Boyd K. "Covenants." Ensign 20 (Nov. 90):84–86.

MARY K. BEARD

---

ABRAHAM

Few biblical characters figure so prominently in LDS faith as does Abraham. Belief that he was a real person is shared by others, but the LDS approach is unique: Revelations received by the Prophet Joseph SMITH confirm the basic historicity of Genesis and add information echoed in ancient sources, many of which have emerged since his day.

The BOOK OF ABRAHAM as restored by Joseph SMITH autobiographically recounts Abraham's early life, explaining why he was singled out as the pivotal recipient of divine promises for the blessing of mankind. Not only had he been foreordained in PREMORTAL LIFE (Abr. 3:23; cf. Apocalypse of Abraham 22:1–5), but as a young man in Ur he opposed idolatry and human sacrifice, ironically turning him into an intended victim (Abr. 1:5–20; cf. Genesis Rabbah 38:13). The irony increases when God's last-minute rescue of Abraham foreshadowed what would transpire at Abraham's offering of Isaac.

After marrying SARAH and learning of his lineal right to the PATRIARCHIAL ORDER OF THE PRIESTHOOD as disclosed in the "records of the fathers" (Abr. 1:2–4, 26, 31; 2:2; Jubilees 12:27; cf.
D&C 107:40–57), Abraham traveled to Haran, where he apparently received his ORDINATION (Abr. 2:9–11; WJS, pp. 245, 303). He also saw the Lord, who gave him remarkable promises: Abraham would be blessed above measure; his posterity would carry the gospel to all nations; and all who received it would bear his name, be accounted his posterity, and bless him as their father (Abr. 2:6–11; cf. Gen. 12:1–3).

Accompanied by their converts, Abraham and Sarah proceeded to Canaan (Abr. 2:15; Genesis Rabbah 39:14). Famine soon forced them to Egypt, but not before God commanded Abraham to ask Sarah to pose as his sister (Abr. 2:22–25; Genesis Apocryphon 19:14–21), and then showed him a vision of the cosmos and creation so that he could teach these things to the Egyptians (Abr. 3– 5; cf. Sefer Yetsirah).

The book of Abraham narrative ends here, but the book's last facsimile (no. 3) depicts Pharaoh—who traditionally claimed exclusive possession of priesthood and kingship (Abr. 1:25–27)—honoring Abraham's priesthood by allowing him to occupy the throne and instruct the court in astronomy (cf.
Pseudo-Eupolemus; Josephus, Antiquities 1.viii.2).
Pharaoh's recognition of Abraham's priesthood was unknown in any other ancient source until the 1947 discovery of the Genesis Apocryphon, purporting, like the book of Abraham, to contain an autobiographical account of Abraham but continuland and that the wicked would be utterly destroyed (Morm. 1:19; cf. Mosiah 12:7–8).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Welch, John W. "Judicial Process in the Trial of Abinadi." Provo, Utah, 1981.

LEW W. CRAMER

---

ABORTION

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints considers the elective termination of pregnancy "one of the most . . . sinful practices of this day" (General Handbook of Instructions, 11-4), although not necessarily murder. The Lord has said, "Thou shalt not . . . kill, nor do anything like unto it" (D&C 59:6; emphasis added in Packer, p. 85).

Members of the Church must not "submit to, be a party to, or perform an abortion" (General Handbook, 11-4). The only exceptions are where "incest or rape was involved, or where competent medical authorities certify that the life of the mother is in jeopardy, or that a severely defective fetus cannot survive birth" (Packer, p. 85). Even these exceptions do not justify abortion automatically. Church members are counseled that they should consider abortion in such cases only after consulting with their BISHOP and receiving divine confirmation through prayer.

"Church members who encourage, perform, or submit to an abortion are subject to Church discipline as appropriate" to help them repent (General Handbook, 11-4). As far as has been revealed, the sin of abortion is one for which a person may repent and gain forgiveness (General Handbook, 11-4; Packer, p. 86).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

General Handbook of Instructions. Salt Lake City, 1989.
Packer, Boyd K. "Covenants." Ensign 20 (Nov. 90):84–86.

MARY K. BEARD

---

ABRAHAM

Few biblical characters figure so prominently in LDS faith as does Abraham. Belief that he was a real person is shared by others, but the LDS approach is unique: Revelations received by the Prophet Joseph SMITH confirm the basic historicity of Genesis and add information echoed in ancient sources, many of which have emerged since his day.

The BOOK OF ABRAHAM as restored by Joseph SMITH autobiographically recounts Abraham's early life, explaining why he was singled out as the pivotal recipient of divine promises for the blessing of mankind. Not only had he been foreordained in PREMORTAL LIFE (Abr. 3:23; cf. Apocalypse of Abraham 22:1–5), but as a young man in Ur he opposed idolatry and human sacrifice, ironically turning him into an intended victim (Abr. 1:5–20; cf. Genesis Rabbah 38:13). The irony increases when God's last-minute rescue of Abraham foreshadowed what would transpire at Abraham's offering of Isaac.

After marrying SARAH and learning of his lin- cal right to the PATRIARCHIAL ORDER OF THE PRIESTHOOD as disclosed in the "records of the fathers" (Abr. 1:2–4, 26, 31; 2:2; Jubilees 12:27; cf. D&C 107:40–57), Abraham traveled to Haran, where he apparently received his ORDINATION (Abr. 2:9–11; WJS, pp. 245, 303). He also saw the Lord, who gave him remarkable promises: Abraham would be blessed above measure; his posterity would carry the gospel to all nations; and all who received it would bear his name, be accounted his posterity, and bless him as their father (Abr. 2:6–11; cf. Gen. 12:1–3).

Accompanied by their converts, Abraham and Sarah proceeded to Canaan (Abr. 2:15; Genesis Rabbah 39:14). Famine soon forced them to Egypt, but not before God commanded Abraham to ask Sarah to pose as his sister (Abr. 2:22–25; Genesis Apocryphon 19:14–21), and then showed him a vision of the cosmos and creation so that he could teach these things to the Egyptians (Abr. 3–5; cf. Sefer Yetsirah).

The book of Abraham narrative ends here, but the book's last facsimile (no. 3) depicts Pharaoh—who traditionally claimed exclusive possession of priesthood and kingship (Abr. 1:25–27)—honoring Abraham's priesthood by allowing him to occupy the throne and instruct the court in astronomy (cf. Pseudo-Eupolemus; Josephus, Antiquities 1.viii.2). Pharaoh's recognition of Abraham's priesthood was unknown in any other ancient source until the 1947 discovery of the Genesis Apocryphon, purporting, like the book of Abraham, to contain an autobiographical account of Abraham but continuing the narrative into Egypt (Genesis Apocryphon 20:8–34): When Pharaoh took Sarah to the palace, Abraham tearfully appealed to God, who immediately protected her by afflicting Pharaoh. The affliction worsened, but Pharaoh finally had a dream of Abraham healing him; the patriarch was then summoned and, laying hands on Pharaoh's head, restored him to health. This is the only known instance in the Old Testament or related pseudepigrapha of a healing by LAYING ON OF HANDS, and it sets the stage for the book of Abraham scene. Together these two sources explain why the ancients considered Abraham's encounter with Pharaoh "a crucial event in the history of mankind" (Nibley, 1981 [citing Wacholder], p. 63).

But it was Sarah who had faced the most difficult dilemma in Egypt: If she honored both Abraham's request (by feigning maidenhood) and her marriage vows (by refusing Pharaoh's advances), she faced certain death. The alternative was simply to accept her new role with its dazzling wealth and influence. Sarah proved her loyalty at the peril of her life, and was—as were Abraham and Isaac—finally rescued by God. Her sacrifice demonstrated her equality with Abraham and their mutual dependence (CWHN 1:98; IE 73 [Apr. 1970]:79–95).

Later events of Abraham's life are illuminated by other LDS sources, as when Sarah, still childless after returning to Canaan, gave her maid Hagar to Abraham (Gen. 16:1–3) and thereby "administered unto Abraham according to the law" (D&C 132:65; see also verse 34)—congruent with now extant ancient Near Eastern sources describing the legal obligation of a childless wife. Sarah's action demonstrated, says one LDS Apostle, "her love and integrity to her husband" (JD 23:228) and was, says Philo, one of "numberless proofs" of her "wifely love. . . . Everywhere and always she was at his side, . . . his true partner in life and life's events, resolved to share alike the good and ill" (On Abraham, pp. xlii–xliii).

LDS sources further describe how Abraham was taught about Jesus Christ by MELCHIZEDEK (TPJS, pp. 322–23), who, as a prototype of Christ (JST Gen. 14:26–36; Alma 13:17–19), gave Abraham the PRIESTHOOD after the Order of the Son of God (see MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOOD; D&C 84:14; 107:2–4; cf. Genesis Rabbah 43:6) with accompanying temple ORDINANCES foreshadowing Christ (Abraham, Facsimile 2; Alma 13:2, 16; cf. Cave of Treasures [Budge], p. 148). Later, Abraham "looked forth and saw the days of the Son of Man, and was glad" (JST Gen. 15:9–12; Hel. 8:17; John 8:56).

Abraham's supreme test—the offering of Isaac—both recalled Abraham's prior experience and typified things to come. Centuries before Jesus, a Book of Mormon prophet pointed to Abraham's offering of Isaac as "a similitude of God and his Only Begotten Son" (Jacob 4:4–5)—just as many Christian fathers would do retrospectively. Abraham's life thus typified and testified of his preeminent descendant Jesus, who, because he was also the Son of God, could atone for Abraham and all others.

Abraham's life also prefigured that of another descendant, Joseph Smith (D&C 132:30–31), whose prayer at age fourteen echoes young Abraham's prayer at the same age (Jubilees 11:16–17; JS—H 1:7–17). Both men had been foreordained; both received the priesthood, preached the gospel, and encountered formidable opposition; both spoke face to face with divine messengers and God himself; both possessed a URIM AND THUMMIM, translated ancient records, and wrote scripture; and both founded an influential community of saints.

But the connection is more direct. John TAYLOR reported that Abraham visited Joseph Smith (JD 20:174–75; 21:94), whose mission included revealing lost knowledge about Abraham (cf. 2 Ne. 3:7, 12) and whose entire ministry of RESTORATION helped fulfill Abraham's COVENANT that through his seed all nations would be blessed (2 Ne. 29:14; 3 Ne. 20:27, 29). A central purpose of that restoration is to make Abraham's promises effective for his descendants, who through temple ordinances may receive the blessings of Abraham and be sealed in an ancestral chain back to Abraham and Adam (D&C 2; TPJS, pp. 337–38).

To achieve the glory of Abraham, Latter-day Saints are commanded to come to Christ by "do[ing] the works of Abraham," whose life constitutes a pattern (D&C 132:32; cf. Isa. 51:1–2; John 8:39; Koran 16:120–23). These works begin with BAPTISM and reception of the HOLY GHOST, whereupon the recipient must "press forward" (2 Ne. 31:19–20) in righteousness, as did Abraham, by obeying God, receiving the priesthood and temple ordinances, honoring covenants, building a family unit, teaching children, keeping sacred records, preaching the gospel, and proving faithful in opposition (Abr. 1–2; Gen. 12–25). Progression along this path brings increased identification with

Abraham and Sarah and the blessings promised to them. For example, anyone who is not a descendant of Abraham but receives the Holy Ghost becomes the SEED OF ABRAHAM (TPJS, pp. 149–50; Abr. 2:10; cf. Gal. 3:29), while each man magnifying the Melchizedek Priesthood likewise becomes Abraham's seed (D&C 84:33–34). And each couple married eternally in the temple is promised the blessings of Abraham—posterity as the stars of heaven and sand of the seashore, meaning an eternal increase of posterity in the CELESTIAL KINGDOM (D&C 132:30; JD 11:151–52; 15:320).

Such blessings of innumerable posterity were promised to Abraham on several occasions (Abr. 3:13–14; Gen. 13:16; 15:5; 17:2, 6), but it was not until he demonstrated his willingness to offer Isaac as a sacrifice that the Lord guaranteed the promises (Gen. 22:16–18), showing, explains Joseph Smith, that any person who would attain ETERNAL LIFE “must sacrifice all things” (TPJS, p. 322). Accordingly, the Lord's people must be “tried, even as Abraham,” to become sanctified through Abraham's descendant Christ (D&C 101:4–5; Moro. 10:33) in preparation to “sit down in the kingdom of God, with Abraham” and Sarah (Alma 5:24) on thrones of glory to inherit the same blessings of EXALTATION already enjoyed by that exemplary couple (D&C 132:34–37; cf. Testament of Isaac 2:5–7).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Kimball, Spencer W. “The Example of Abraham.” Ensign 6 (June 1975):3–7.

Nibley, Hugh. “A New Look at the Pearl of Great Price.” IE 71–73 (Jan. 1968–May 1970), a series of articles covering two years.

———. Abraham in Egypt. Salt Lake City, 1981.

E. DOUGLAS CLARK

---

ABRAHAM, GOSPEL OF

See: Gospel of Abraham

---

ABRAHAMIC COVENANT

The divine archetypal covenant, of which Abraham's covenant is an example, is the everlasting covenant of the GOSPEL OF JESUS CHRIST. By accepting the gospel, humankind can be redeemed from the doom of death and the blight of sin to enjoy ETERNAL LIFE with God.

Abraham's mission was not new; it was like the mission of Adam, Enoch, and Noah. The same divine power—or PRIESTHOOD—that gave them authority to promulgate the covenant of divine redemption for God's children in their time was renewed with Abraham and his seed; it was explicitly to be perpetuated by him and his literal and spiritual heirs for all time (Gen. 12:1–3; Abr. 1:18–19; 2:6, 9–11).

ABRAHAM'S IMPLEMENTATION OF THE COVENANT MISSION From the records of his forefathers, Abraham learned of the true and living God and the saving priesthood powers. Although his immediate ancestors had fallen away from the gospel, he desired and received that true priesthood from Melchizedek, with its powers and responsibilities (Abr. 1:1–7, 18, 19, 31; D&C 84:14; Alma 13:14–19; Gen. 14:18–20).

The idolatrous Chaldeans had rejected Abraham and placed him to be sacrificed on an altar (Abr. 1:5–12); but the Lord rescued him and directed him to leave his home in Ur for a new land of promise (Gen. 11:27–32; 12:1–3; Abr. 1:1, 17; 2:1–5). Abraham took other family members with him to a place they named Haran, where he won additional converts to the way of the Lord. With them he departed to undertake his ministry in the land promised to him and to all his descendants who would hearken to the voice of the Lord (Abr. 2:6, 14–20; Gen. 12:4–8).

Abraham and his company settled first in the Bethel area, built an altar, and proclaimed the name of the Lord—a procedure he perpetuated in the homes he established thereafter (Gen. 12:8; 13:4, 18). Near Bethel, the covenant promises and responsibilities were renewed, and CIRCUMCISION was made the token of the covenant, to remind all bearers to keep themselves pure and free from sin (Gen. 17). Abraham became a man of good repute (Gen. 14:13, 18–20; 23:1–16) and was trusted by God, who commended him, saying, “I know him, that he will command his children and his household after him, and they shall keep the way of the Lord, to do justice and judgment” (Gen. 18:19). The ultimate test and a revelation of the meaning of the redemptive covenant came to him in the divine requirement that, in anticipation of the sacrifice of the Savior, he be willing to sacrifice his own birthright son. He passed the test, his son was

Abraham and Sarah and the blessings promised to them. For example, anyone who is not a descendant of Abraham but receives the Holy Ghost becomes the SEED OF ABRAHAM (TPJS, pp. 149–50; Abr. 2:10; cf. Gal. 3:29), while each man magnifying the Melchizedek Priesthood likewise becomes Abraham's seed (D&C 84:33–34). And each couple married eternally in the temple is promised the blessings of Abraham—posterity as the stars of heaven and sand of the seashore, meaning an eternal increase of posterity in the CELESTIAL KINGDOM (D&C 132:30; JD 11:151–52; 15:320).

Such blessings of innumerable posterity were promised to Abraham on several occasions (Abr. 3:13–14; Gen. 13:16; 15:5; 17:2, 6), but it was not until he demonstrated his willingness to offer Isaac as a sacrifice that the Lord guaranteed the promises (Gen. 22:16–18), showing, explains Joseph Smith, that any person who would attain ETERNAL LIFE “must sacrifice all things” (TPJS, p. 322). Accordingly, the Lord's people must be “tried, even as Abraham,” to become sanctified through Abraham's descendant Christ (D&C 101:4–5; Moro. 10:33) in preparation to “sit down in the kingdom of God, with Abraham” and Sarah (Alma 5:24) on thrones of glory to inherit the same blessings of EXALTATION already enjoyed by that exemplary couple (D&C 132:34–37; cf. Testament of Isaac 2:5–7).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Kimball, Spencer W. “The Example of Abraham.” Ensign 6 (June 1975):3–7.

Nibley, Hugh. “A New Look at the Pearl of Great Price.” IE 71–73 (Jan. 1968–May 1970), a series of articles covering two years.

———. Abraham in Egypt. Salt Lake City, 1981.

E. DOUGLAS CLARK

---

ABRAHAM, GOSPEL OF

See: Gospel of Abraham

---

ABRAHAMIC COVENANT

The divine archetypal covenant, of which Abraham's covenant is an example, is the everlasting covenant of the GOSPEL OF JESUS CHRIST. By accepting the gospel, humankind can be redeemed from the doom of death and the blight of sin to enjoy ETERNAL LIFE with God.

Abraham's mission was not new; it was like the mission of Adam, Enoch, and Noah. The same divine power—or PRIESTHOOD—that gave them authority to promulgate the covenant of divine redemption for God's children in their time was renewed with Abraham and his seed; it was explicitly to be perpetuated by him and his literal and spiritual heirs for all time (Gen. 12:1–3; Abr. 1:18–19; 2:6, 9–11).

ABRAHAM'S IMPLEMENTATION OF THE COVENANT MISSION From the records of his forefathers, Abraham learned of the true and living God and the saving priesthood powers. Although his immediate ancestors had fallen away from the gospel, he desired and received that true priesthood from Melchizedek, with its powers and responsibilities (Abr. 1:1–7, 18, 19, 31; D&C 84:14; Alma 13:14–19; Gen. 14:18–20).

The idolatrous Chaldeans had rejected Abraham and placed him to be sacrificed on an altar (Abr. 1:5–12); but the Lord rescued him and directed him to leave his home in Ur for a new land of promise (Gen. 11:27–32; 12:1–3; Abr. 1:1, 17; 2:1–5). Abraham took other family members with him to a place they named Haran, where he won additional converts to the way of the Lord. With them he departed to undertake his ministry in the land promised to him and to all his descendants who would hearken to the voice of the Lord (Abr. 2:6, 14–20; Gen. 12:4–8).

Abraham and his company settled first in the Bethel area, built an altar, and proclaimed the name of the Lord—a procedure he perpetuated in the homes he established thereafter (Gen. 12:8; 13:4, 18). Near Bethel, the covenant promises and responsibilities were renewed, and CIRCUMCISION was made the token of the covenant, to remind all bearers to keep themselves pure and free from sin (Gen. 17). Abraham became a man of good repute (Gen. 14:13, 18–20; 23:1–16) and was trusted by God, who commended him, saying, “I know him, that he will command his children and his household after him, and they shall keep the way of the Lord, to do justice and judgment” (Gen. 18:19). The ultimate test and a revelation of the meaning of the redemptive covenant came to him in the divine requirement that, in anticipation of the sacrifice of the Savior, he be willing to sacrifice his own birthright son. He passed the test, his son was saved, and he learned how all may be saved by the divine Redeemer (Gen. 22:1–18; John 8:56; Jacob 4:5; Gal. 3:8).

PERPETUATION OF THE MISSION BY ABRAHAM'S HEIRS Abraham's lineal and spiritual successors learned to keep the covenant by the things they suffered. Their efforts sometimes prospered and their neighbors were impressed (Gen. 17:1–7; 26:1–5, 24–28; 28:13–22; 30:25–27; 32:24–29; 35:1–15; 39:1–6, 21–23; 40:8; 41:9–16, 37–42).

A PATRIARCHIAL BLESSING given by Abraham's grandson Jacob (Israel) to his twelve sons indicated future covenant roles for his descendants, particularly those through Judah and Joseph (Gen. 49:10, 22–26).

In addition to Jacob's progeny, Abraham had descendants through Ishmael, the son of Hagar—Sarah's handmaiden. Of Ishmael's family, “twelve princes” are named who established “towns” and “nations” (Gen. 25:12–16). Six sons by Abraham's wife Keturah are also named among his families: Zimran, Jokshan, Medan, Midian, Ishbak, and Shuah (Gen. 25:2). To all these, he promised gifts before his death (Gen. 25:1–7), including spiritual gifts. One descendant, Jethro (or Renel), priest of Midian, provided Moses with a wife, ordained him to the priesthood, and advised him in organizing, governing, and judging Israel (Ex. 2:16–22; 18:12–27; D&C 84:6–16). Scores of descendants of Esau, with their tribal leaders and kings, are also named (Gen. 36).

Today, millions claim Abraham as their father. All may have his covenant privileges if they will but do the works of Abraham. The Lord never told Abraham that he alone would be blessed by the covenant or that it would bless only his birthright seed; the charge was that in him and his seed all families of all nations should be blessed. All who accept the covenant of the divine Redeemer become Abraham's seed spiritually and receive the same blessings as his biological descendants (Gen. 12:1–3; Abr. 2:8–11; Gal. 3:7–9, 26–29; cf. John 8:33, 37, 39; Rom. 9:6–8).

THE ABRAHAMIC HERITAGE THROUGH MOSES AND THE PROPHETS The mission of Moses was to deliver the children of Israel from the bondage of slavery and death in Egypt and return them to the promised land. They were to enter the land only after the iniquity of the prior inhabitants had become so excessive that they were no longer worthy to retain it (1 Ne. 17:35; Gen. 15:13–16; 17:7–9; JST Gen. 17:4–7; Ex. 4:22–23; 6:1–8). Through Moses, the Lord gave the Israelites laws, ordinances, statutes, and commandments to help them remember their duties to God and to make them a kingdom of priests, a holy people, and a peculiar treasure as God's exemplary servants (Ex. 19:1–6, 20ff; Deut. 4:1–6; Mosiah 13:27–30).

Israel did well in living according to the covenant in the last days of Moses and in the time of his successor, Joshua; but in the days of the judges and beyond, the Israelites lapsed into the ways of neighboring nations instead of following the moral and religious laws of the true God (Judg. 2:7–13; 17:6; 21:25). Because cycles of apostasy were repeated throughout Israel's history, the Israelites were periodically castigated by the prophets for their sins and called to repentance (e.g., Isa. 1:1–4; Hosea 4:1–6; Amos 3; Micah 3; Jer. 2; Ezek. 2).

Two themes dominate the messages of the Old Testament prophets: (1) the promised Redeemer would come, and though he would suffer rejection by many, he would establish the promised way of salvation for all; (2) in the last days the covenant of Abraham would be reestablished (Isa. 2:2–5, 11; 7:14–16; 9:1–7; 52:13–15, 53; Jer. 23:5–8; Ezek. 37:11–28; Dan. 9:21–27; Micah 5:2–5; Zech. 9:9–11; 11:10–13; 13:6; 14:4–9).

FULFILLMENT AND PERPETUATION The Redeemer did come, and the laws and prophecies prepared the faithful to receive him (Gal. 3:16–24, 25–29; Acts 2:47; 5:14; 1 Cor. 15:6). He accomplished his mission of personal teaching and sacrifice on earth and then commissioned the new Christian heirs of the covenant to make it known unto all the world (Matt. 24:14; 28:19–20; Mark 16:15–16). However, over a period of centuries, the priesthood power to administer the proper ordinances of the covenant and some vital facets of doctrine were lost. All these have now been restored in the latter-day dispensation of the gospel (D&C 110:11–16) and are again available to all families and nations of the earth.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Brandt, Edward J. “The Covenants and Blessings of Abraham.” Ensign 3 (Feb. 1973):42–43.
- Kimball, Spencer W. Abraham: An Example to Fathers. Salt Lake City, 1977.
- Nyman, Monte S. “Abraham, the Father of the Faithful.” Sperry Lecture Series. Provo, Utah, 1975.
- Topical Guide, “Abrahamic Covenant”; and Dictionary, “Abraham, Covenant of.” In LDS Edition of the King James Version of the Bible. Salt Lake City, 1979.

ELLIS T. RASMUSSEN

ABUSE, SPOUSE AND CHILD

Abuse is behavior that deliberately threatens or injures another person. It may be physical, emotional, or sexual. Some forms of physical and emotional abuse include beatings, neglect, and threats of abandonment. While it also may take varied forms, sexual abuse of another adult usually involves the use of force or intimidation to coerce sexual activity. Sexual abuse of a child, on the other hand, includes any sexual behavior between the child and someone in a position of power, trust, or control (see Child Abuse: Helps for Ecclesiastical Leaders, Salt Lake City, 1985).

Individuals who abuse their spouses or children violate the laws of both God and society. Church leaders have counseled that even more subtle forms of abuse are evil—among them, shouting at or otherwise demeaning family members and demanding offensive intimate relations from one's spouse (Gordon B. Hinckley, "Keeping the Temple Holy," Ensign 20 [May 1990]:52). Church members guilty of abusing others are directed to seek the counsel of their BISHOPS and, where necessary, professional help. Church disciplinary procedures may need to be instituted to help abusers repent and to protect innocent persons.

While the causes of abuse are myriad and complex, all forms of abusive behavior are antithetical to the spirit of service and sacrifice exemplified in the life of the Savior Jesus Christ. Because it is often designed to control another person, abuse is inconsistent with AGENCY, which is central to God's PLAN OF SALVATION. In a revelation given in 1839, the Lord said, "No power or influence can or ought to be maintained by virtue of the priesthood, only by persuasion, by long-suffering, by gentleness and meekness, and by love unfeigned" (D&C 121:41). Abuse is a serious sin and cannot be ignored, but abusers can be forgiven when they truly repent.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Hinckley, Gordon B. "To Please Our Heavenly Father." Ensign 15 (May 1985):48–51.
- Monson, Thomas S. "A Little Child Shall Lead Them." Ensign 20 (May 1990):53–60.
- Peterson, H. Burke. "Unrighteous Dominion." Ensign 19 (July 1989):6–11.

JEANNE B. INOUE
ROBERT K. THOMAS

ACADEMIES

Between 1875 and 1910, the LDS Church sponsored thirty-three academies for secondary education in seven western states, Canada, and Mexico. Factors contributing to the development of the academy system were (1) the lack of public educational facilities in Utah before 1900; (2) the influx of a non-Mormon population with the accompanying establishment of academies by other denominations, schools that attracted many LDS youth; and (3) the need to provide schools in areas newly settled under the COLONIZATION program that the Church carried out in the western United States, Mexico, and Canada.

A typical academy experienced three phases of curricular development. Until about 1900, elementary subjects predominated, with some piecemeal additions of secondary and normal (teacher-training) courses. The curriculum provided basic academic subjects with an emphasis on vocational and cultural fields, including mechanical and agricultural skills, gymnastics, homemaking, vocal music, and art.

From 1900 to 1910 the academies offered more diversified secondary courses leading to terminal diplomas in preparation for vocations and missionary service. They featured enlarged academic departments and a broader offering including, dramatics, choirs, bands, orchestras, music clubs, debate societies, athletics, and sports. Normal courses were expanded to three and four years, and college-level classes made their appearance in a number of the schools.

After 1910 specialized courses were consolidated into standard four-year high school curricula, including much more extensive music and other cultural offerings than were found in the public high schools of the day. All of the schools served as cultural centers in their communities, sponsoring performances and sports involving much of the adult populace and importing artists, lecturers, and dramatic companies.

Some of these schools succumbed to the widespread economic depression following the Panic of 1893 and to the rise of public schools in UTAH TERRITORY after the free school act of 1890. Twenty-two of the academies, however, continued to thrive during the early twentieth century, constituting the only secondary schools in many LDS communities until after 1911.

By 1927 the Church had closed or turned over to the states all but eight of the academies. Six

ABUSE, SPOUSE AND CHILD

Abuse is behavior that deliberately threatens or injures another person. It may be physical, emotional, or sexual. Some forms of physical and emotional abuse include beatings, neglect, and threats of abandonment. While it also may take varied forms, sexual abuse of another adult usually involves the use of force or intimidation to coerce sexual activity. Sexual abuse of a child, on the other hand, includes any sexual behavior between the child and someone in a position of power, trust, or control (see Child Abuse: Helps for Ecclesiastical Leaders, Salt Lake City, 1985).

Individuals who abuse their spouses or children violate the laws of both God and society. Church leaders have counseled that even more subtle forms of abuse are evil—among them, shouting at or otherwise demeaning family members and demanding offensive intimate relations from one's spouse (Gordon B. Hinckley, "Keeping the Temple Holy," Ensign 20 [May 1990]:52). Church members guilty of abusing others are directed to seek the counsel of their BISHOPS and, where necessary, professional help. Church disciplinary procedures may need to be instituted to help abusers repent and to protect innocent persons.

While the causes of abuse are myriad and complex, all forms of abusive behavior are antithetical to the spirit of service and sacrifice exemplified in the life of the Savior Jesus Christ. Because it is often designed to control another person, abuse is inconsistent with AGENCY, which is central to God's PLAN OF SALVATION. In a revelation given in 1839, the Lord said, "No power or influence can or ought to be maintained by virtue of the priesthood, only by persuasion, by long-suffering, by gentleness and meekness, and by love unfeigned" (D&C 121:41). Abuse is a serious sin and cannot be ignored, but abusers can be forgiven when they truly repent.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Hinckley, Gordon B. "To Please Our Heavenly Father." Ensign 15 (May 1985):48–51.
- Monson, Thomas S. "A Little Child Shall Lead Them." Ensign 20 (May 1990):53–60.
- Peterson, H. Burke. "Unrighteous Dominion." Ensign 19 (July 1989):6–11.

JEANNE B. INOUE
ROBERT K. THOMAS

ACADEMIES

Between 1875 and 1910, the LDS Church sponsored thirty-three academies for secondary education in seven western states, Canada, and Mexico. Factors contributing to the development of the academy system were (1) the lack of public educational facilities in Utah before 1900; (2) the influx of a non-Mormon population with the accompanying establishment of academies by other denominations, schools that attracted many LDS youth; and (3) the need to provide schools in areas newly settled under the COLONIZATION program that the Church carried out in the western United States, Mexico, and Canada.

A typical academy experienced three phases of curricular development. Until about 1900, elementary subjects predominated, with some piecemeal additions of secondary and normal (teacher-training) courses. The curriculum provided basic academic subjects with an emphasis on vocational and cultural fields, including mechanical and agricultural skills, gymnastics, homemaking, vocal music, and art.

From 1900 to 1910 the academies offered more diversified secondary courses leading to terminal diplomas in preparation for vocations and missionary service. They featured enlarged academic departments and a broader offering including, dramatics, choirs, bands, orchestras, music clubs, debate societies, athletics, and sports. Normal courses were expanded to three and four years, and college-level classes made their appearance in a number of the schools.

After 1910 specialized courses were consolidated into standard four-year high school curricula, including much more extensive music and other cultural offerings than were found in the public high schools of the day. All of the schools served as cultural centers in their communities, sponsoring performances and sports involving much of the adult populace and importing artists, lecturers, and dramatic companies.

Some of these schools succumbed to the widespread economic depression following the Panic of 1893 and to the rise of public schools in UTAH TERRITORY after the free school act of 1890. Twenty-two of the academies, however, continued to thrive during the early twentieth century, constituting the only secondary schools in many LDS communities until after 1911.

By 1927 the Church had closed or turned over to the states all but eight of the academies. Six remained as accredited normal schools or two-year colleges, one as a university, and one as a secondary school. By 1934 only three—BRIGHAM YOUNG UNIVERSITY, RICKS COLLEGE, and Juarez Academy—continued under Church sponsorship. All three are presently operating (1991).

Second Emery Stake Academy, c. 1911, in Castle Dale, in central Utah, that area's largest school at the time. The stakes of the Church built and operated about thirty-three academies mainly between 1875 and 1912.

Factors leading to closing or transferring the academies to state education systems included the burden of financing two competing systems as public high schools emerged and the success of church-sponsored SEMINARIES and INSTITUTES in supplementing secular education with religious training.

During the mid-twentieth century, schools similar in purpose and scope to the earlier academies were established in the South Pacific and elsewhere administered by the CHURCH EDUCATIONAL SYSTEM.

In 1953 legislation was passed in Utah as part of a cost-reduction effort to return Weber, Snow, and Dixie Colleges to the Church, but in a state-wide referendum Utah voters rejected the proposal and the colleges remained with the state.

A list of some of the principal academies with their founding dates, locations, name changes, and 1991 status follows:

- Brigham Young Academy, 1875, Provo, Utah; became Brigham Young University in 1903; continues to the present.
- Brigham Young College, 1877, Logan, Utah; a four-year college briefly in 1903, but closed as a junior college in 1926.
- Salt Lake Stake Academy, 1886, Salt Lake City, Utah; a high school, known at various times as LDS High School, LDS University, and LDS College; closed in 1931 and transformed into LDS Business College, which continues today.
- St. George Stake Academy, 1888, St. George, Utah; Dixie Normal College, 1917; Dixie Junior College, 1923; state-operated Dixie College, 1933 to the present.
- Bannock Stake Academy, 1888, Rexburg, Idaho; Fremont Stake Academy, 1898; Ricks Academy, 1902; Ricks Normal College, 1917; Ricks College, 1918; made a four-year college, 1948; a junior college, 1956 to the present.

- Sanpete Stake Academy, 1888, Ephraim, Utah; Snow Academy, 1900; Snow Normal College, 1917; Snow Junior College, 1923; Snow College, a state junior college, 1932 to the present.
- Weber Stake Academy, 1888, Ogden, Utah; Weber Academy, 1908; Weber Normal College, 1918; Weber College, 1922; a state junior college, 1922; a four-year college 1962; Weber State College, 1963; Weber State University, 1991.
- St. Joseph Stake Academy, 1891, Thatcher, Arizona; LDS Academy, 1898; Gila Academy, 1911; Gila Normal College, 1920; Gila Junior College, 1923; Eastern Arizona Junior College, 1932 to the present time.
- Juárez Stake Academy, 1897, Colonia Juárez, Mexico; Academia Juárez, 1963 to the present.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Bennion, Milton Lynn. Mormonism and Education. Salt Lake City, 1939.
- Jenson, Andrew. Encyclopedic History of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Salt Lake City, 1941. (Academies listed under latest titles.)
- Laycock, Harold R. "A History of Music in the Academies of the Latter-day Saints Church, 1876–1926." D.M.A. diss., University of Southern California, 1961.

HAROLD R. LAYCOCK

ACCOUNTABILITY

In LDS doctrine, to be "accountable" means that one must answer to God for one's conduct. Answering for the deeds done in mortality is not simply an administrative requirement but an aspect of human nature itself: to be a child of God is to possess AGENCY, which is both the power to choose between OBEDIENCE and rebellion and the accountability for how that power is used.

The scriptures teach that accountability is not limited to public behavior; everyone will be asked to answer for all they do and say and even for what they think (Matt. 12:36; Alma 12:12–14), and for the use they make of every resource and opportunity God gives them (TPJS, pp. 68, 227). Joseph Smith taught that strict accounting is represented in the New Testament parable of the talents (Matt. 25:14–30): the master commits a certain sum in talents (an ancient currency) to each of three servants and later calls for an accounting. Two of the three use and double the resources entrusted to them, while the third, out of fear, buries his portion and thereby steals the increase that rightfully belongs to the master: "Where the five talents were bestowed, ten will be required; and he that has made no improvement will be cast out as an unprofitable servant" (TPJS, p. 68).

Only those capable of committing sin and of repenting are accountable (D&C 20:71). Children younger than eight and the mentally impaired are not. Satan has no power to tempt little children or other unaccountable individuals (D&C 29:46–50).

While individuals are usually accountable for their own sins, leaders may also be accountable for the sins of their people if they do not "teach them the word of God with all diligence" (Ezek. 3:17–21; Jacob 1:19; see also VOICE OF WARNING). Parents may have to answer for the wrongdoing of their children if they do not teach them the gospel (2 Ne. 4:5–6; D&C 68:25; Moses 7:37).

It is sometimes claimed that people cannot help doing some of the things that God calls sin, such as acts of HOMOSEXUALITY and substance abuse. Regarding such conduct, however, Church leaders teach that "we are to control [feelings and impulses], meaning we are to direct them according to the moral law" (Packer, 1990, p. 85). "One's parents may have failed," wrote President Spencer KIMBALL, "our own backgrounds may have been frustrating, but . . . we have within ourselves the power to rise above our circumstances, to change our lives. Man can change human nature" (p. 176).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Brown, Victor L. "Agency and Accountability." Ensign 15 (May 1985):14–17.
- Kimball, Spencer W. Faith Precedes the Miracle. Salt Lake City, 1972.
- Packer, Boyd K. "Atonement, Agency, Accountability." Ensign 18 (May 1988):69–72.
- . "Covenants." Ensign 20 (Nov. 1990):85.

C. TERRY WARNER

ACTIVITY IN THE CHURCH

For Latter-day Saints, activity in the Church involves a broad range of public and private religious practices intended to enhance the spiritual welllege, 1918; made a four-year college, 1948; a junior college, 1956 to the present.

- Sanpete Stake Academy, 1888, Ephraim, Utah; Snow Academy, 1900; Snow Normal College, 1917; Snow Junior College, 1923; Snow College, a state junior college, 1932 to the present.
- Weber Stake Academy, 1888, Ogden, Utah; Weber Academy, 1908; Weber Normal College, 1918; Weber College, 1922; a state junior college, 1922; a four-year college 1962; Weber State College, 1963; Weber State University, 1991.
- St. Joseph Stake Academy, 1891, Thatcher, Arizona; LDS Academy, 1898; Gila Academy, 1911; Gila Normal College, 1920; Gila Junior College, 1923; Eastern Arizona Junior College, 1932 to the present time.
- Juárez Stake Academy, 1897, Colonia Juárez, Mexico; Academia Juárez, 1963 to the present.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Bennion, Milton Lynn. Mormonism and Education. Salt Lake City, 1939.
- Jenson, Andrew. Encyclopedic History of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Salt Lake City, 1941. (Academies listed under latest titles.)
- Laycock, Harold R. "A History of Music in the Academies of the Latter-day Saints Church, 1876–1926." D.M.A. diss., University of Southern California, 1961.

HAROLD R. LAYCOCK

ACCOUNTABILITY

In LDS doctrine, to be "accountable" means that one must answer to God for one's conduct. Answering for the deeds done in mortality is not simply an administrative requirement but an aspect of human nature itself: to be a child of God is to possess AGENCY, which is both the power to choose between OBEDIENCE and rebellion and the accountability for how that power is used.

The scriptures teach that accountability is not limited to public behavior; everyone will be asked to answer for all they do and say and even for what they think (Matt. 12:36; Alma 12:12–14), and for the use they make of every resource and opportunity God gives them (TPJS, pp. 68, 227). Joseph Smith taught that strict accounting is represented in the New Testament parable of the talents (Matt. 25:14–30): the master commits a certain sum in talents (an ancient currency) to each of three servants and later calls for an accounting. Two of the three use and double the resources entrusted to them, while the third, out of fear, buries his portion and thereby steals the increase that rightfully belongs to the master: "Where the five talents were bestowed, ten will be required; and he that has made no improvement will be cast out as an unprofitable servant" (TPJS, p. 68).

Only those capable of committing sin and of repenting are accountable (D&C 20:71). Children younger than eight and the mentally impaired are not. Satan has no power to tempt little children or other unaccountable individuals (D&C 29:46–50).

While individuals are usually accountable for their own sins, leaders may also be accountable for the sins of their people if they do not "teach them the word of God with all diligence" (Ezek. 3:17–21; Jacob 1:19; see also VOICE OF WARNING). Parents may have to answer for the wrongdoing of their children if they do not teach them the gospel (2 Ne. 4:5–6; D&C 68:25; Moses 7:37).

It is sometimes claimed that people cannot help doing some of the things that God calls sin, such as acts of HOMOSEXUALITY and substance abuse. Regarding such conduct, however, Church leaders teach that "we are to control [feelings and impulses], meaning we are to direct them according to the moral law" (Packer, 1990, p. 85). "One's parents may have failed," wrote President Spencer KIMBALL, "our own backgrounds may have been frustrating, but . . . we have within ourselves the power to rise above our circumstances, to change our lives. Man can change human nature" (p. 176).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Brown, Victor L. "Agency and Accountability." Ensign 15 (May 1985):14–17.
- Kimball, Spencer W. Faith Precedes the Miracle. Salt Lake City, 1972.
- Packer, Boyd K. "Atonement, Agency, Accountability." Ensign 18 (May 1988):69–72.
- . "Covenants." Ensign 20 (Nov. 1990):85.

C. TERRY WARNER

ACTIVITY IN THE CHURCH

For Latter-day Saints, activity in the Church involves a broad range of public and private religious practices intended to enhance the spiritual welllege, 1918; made a four-year college, 1948; a junior college, 1956 to the present.

- Sanpete Stake Academy, 1888, Ephraim, Utah; Snow Academy, 1900; Snow Normal College, 1917; Snow Junior College, 1923; Snow College, a state junior college, 1932 to the present.
- Weber Stake Academy, 1888, Ogden, Utah; Weber Academy, 1908; Weber Normal College, 1918; Weber College, 1922; a state junior college, 1922; a four-year college 1962; Weber State College, 1963; Weber State University, 1991.
- St. Joseph Stake Academy, 1891, Thatcher, Arizona; LDS Academy, 1898; Gila Academy, 1911; Gila Normal College, 1920; Gila Junior College, 1923; Eastern Arizona Junior College, 1932 to the present time.
- Juárez Stake Academy, 1897, Colonia Juárez, Mexico; Academia Juárez, 1963 to the present.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Bennion, Milton Lynn. Mormonism and Education. Salt Lake City, 1939.
- Jenson, Andrew. Encyclopedic History of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Salt Lake City, 1941. (Academies listed under latest titles.)
- Laycock, Harold R. "A History of Music in the Academies of the Latter-day Saints Church, 1876–1926." D.M.A. diss., University of Southern California, 1961.

HAROLD R. LAYCOCK

ACCOUNTABILITY

In LDS doctrine, to be "accountable" means that one must answer to God for one's conduct. Answering for the deeds done in mortality is not simply an administrative requirement but an aspect of human nature itself: to be a child of God is to possess AGENCY, which is both the power to choose between OBEDIENCE and rebellion and the accountability for how that power is used.

The scriptures teach that accountability is not limited to public behavior; everyone will be asked to answer for all they do and say and even for what they think (Matt. 12:36; Alma 12:12–14), and for the use they make of every resource and opportunity God gives them (TPJS, pp. 68, 227). Joseph Smith taught that strict accounting is represented in the New Testament parable of the talents (Matt. 25:14–30): the master commits a certain sum in talents (an ancient currency) to each of three servants and later calls for an accounting. Two of the three use and double the resources entrusted to them, while the third, out of fear, buries his portion and thereby steals the increase that rightfully belongs to the master: "Where the five talents were bestowed, ten will be required; and he that has made no improvement will be cast out as an unprofitable servant" (TPJS, p. 68).

Only those capable of committing sin and of repenting are accountable (D&C 20:71). Children younger than eight and the mentally impaired are not. Satan has no power to tempt little children or other unaccountable individuals (D&C 29:46–50).

While individuals are usually accountable for their own sins, leaders may also be accountable for the sins of their people if they do not "teach them the word of God with all diligence" (Ezek. 3:17–21; Jacob 1:19; see also VOICE OF WARNING). Parents may have to answer for the wrongdoing of their children if they do not teach them the gospel (2 Ne. 4:5–6; D&C 68:25; Moses 7:37).

It is sometimes claimed that people cannot help doing some of the things that God calls sin, such as acts of HOMOSEXUALITY and substance abuse. Regarding such conduct, however, Church leaders teach that "we are to control [feelings and impulses], meaning we are to direct them according to the moral law" (Packer, 1990, p. 85). "One's parents may have failed," wrote President Spencer KIMBALL, "our own backgrounds may have been frustrating, but . . . we have within ourselves the power to rise above our circumstances, to change our lives. Man can change human nature" (p. 176).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Brown, Victor L. "Agency and Accountability." Ensign 15 (May 1985):14–17.
- Kimball, Spencer W. Faith Precedes the Miracle. Salt Lake City, 1972.
- Packer, Boyd K. "Atonement, Agency, Accountability." Ensign 18 (May 1988):69–72.
- . "Covenants." Ensign 20 (Nov. 1990):85.

C. TERRY WARNER

ACTIVITY IN THE CHURCH

For Latter-day Saints, activity in the Church involves a broad range of public and private religious practices intended to enhance the spiritual well-being of the faithful and accomplish good works. When Latter-day Saints speak of being “active in the Church,” they have reference to observing a full religious lifestyle of attendance, devotion, service, and learning. As one measure of their rate of activity, 48 percent of adult Latter-day Saints in the United States in 1989 reported that they attended church services weekly, compared to 38 percent of adult members in other denominations.

The religious practices of active Latter-day Saints include attendance at worship services and religious education classes on Sunday; donation of TITHING and other financial contributions; service in a variety of Church CALLINGS; performance of TEMPLE ORDINANCES on behalf of the deceased; personal and FAMILY PRAYER; SCRIPTURE STUDY; religious discussion with other family members; adherence to moral standards of personal honesty and integrity; genealogical research; service in the community; and development of habits of thrift and self-sufficiency. General surveys show that even though private religious practice is strongly encouraged by the Church, only 67 percent of active adult Latter-day Saints pray daily, compared to 83 percent in other denominations; and 41 percent reported reading the scriptures daily or several times a week, compared to 52 percent in other denominations (Research Division; cf. National Opinion Research Center; Princeton Religion Research Center).

Religious activity may fluctuate over the course of a person's lifetime, depending on a number of personal and situational variables. In general, the rates of public and private religious activity are somewhat higher among women than men. This gender difference in religious activity is found within every denomination. In addition, the religious activity of adult Latter-day Saints is influenced by (1) religious background, including parents' religious activity, home religious observance, and religious activity during childhood and adolescent years; and (2) current life situation, including marital status and educational or occupational status. Church members who are most likely to have lower levels of religious activity include adults married outside the faith, adults who are divorced or have never married, adults with less than a high school education working in blue-collar jobs, and adults without a religious background.

Age also has an important effect on religious activity. In the United States, 85 percent of Latter-day Saint children under age ten attend Church meetings three to four times a month, but the percentage of frequent attenders declines over the next fifteen years to 55 percent during their mid-twenties. It then rises to 60 percent at age forty, falls to a low of 50 percent during the mid-fifties, and rises again to 60 percent by age seventy.

The process by which people discontinue active participation in the religious life of their church for a period of time is called “disengagement.” Disengaged Mormons are usually referred to as “inactive” or “less active” members. While they do not regularly attend church or participate in other public religious practices, inactive Latter-day Saints usually retain a strong identification with the Church and value that identity (Albrecht, Cornwall, and Cunningham). Research has shown that religious socialization in the family is an important predictor of the likelihood that a person will experience a period of inactivity during adolescence or young adulthood. This finding accurately describes the experience of Latter-day Saints. Church members from homes in which both parents are LDS and attend church frequently, pray, read the scriptures, and discuss religion with their children are much less likely to have a period of inactivity than those from homes in which one or neither parent attends church regularly nor practices religion in the home.

About 75 percent of lifelong Latter-day Saints experience a period of inactivity lasting a year or more. The process of disengagement most commonly begins sometime between the ages of fourteen and twenty. Of those who leave, 60 percent return to active participation between their mid-twenties and late thirties, when they marry and begin a family. Some Latter-day Saints who had stopped attending church were asked to list the reasons why they had left. Lifestyle issues and problems of social integration were mentioned most frequently. More than half said they had found other interests that led them to spend less and less time in Church-related activities; 42 percent reported that they felt their lifestyle was no longer compatible with participation in the Church; 40 percent said they did not feel as if they belonged or fit in; and 25 percent said they felt it did not matter to anyone whether they attended or not. Less frequently mentioned reasons included moving to a new community, work-schedule conflicts, poor health, marriage to an inactive member or marriage outside the Church, and conflicts with Church members, programs, or doctrines.

For those who convert to the Church as teenagers or adults, the period of greatest risk for inactivity is the first year or two after joining the Church (see CONVERSION). About 70 percent of the new Latter-day Saint converts in the United States who do become inactive stop attending within three to five years after joining the Church. Of those who drop out, 45 percent return to active participation in five to ten years. Activity among these converts is influenced by (1) the personal characteristics of the convert, such as religious background, age, and marital status; (2) how personally involved the convert was in the investigation process, such as experiencing the Spirit of God and attending Church worship services; and (3) the extent to which the convert developed social relationships with other Latter-day Saints both before and after baptism.

In any religious tradition, social relationships are critical in developing and maintaining religious activity. People's religious lives are acted out in the context of a network of social ties within the family, the congregation, and the community. In addition, social relationships are the means by which religious traditions are transmitted from one generation to the next and the medium through which religious practices are shared and expressed. LDS religious activity is centered in the family and in the congregation (see WARD). In these settings, children and new converts learn by instruction and example what it means to be an "active" Latter-day Saint (see VALUES, TRANSMISSION OF).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Albrecht, Stan L. "The Consequential Dimension of Mormon Religiosity." BYU Studies 29 (Spring 1989):57–108.
- , Marie Cornwall, and Perry H. Cunningham. "Religious Leave-Taking: Disengagement and Disaffiliation Among Mormons." In Falling from the Faith, ed. David G. Bromley, pp. 62–80. Newbury Park, Calif., 1988.
- Center for Demography and Ecology, University of Wisconsin-Madison. National Survey of Families and Households. Madison, 1987.
- Cornwall, Marie. "The Social Bases of Religion: A Study of Factors Influencing Religious Belief and Commitment." Review of Religious Research 29 (Sept. 1987):44–56.
- . "The Influence of Three Agents of Religious Socialization: Family, Church, Peers." In The Religion and Family Connection: Social Science Perspectives, ed. Darwin L. Thomas, pp. 207–231. Provo, Utah, 1988.
- . "The Determinants of Religious Behavior: A Theoretical Model and Empirical Test." Social Forces 68 (1989):283–99.

National Opinion Research Center. General Social Survey. Chicago, 1988.

Princeton Religion Research Center. Religion in America. Princeton, N.J., 1982.

Research Division, The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Surveys of Church Members (1981–1984), unpublished.

PERRY H. CUNNINGHAM

---

ADAM

[This entry consists of two parts:

LDS Sources
Ancient Sources

The first article discusses LDS teachings about Adam. The second one offers several apocryphal and pseudepigraphic sources as points of comparison. For further information on Adam, see Adamic Language, Eve, Fall of Adam, Mortality, Original Sin, and Plan of Salvation; regarding the beginnings of earth life, see Creation, Earth, Evolution, Garden of Eden, Origin of Man, Purpose of Earth Life, and Worlds.]

LDS SOURCES

For Latter-day Saints, Adam stands as one of the noblest and greatest of all men. Information found in the scriptures and in declarations of latter-day apostles and prophets reveals details about Adam and his important roles in the pre-earth life, in Eden, in mortality, and in his postmortal life. They identify Adam by such names and titles as Michael (D&C 27:11; 29:26), archangel (D&C 88:112), and Ancient of Days (D&C 138:38).

The Prophet Joseph SMITH taught that Michael, spoken of in the Bible (Dan. 10:13; Jude 1:9; Rev. 12:7), is Adam. In his PREMORTAL LIFE, Adam received the PRIESTHOOD (TPJS, p. 157), was taught the plan of God (TPJS, p. 167), and was appointed to be the head of the human family (TPJS, p. 158). He participated in the creation of the earth and occupied a position of authority next to Jesus Christ (TPJS, p. 158), under whose direction he at all times functions (D&C 78:16). He led the forces of righteousness against the devil "and his angels," who were overcome and expelled from heaven (see WAR IN HEAVEN).

Latter-day scriptures attest that Adam is a son of God, that his PHYSICAL BODY was created by the Gods in their own image and placed in the GARDEN

For those who convert to the Church as teenagers or adults, the period of greatest risk for inactivity is the first year or two after joining the Church (see CONVERSION). About 70 percent of the new Latter-day Saint converts in the United States who do become inactive stop attending within three to five years after joining the Church. Of those who drop out, 45 percent return to active participation in five to ten years. Activity among these converts is influenced by (1) the personal characteristics of the convert, such as religious background, age, and marital status; (2) how personally involved the convert was in the investigation process, such as experiencing the Spirit of God and attending Church worship services; and (3) the extent to which the convert developed social relationships with other Latter-day Saints both before and after baptism.

In any religious tradition, social relationships are critical in developing and maintaining religious activity. People's religious lives are acted out in the context of a network of social ties within the family, the congregation, and the community. In addition, social relationships are the means by which religious traditions are transmitted from one generation to the next and the medium through which religious practices are shared and expressed. LDS religious activity is centered in the family and in the congregation (see WARD). In these settings, children and new converts learn by instruction and example what it means to be an "active" Latter-day Saint (see VALUES, TRANSMISSION OF).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Albrecht, Stan L. "The Consequential Dimension of Mormon Religiosity." BYU Studies 29 (Spring 1989):57-108.
- , Marie Cornwall, and Perry H. Cunningham. "Religious Leave-Taking: Disengagement and Disaffiliation Among Mormons." In Falling from the Faith, ed. David G. Bromley, pp. 62-80. Newbury Park, Calif., 1988.
- Center for Demography and Ecology, University of Wisconsin-Madison. National Survey of Families and Households. Madison, 1987.
- Cornwall, Marie. "The Social Bases of Religion: A Study of Factors Influencing Religious Belief and Commitment." Review of Religious Research 29 (Sept. 1987):44-56.
- . "The Influence of Three Agents of Religious Socialization: Family, Church, Peers." In The Religion and Family Connection: Social Science Perspectives, ed. Darwin L. Thomas, pp. 207-231. Provo, Utah, 1988.
- . "The Determinants of Religious Behavior: A Theoretical Model and Empirical Test." Social Forces 68 (1989):283-99.

National Opinion Research Center. General Social Survey. Chicago, 1988.

Princeton Religion Research Center. Religion in America. Princeton, N.J., 1982.

Research Division, The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Surveys of Church Members (1981-1984), unpublished.

PERRY H. CUNNINGHAM

---

ADAM

[This entry consists of two parts:

LDS Sources
Ancient Sources

The first article discusses LDS teachings about Adam. The second one offers several apocryphal and pseudepigraphic sources as points of comparison. For further information on Adam, see Adamic Language, Eve, Fall of Adam, Mortality, Original Sin, and Plan of Salvation; regarding the beginnings of earth life, see Creation, Earth, Evolution, Garden of Eden, Origin of Man, Purpose of Earth Life, and Worlds.]

LDS SOURCES

For Latter-day Saints, Adam stands as one of the noblest and greatest of all men. Information found in the scriptures and in declarations of latter-day apostles and prophets reveals details about Adam and his important roles in the pre-earth life, in Eden, in mortality, and in his postmortal life. They identify Adam by such names and titles as Michael (D&C 27:11; 29:26), archangel (D&C 88:112), and Aeneid of Days (D&C 138:38).

The Prophet Joseph SMITH taught that Michael, spoken of in the Bible (Dan. 10:13; Jude 1:9; Rev. 12:7), is Adam. In his PREMORTAL LIFE, Adam received the PRIESTHOOD (TPJS, p. 157), was taught the plan of God (TPJS, p. 167), and was appointed to be the head of the human family (TPJS, p. 158). He participated in the creation of the earth and occupied a position of authority next to Jesus Christ (TPJS, p. 158), under whose direction he at all times functions (D&C 78:16). He led the forces of righteousness against the devil "and his angels," who were overcome and expelled from heaven (see WAR IN HEAVEN).

Latter-day scriptures attest that Adam is a son of God, that his PHYSICAL BODY was created by the Gods in their own image and placed in the GARDEN

Adam and Eve Cast Out of the Garden of Eden, by Tiffany Studios, New York (1892, leaded stained glass, over 6 feet in diameter), inside the Salt Lake Temple, in the second floor corridor leading from the World Room to the Main Hall. Photograph by C. R. Savage, 1911.

OF EDEN (Moses 6:9, 22; Abr. 5:7–11; TPJS, p. 345–53; cf. 2 Ne. 2:14–19). In this physical-spiritual state in Eden, Adam was called the “first man” (Moses 1:34) and given responsibility to dress the garden and “open the way of the world” (TPJS, p. 12). He was given dominion and responsibility over the earth, and he gave names to its creatures (Moses 3:19). He was joined with EVE in marriage (Abr. 5:4–19), but in their premortal condition “they would have had no children” (2 Ne. 2:23). Adam received the KEYS OF THE PRIESTHOOD (Abr., Facsimile 2, Fig. 3), and its ordinances were confirmed upon Adam and Eve (cf. TPJS, p. 167).

In order to obey the command of God to multiply and people the earth, Adam and Eve transgressed the law. Their deliberate action resulted in their fall (see FALL OF ADAM), and they were expelled from the garden. “Adam fell that men might be; and men are, that they might have joy” (2 Ne. 2:25). Thus, their action precipitated, as God had planned, the mortal phase of the PLAN OF SALVATION.

In their mortal state, Adam and Eve were taught further about the plan of salvation by heavenly messengers (Moses 5:4–9; 6:50–54). They received the priesthood ordinances (Moses 5:59; 6:64–65) and all things necessary to teach their children (Moses 5:12). LDS sources indicate that with Eve, Adam had sons and daughters before Cain and Abel were born (Moses 5:2–3, 16–17). They suffered the effects of the temptations of the devil and experienced the sorrow of family dissension that led to murder and wickedness among some of their children (Moses 5:12–53).

Adam and Eve had a fully developed language and kept written records (Moses 6:5–9). They preserved their genealogical record and an account of the Creation. Three years before his death, Adam called his righteous posterity to ADAM-ONDI-AHMAN and gave them his final blessing (D&C 107:53).

As the first on this earth to receive priesthood keys, Adam continues to dispense authority to others and to watch over priesthood administration on the earth; those to whom keys have been given must return them or account for them to Adam, and he will in turn deliver them or give an accounting of them to Christ (TPJS, pp. 157, 167). This will occur when the Ancient of Days (Adam) attends a council at Adam-ondi-Ahman preliminary to the second coming of Christ (Dan. 7:9–10; cf. TPJS, p. 122).

At the end of the Millennium, Adam as Michael will again lead the righteous in battle against the devil and his armies. Michael and the hosts of heaven will again prevail (D&C 88:111–15). When Adam then sounds the trumpet, the graves will be opened and the remainder of the dead will come forth to be judged (D&C 29:26–27). Subject to the Father and Christ, Adam will then preside eternally over his posterity (TPJS, p. 157).

Adam’s various titles relate to particular phases of his mission. In his premortal and post-mortal roles, he is known as Michael and as the archangel (D&C 29:26). In Hebrew, michael means one “who is like God,” and in his powerful and leading role as archangel, Adam serves as the captain of the Lord’s hosts in battle against the devil and his forces. Adam was the name given him for mortality (Moses 1:34). In Hebrew, ’adam means “man” or “mankind.” In LDS sources, further meanings of the word include “first man” (D&C 84:16), “many” (Moses 1:34), and “first father” (Abr. 1:3), denoting his historical role as the “grand progenitor” of the entire human family (TPJS, p. 167). “Ancient of Days” appears to be his title because he is “the first and oldest of all” (TPJS, p. 167).

Adam has been highly esteemed by all the prophets, both ancient and modern. President Brigham YOUNG expressed the idea in 1852 and later years that Adam “is our Father and our God, and the only God with whom we have to do” (JD 1:50). This remark has led some to conjecture that Brigham Young meant that Adam, who was on earth as our progenitor, was in reality God the Father. However, this interpretation has been officially rejected as incorrect (Kimball, p. 77). Later in the same speech Brigham Young clearly stated “that the earth was organized by three distinct characters, namely Eloheim, Yahovah, and Michael” (JD 1:51). Additional information about Brigham Young’s feelings on Adam can also be found in a conference speech given October 8, 1854 (JD 1:50), clarifying somewhat his earlier statement. It is there implied that through a process known as divine investiture, God delegates his power to his children. Adam was the first on earth to receive this authority, which includes all essential keys, titles, and dominions possessed by the Father (D&C 84:38; cf. 88:107). Thus, he had conferred upon him all things that were necessary for the accomplishment of his manifold responsibilities, and Adam is a name-title signifying that he is the first man and father of all.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Broderick, Carl. “Another Look at Adam-God.” Dialogue 16 (Summer 1983):4–7.
- Buerger, David J. “The Adam-God Doctrine.” Dialogue 15 (Spring 1982):14–58.
- Kimball, Spencer W. “Our Own Liahona.” Ensign 6 (Nov. 1976):77–79.
- McConkie, Joseph Fielding, and Robert L. Millet, eds. The Man Adam. Salt Lake City, 1990.
- Petersen, Mark E. Adam: Who Is He? Salt Lake City, 1976.

ARTHUR A. BAILEY

ANCIENT SOURCES

Adam is portrayed in ancient Jewish and Christian sources as the first human and progenitor of the race. Many apocryphal texts rework the Old Testament Adam narrative and contain or reflect valuable ancient traditions. Some Latter-day Saints have profitably compared a few of these views with certain concepts about Adam given in Latter-day Saint sources.

In Judaism, Genesis 1–2 is used as a basis for understanding mankind’s relationship to God. Adam’s posterity inherited his fallen nature, yet Adam is regarded as the archetypal model for mankind—as indicated in texts that date back at least to Hellenistic times (second century B.C.) and is amplified in medieval Jewish philosophy. Philo, following a Platonic model, saw in the two creation narratives of Genesis a distinction between a heavenly or spiritual man, created first spiritually in the image of God (Gen. 1:27; cf. Moses 3:5), and a second, earthly man, formed out of the dust (Gen. 2:7). Most early Jewish exegetes accepted the historicity of the biblical account, though Genesis 2:8–3:24 was often interpreted allegorically. The Talmud and the Aggadah supplied rich details to the Adam story, including an impressive description of how all future generations—and their PROPHETS—passed before Adam and were viewed by him (Sanh. 38b; Av. Zar. 5a; Gen. R. 24:2; cf. D&C 107:55–57). Adam was given the Noachian laws (Sanh. 56b) and the law of the SABBATH (Mid. Ps. to 92:6). He was the first man to offer sacrifice (Av. Zar. 8a; cf. Moses 5:5). The medieval cabalists added mystical interpretations as well, although Adam is never identified here as Michael, as in the Latter-day Saint scripture (see D&C 27:11; 107:54; 128:21).

Orthodox Christian theology, articulated during the second century by Irenaeus and others in response to the challenges posed by gnosticism, faithfully saw the Old Testament through the role of Christ. Early Christianity regarded the incarnation and ATONEMENT OF JESUS CHRIST as the fulfillment of the work begun by Adam. While Adam was the prototype of the old, mortal man, Christ became the prototype of the new man, blessed with the promise of immortality. Jesus became the “second Adam,” whose atonement enabled mankind to overcome the effects of the Fall (1 Cor. 15:22, 45).

The creation story and the Adam narrative in Genesis were especially important in gnosticism, which interpreted the Fall as the downfall of the divine principle into the material world. This contributed to gnosticism’s negative attitude toward the physical creation. Several Gnostic writings deal with Adam. One of these, the Apocalypse of Adam, found at Nag Hammadi, is heavily dependent upon Jewish apocalyptic traditions and contains no explicit Christian doctrines. It purports to be a revelation given to Adam after the Fall by three heavenly messengers, explaining the nature and extent of the Fall and providing the promise of a future Redeemer. This knowledge is then passed by Adam to SETH and his descendants (cf. D&C 107:41–57).

The Life of Adam and Eve is a significant apocryphal work dealing with the life and death of Adam. It was probably written in Palestine between 100 B.C. and A.D. 200. It has been preserved in Greek, Latin, and Slavonic recensions, each considerably different from the others. This work describes Adam's and Eve's repentance after leaving the Garden of Eden at length (cf. Moses 6:50–68). No clear and central doctrine emerges, but the text stresses the ideas of final JUDGMENT and RESURRECTION. Other eschatological features are missing. It conveys no hint of the traditional doctrine of ORIGINAL SIN. Adam is perfect; EVE, weak but not wicked, deplores her own shortcomings while loving and obeying Adam.

A central feature of the Cave of Treasures, a Syriac work, is its story of a cave where Adam lived and was buried. His body was retrieved by Noah, who took it into the ark and afterward reinterred it on Golgotha. By this account, the redemptive blood of Jesus, also called the "last Adam," shed at the Crucifixion first flowed on the grave of Adam, demonstrating an inexorable link between the FALL OF ADAM and the atonement of Christ. Thus, in the Gospel of Bartholomew 1:22, Jesus says to Adam, "I was hung upon the cross for thee and for thy children's sake," and in 2 Enoch 42, Adam in Paradise is brought out "together with the ancestors . . . so that they may be filled with joy" and eternal riches.

Many ancient texts about Adam exist, notably the Ethiopic Book of Adam and Eve, and the Armenian books of Death of Adam, History of Adam's Expulsion from Paradise, History of Cain and Abel, Adam's Sons, and Concerning the Good Tidings of Seth.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Ginzberg, Louis. Legends of the Jews, Vol. 1, pp. 3–142. Philadelphia, 1937.

Johnson, M. D. "The Life of Adam and Eve." In The Old Testament Pseudepigrapha, ed. J. Charlesworth, Vol. 2, pp. 249–95. Garden City, N.Y., 1985.

Robinson, James M., ed. The Nag Hammadi Library, 2nd ed. New York, 1989.

Robinson, Stephen E. "The Apocalypse of Adam." BYU Studies 17 (Winter 1977):131–53.

———. "The Book of Adam in Judaism and Early Christianity." In The Man Adam, ed. J. McConkie and R. Millet, pp. 131–50, listing titles of many ancient works. Salt Lake City, 1990.

MARTIN J. PALMER

---

ADAM-GOD

See: Young, Brigham: Teachings of Brigham Young

---

ADAMIC LANGUAGE

The concept of the Adamic language grew among Latter-day Saints out of statements from scripture, comments of early Church leaders, and subsequent tradition. It does not play a central doctrinal role, and there is no official Church position delineating its nature or status.

The scriptures state that this language, written and spoken by ADAM and his children, was "pure and undefiled" (Moses 6:5–6). Brigham YOUNG taught that it continued from Adam to Babel, at which time the Lord "caused the people to forget their own mother tongue, . . . scatter[ing] them abroad upon the face of the whole earth," except possibly for Jared and his family in the Book of Mormon (JD 3:100; cf. Gen. 11:1–9; Mosiah 28:17). This statement reflects the widely held Mormon belief that the founding members of the JAREDITE civilization preserved the Adamic language at their immigration to the new world (Ether 1:33–43; 3:24–28). Thus, the description by the brother of Jared of his apocalyptic vision was rendered linguistically inaccessible without divine interpretive help, since "the language which ye shall write I [God] have confounded" (Ether 3:21–28).

In the early years of the Church, some words of the Adamic language may have been revealed to Joseph Smith (JD 2:342), and other early Church leaders, including Brigham Young (IIC 1:297) and Elizabeth Ann Whitney (Woman's Exponent 7 [Nov. 1, 1878], p. 83), who were said to have spoken it in tongues. More recently President Ezra Taft BENSON alluded to its possible universal rein-

ward the physical creation. Several Gnostic writings deal with Adam. One of these, the Apocalypse of Adam, found at Nag Hammadi, is heavily dependent upon Jewish apocalyptic traditions and contains no explicit Christian doctrines. It purports to be a revelation given to Adam after the Fall by three heavenly messengers, explaining the nature and extent of the Fall and providing the promise of a future Redeemer. This knowledge is then passed by Adam to SETH and his descendants (cf. D&C 107:41–57).

The Life of Adam and Eve is a significant apocryphal work dealing with the life and death of Adam. It was probably written in Palestine between 100 B.C. and A.D. 200. It has been preserved in Greek, Latin, and Slavonic recensions, each considerably different from the others. This work describes Adam's and Eve's repentance after leaving the Garden of Eden at length (cf. Moses 6:50–68). No clear and central doctrine emerges, but the text stresses the ideas of final JUDGMENT and RESURRECTION. Other eschatological features are missing. It conveys no hint of the traditional doctrine of ORIGINAL SIN. Adam is perfect; EVE, weak but not wicked, deplores her own shortcomings while loving and obeying Adam.

A central feature of the Cave of Treasures, a Syriac work, is its story of a cave where Adam lived and was buried. His body was retrieved by Noah, who took it into the ark and afterward reinterred it on Golgotha. By this account, the redemptive blood of Jesus, also called the "last Adam," shed at the Crucifixion first flowed on the grave of Adam, demonstrating an inexorable link between the FALL OF ADAM and the atonement of Christ. Thus, in the Gospel of Bartholomew 1:22, Jesus says to Adam, "I was hung upon the cross for thee and for thy children's sake," and in 2 Enoch 42, Adam in Paradise is brought out "together with the ancestors . . . so that they may be filled with joy" and eternal riches.

Many ancient texts about Adam exist, notably the Ethiopic Book of Adam and Eve, and the Armenian books of Death of Adam, History of Adam's Expulsion from Paradise, History of Cain and Abel, Adam's Sons, and Concerning the Good Tidings of Seth.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Ginzberg, Louis. Legends of the Jews, Vol. 1, pp. 3–142. Philadelphia, 1937.

Johnson, M. D. "The Life of Adam and Eve." In The Old Testament Pseudepigrapha, ed. J. Charlesworth, Vol. 2, pp. 249–95. Garden City, N.Y., 1985.

Robinson, James M., ed. The Nag Hammadi Library, 2nd ed. New York, 1989.

Robinson, Stephen E. "The Apocalypse of Adam." BYU Studies 17 (Winter 1977):131–53.

———. "The Book of Adam in Judaism and Early Christianity." In The Man Adam, ed. J. McConkie and R. Millet, pp. 131–50, listing titles of many ancient works. Salt Lake City, 1990.

MARTIN J. PALMER

---

ADAM-GOD

See: Young, Brigham: Teachings of Brigham Young

---

ADAMIC LANGUAGE

The concept of the Adamic language grew among Latter-day Saints out of statements from scripture, comments of early Church leaders, and subsequent tradition. It does not play a central doctrinal role, and there is no official Church position delineating its nature or status.

The scriptures state that this language, written and spoken by ADAM and his children, was "pure and undefiled" (Moses 6:5–6). Brigham YOUNG taught that it continued from Adam to Babel, at which time the Lord "caused the people to forget their own mother tongue, . . . scatter[ing] them abroad upon the face of the whole earth," except possibly for Jared and his family in the Book of Mormon (JD 3:100; cf. Gen. 11:1–9; Mosiah 28:17). This statement reflects the widely held Mormon belief that the founding members of the JAREDITE civilization preserved the Adamic language at their immigration to the new world (Ether 1:33–43; 3:24–28). Thus, the description by the brother of Jared of his apocalyptic vision was rendered linguistically inaccessible without divine interpretive help, since "the language which ye shall write I [God] have confounded" (Ether 3:21–28).

In the early years of the Church, some words of the Adamic language may have been revealed to Joseph Smith (JD 2:342), and other early Church leaders, including Brigham Young (IIC 1:297) and Elizabeth Ann Whitney (Woman's Exponent 7 [Nov. 1, 1878], p. 83), who were said to have spoken it in tongues. More recently President Ezra Taft BENSON alluded to its possible universal reinstatement to resolve linguistic diversity (Teachings of Ezra Taft Benson [Salt Lake City, 1988], p. 93; cf. Brigham Young JD 3:100).

Similarly, Zephaniah 3:9, possibly referring to the future of the Adamite language, says, "I will turn to the people a pure language, that they may all call upon the name of the Lord." The word pure comes from the Hebrew berurah, from barar, "to cleanse" or purify; also "to choose."

Because it is generally held that a language reflects its culture, possibly the erosion of the purity of the Adamite culture after Babel led to a concomitant loss of purity of expression in its mirroring language.

JOHN S. ROBERTSON

ADAM-ONDI-AHMAN

Adam-ondi-Ahman, a settlement in Daviess County, Missouri, received its unusual name from the Prophet Joseph SMITH in 1838 when Latter-day Saints were moving into the area. Members of the Church had been forced out of Jackson County, Missouri, in 1833 after three years of temporary asylum, and were subsequently asked to leave Clay County. When they appealed to the state legislature to make a new county "for Mormons," Caldwell and Daviess counties were organized. The Saints immediately moved into Caldwell County with Far West as the county seat, and soon also began settling in adjoining Daviess County. In May 1838 Joseph Smith led surveyors to a horseshoe bend of the Grand River, seventy miles north of present-day Kansas City, and proclaimed a new community, which he named Adam-ondi-Ahman because, said he, "it is the place where Adam shall come to visit his people, or the Ancient of Days shall sit, as spoken of by Daniel the Prophet" (HC 3:35; D&C 116). Orson Pratt interpreted the name to mean "Valley of God, where Adam dwelt" (JD 18:343).

The Prophet's revelations indicated several things about the area: (1) the GARDEN OF EDEN was located in Jackson County, Missouri, and after ADAM was expelled from the garden, he went north to Adam-ondi-Ahman; (2) three years before Adam's death, he gathered the righteous of his posterity to Adam-ondi-Ahman and bestowed upon them his last blessing; (3) this site would be the location of a future meeting of the Lord with statement to resolve linguistic diversity (Teachings of Ezra Taft Benson [Salt Lake City, 1988], p. 93; cf. Brigham Young JD 3:100).

Lyman Wight's second cabin in the valley of Adam-ondi-Ahman in northwestern Missouri, a Latter-day Saint settlement from 1836 to 1838.

Similarly, Zephaniah 3:9, possibly referring to the future of the Adamic language, says, "I will turn to the people a pure language, that they may all call upon the name of the Lord." The word pure comes from the Hebrew berurah, from barar, "to cleanse" or purify; also "to choose."

Because it is generally held that a language reflects its culture, possibly the erosion of the purity of the Adamic culture after Babel led to a concomitant loss of purity of expression in its mirroring language.

JOHN S. ROBERTSON

ADAM-ONDI-AHMAN

Adam-ondi-Ahman, a settlement in Daviess County, Missouri, received its unusual name from the Prophet Joseph SMITH in 1838 when Latter-day Saints were moving into the area. Members of the Church had been forced out of Jackson County, Missouri, in 1833 after three years of temporary asylum, and were subsequently asked to leave Clay County. When they appealed to the state legislature to make a new county "for Mormons," Caldwell and Daviess counties were organized. The Saints immediately moved into Caldwell County with Far West as the county seat, and soon also began settling in adjoining Daviess County. In May 1838 Joseph Smith led surveyors to a horseshoe bend of the Grand River, seventy miles north of present-day Kansas City, and proclaimed a new community, which he named Adam-ondi-Ahman because, said he, "it is the place where Adam shall come to visit his people, or the Ancient of Days shall sit, as spoken of by Daniel the Prophet" (HC 3:35; D&C 116). Orson Pratt interpreted the name to mean "Valley of God, where Adam dwelt" (JD 18:343).

The Prophet's revelations indicated several things about the area: (1) the GARDEN OF EDEN was located in Jackson County, Missouri, and after ADAM was expelled from the garden, he went north to Adam-ondi-Ahman; (2) three years before Adam's death, he gathered the righteous of his posterity to Adam-ondi-Ahman and bestowed upon them his last blessing; (3) this site would be the location of a future meeting of the Lord with Lyman Wight's second cabin in the valley of Adam-ondi-Ahman in northwestern Missouri, a Latter-day Saint settlement from 1836 to 1838.

Adam and the Saints, as spoken of by the prophet Daniel (Dan. 7:9–14, 21–27; 12:1–3).

When Joseph Smith arrived in the valley with the survey team, he found three or four Latter-day Saint families already living there and made the log cabin of Lyman Wight his headquarters. From June to October 1838, the population of the two-mile-square Adam-ondi-Ahman increased to about 400 people. Another 600 scattered throughout Daviess County viewed Adam-ondi-Ahman as their capital city.

Approximately 90 percent of the Saints in Daviess County settled on land under “preemption rights,” which meant that the government had not yet made the land available for purchase. Believing that they would eventually own the land, the Latter-day Saints worked hard to develop their farms. In June 1838, when the third STAKE of the Church was organized at Adam-ondi-Ahman, with John Smith as stake president, a peaceful atmosphere seemed to prevail. However, in July the settlers were served public notice to leave Daviess County or face serious consequences. The Saints placed their militia in a state of readiness to defend themselves. When hostilities erupted in August, the militia from Church headquarters at Far West went to Adam-ondi-Ahman, but no battle ensued. Similar action occurred in September.

On October 11, mobs forced the Latter-day Saints from DeWitt in Carroll County and then turned to Daviess County, intent on driving them all out of the state. They burned cabins, stole animals, and harassed families. When the Far West militia arrived for the third time, in October 1838, Church members throughout Daviess County gathered to Adam-ondi-Ahman for safety, and the community’s population swelled to more than a thousand. Confinement in tents and wagons and a sudden snowstorm added to their miseries.

While Joseph Smith and the Far West militia were in Adam-ondi-Ahman during October, the Church members assembled to witness the dedication of the public square by Brigham YOUNG. At this time, Joseph Smith pointed out a location where Adam had once built an altar. In May the Prophet had identified this same site as one that had also been used by early American Indians.

After the October plundering and burnings by the mobs and retaliatory actions by the Latter-day Saints, who were intent on defending themselves, the state militia forced them to surrender their arms on November 7, 1838, and gave them ten days to move to Far West. Adam-ondi-Ahman was abandoned and fell into the hands of non-Mormon settlers. Church families from Daviess County spent the winter at Far West before being expelled from the state in the spring of 1839.

The Missourians who were responsible for expelling Church members from Daviess County knew that in four days their land would be offered for sale by the U.S. government. With the Mormons gone, these residents purchased the improved land and reaped the benefits of the Saints’ labor.

John Cravens purchased most of the central area of the city of Adam-ondi-Ahman and renamed it Cravensville. The town existed for thirty-two years and had enough residents to vie with Gallatin for the county seat of Daviess County, but after 1871 the land was returned to farming and grazing.

In 1944 Wilford C. Wood purchased thirty-eight acres at Adam-ondi-Ahman for the Church, and an additional 3,000 acres have since been purchased. Archival research and archaeological excavation have helped to determine the location, size, nature, and history of the city.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

McConkie, Bruce R. The Millennial Messiah, pp. 575–88. Salt Lake City, 1982.

LAMAR C. BERRETT

---

ADMINISTRATION OF ORDINANCES

See: Ordinances: Administration of Ordinances

---

ADOPTION OF CHILDREN

The adoption of children is common among members of the Church. This is no doubt in part a concomitant of the Church’s opposition to ABORTION and its emphasis on the central importance of the FAMILY. President Ezra Taft Benson, commenting on adoption, stated that many “have prayerfully chosen to adopt children, and . . . [you] wonderful couples we salute . . . for the sacrifices and love you have given to those children you have chosen to be your own” (Benson, p. 11).

There are no doctrinal limitations on the legal adoption of children by members of the Church.

Adam and the Saints, as spoken of by the prophet Daniel (Dan. 7:9–14, 21–27; 12:1–3).

When Joseph Smith arrived in the valley with the survey team, he found three or four Latter-day Saint families already living there and made the log cabin of Lyman Wight his headquarters. From June to October 1838, the population of the two-mile-square Adam-ondi-Ahman increased to about 400 people. Another 600 scattered throughout Daviess County viewed Adam-ondi-Ahman as their capital city.

Approximately 90 percent of the Saints in Daviess County settled on land under “preemption rights,” which meant that the government had not yet made the land available for purchase. Believing that they would eventually own the land, the Latter-day Saints worked hard to develop their farms. In June 1838, when the third STAKE of the Church was organized at Adam-ondi-Ahman, with John Smith as stake president, a peaceful atmosphere seemed to prevail. However, in July the settlers were served public notice to leave Daviess County or face serious consequences. The Saints placed their militia in a state of readiness to defend themselves. When hostilities erupted in August, the militia from Church headquarters at Far West went to Adam-ondi-Ahman, but no battle ensued. Similar action occurred in September.

On October 11, mobs forced the Latter-day Saints from DeWitt in Carroll County and then turned to Daviess County, intent on driving them all out of the state. They burned cabins, stole animals, and harassed families. When the Far West militia arrived for the third time, in October 1838, Church members throughout Daviess County gathered to Adam-ondi-Ahman for safety, and the community’s population swelled to more than a thousand. Confinement in tents and wagons and a sudden snowstorm added to their miseries.

While Joseph Smith and the Far West militia were in Adam-ondi-Ahman during October, the Church members assembled to witness the dedication of the public square by Brigham YOUNG. At this time, Joseph Smith pointed out a location where Adam had once built an altar. In May the Prophet had identified this same site as one that had also been used by early American Indians.

After the October plundering and burnings by the mobs and retaliatory actions by the Latter-day Saints, who were intent on defending themselves, the state militia forced them to surrender their arms on November 7, 1838, and gave them ten days to move to Far West. Adam-ondi-Ahman was abandoned and fell into the hands of non-Mormon settlers. Church families from Daviess County spent the winter at Far West before being expelled from the state in the spring of 1839.

The Missourians who were responsible for expelling Church members from Daviess County knew that in four days their land would be offered for sale by the U.S. government. With the Mormons gone, these residents purchased the improved land and reaped the benefits of the Saints’ labor.

John Cravens purchased most of the central area of the city of Adam-ondi-Ahman and renamed it Cravensville. The town existed for thirty-two years and had enough residents to vie with Gallatin for the county seat of Daviess County, but after 1871 the land was returned to farming and grazing.

In 1944 Wilford C. Wood purchased thirty-eight acres at Adam-ondi-Ahman for the Church, and an additional 3,000 acres have since been purchased. Archival research and archaeological excavation have helped to determine the location, size, nature, and history of the city.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

McConkie, Bruce R. The Millennial Messiah, pp. 575–88. Salt Lake City, 1982.

LAMAR C. BERRETT

---

ADMINISTRATION OF ORDINANCES

See: Ordinances: Administration of Ordinances

---

ADOPTION OF CHILDREN

The adoption of children is common among members of the Church. This is no doubt in part a concomitant of the Church’s opposition to ABORTION and its emphasis on the central importance of the FAMILY. President Ezra Taft Benson, commenting on adoption, stated that many “have prayerfully chosen to adopt children, and . . . [you] wonderful couples we salute . . . for the sacrifices and love you have given to those children you have chosen to be your own” (Benson, p. 11).

There are no doctrinal limitations on the legal adoption of children by members of the Church.

Under most circumstances, adopted children may be sealed to the adoptive parents in an LDS temple (see SEALING). However, living children born in the covenant, that is, born to parents who have been sealed to each other in an LDS temple, cannot be sealed to any other parents although they can be adopted for life; and children who have been previously sealed to another couple may not be sealed to adoptive parents without cancellation of the former sealing. The temple sealing of a living adopted child into an eternal family relationship is performed only after legal adoption is finalized in accordance with local law (General Handbook of Instructions, Salt Lake City, 1989, 6-6).

Adopted children who have been sealed to adoptive parents are considered as natural children for all doctrinal purposes, including tracing genealogical lineage. All sealed children are entitled to all the blessings promised to children born in the covenant.

The desire to adopt children is strong among Church members, but Church leaders have cautioned them never to become involved in adoption practices that are legally questionable. In a letter dated April 20, 1982, the FIRST PRESIDENCY urged members to "observe strictly all legal requirements of the country or countries involved in the adoption." It was also stated that "the needs of the child must be a paramount concern in adoption." Members considering adoption are counseled to work through the Church's SOCIAL SERVICES agency or through others with the "specialized professional knowledge" necessary to ensure that the child's needs are met.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Benson, Ezra Taft. Annual Parents Fireside, Feb. 22, 1987. Church News (Feb. 28, 1987):3, 10.

RYAN L. THOMAS

---

ADULTERY

Adultery constitutes a grievous violation of the law of CHASTITY. For Latter-day Saints it is defined as sexual intercourse between a married person and someone other than his or her legal and lawful spouse, while fornication involves two unmarried parties. Both transgressions fall under condemnation in scripture and in the teachings of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

The Lord forbids adultery in the TEN COMMANDMENTS and elsewhere in the Law of Moses (see, e.g., Ex. 20:14; Lev. 20:10; Deut. 22:22). Both in Israel and in the Western Hemisphere, Christ commanded his followers not to commit adultery in thought or deed (Matt. 5:27-28; 3 Ne. 12:27-28). In this DISPENSATION, the Lord has again prohibited adultery, and "anything like unto it" (D&C 59:6), while reproofing even adulterous thoughts as an offense against the Spirit (D&C 42:23-26). In an official pronouncement in 1942, the FIRST PRESIDENCY of the Church decreed sexual sin—including adultery, fornication, and prostitution—as an offense "in its enormity, next to murder" (IE 45 [Nov. 1942]:758; MFP 6:176).

Because adultery or fornication breaks BAPTISMAL COVENANTS and temple vows and may involve other members of the Church, penitent offenders are to confess the sin to their BISHOP or other Church authority, who may convene a disciplinary council. After prayerful deliberation, the council may excommunicate or disfellowship an adulterer, or implement some type of probation to help the offender repent. The excommunication of an adulterous priesthood leader is almost certain. A disciplinary council usually requires the adulterer to seek forgiveness from the betrayed spouse and from anyone drawn into the sin. By demonstrating an abhorrence for past sin and a commitment to righteousness, the repentant adulterer may, after an adequate period of probation, become fully reconciled to Christ, rebaptized, and reinstated in the Church and find forgiveness from God (D&C 58:47-48).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Kimball, Spencer W. "The Sin Next to Murder." In The Miracle of Forgiveness, pp. 61-75. Salt Lake City, 1969.

BRYCE J. CHRISTENSEN

---

ADVERSARY

See: Devils

---

ADVOCATE WITH THE FATHER

See: Jesus Christ, Names and Titles of

Under most circumstances, adopted children may be sealed to the adoptive parents in an LDS temple (see SEALING). However, living children born in the covenant, that is, born to parents who have been sealed to each other in an LDS temple, cannot be sealed to any other parents although they can be adopted for life; and children who have been previously sealed to another couple may not be sealed to adoptive parents without cancellation of the former sealing. The temple sealing of a living adopted child into an eternal family relationship is performed only after legal adoption is finalized in accordance with local law (General Handbook of Instructions, Salt Lake City, 1989, 6-6).

Adopted children who have been sealed to adoptive parents are considered as natural children for all doctrinal purposes, including tracing genealogical lineage. All sealed children are entitled to all the blessings promised to children born in the covenant.

The desire to adopt children is strong among Church members, but Church leaders have cautioned them never to become involved in adoption practices that are legally questionable. In a letter dated April 20, 1982, the FIRST PRESIDENCY urged members to "observe strictly all legal requirements of the country or countries involved in the adoption." It was also stated that "the needs of the child must be a paramount concern in adoption." Members considering adoption are counseled to work through the Church's SOCIAL SERVICES agency or through others with the "specialized professional knowledge" necessary to ensure that the child's needs are met.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Benson, Ezra Taft. Annual Parents Fireside, Feb. 22, 1987. Church News (Feb. 28, 1987):3, 10.

RYAN L. THOMAS

---

ADULTERY

Adultery constitutes a grievous violation of the law of CHASTITY. For Latter-day Saints it is defined as sexual intercourse between a married person and someone other than his or her legal and lawful spouse, while fornication involves two unmarried parties. Both transgressions fall under condemnation in scripture and in the teachings of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

The Lord forbids adultery in the TEN COMMANDMENTS and elsewhere in the Law of Moses (see, e.g., Ex. 20:14; Lev. 20:10; Deut. 22:22). Both in Israel and in the Western Hemisphere, Christ commanded his followers not to commit adultery in thought or deed (Matt. 5:27-28; 3 Ne. 12:27-28). In this DISPENSATION, the Lord has again prohibited adultery, and "anything like unto it" (D&C 59:6), while reproofing even adulterous thoughts as an offense against the Spirit (D&C 42:23-26). In an official pronouncement in 1942, the FIRST PRESIDENCY of the Church decried sexual sin—including adultery, fornication, and prostitution—as an offense "in its enormity, next to murder" (IE 45 [Nov. 1942]:758; MFP 6:176).

Because adultery or fornication breaks BAPTISMAL COVENANTS and temple vows and may involve other members of the Church, penitent offenders are to confess the sin to their BISHOP or other Church authority, who may convene a disciplinary council. After prayerful deliberation, the council may excommunicate or disfellowship an adulterer, or implement some type of probation to help the offender repent. The excommunication of an adulterous priesthood leader is almost certain. A disciplinary council usually requires the adulterer to seek forgiveness from the betrayed spouse and from anyone drawn into the sin. By demonstrating an abhorrence for past sin and a commitment to righteousness, the repentant adulterer may, after an adequate period of probation, become fully reconciled to Christ, rebaptized, and reinstated in the Church and find forgiveness from God (D&C 58:47-48).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Kimball, Spencer W. "The Sin Next to Murder." In The Miracle of Forgiveness, pp. 61-75. Salt Lake City, 1969.

BRYCE J. CHRISTENSEN

---

ADVERSARY

See: Devils

---

ADVOCATE WITH THE FATHER

See: Jesus Christ, Names and Titles of

AFRICA, THE CHURCH IN

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints has been a presence in Africa since 1853, but for the first 125 years it was established only in southern Africa. Applications by the Church for admittance into central Africa in the 1960s were denied, but those in 1978 were approved, and growth of the Church there has been impressive.

From 1853 until 1978 most of the work of the Church in Africa was with European immigrants and their descendants in South Africa and in Northern and Southern Rhodesia (now Zambia and Zimbabwe, respectively). In June 1978, when the FIRST PRESIDENCY announced the revelation extending the priesthood to all worthy male members of the Church, the way was opened for the Church to extend its full program to all the nations of Africa (see D&C, Official Declaration—2). Missionaries were sent to Nigeria and Ghana at the request of many local people who had already studied the Church SCRIPTURES and literature and had organized themselves into units that they unofficially called The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Church missions were later organized in Zaire, Sierra Leone, Liberia, the Ivory Coast, and Mauritius and Reunion islands.

The establishment of the Church in Africa began at a special Church conference in Salt Lake City in August 1852, when President Brigham YOUNG called 106 men to leave their wives in charge of their families, homes, farms, and businesses and go on missions to various lands of the world to proclaim the restored GOSPEL. Three were called to go to South Africa: Jesse Haven, William H. Walker, and Leonard I. Smith, with Elder Haven assigned to preside. Leaving their families in the care of God, they arrived at the Cape of Good Hope on April 18, 1853, and set about to establish the Church in South Africa, encouraging the converts to “gather to Zion” in Utah. The missionaries faced heavy opposition from the local clergy and indifference to their message among the people generally; fewer than 200 people accepted baptism in the two and a half years they served.

One of the first converts in South Africa in 1853 was Nicholas Paul, a thirty-year-old builder who aided and protected missionaries and let them use his home for meetings. He became the president of the first branch of the Church in Africa, which was organized in his home in Mowbray (Cape Town area). The 1853 missionaries also organized a branch of the Church in Port Elizabeth. When they returned to their families in America in 1855, other missionaries from America and South Africa were called to replace them. Between 1855 and 1865, 278 converts to the Church emigrated from South Africa to Utah.

Members of the Eket Branch, in Nigeria (1984). Courtesy Ann Laemmlen Lewis.

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in Africa as of January 1, 1991.

No LDS missionaries served in South Africa from 1866 to 1903, and the Church grew slowly. Missionaries returned in 1903 and served until 1940, when they were withdrawn because of World War II. During those years 230 missionaries had worked in South Africa. Since the return of LDS missionaries to South Africa in 1944, the Church has grown steadily there and also expanded to other areas of Africa.

Helen Bassey Davies Udoeyo, Relief Society President of the Eket Branch, knitting, with her scriptures and Relief Society handbook on her lap (1985).

In addition to the efforts of foreign missionaries, much of the growth of the Church in Africa has resulted from the service of local members. Johanna Fourie instituted the Primary program for teaching the children in 1932 and spent the rest of her life (thirty-eight years) guiding and building this program throughout South Africa.

In 1954 President David O. MCKAY became the first GENERAL AUTHORITY of the Church to visit South Africa. The first LDS Church STAKE in South Africa was organized in Johannesburg in 1970, with Louis P. Hefer as STAKE PRESIDENT. That stake was divided into two stakes in 1978. In 1972 Church SEMINARIES and INSTITUTES OF RELIGION were introduced into southern Africa. All African countries in which the Church is established now have these programs. The added week-day religious training of the youth has increased local missionary participation. In 1973 President Spencer W. KIMBALL pronounced a dedicatory prayer upon the land of South Africa which included the promise that WARDS and stakes would dot the land and a TEMPLE would be built there. New stakes were created in Durban (1981) and Cape Town (1984). The first black African stake was organized in 1988 in Aba, Nigeria, with David W. Eka as its president.

Church growth in Africa since 1978 has been much higher in percentage than in the rest of the world. The major challenge is no longer to gain converts but to prepare local priesthood leadership. And as the Church continues to expand into sub-Saharan Africa, it must face the challenges of poverty and illiteracy. In addition to contributing to famine relief programs, the Church is helping its members in Africa to learn and implement the principles of self-reliance and independence.

The Johannesburg South Africa Temple is the first LDS temple in Africa (dedicated 1985). In the dedicatory prayer, President Gordon B. Hinckley prayed for blessings on this nation and that its leaders be inspired "to find a basis for reconciliation" among its people. Courtesy Marjorie Woods.

Elder Neal A. Maxwell of the Quorum of the Twelve presides at the creation of the Aba Nigeria Stake in 1988, the first stake of the Church in Nigeria. Left to right: Lazarus and Sylvia Onitchi, Elder Maxwell, Eugene Nwagbara and his wife Eugene Nnenna, Stake President David W. Eka and wife Eka-Etta, Ephraim S. and Patricia Etete, Elder Robert E. Sackley of the Seventy, and his wife Marjorie Sackley.

The Church has always tried to teach the gospel in the language of the people. As Afrikaans is an official language in South Africa, many missionaries sent there have learned to speak it. The BOOK OF MORMON was published in Afrikaans in 1973, and the DOCTRINE AND COVENANTS and the PEARL OF GREAT PRICE in 1981. The Book of Mormon has also been translated into several African languages: Efik (Nigeria, 1983), Kisi (Kenya, 1983), Malagasy (Madagascar, 1986), Akan (Ghana, 1987), Zulu (South Africa, 1978), and Shona (Zimbabwe, 1988). Local members have helped make these translations possible, such as Pricilla Sampson-Davis, a retired schoolteacher from Cape Coast, Ghana, who translated the Book of Mormon, LDS Hymns, and other Church publications into Akan. Translations into additional African languages continue in process.

One of the most significant events in the history of the Church in Africa was the dedication of the temple in Johannesburg in 1985, which has made it possible for the members to receive locally all the ORDINANCES of the Church and to perform them in proxy for their deceased ancestors. The first TEMPLE PRESIDENT and MATRON of this temple were Harlan W. and Geraldine Merkley Clark. Although the work of the Church in Africa was slow and localized from 1853 until the 1980s, Elder Alexander B. Morrison of the SEVENTY stated in 1987: "The gleanings and gathering of the children of God in Africa is just beginning. In the words of the Prophet Joseph, it will go forward 'boldly, nobly, and independent, till . . . [the truth of God has] swept every country, and sounded in every ear, till the purposes of God shall be accomplished, and the Great Jehovah shall say the work is done'" (p. 26).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Brigham, Janet. "Nigeria and Ghana: A Miracle Precedes the Messengers." Ensign 10 (Feb. 1980):73-76.
- LeBaron, E. Dale. "Gospel Pioneers in Africa." Ensign 20 (Aug. 1990):40-43.

———. All Are Alike unto God. Salt Lake City, 1990.

Lye, William. "From Burundi to Zaire: Taking the Gospel to Africa." Ensign 10 (Mar. 1980):10–15.

Mabey, Rendell N., and Gordon T. Allred. Brother to Brother: The Story of Latter-day Saint Missionaries Who Took the Gospel to Black Africa. Salt Lake City, 1984.

Morrison, Alexander B. "The Dawning of a New Day in Africa." Ensign 17 (Nov. 1987):25–26.

E. DALE LEBARON

AFTERLIFE

[Other articles related to this topic are: Degrees of Glory; Heaven; Hell; Immortality and Eternal Life; Paradise; Plan of Salvation; Salvation; Spirit Prison; Translated Beings.]

Latter-day Saints believe that life continues after the death of the mortal body and that death is but a separation of the PHYSICAL BODY and the SPIRIT. The spirits of all individuals, "whether they be good or evil, are taken home to that God who gave them life" (Alma 40:11). President Brigham YOUNG said that the transition from death into the SPIRIT WORLD is "from a state of sorrow, grief, mourning, woe, misery, pain, anguish and disappointment into a state of existence, where I can enjoy life to the fullest extent; . . . my spirit is set free; . . . I go, I come, I do this, I do that; . . . I am full of life, full of vigor, and I enjoy the presence of my heavenly Father" (JD 17:142). The desire, personality, and disposition that individuals develop, shape, and mold in this life will continue into the afterlife.

If individuals are evil in their hearts, their spirits will enter the spirit world intent upon doing evil; if individuals are good and strive to do the things of God, that disposition will also continue, only to a greater degree—learning, increasing, growing in grace and in knowledge of truth (see Brigham Young, JD 7:333). Amulek explained that the "same spirit which doth possess your bodies at the time that ye go out of this life, that same spirit will have power to possess your body in that eternal world" (Alma 34:34).

Life did not begin at mortal birth, nor will it end at mortal death. God's gift to all individuals is everlasting life. Every person will die physically; every person will receive a literal RESURRECTION of the body and never die again.

JUNE LEIFSON

AGENCY

"Agency" refers both to the capacity of beings "to act for themselves" (2 Ne. 2:26) and their ACCOUNTABILITY for those actions. Exercising agency is a spiritual matter (D&C 29:35); it consists in either receiving the enlightenment and COMMANDMENTS that come from God or resisting and rejecting them by yielding to the devil's temptations (D&C 93:31). Without awareness of alternatives an individual could not choose, and that is why being tempted by evil is as essential to agency as being enticed by the Spirit of God (D&C 29:39). Furthermore, no one is forced either to act virtuously or to sin. "The devil could not compel mankind to do evil; all was voluntary. . . . God would not exert any compulsory means, and the devil could not" (TPJS, p. 187).

Agency is an essential ingredient of being human, "inherent in the spirit of man" (McKay, p. 366) both in the premortal spirit existence (D&C 29:36) and in MORTALITY. No being can possess sensibility, rationality, and a capacity for happiness without it (2 Ne. 2:11–13, 23; D&C 93:30). Moreover, it is the specific gift by which God made his children in his image and empowered them to grow to become like him through their own progression of choices (L. Snow, JD 20:367). It was because Satan "sought to destroy the agency of man" (Moses 4:3) that the war was fought in heaven before earth life (cf. Rev. 12:7). What was then, and is now, at stake in the battle to preserve agency is nothing less than the possibility of both the continued existence and the divine destiny of every human being. This principle helps explain the Church's strong position against political systems and addictive practices that inhibit the free exercise of agency.

Agency is such that men and women not only can choose obedience or rebellion but must (B. Young, JD 13:282). They cannot avoid being both free and responsible for their choices. Individuals capable of acting for themselves cannot remain on neutral ground, abstaining from both receiving and rejecting light from God. To be an agent means both being able to choose and having to choose either "liberty and eternal life, through the great Mediator" or "captivity and death, according to the captivity and power of the devil" (2 Ne. 2:27–29; 10:23). A being who is "an agent unto himself" is continually committing to be either an agent and servant of God or an agent and servant of Satan. If

———. All Are Alike unto God. Salt Lake City, 1990.

Lye, William. "From Burundi to Zaire: Taking the Gospel to Africa." Ensign 10 (Mar. 1980):10–15.

Mabey, Rendell N., and Gordon T. Allred. Brother to Brother: The Story of Latter-day Saint Missionaries Who Took the Gospel to Black Africa. Salt Lake City, 1984.

Morrison, Alexander B. "The Dawning of a New Day in Africa." Ensign 17 (Nov. 1987):25–26.

E. DALE LEBARON

AFTERLIFE

[Other articles related to this topic are: Degrees of Glory; Heaven; Hell; Immortality and Eternal Life; Paradise; Plan of Salvation; Salvation; Spirit Prison; Translated Beings.]

Latter-day Saints believe that life continues after the death of the mortal body and that death is but a separation of the PHYSICAL BODY and the SPIRIT. The spirits of all individuals, "whether they be good or evil, are taken home to that God who gave them life" (Alma 40:11). President Brigham YOUNG said that the transition from death into the SPIRIT WORLD is "from a state of sorrow, grief, mourning, woe, misery, pain, anguish and disappointment into a state of existence, where I can enjoy life to the fullest extent; . . . my spirit is set free; . . . I go, I come, I do this, I do that; . . . I am full of life, full of vigor, and I enjoy the presence of my heavenly Father" (JD 17:142). The desire, personality, and disposition that individuals develop, shape, and mold in this life will continue into the afterlife.

If individuals are evil in their hearts, their spirits will enter the spirit world intent upon doing evil; if individuals are good and strive to do the things of God, that disposition will also continue, only to a greater degree—learning, increasing, growing in grace and in knowledge of truth (see Brigham Young, JD 7:333). Amulek explained that the "same spirit which doth possess your bodies at the time that ye go out of this life, that same spirit will have power to possess your body in that eternal world" (Alma 34:34).

Life did not begin at mortal birth, nor will it end at mortal death. God's gift to all individuals is everlasting life. Every person will die physically; every person will receive a literal RESURRECTION of the body and never die again.

JUNE LEIFSON

AGENCY

"Agency" refers both to the capacity of beings "to act for themselves" (2 Ne. 2:26) and their ACCOUNTABILITY for those actions. Exercising agency is a spiritual matter (D&C 29:35); it consists in either receiving the enlightenment and COMMANDMENTS that come from God or resisting and rejecting them by yielding to the devil's temptations (D&C 93:31). Without awareness of alternatives an individual could not choose, and that is why being tempted by evil is as essential to agency as being enticed by the Spirit of God (D&C 29:39). Furthermore, no one is forced either to act virtuously or to sin. "The devil could not compel mankind to do evil; all was voluntary. . . . God would not exert any compulsory means, and the devil could not" (TPJS, p. 187).

Agency is an essential ingredient of being human, "inherent in the spirit of man" (McKay, p. 366) both in the premortal spirit existence (D&C 29:36) and in MORTALITY. No being can possess sensibility, rationality, and a capacity for happiness without it (2 Ne. 2:11–13, 23; D&C 93:30). Moreover, it is the specific gift by which God made his children in his image and empowered them to grow to become like him through their own progression of choices (L. Snow, JD 20:367). It was because Satan "sought to destroy the agency of man" (Moses 4:3) that the war was fought in heaven before earth life (cf. Rev. 12:7). What was then, and is now, at stake in the battle to preserve agency is nothing less than the possibility of both the continued existence and the divine destiny of every human being. This principle helps explain the Church's strong position against political systems and addictive practices that inhibit the free exercise of agency.

Agency is such that men and women not only can choose obedience or rebellion but must (B. Young, JD 13:282). They cannot avoid being both free and responsible for their choices. Individuals capable of acting for themselves cannot remain on neutral ground, abstaining from both receiving and rejecting light from God. To be an agent means both being able to choose and having to choose either "liberty and eternal life, through the great Mediator" or "captivity and death, according to the captivity and power of the devil" (2 Ne. 2:27–29; 10:23). A being who is "an agent unto himself" is continually committing to be either an agent and servant of God or an agent and servant of Satan. If

———. All Are Alike unto God. Salt Lake City, 1990.

Lye, William. "From Burundi to Zaire: Taking the Gospel to Africa." Ensign 10 (Mar. 1980):10–15.

Mabey, Rendell N., and Gordon T. Allred. Brother to Brother: The Story of Latter-day Saint Missionaries Who Took the Gospel to Black Africa. Salt Lake City, 1984.

Morrison, Alexander B. "The Dawning of a New Day in Africa." Ensign 17 (Nov. 1987):25–26.

E. DALE LEBARON

AFTERLIFE

[Other articles related to this topic are: Degrees of Glory; Heaven; Hell; Immortality and Eternal Life; Paradise; Plan of Salvation; Salvation; Spirit Prison; Translated Beings.]

Latter-day Saints believe that life continues after the death of the mortal body and that death is but a separation of the PHYSICAL BODY and the SPIRIT. The spirits of all individuals, "whether they be good or evil, are taken home to that God who gave them life" (Alma 40:11). President Brigham YOUNG said that the transition from death into the SPIRIT WORLD is "from a state of sorrow, grief, mourning, woe, misery, pain, anguish and disappointment into a state of existence, where I can enjoy life to the fullest extent; . . . my spirit is set free; . . . I go, I come, I do this, I do that; . . . I am full of life, full of vigor, and I enjoy the presence of my heavenly Father" (JD 17:142). The desire, personality, and disposition that individuals develop, shape, and mold in this life will continue into the afterlife.

If individuals are evil in their hearts, their spirits will enter the spirit world intent upon doing evil; if individuals are good and strive to do the things of God, that disposition will also continue, only to a greater degree—learning, increasing, growing in grace and in knowledge of truth (see Brigham Young, JD 7:333). Amulek explained that the "same spirit which doth possess your bodies at the time that ye go out of this life, that same spirit will have power to possess your body in that eternal world" (Alma 34:34).

Life did not begin at mortal birth, nor will it end at mortal death. God's gift to all individuals is everlasting life. Every person will die physically; every person will receive a literal RESURRECTION of the body and never die again.

JUNE LEIFSON

AGENCY

"Agency" refers both to the capacity of beings "to act for themselves" (2 Ne. 2:26) and their ACCOUNTABILITY for those actions. Exercising agency is a spiritual matter (D&C 29:35); it consists in either receiving the enlightenment and COMMANDMENTS that come from God or resisting and rejecting them by yielding to the devil's temptations (D&C 93:31). Without awareness of alternatives an individual could not choose, and that is why being tempted by evil is as essential to agency as being enticed by the Spirit of God (D&C 29:39). Furthermore, no one is forced either to act virtuously or to sin. "The devil could not compel mankind to do evil; all was voluntary. . . . God would not exert any compulsory means, and the devil could not" (TPJS, p. 187).

Agency is an essential ingredient of being human, "inherent in the spirit of man" (McKay, p. 366) both in the premortal spirit existence (D&C 29:36) and in MORTALITY. No being can possess sensibility, rationality, and a capacity for happiness without it (2 Ne. 2:11–13, 23; D&C 93:30). Moreover, it is the specific gift by which God made his children in his image and empowered them to grow to become like him through their own progression of choices (L. Snow, JD 20:367). It was because Satan "sought to destroy the agency of man" (Moses 4:3) that the war was fought in heaven before earth life (cf. Rev. 12:7). What was then, and is now, at stake in the battle to preserve agency is nothing less than the possibility of both the continued existence and the divine destiny of every human being. This principle helps explain the Church's strong position against political systems and addictive practices that inhibit the free exercise of agency.

Agency is such that men and women not only can choose obedience or rebellion but must (B. Young, JD 13:282). They cannot avoid being both free and responsible for their choices. Individuals capable of acting for themselves cannot remain on neutral ground, abstaining from both receiving and rejecting light from God. To be an agent means both being able to choose and having to choose either "liberty and eternal life, through the great Mediator" or "captivity and death, according to the captivity and power of the devil" (2 Ne. 2:27–29; 10:23). A being who is "an agent unto himself" is continually committing to be either an agent and servant of God or an agent and servant of Satan. If this consequence of choosing could be overridden or ignored, men and women would not determine their own destiny by their choices and agency would be void.

The captivity resulting from sin is also called “the bondage of sin” (D&C 84:49–51). Sin sets up dispositions in the sinner that empower Satan to control the sinner’s thoughts and behavior by means of temptation. As this happens, the individual still possesses agency in name, but his capacity to exercise it is abridged. In this sense, to misuse one’s agency is to lose that agency: “Evil, when listened to, begins to rule and overrule the spirit [that] God has placed within man” (B. Young, JD 6:332). Conversely, using agency to receive and obey the influence of the spirit of Christ liberates one from this bondage. Thus, though agency, in the sense of the capacity to choose life or death, is a kind of freedom, it differs in quality from the liberty that is inherent in obedience to Christ. Jesus said, “If the Son therefore shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed” (John 8:36). When King Benjamin’s people in the Book of Mormon received a REMISSION OF SINS and were spiritually born again, they attested that their affections and desires had been so changed that they had “no more disposition to do evil, but to do good continually” (Mosiah 5:2). Obedience expands agency, and the alternative to obedience is bondage.

Thus, in the LDS concept of agency, obedience and agency are not antithetical. On the one hand, Church leaders consistently stand against all coercion of conscience (“We are not disposed, had we the power, to deprive anyone of exercising . . . free independence of mind” [TPJS, p. 49]) and counsel Church members to depend first of all on themselves for decisions about the application of gospel principles. On the other hand, obedience—willing and energetic submission to the will of God even at personal sacrifice—is a central gospel tenet. Far from contradicting freedom, obedience is its highest expression. “But in rendering . . . strict obedience, are we made slaves? No, it is the only way on the face of the earth for you and me to become free. . . . The man who yields strict obedience to the requirements of Heaven, acts upon the volition of his own will and exercises his freedom” (B. Young, JD 18:246).

Church leaders consistently call agency a gift of God. Sin abridges the agency of sinners from the point that unless some power releases them from this bondage, they will be “lost and fallen” (Mosiah 16:4). That power is Christ’s atonement, which overcomes the effects of sin, not arbitrarily, but on condition of wholehearted REPENTANCE. “Because . . . they are redeemed from the fall they have become free forever . . . to act for themselves” (2 Ne. 2:26). Thus, human agency was purchased with the price of Christ’s suffering. This means that to those who blame God for allowing human suffering, Latter-day Saints can respond that suffering is less important than the gift of agency, upon which everything else depends, and that none of us has paid a greater price for this gift than Christ.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Madsen, Truman G. Eternal Man, pp. 63–70. Salt Lake City, 1966.
- McKay, David O. IE 53 (May 1950):366.
- Packer, Boyd K. “Atonement, Agency, Accountability.” Ensign 18 (May 1988):69–72.
- Romney, Marion G. “Decisions and Free Agency.” IE 71 (Dec. 1968):73–76.
- Stapley, Delbert L. “Using Our Free Agency.” Ensign 5 (May 1975):21–23.

C. TERRY WARNER

---

AGRAPHA

See: Jesus Christ, Sources for Words of

---

AGRICULTURE

The Latter-day Saints were pioneers in developing techniques and institutions of irrigated agriculture and dry farming in the Far West, probably because of a particular juxtaposition of modern attitudes toward farming and farm life, skills gained in early industrial Britain and the United States, and the pressing need to increase production on Utah’s hardscrabble farms.

Most American-born Latter-day Saints, even if trained in a trade, had some experience with farming in more humid areas before moving into the desert wilderness in 1847. They were joined by a major influx of converts from the British Isles, most from the industrialized regions of England and Wales and therefore with little farming experience. In Utah, virtually all the pioneers had to become farmers to survive. Until the transcontinental railroad was completed in 1869, they had to this consequence of choosing could be overridden or ignored, men and women would not determine their own destiny by their choices and agency would be void.

The captivity resulting from sin is also called “the bondage of sin” (D&C 84:49–51). Sin sets up dispositions in the sinner that empower Satan to control the sinner’s thoughts and behavior by means of temptation. As this happens, the individual still possesses agency in name, but his capacity to exercise it is abridged. In this sense, to misuse one’s agency is to lose that agency: “Evil, when listened to, begins to rule and overrule the spirit [that] God has placed within man” (B. Young, JD 6:332). Conversely, using agency to receive and obey the influence of the spirit of Christ liberates one from this bondage. Thus, though agency, in the sense of the capacity to choose life or death, is a kind of freedom, it differs in quality from the liberty that is inherent in obedience to Christ. Jesus said, “If the Son therefore shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed” (John 8:36). When King Benjamin’s people in the Book of Mormon received a REMISSION OF SINS and were spiritually born again, they attested that their affections and desires had been so changed that they had “no more disposition to do evil, but to do good continually” (Mosiah 5:2). Obedience expands agency, and the alternative to obedience is bondage.

Thus, in the LDS concept of agency, obedience and agency are not antithetical. On the one hand, Church leaders consistently stand against all coercion of conscience (“We are not disposed, had we the power, to deprive anyone of exercising . . . free independence of mind” [TPJS, p. 49]) and counsel Church members to depend first of all on themselves for decisions about the application of gospel principles. On the other hand, obedience—willing and energetic submission to the will of God even at personal sacrifice—is a central gospel tenet. Far from contradicting freedom, obedience is its highest expression. “But in rendering . . . strict obedience, are we made slaves? No, it is the only way on the face of the earth for you and me to become free. . . . The man who yields strict obedience to the requirements of Heaven, acts upon the volition of his own will and exercises his freedom” (B. Young, JD 18:246).

Church leaders consistently call agency a gift of God. Sin abridges the agency of sinners from the point that unless some power releases them from this bondage, they will be “lost and fallen” (Mosiah 16:4). That power is Christ’s atonement, which overcomes the effects of sin, not arbitrarily, but on condition of wholehearted REPENTANCE. “Because . . . they are redeemed from the fall they have become free forever . . . to act for themselves” (2 Ne. 2:26). Thus, human agency was purchased with the price of Christ’s suffering. This means that to those who blame God for allowing human suffering, Latter-day Saints can respond that suffering is less important than the gift of agency, upon which everything else depends, and that none of us has paid a greater price for this gift than Christ.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Madsen, Truman G. Eternal Man, pp. 63–70. Salt Lake City, 1966.
- McKay, David O. IE 53 (May 1950):366.
- Packer, Boyd K. “Atonement, Agency, Accountability.” Ensign 18 (May 1988):69–72.
- Romney, Marion G. “Decisions and Free Agency.” IE 71 (Dec. 1968):73–76.
- Stapley, Delbert L. “Using Our Free Agency.” Ensign 5 (May 1975):21–23.

C. TERRY WARNER

---

AGRAPHA

See: Jesus Christ, Sources for Words of

---

AGRICULTURE

The Latter-day Saints were pioneers in developing techniques and institutions of irrigated agriculture and dry farming in the Far West, probably because of a particular juxtaposition of modern attitudes toward farming and farm life, skills gained in early industrial Britain and the United States, and the pressing need to increase production on Utah’s hardscrabble farms.

Most American-born Latter-day Saints, even if trained in a trade, had some experience with farming in more humid areas before moving into the desert wilderness in 1847. They were joined by a major influx of converts from the British Isles, most from the industrialized regions of England and Wales and therefore with little farming experience. In Utah, virtually all the pioneers had to become farmers to survive. Until the transcontinental railroad was completed in 1869, they had to raise enough food for themselves and for the immigrants who would arrive too late to grow anything. Finding Utah's annual rainfall insufficient to raise most crops, they had to irrigate the crops with water diverted from canyon streams. Also, only a small amount of land was situated so that canals could be built above the fields to irrigate the crops below. All of these circumstances—and the LDS ethic of community action—combined to shape the role of Mormons in the agricultural history of the United States.

Mormon pioneers displayed ingenuity and industry as they brought the valleys of the intermountain West under irrigation. This style of hay derriek (c. 1900 on Blue Creek Ranch, near Brigham City, Utah), introduced into the area by Danish converts, became widely known as the "Mormon hay derriek."

Unlike many traditional farmers, the Latter-day Saints had a modern view of their lands and farming. Land was necessary for making a living, but it was not imbued with mystical qualities that gave superior virtue, independence, or permanence to farm life. President Brigham YOUNG, himself a craftsman, supported manufacturing and artisan crafts as well as farming and did not impute moral superiority to one over the others. Farming for the Saints was not "a way of life" but a way of making a living, and this attitude freed them from undue reverence for traditional farming practices and from any reluctance to leave the land to take up ranching, manufacturing, trade, professions, and other pursuits that might assure a better standard of living. Moreover, the paucity of irrigable land kept most farms small, limiting production to barely more than a household subsistence level, in spite of a willingness, even eagerness, to engage in commercial agriculture.

The need to irrigate crops impelled LDS farmers to become innovators in western irrigation. Paradoxically, the high number of people previously skilled in manufacturing may have helped them to do so. The artisan-farmers applied the hydraulic engineering techniques they had learned in factories and workshops powered by water to the task of bringing water to fields. Necessity forced them to do so quickly, if sometimes clumsily. But they demonstrated that irrigated agriculture on a regional scale was possible.

A whole set of cooperative management techniques for building and maintaining dams and canal systems, distributing water to individual farmers, and applying it to the fields evolved into a model for later settlers in the arid West. It was appropriate that the first National Irrigation Congress be held in Salt Lake City in 1891, for many considered Utah a model of what was being accomplished in the West through irrigation. Ordinary farmers from Utah, skilled in irrigation techniques, have been well represented among those who have opened land in Canada and in federally sponsored irrigation projects in Idaho, Arizona, New Mexico, Wyoming, California, Oregon, and Washington, spreading both their farming techniques and their faith throughout the West.

The urgent need to maximize production on Utah's small farms led many Latter-day Saints to study scientific agriculture. Perhaps chief among them was John A. Widtsoe, later an apostle, who, after a Harvard education in physical chemistry, concentrated on expanding agricultural production. Directing the Utah Agricultural Experiment Station, he encouraged studies on soils, climate, fertilizers, and soil-working techniques, which led to publication of his Principles of Irrigation Practice (1914). He directed dry-farming experiments for nonirrigable lands, which culminated in Dry Farming: A System of Agriculture for Countries Under a Low Rainfall (1910).

Other Latter-day Saints who improved farming practices were Edgar B. Brossard in the economies of farm production; William M. Jardine (secretary of agriculture under President Calvin Coolidge) in agronomy; Phillip V. Cardon (administrator of the Agricultural Research Administration and director general of the United Nations Food and Agriculture Organization) in forage crops and diseases; Franklin S. Harris in agronomy and sugar beet culture; Lowry Nelson in rural sociology; Thomas L. Martin in agronomy; and Willard Gardner in soil physics.

Church President Ezra Taft BENSON (secretary of agriculture under President Dwight D. Eisenhower) devoted much of his life to founding farmer cooperatives. The Ezra Taft Benson Agriculture and Food Institute at Brigham Young University (1975) fosters cooperative agricultural techniques in developing countries.

Latter-day Saints continue as individuals and under Church auspices to work at improving crop yields throughout the world and applying cooperative principles to improving the standard of living in developing regions. Since the early 1970s some Latter-day Saints have been called by the Church as "additional assignment" missionaries to encourage practical self-help programs and better farming techniques in regions of Africa, Asia, and the Americas. Gordon Wagner, a Latter-day Saint with a doctorate in economics from Cornell, worked on his own during the 1970s and 1980s to apply LDS cooperative principles to agricultural development problems in impoverished regions of Africa.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Arrington, Leonard J., and Davis Bitton. The Mormon Experience: A History of the Latter-day Saints, pp. 310–19. New York, 1979.
- Arrington, Leonard J., and Dean May. "A Different Mode of Life: Irrigation and Society in Nineteenth-Century Utah." Agricultural History 49 (Jan. 1975):3–20.
- Mead, Elwood, et al. Report of Irrigation Investigations in Utah. Washington, D.C., 1903.

DEAN L. MAY

---

AHMAN

Ahman is twice mentioned as one of the names of God in the Doctrine and Covenants. In each instance, Jesus Christ is called Son Ahman, suggesting Son God and son of Ahman (D&C 78:20; 95:17). Orson Pratt, an apostle, suggested that this was one of the names of God in the pure language (JD 2:342; cf. Zeph. 3:9; see ADAMIC LANGUAGE).

Ahman is also an element of the place-name ADAM-ONDI-AHMAN, Missouri, where the Lord visited ADAM and "administered comfort" to him and where Adam prophesied concerning "whatsoever should befall his posterity unto the latest generation" (D&C 107:53–57; cf. D&C 78:15–16). Adam lived in the region of Adam-ondi-Ahman (D&C 117:8), and PROPHECY anticipates a future visit of Adam at this place (D&C 116:1; cf. Dan. 7:13).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Pratt, Orson. "The Holy Spirit and the Godhead." JD 2:334–47.

EDWARD J. BRANDT

---

AIDS

The FIRST PRESIDENCY statement on AIDS (acquired immune deficiency syndrome) released May 27, 1988, admonishes Church members to become informed about AIDS and to avoid all ac-

model for later settlers in the arid West. It was appropriate that the first National Irrigation Congress be held in Salt Lake City in 1891, for many considered Utah a model of what was being accomplished in the West through irrigation. Ordinary farmers from Utah, skilled in irrigation techniques, have been well represented among those who have opened land in Canada and in federally sponsored irrigation projects in Idaho, Arizona, New Mexico, Wyoming, California, Oregon, and Washington, spreading both their farming techniques and their faith throughout the West.

The urgent need to maximize production on Utah's small farms led many Latter-day Saints to study scientific agriculture. Perhaps chief among them was John A. Widtsoe, later an apostle, who, after a Harvard education in physical chemistry, concentrated on expanding agricultural production. Directing the Utah Agricultural Experiment Station, he encouraged studies on soils, climate, fertilizers, and soil-working techniques, which led to publication of his Principles of Irrigation Practice (1914). He directed dry-farming experiments for nonirrigable lands, which culminated in Dry Farming: A System of Agriculture for Countries Under a Low Rainfall (1910).

Other Latter-day Saints who improved farming practices were Edgar B. Brossard in the economies of farm production; William M. Jardine (secretary of agriculture under President Calvin Coolidge) in agronomy; Phillip V. Cardon (administrator of the Agricultural Research Administration and director general of the United Nations Food and Agriculture Organization) in forage crops and diseases; Franklin S. Harris in agronomy and sugar beet culture; Lowry Nelson in rural sociology; Thomas L. Martin in agronomy; and Willard Gardner in soil physics.

Church President Ezra Taft BENSON (secretary of agriculture under President Dwight D. Eisenhower) devoted much of his life to founding farmer cooperatives. The Ezra Taft Benson Agriculture and Food Institute at Brigham Young University (1975) fosters cooperative agricultural techniques in developing countries.

Latter-day Saints continue as individuals and under Church auspices to work at improving crop yields throughout the world and applying cooperative principles to improving the standard of living in developing regions. Since the early 1970s some Latter-day Saints have been called by the Church as "additional assignment" missionaries to encourage practical self-help programs and better farming techniques in regions of Africa, Asia, and the Americas. Gordon Wagner, a Latter-day Saint with a doctorate in economics from Cornell, worked on his own during the 1970s and 1980s to apply LDS cooperative principles to agricultural development problems in impoverished regions of Africa.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Arrington, Leonard J., and Davis Bitton. The Mormon Experience: A History of the Latter-day Saints, pp. 310–19. New York, 1979.
- Arrington, Leonard J., and Dean May. "A Different Mode of Life: Irrigation and Society in Nineteenth-Century Utah." Agricultural History 49 (Jan. 1975):3–20.
- Mead, Elwood, et al. Report of Irrigation Investigations in Utah. Washington, D.C., 1903.

DEAN L. MAY

---

AHMAN

Ahman is twice mentioned as one of the names of God in the Doctrine and Covenants. In each instance, Jesus Christ is called Son Ahman, suggesting Son God and son of Ahman (D&C 78:20; 95:17). Orson Pratt, an apostle, suggested that this was one of the names of God in the pure language (JD 2:342; cf. Zeph. 3:9; see ADAMIC LANGUAGE).

Ahman is also an element of the place-name ADAM-ONDI-AHMAN, Missouri, where the Lord visited ADAM and "administered comfort" to him and where Adam prophesied concerning "whatsoever should befall his posterity unto the latest generation" (D&C 107:53–57; cf. D&C 78:15–16). Adam lived in the region of Adam-ondi-Ahman (D&C 117:8), and PROPHECY anticipates a future visit of Adam at this place (D&C 116:1; cf. Dan. 7:13).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Pratt, Orson. "The Holy Spirit and the Godhead." JD 2:334–47.

EDWARD J. BRANDT

---

AIDS

The FIRST PRESIDENCY statement on AIDS (acquired immune deficiency syndrome) released May 27, 1988, admonishes Church members to become informed about AIDS and to avoid all ac-

model for later settlers in the arid West. It was appropriate that the first National Irrigation Congress be held in Salt Lake City in 1891, for many considered Utah a model of what was being accomplished in the West through irrigation. Ordinary farmers from Utah, skilled in irrigation techniques, have been well represented among those who have opened land in Canada and in federally sponsored irrigation projects in Idaho, Arizona, New Mexico, Wyoming, California, Oregon, and Washington, spreading both their farming techniques and their faith throughout the West.

The urgent need to maximize production on Utah's small farms led many Latter-day Saints to study scientific agriculture. Perhaps chief among them was John A. Widtsoe, later an apostle, who, after a Harvard education in physical chemistry, concentrated on expanding agricultural production. Directing the Utah Agricultural Experiment Station, he encouraged studies on soils, climate, fertilizers, and soil-working techniques, which led to publication of his Principles of Irrigation Practice (1914). He directed dry-farming experiments for nonirrigable lands, which culminated in Dry Farming: A System of Agriculture for Countries Under a Low Rainfall (1910).

Other Latter-day Saints who improved farming practices were Edgar B. Brossard in the economies of farm production; William M. Jardine (secretary of agriculture under President Calvin Coolidge) in agronomy; Phillip V. Cardon (administrator of the Agricultural Research Administration and director general of the United Nations Food and Agriculture Organization) in forage crops and diseases; Franklin S. Harris in agronomy and sugar beet culture; Lowry Nelson in rural sociology; Thomas L. Martin in agronomy; and Willard Gardner in soil physics.

Church President Ezra Taft BENSON (secretary of agriculture under President Dwight D. Eisenhower) devoted much of his life to founding farmer cooperatives. The Ezra Taft Benson Agriculture and Food Institute at Brigham Young University (1975) fosters cooperative agricultural techniques in developing countries.

Latter-day Saints continue as individuals and under Church auspices to work at improving crop yields throughout the world and applying cooperative principles to improving the standard of living in developing regions. Since the early 1970s some Latter-day Saints have been called by the Church as "additional assignment" missionaries to encourage practical self-help programs and better farming techniques in regions of Africa, Asia, and the Americas. Gordon Wagner, a Latter-day Saint with a doctorate in economics from Cornell, worked on his own during the 1970s and 1980s to apply LDS cooperative principles to agricultural development problems in impoverished regions of Africa.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Arrington, Leonard J., and Davis Bitton. The Mormon Experience: A History of the Latter-day Saints, pp. 310–19. New York, 1979.
- Arrington, Leonard J., and Dean May. "A Different Mode of Life: Irrigation and Society in Nineteenth-Century Utah." Agricultural History 49 (Jan. 1975):3–20.
- Mead, Elwood, et al. Report of Irrigation Investigations in Utah. Washington, D.C., 1903.

DEAN L. MAY

---

AHMAN

Ahman is twice mentioned as one of the names of God in the Doctrine and Covenants. In each instance, Jesus Christ is called Son Ahman, suggesting Son God and son of Ahman (D&C 78:20; 95:17). Orson Pratt, an apostle, suggested that this was one of the names of God in the pure language (JD 2:342; cf. Zeph. 3:9; see ADAMIC LANGUAGE).

Ahman is also an element of the place-name ADAM-ONDI-AHMAN, Missouri, where the Lord visited ADAM and "administered comfort" to him and where Adam prophesied concerning "whatsoever should befall his posterity unto the latest generation" (D&C 107:53–57; cf. D&C 78:15–16). Adam lived in the region of Adam-ondi-Ahman (D&C 117:8), and PROPHECY anticipates a future visit of Adam at this place (D&C 116:1; cf. Dan. 7:13).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Pratt, Orson. "The Holy Spirit and the Godhead." JD 2:334–47.

EDWARD J. BRANDT

---

AIDS

The FIRST PRESIDENCY statement on AIDS (acquired immune deficiency syndrome) released May 27, 1988, admonishes Church members to become informed about AIDS and to avoid all actions that place themselves or others at risk. Members are also encouraged to become informed about AIDS-related laws and policies in the country where they live and to join in wise and constructive efforts to stem the spread of AIDS.

The statement calls for Church members to extend Christlike sympathy and compassion to all who are infected or ill with AIDS. Particular concern and sympathy are expressed for those having received the virus through blood transfusions, babies infected by their mothers, and marriage partners infected by a spouse. Leaders and members are encouraged to reach out with kindness and comfort to the afflicted, ministering to their needs and assisting them with their problems.

While hope is expressed that medical discoveries will make it possible both to prevent and cure AIDS, the observance of clearly understandable and divinely given guidance regardless of such potential discoveries will do more than all else to check a potential AIDS epidemic: "That guidance is chastity before marriage, total fidelity in marriage, abstinence from all homosexual relations, avoidance of illegal drugs, and reverence and care for the body, which is the temple of God."

The First Presidency statement includes remarks given about AIDS by Gordon B. Hinckley, First Counselor in the First Presidency, in the April 1987 general priesthood meeting: "Prophets of God have repeatedly taught through the ages that practices of homosexual relations, fornication, and adultery are grievous sins. Sexual relations outside the bonds of marriage are forbidden by the Lord. We reaffirm those teachings. . . . Each of us has a choice between right and wrong. But with that choice there inevitably will follow consequences. Those who choose to violate the commandments of God put themselves at great spiritual and physical jeopardy."

In January 1989 a special bulletin on AIDS was sent to Church leaders throughout the world to provide (1) scientific and medical information about AIDS; (2) counsel reaffirming the blessings and protection that come from living God's commandments; and (3) guidelines and policies dealing with interviewing and assisting those infected with the AIDS virus. Some items treated in the four-page special bulletin are:

- Church teachers and activity leaders who on occasion may be involved in cleaning up blood or rendering first aid should become aware of,

and follow, local health department recommendations regarding the prevention of AIDS infection.

- AIDS-infected individuals who may be contemplating marriage are to be encouraged by local Church leaders to be honest with potential marriage partners and to disclose their AIDS infection. For a person to do less would be deceitful, and in violation of one's covenants with God.
- Where transgression of God's laws has resulted in infection, the Church advocates the example of Jesus Christ, who condemned the sin but loved the sinner.
- AIDS victims who seek membership in the Church, temple recommends, or other blessings are treated as all others who express faith in God, repent, request baptism, and are living the teachings of Jesus Christ.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Public Communications Department. "First Presidency Statement on AIDS." Salt Lake City, May 27, 1988; cf. "News of the Church," Ensign 18 (July 1988):79.

Questions and Answers for Priesthood Leaders Regarding AIDS (special bulletin). Salt Lake City, Jan. 1989.

ROBERT L. LEAKE

---

ALCOHOLIC BEVERAGES AND ALCOHOLISM

Active members of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints abstain from drinking alcoholic beverages. This practice of abstinence derives from an 1833 revelation known as the WORD OF WISDOM, which states "that inasmuch as any man drinketh wine or strong drink among you, behold it is not good, neither meet in the sight of your Father" (D&C 89:5). The harmful effects of ethyl alcohol (the active ingredient in all alcoholic beverages) on human health are also noted in the Bible (Prov. 31:4-5; Isa. 5:11). Although the Word of Wisdom was given originally to show the will of God and not as a commandment, abstinence from alcohol was expected of fully participating Church members by the early twentieth century and faithful observance is virtually prerequisite to temple work and leadership callings in the Church (see DOCTRINE AND COVENANTS: SECTION 89).

Ethyl alcohol is produced by yeast fermentation in grains and fibers containing sugar. The tions that place themselves or others at risk. Members are also encouraged to become informed about AIDS-related laws and policies in the country where they live and to join in wise and constructive efforts to stem the spread of AIDS.

The statement calls for Church members to extend Christlike sympathy and compassion to all who are infected or ill with AIDS. Particular concern and sympathy are expressed for those having received the virus through blood transfusions, babies infected by their mothers, and marriage partners infected by a spouse. Leaders and members are encouraged to reach out with kindness and comfort to the afflicted, ministering to their needs and assisting them with their problems.

While hope is expressed that medical discoveries will make it possible both to prevent and cure AIDS, the observance of clearly understandable and divinely given guidance regardless of such potential discoveries will do more than all else to check a potential AIDS epidemic: "That guidance is chastity before marriage, total fidelity in marriage, abstinence from all homosexual relations, avoidance of illegal drugs, and reverence and care for the body, which is the temple of God."

The First Presidency statement includes remarks given about AIDS by Gordon B. Hinckley, First Counselor in the First Presidency, in the April 1987 general priesthood meeting: "Prophets of God have repeatedly taught through the ages that practices of homosexual relations, fornication, and adultery are grievous sins. Sexual relations outside the bonds of marriage are forbidden by the Lord. We reaffirm those teachings. . . . Each of us has a choice between right and wrong. But with that choice there inevitably will follow consequences. Those who choose to violate the commandments of God put themselves at great spiritual and physical jeopardy."

In January 1989 a special bulletin on AIDS was sent to Church leaders throughout the world to provide (1) scientific and medical information about AIDS; (2) counsel reaffirming the blessings and protection that come from living God's commandments; and (3) guidelines and policies dealing with interviewing and assisting those infected with the AIDS virus. Some items treated in the four-page special bulletin are:

- Church teachers and activity leaders who on occasion may be involved in cleaning up blood or rendering first aid should become aware of,

and follow, local health department recommendations regarding the prevention of AIDS infection.

- AIDS-infected individuals who may be contemplating marriage are to be encouraged by local Church leaders to be honest with potential marriage partners and to disclose their AIDS infection. For a person to do less would be deceitful, and in violation of one's covenants with God.
- Where transgression of God's laws has resulted in infection, the Church advocates the example of Jesus Christ, who condemned the sin but loved the sinner.
- AIDS victims who seek membership in the Church, temple recommends, or other blessings are treated as all others who express faith in God, repent, request baptism, and are living the teachings of Jesus Christ.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Public Communications Department. "First Presidency Statement on AIDS." Salt Lake City, May 27, 1988; cf. "News of the Church," Ensign 18 (July 1988):79.

Questions and Answers for Priesthood Leaders Regarding AIDS (special bulletin). Salt Lake City, Jan. 1989.

ROBERT L. LEAKE

---

ALCOHOLIC BEVERAGES AND ALCOHOLISM

Active members of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints abstain from drinking alcoholic beverages. This practice of abstinence derives from an 1833 revelation known as the WORD OF WISDOM, which states "that inasmuch as any man drinketh wine or strong drink among you, behold it is not good, neither meet in the sight of your Father" (D&C 89:5). The harmful effects of ethyl alcohol (the active ingredient in all alcoholic beverages) on human health are also noted in the Bible (Prov. 31:4-5; Isa. 5:11). Although the Word of Wisdom was given originally to show the will of God and not as a commandment, abstinence from alcohol was expected of fully participating Church members by the early twentieth century and faithful observance is virtually prerequisite to temple work and leadership callings in the Church (see DOCTRINE AND COVENANTS: SECTION 89).

Ethyl alcohol is produced by yeast fermentation in grains and fibers containing sugar. The amount of alcohol in wine and beer is normally less than 10 percent because fermentation stops when the ethyl alcohol concentration reaches this level. In modern times, however, the amount in alcoholic beverages has been increased by distillation.

The availability of beverages with higher concentrations of alcohol has increased the number of social and medical problems associated with ingesting it. Some conditions that are increased among those who use alcohol include cancers of the oral cavity, larynx, and esophagus; cirrhosis of the liver; degenerative diseases of the central nervous system; and higher accidental death rates (both automobile and pedestrian accidents).

The proscription on alcohol ingestion has reduced the incidence of all of these conditions among Latter-day Saints. The number of alcoholics in any population is usually estimated from the number of deaths caused by cirrhosis of the liver. An unpublished study conducted at the University of Utah in 1978 found that the number of deaths from alcoholic cirrhosis of the liver among LDS people was about half that of the non-LDS in Utah and other areas of the United States. This suggests that while the Word of Wisdom does not prevent alcoholism entirely, it has been effective in reducing its incidence.

[See also Social Services.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Gilman, A. G., L. S. Goodman, and A. Gilman, eds. Goodman and Gilman's The Pharmacological Basis of Therapeutics, 6th ed., pp. 376–86. New York, 1980.
- Hawks, Ricky D. "Alcohol Use Trends Among LDS High School Seniors in America from 1982–1986." AMCAP Journal 15, 1 (1989):43–51.
- . "Alcohol Use Among LDS and Other Groups Teaching Abstinence." In Drug and Alcohol Abuse Reviews, R. R. Watson, ed., pp. 133–49. Clifton, N.J., 1990.

JOSEPH LYNN LYON

---

ALLEGORY OF ZENOS

The Allegory of Zenos (Jacob 5) is a lengthy, prophetic declaration made by ZENOS, a Hebrew prophet, about the destiny of the house of ISRAEL. Evidently copied directly from the plates of brass into the Book of Mormon record by JACOB, it was intended (1) to reinforce Jacob's own teachings both about Jesus Christ ("We knew of Christ, and we had a hope of his glory many hundred years before his coming"—Jacob 4:4) and about the house of Israel's anticipated unresponsiveness toward the coming Redeemer ("I perceive . . . they will reject the stone upon which they might build and have safe foundation"—Jacob 4:15), and (2) to instruct his people about the promised future regathering of Israel, to which Jacob's people belonged.

Framed in the tradition of parables, the allegory "likens" the house of Israel to an olive tree whose owner struggles to keep it from dying. The comparison figuratively illustrates God's bond with his chosen people and with the Gentiles, and underscores the lesson that through patience and compassion God will save and preserve the compliant and obedient.

The narrative contains seventy-six verses, divisible into five parts, all tied together by an overarching theme of good winning over bad, of life triumphing over death. In the first part, an alarmed owner, recognizing threatening signs of death (age and decay) in a beloved tree of superior quality, immediately tries to nurse it back to health (verses 4–5). Even though new growth appears, his ministering does not fully heal the tree; and so, with a servant's help, he removes and destroys waning parts and in their place grafts limbs from a "wild" tree. At the same time, he detaches the old tree's "young and tender" new growth for planting in secluded areas of his property. Though disappointed, he resolves to save his beloved tree (verses 6–14).

Second, following a lengthy interval of conscientious care, the owner's labor is rewarded with a generous harvest of choice fruit, not only from the newly grafted limbs on his old tree but also from the new growth that he planted around the property. These latter trees, however, have produced unequally: the two trees with least natural advantages have the highest, positive yield; while the most advantaged tree's production is only half good, compelling removal of its unprofitable parts. Even so, the owner continues an all-out effort on every tree, even this last one (verses 15–28).

In the third part, a long time passes. The owner and the servant return again to measure and evaluate the fruit, only to learn the worst: the old tree, though healthy, has produced a completely worthless crop; and it is the same for the other trees. Distressed, the owner orders all the trees destroyed. His assistant pleads for him to forbear a amount of alcohol in wine and beer is normally less than 10 percent because fermentation stops when the ethyl alcohol concentration reaches this level. In modern times, however, the amount in alcoholic beverages has been increased by distillation.

The availability of beverages with higher concentrations of alcohol has increased the number of social and medical problems associated with ingesting it. Some conditions that are increased among those who use alcohol include cancers of the oral cavity, larynx, and esophagus; cirrhosis of the liver; degenerative diseases of the central nervous system; and higher accidental death rates (both automobile and pedestrian accidents).

The proscription on alcohol ingestion has reduced the incidence of all of these conditions among Latter-day Saints. The number of alcoholics in any population is usually estimated from the number of deaths caused by cirrhosis of the liver. An unpublished study conducted at the University of Utah in 1978 found that the number of deaths from alcoholic cirrhosis of the liver among LDS people was about half that of the non-LDS in Utah and other areas of the United States. This suggests that while the Word of Wisdom does not prevent alcoholism entirely, it has been effective in reducing its incidence.

[See also Social Services.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Gilman, A. G., L. S. Goodman, and A. Gilman, eds. Goodman and Gilman's The Pharmacological Basis of Therapeutics, 6th ed., pp. 376–86. New York, 1980.
- Hawks, Ricky D. "Alcohol Use Trends Among LDS High School Seniors in America from 1982–1986." AMCAP Journal 15, 1 (1989):43–51.
- . "Alcohol Use Among LDS and Other Groups Teaching Abstinence." In Drug and Alcohol Abuse Reviews, R. R. Watson, ed., pp. 133–49. Clifton, N.J., 1990.

JOSEPH LYNN LYON

---

ALLEGORY OF ZENOS

The Allegory of Zenos (Jacob 5) is a lengthy, prophetic declaration made by ZENOS, a Hebrew prophet, about the destiny of the house of ISRAEL. Evidently copied directly from the plates of brass into the Book of Mormon record by JACOB, it was intended (1) to reinforce Jacob's own teachings both about Jesus Christ ("We knew of Christ, and we had a hope of his glory many hundred years before his coming"—Jacob 4:4) and about the house of Israel's anticipated unresponsiveness toward the coming Redeemer ("I perceive . . . they will reject the stone upon which they might build and have safe foundation"—Jacob 4:15), and (2) to instruct his people about the promised future regathering of Israel, to which Jacob's people belonged.

Framed in the tradition of parables, the allegory "likens" the house of Israel to an olive tree whose owner struggles to keep it from dying. The comparison figuratively illustrates God's bond with his chosen people and with the Gentiles, and underscores the lesson that through patience and compassion God will save and preserve the compliant and obedient.

The narrative contains seventy-six verses, divisible into five parts, all tied together by an overarching theme of good winning over bad, of life triumphing over death. In the first part, an alarmed owner, recognizing threatening signs of death (age and decay) in a beloved tree of superior quality, immediately tries to nurse it back to health (verses 4–5). Even though new growth appears, his ministering does not fully heal the tree; and so, with a servant's help, he removes and destroys waning parts and in their place grafts limbs from a "wild" tree. At the same time, he detaches the old tree's "young and tender" new growth for planting in secluded areas of his property. Though disappointed, he resolves to save his beloved tree (verses 6–14).

Second, following a lengthy interval of conscientious care, the owner's labor is rewarded with a generous harvest of choice fruit, not only from the newly grafted limbs on his old tree but also from the new growth that he planted around the property. These latter trees, however, have produced unequally: the two trees with least natural advantages have the highest, positive yield; while the most advantaged tree's production is only half good, compelling removal of its unprofitable parts. Even so, the owner continues an all-out effort on every tree, even this last one (verses 15–28).

In the third part, a long time passes. The owner and the servant return again to measure and evaluate the fruit, only to learn the worst: the old tree, though healthy, has produced a completely worthless crop; and it is the same for the other trees. Distressed, the owner orders all the trees destroyed. His assistant pleads for him to forbear a little longer. In the fourth segment, the “grieved” owner, accompanied by the servant and other workers, carefully tries again in one last effort. Together they reverse the previous implantation (the “young and tender” plants are returned to the old tree) and splice other old tree limbs into the previously selected trees, appropriately pruning, cultivating, and nurturing each tree as required (verses 29–73). This particular operation of mixing and blending, mingling and merging all the trees together, meets with success in replicating the superior quality crop of “natural fruit” everywhere on his property. Elated, he promises his helpers a share (“joy”) in the harvest for as long as it lasts. But he also pledges destruction of all the trees if and when their capacity for a positive yield wanes again (verses 73–77).

In the subsequent chapter Jacob renders a brief interpretation (6:1–4). Conscious that his people, the Nephites, branched from the house of Israel, he is particularly anxious to redirect their increasingly errant behavior, and therefore reads into the allegory a sober caution of repentance for these impenitent New World Israelites: “How merciful is our God unto us, for he remembereth the house of Israel, both roots and branches; and he stretches forth his hands unto them all the day long; . . . but as many as will not harden their hearts shall be saved in the kingdom of God” (6:4).

Modern interpretations of the allegory have emphasized its universality. Accordingly, readers have explored its application to the house of Israel and the stretch of covenant time, that is, beginning with God’s pact with Abraham and finishing with the Millennium and the ending of the earth; its doctrinal connection to the ages of spiritual apostasy, the latter-day Restoration, Church membership, present global proselytizing, the return of the Jews, and the final judgment. Other studies have begun to explore its literary and textual correspondences with ancient documents (Hymns from Qumran) and with the Old (Genesis, Isaiah, Jeremiah) and New Testaments (Romans 11:16–24); and even its association with the known laws of botany. Some scholars have declared it one of the most demanding and engaging of all scriptural allegories, if not the most important one.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Hess, Wilford M. “Botanical Comparisons in the Allegory of the Olive Tree.” In The Book of Mormon: Jacob Through Words of

Mormon, To Learn with Joy, ed. M. Nyman and C. Tate, pp. 87–102. Provo, Utah, 1990.

McConkie, Joseph Fielding, and Robert L. Millet. Doctrinal Commentary on the Book of Mormon, Vol. 2, pp. 46–77. Salt Lake City, 1988.

Nibley, Hugh. Since Cumorah, pp. 283–85. In CWHN 7.

Nyman, Monte S. An Ensign to All People, pp. 21–36. Salt Lake City, 1987.

L. GARY LAMBERT

---

ALMA<sub>1</sub>

Alma<sub>1</sub> (c. 174–92 B.C.) was the first of two Almas in the Book of Mormon. He was a descendant of NEPHI<sub>1</sub>, son of LEHI, and was the young priest in the court of king Noah who attempted a peaceful release of the prophet ABINADI. For that action, Alma incurred royal vengeance, banishment, and threats upon his life. He had been impressed by Abinadi’s accusations of immorality and abuses within the government and society and by his testimony of the gospel of Jesus Christ (Mosiah 17:2). Subsequently forced underground, Alma wrote out Abinadi’s teachings, then shared them with others, attracting sufficient adherents—450—to organize a society of believers, or a church. The believers assembled in a remote, undeveloped area called Mormon. Participants in the church pledged to “bear one another’s burdens,” “mourn with those that mourn,” “comfort those that stand in need of comfort,” and “stand as witnesses of God at all times and in all things” (Mosiah 18:8–9). This pledge was then sealed by BAPTISM, which was considered “a testimony that ye have entered into a covenant to serve him [Almighty God] until you are dead as to the mortal body” (verse 13). Believers called themselves “the church of God, or the church of Christ, from that time forward” (verse 17).

Alma’s leadership included ordaining lay priests—one for every fifty members—whom he instructed to labor for their own support, and to limit their sermons to his teachings and the doctrine “spoken by the mouth of the holy prophets . . . nothing save it were repentance and faith on the Lord” (Mosiah 18:19–20). Alma also required that there be faithful observance of the SABBATH, daily expressions of gratitude to God, and no CONTENTION, “having their hearts knit together in unity and in love” (18:21–23). The priests assembled with and taught the people in a worship meet-little longer. In the fourth segment, the “grieved” owner, accompanied by the servant and other workers, carefully tries again in one last effort. Together they reverse the previous implantation (the “young and tender” plants are returned to the old tree) and splice other old tree limbs into the previously selected trees, appropriately pruning, cultivating, and nurturing each tree as required (verses 29–73). This particular operation of mixing and blending, mingling and merging all the trees together, meets with success in replicating the superior quality crop of “natural fruit” everywhere on his property. Elated, he promises his helpers a share (“joy”) in the harvest for as long as it lasts. But he also pledges destruction of all the trees if and when their capacity for a positive yield wanes again (verses 73–77).

In the subsequent chapter Jacob renders a brief interpretation (6:1–4). Conscious that his people, the Nephites, branched from the house of Israel, he is particularly anxious to redirect their increasingly errant behavior, and therefore reads into the allegory a sober caution of repentance for these impenitent New World Israelites: “How merciful is our God unto us, for he remembereth the house of Israel, both roots and branches; and he stretches forth his hands unto them all the day long; . . . but as many as will not harden their hearts shall be saved in the kingdom of God” (6:4).

Modern interpretations of the allegory have emphasized its universality. Accordingly, readers have explored its application to the house of Israel and the stretch of covenant time, that is, beginning with God’s pact with Abraham and finishing with the Millennium and the ending of the earth; its doctrinal connection to the ages of spiritual apostasy, the latter-day Restoration, Church membership, present global proselytizing, the return of the Jews, and the final judgment. Other studies have begun to explore its literary and textual correspondences with ancient documents (Hymns from Qumran) and with the Old (Genesis, Isaiah, Jeremiah) and New Testaments (Romans 11:16–24); and even its association with the known laws of botany. Some scholars have declared it one of the most demanding and engaging of all scriptural allegories, if not the most important one.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Hess, Wilford M. “Botanical Comparisons in the Allegory of the Olive Tree.” In The Book of Mormon: Jacob Through Words of

Mormon, To Learn with Joy, ed. M. Nyman and C. Tate, pp. 87–102. Provo, Utah, 1990.

McConkie, Joseph Fielding, and Robert L. Millet. Doctrinal Commentary on the Book of Mormon, Vol. 2, pp. 46–77. Salt Lake City, 1988.

Nibley, Hugh. Since Cumorah, pp. 283–85. In CWHN 7.

Nyman, Monte S. An Ensign to All People, pp. 21–36. Salt Lake City, 1987.

L. GARY LAMBERT

---

ALMA<sub>1</sub>

Alma<sub>1</sub> (c. 174–92 B.C.) was the first of two Almas in the Book of Mormon. He was a descendant of NEPHI<sub>1</sub>, son of LEHI, and was the young priest in the court of king Noah who attempted a peaceful release of the prophet ABINADI. For that action, Alma incurred royal vengeance, banishment, and threats upon his life. He had been impressed by Abinadi’s accusations of immorality and abuses within the government and society and by his testimony of the gospel of Jesus Christ (Mosiah 17:2). Subsequently forced underground, Alma wrote out Abinadi’s teachings, then shared them with others, attracting sufficient adherents—450—to organize a society of believers, or a church. The believers assembled in a remote, undeveloped area called Mormon. Participants in the church pledged to “bear one another’s burdens,” “mourn with those that mourn,” “comfort those that stand in need of comfort,” and “stand as witnesses of God at all times and in all things” (Mosiah 18:8–9). This pledge was then sealed by BAPTISM, which was considered “a testimony that ye have entered into a covenant to serve him [Almighty God] until you are dead as to the mortal body” (verse 13). Believers called themselves “the church of God, or the church of Christ, from that time forward” (verse 17).

Alma’s leadership included ordaining lay priests—one for every fifty members—whom he instructed to labor for their own support, and to limit their sermons to his teachings and the doctrine “spoken by the mouth of the holy prophets . . . nothing save it were repentance and faith on the Lord” (Mosiah 18:19–20). Alma also required that there be faithful observance of the SABBATH, daily expressions of gratitude to God, and no CONTENTION, “having their hearts knit together in unity and in love” (18:21–23). The priests assembled with and taught the people in a worship meeting at least once weekly (18:25). Through generous donations, everyone cared for one another “according to that which he had” (18:27–28).

Eventually the believers were discovered and king Noah accused Alma of sedition, ordering his army to crush him and his followers. Forced into exile, Alma led the people deeper into the wilderness, where they thrived for twenty years in a region they named Helam (Mosiah 18:32–35; 23:1–5, 20). Alma ardently declined well-intended efforts to make him king, and successfully dissuaded his people from adopting a monarchical government, urging them to enjoy the new “liberty wherewith ye have been made free” and to “trust no man to be a king” (Mosiah 23:13). He did not oppose monarchies as such but, rather, acknowledged their fundamental limitation: “If it were possible that ye could always have just men to be your kings it would be well for you to have a king” (23:8).

Alma and his people afterward suffered oppression at the hands of Amulon, also an ex-priest and deserter from king Noah’s court, who, along with the remnant of a LAMANITE army, discovered Alma’s people in their wilderness refuge. During their suffering the voice of the Lord promised relief and deliverance because of their covenant with him: “I, the Lord God, do visit my people in their afflictions” (Mosiah 24:14). Once again, in Moses-like fashion, Alma guided his people out of bondage, and led them during a twelve-day journey to a new land—the Land of Zarahemla—where they joined with the people of Zarahemla and exiled NEPHITES to form a new and stronger Nephite nation (Mosiah 24:24–25).

The king of Zarahemla, Mosiah<sub>2</sub>, also a descendant of transplanted God-fearing Nephites, sanctioned and even authorized expansion of Alma’s church in his kingdom; the church, however, operated separately and independently of the state. The king also assigned the reins of leadership to Alma (Mosiah 25:19; 26:8), who successfully directed the church during twenty years characterized largely by tribulations, with many confrontations between nonbelievers and church members resulting in ordeals for both him and the church (Mosiah 26:1–39). Eventually, widespread antagonism necessitated a royal injunction to lessen the tension (27:1–6). Even one of Alma’s sons was among the ranks of the enemies of the church, his agitation and criticism inviting yet worse persecution for church members (27:8–10).

During his lifetime Alma watched king Mosiah dismantle the monarchy and transform it into a system of judges elected by the people (Mosiah 29:2); he also saw his own son, Alma<sub>2</sub>—the one who earlier had brought grief to him and the church—become the first chief judge (Mosiah 29:1–44). This political transformation proved pivotal in the history of the Land of Zarahemla. Directly and indirectly Alma had a hand in bringing it about; the record of his and his people’s pain under oppressive rulers was widely known throughout the kingdom (25:5–6) and remained distinct in king Mosiah’s mind (29:18). Alma’s influence, then, can be seen as transcending the immediate spiritual boundaries of his stewardship over the church. Indeed, because of this influence the entire Nephite nation came to know unprecedented changes in almost every dimension of daily living—political, social, and economic, as well as religious. These changes—and all their connected ramifications for the social order and the populace—prepared the backdrop against which the resurrected Christ’s visit to the Americas was staged. Loved by his followers for his devotion and faith, and held in esteem by his peers for his effective leadership, Alma will probably always be best known as the founder of the church in Zarahemla. His posterity became the leading Nephite family for over 400 years, down to Ammaron in A.D. 321 (4 Ne. 1:48). Alma died at age eighty-two, less than a hundred years before the birth of Jesus Christ.

L. GARY LAMBERT

ALMA<sub>2</sub>

Few individuals have had greater influence upon a civilization than Alma<sub>2</sub>, son of Alma<sub>1</sub>. He was a key figure in the rise of the Nephite church and republic, serving as the first chief judge in Zarahemla, commander-in-chief of the Nephite army, and high priest (c. 90–73 B.C.). His efforts to protect his people from war, dissension, and wickedness were exceeded only by his single-minded dedication to the Savior, whom he came to know through revelation.

This crusader for righteousness first appears in the Book of Mormon as a rebellious young man. He and four of the sons of King Mosiah<sub>2</sub>, described as “the very vilest of sinners” (Mosiah 28:4), rebelled against the teachings of their parents and ing at least once weekly (18:25). Through generous donations, everyone cared for one another “according to that which he had” (18:27–28).

Eventually the believers were discovered and king Noah accused Alma of sedition, ordering his army to crush him and his followers. Forced into exile, Alma led the people deeper into the wilderness, where they thrived for twenty years in a region they named Helam (Mosiah 18:32–35; 23:1–5, 20). Alma ardently declined well-intended efforts to make him king, and successfully dissuaded his people from adopting a monarchical government, urging them to enjoy the new “liberty wherewith ye have been made free” and to “trust no man to be a king” (Mosiah 23:13). He did not oppose monarchies as such but, rather, acknowledged their fundamental limitation: “If it were possible that ye could always have just men to be your kings it would be well for you to have a king” (23:8).

Alma and his people afterward suffered oppression at the hands of Amulon, also an ex-priest and deserter from king Noah’s court, who, along with the remnant of a LAMANITE army, discovered Alma’s people in their wilderness refuge. During their suffering the voice of the Lord promised relief and deliverance because of their covenant with him: “I, the Lord God, do visit my people in their afflictions” (Mosiah 24:14). Once again, in Moses-like fashion, Alma guided his people out of bondage, and led them during a twelve-day journey to a new land—the Land of Zarahemla—where they joined with the people of Zarahemla and exiled NEPHITES to form a new and stronger Nephite nation (Mosiah 24:24–25).

The king of Zarahemla, Mosiah<sub>2</sub>, also a descendant of transplanted God-fearing Nephites, sanctioned and even authorized expansion of Alma’s church in his kingdom; the church, however, operated separately and independently of the state. The king also assigned the reins of leadership to Alma (Mosiah 25:19; 26:8), who successfully directed the church during twenty years characterized largely by tribulations, with many confrontations between nonbelievers and church members resulting in ordeals for both him and the church (Mosiah 26:1–39). Eventually, widespread antagonism necessitated a royal injunction to lessen the tension (27:1–6). Even one of Alma’s sons was among the ranks of the enemies of the church, his agitation and criticism inviting yet worse persecution for church members (27:8–10).

During his lifetime Alma watched king Mosiah dismantle the monarchy and transform it into a system of judges elected by the people (Mosiah 29:2); he also saw his own son, Alma<sub>2</sub>—the one who earlier had brought grief to him and the church—become the first chief judge (Mosiah 29:1–44). This political transformation proved pivotal in the history of the Land of Zarahemla. Directly and indirectly Alma had a hand in bringing it about; the record of his and his people’s pain under oppressive rulers was widely known throughout the kingdom (25:5–6) and remained distinct in king Mosiah’s mind (29:18). Alma’s influence, then, can be seen as transcending the immediate spiritual boundaries of his stewardship over the church. Indeed, because of this influence the entire Nephite nation came to know unprecedented changes in almost every dimension of daily living—political, social, and economic, as well as religious. These changes—and all their connected ramifications for the social order and the populace—prepared the backdrop against which the resurrected Christ’s visit to the Americas was staged. Loved by his followers for his devotion and faith, and held in esteem by his peers for his effective leadership, Alma will probably always be best known as the founder of the church in Zarahemla. His posterity became the leading Nephite family for over 400 years, down to Ammaron in A.D. 321 (4 Ne. 1:48). Alma died at age eighty-two, less than a hundred years before the birth of Jesus Christ.

L. GARY LAMBERT

ALMA<sub>2</sub>

Few individuals have had greater influence upon a civilization than Alma<sub>2</sub>, son of Alma<sub>1</sub>. He was a key figure in the rise of the Nephite church and republic, serving as the first chief judge in Zarahemla, commander-in-chief of the Nephite army, and high priest (c. 90–73 B.C.). His efforts to protect his people from war, dissension, and wickedness were exceeded only by his single-minded dedication to the Savior, whom he came to know through revelation.

This crusader for righteousness first appears in the Book of Mormon as a rebellious young man. He and four of the sons of King Mosiah<sub>2</sub>, described as “the very vilest of sinners” (Mosiah 28:4), rebelled against the teachings of their parents and sought to overthrow the church. As they went about that work (c. 100–92 B.C.), the angel of the Lord appeared to them, spoke with a voice of thunder, calling these wayward young men to repentance, and explaining that he did so because of the prayers of the people and of Alma's father. For three days and three nights Alma lay in a physically comatose state, during which time he spiritually confronted all his sins, "for which," he later said, "I was tormented with the pains of hell" (Alma 36:12–14).

Alma the Younger Called to Repentance, by James C. Christensen (1980, leaded stained glass). The angel of the Lord rebukes the young and rebellious Alma: "If thou wilt of thyself be destroyed, seek no more to destroy the church of God" (Alma 36:9). Courtesy Museum of Fine Arts, Brigham Young University.

In the depth of his anguish of soul, Alma remembered his father's words concerning the coming of Jesus Christ to atone for the sins of the world. As Alma cried out in his heart to Christ, pleading for mercy and deliverance from "the gall of bitterness" and "the everlasting chains of death," he stated: "I could remember my pains no more; yea, I was harrowed up by the memory of my sins no more" (Alma 36:17–19). After their conversion, Alma and the sons of Mosiah devoted their lives to preaching repentance and the joyous gospel (Alma 36:24).

For about nine years Alma served as both the high priest over the church and the chief judge or governor over a new political system of judges among the Nephites. He was well educated, the keeper of sacred and civil records, an inspiring orator, and a skillful writer. As a young civil and religious leader, he faced a number of challenges. Several religio-political factions were emerging in Nephite society, notably the Zoramites, Mulekites, members of the church, and an anti-church group, the followers of Nehor (see BOOK OF MORMON PEOPLES). Maintaining Nephite leadership over all these groups proved impossible. In a landmark case in his first year as chief judge, Alma held the popular Nehor guilty of enforcing priestcraft with the sword, which resulted in his execution (Alma 1:2–15). This soon led to civil war with Alma himself slaying the new rebel leader, one of Nehor's protégés, in battle (Alma 2–3). There followed a serious epidemic of pride and inequality among many in the church (Alma 4) and the secession of the arrogant Zoramites. "Seeing no way that he might reclaim [the people] save it were in bearing down in pure testimony against them" (Alma 4:19), Alma resigned his position as chief judge and devoted himself completely to the work of the ministry (Alma 4:19; 31:5). His religious work, especially in the Nephite cities of Zarahemla (Alma 5, 30) and Gideon (Alma 7), the Nehorite stronghold of Ammonihah (Alma 8–16), and the Zoramite center in Antionum (Alma 31–35), revitalized the church and set the pattern of administration for the next century down to the coming of Christ.

Alma's most enduring contributions are to be found in his sermons and his blessings upon the heads of his children. No doubt as a result of his own conversion (Mosiah 27), Alma's words frequently center on the atoning sacrifice of the Redeemer and on the necessity for men and women to be BORN OF GOD, changed, and renewed through Christ. To the people of Gideon, Alma delivered a profound prophetic oracle regarding the birth of Jesus and the ATONEMENT he would make, “suffering pains and afflictions and temptations of every kind . . . that he may loose the bands of death which bind his people; and he will take upon him their infirmities, that his bowels may be filled with mercy . . . that he may know according to the flesh how to succor his people according to their infirmities” (Alma 7:11–12). In Zarahemla, Alma stressed the need for the new birth and for acquiring the image and attributes of the Master; in doing so, he provided a series of over forty questions that assess one’s depth of conversion and readiness to meet one’s Maker (see Alma 5).

In Ammonihah, Alma and his convert Amulek were accused of a crime, taunted, and imprisoned for several weeks without clothing or adequate food. After being forced to witness the burning of several faithful women and children, Alma and Amulek were miraculously delivered and their persecutors annihilated. The discourses of Alma and Amulek on the Creation, the Fall, and the Atonement are among the clearest and most fundamental theological statements on these subjects in scripture (see Alma 11–12, 34, 42). In explaining humility, faith, and prayer to the poor in Antionum (Alma 32–34), Alma and Amulek set forth a pattern whereby those without faith in Christ (or those within the fold who desire to strengthen their belief) would plant the seed of the word of Christ in their hearts and eventually receive the confirming impressions of testimony that come by the power of the HOLY GHOST.

Some of the most penetrating doctrinal information in the Book of Mormon comes through words that Alma spoke to his sons. To HELAMAN<sub>1</sub>, his eldest son and successor, Alma eloquently recounted the story of his own conversion, gave him loving fatherly counsel, and entrusted him with custody of the plates of brass, the plates of Nephi, the plates of Ether, and the LIAHONA (Alma 36–37). To Shiblon, he gave wise practical advice (Alma 38). To his errant youngest son, Corianton, who eventually went on to serve valiantly in the church, Alma explained the seriousness of sexual sin, that wickedness never was happiness (Alma 39, 41:10), that all spirits will be judged after death and will eventually stand before God after a perfect resurrection (Alma 40), and that the word “restoration” does not mean that God will restore a sinner to some former state of happiness (Alma 41), for divine mercy cannot rob justice when the law of God has been violated (Alma 42).

A relatively young man at the time of his conversion, Alma lived fewer than twenty years thereafter. Yet in those two decades he almost single-handedly invigorated and established the cause of truth and liberty in the Nephite church and society. Never forgetting the thunderous voice of the angel at the time of his conversion, Alma always carried with him this unchanging desire: “O that I were an angel, and could have the wish of mine heart, that I might go forth and speak with the trump of God, with a voice to shake the earth, and cry repentance unto every people! . . . that there might not be more sorrow upon all the face of the earth” (Alma 29:1–2). When he left one day and was never seen or heard again, his sons and the church supposed “that [the Lord] received Alma in the spirit, unto himself,” even as Moses (Alma 45:19), drawing an apt comparison between these two great lawgivers, judges, commanders, spiritual leaders, and prophets.

For Latter-day Saints, Alma’s life and lessons are rich and timeless. He serves as a hope to parents who have wandering children, and as a beacon to those who stray. He stands as a model public servant, a sterling illustration of the new life in Christ, a fearless preacher, missionary, and gifted theologian. Alma was a prophet who received a prophet’s reward.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Holland, Jeffrey R. “Alma, Son of Alma.” Ensign 7 (March 1977):79–84.
 Perry, L. Tom. “Alma the Younger.” CR (April 1979):16–17.

ROBERT L. MILLET

---

ALMANACS

Early Mormon almanacs (1845–1866) first borrowed heavily from standard almanacs being published, but then came to focus on interests of members of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Since 1973 the Church Almanac has printed only information pertaining to the Church.

Orson Pratt, an apostle, published the first Mormon almanacs in New York City in 1845 and 1846. Basing his Prophetic Almanac for 1845 on standard American almanacs, Elder Pratt added a few articles about doctrines of the Church. Then through Christ. To the people of Gideon, Alma delivered a profound prophetic oracle regarding the birth of Jesus and the ATONEMENT he would make, “suffering pains and afflictions and temptations of every kind . . . that he may loose the bands of death which bind his people; and he will take upon him their infirmities, that his bowels may be filled with mercy . . . that he may know according to the flesh how to succor his people according to their infirmities” (Alma 7:11–12). In Zarahemla, Alma stressed the need for the new birth and for acquiring the image and attributes of the Master; in doing so, he provided a series of over forty questions that assess one’s depth of conversion and readiness to meet one’s Maker (see Alma 5).

In Ammonihah, Alma and his convert Amulek were accused of a crime, taunted, and imprisoned for several weeks without clothing or adequate food. After being forced to witness the burning of several faithful women and children, Alma and Amulek were miraculously delivered and their persecutors annihilated. The discourses of Alma and Amulek on the Creation, the Fall, and the Atonement are among the clearest and most fundamental theological statements on these subjects in scripture (see Alma 11–12, 34, 42). In explaining humility, faith, and prayer to the poor in Antionum (Alma 32–34), Alma and Amulek set forth a pattern whereby those without faith in Christ (or those within the fold who desire to strengthen their belief) would plant the seed of the word of Christ in their hearts and eventually receive the confirming impressions of testimony that come by the power of the HOLY GHOST.

Some of the most penetrating doctrinal information in the Book of Mormon comes through words that Alma spoke to his sons. To HELAMAN<sub>1</sub>, his eldest son and successor, Alma eloquently recounted the story of his own conversion, gave him loving fatherly counsel, and entrusted him with custody of the plates of brass, the plates of Nephi, the plates of Ether, and the LIAHONA (Alma 36–37). To Shiblon, he gave wise practical advice (Alma 38). To his errant youngest son, Corianton, who eventually went on to serve valiantly in the church, Alma explained the seriousness of sexual sin, that wickedness never was happiness (Alma 39, 41:10), that all spirits will be judged after death and will eventually stand before God after a perfect resurrection (Alma 40), and that the word “restoration” does not mean that God will restore a sinner to some former state of happiness (Alma 41), for divine mercy cannot rob justice when the law of God has been violated (Alma 42).

A relatively young man at the time of his conversion, Alma lived fewer than twenty years thereafter. Yet in those two decades he almost single-handedly invigorated and established the cause of truth and liberty in the Nephite church and society. Never forgetting the thunderous voice of the angel at the time of his conversion, Alma always carried with him this unchanging desire: “O that I were an angel, and could have the wish of mine heart, that I might go forth and speak with the trump of God, with a voice to shake the earth, and cry repentance unto every people! . . . that there might not be more sorrow upon all the face of the earth” (Alma 29:1–2). When he left one day and was never seen or heard again, his sons and the church supposed “that [the Lord] received Alma in the spirit, unto himself,” even as Moses (Alma 45:19), drawing an apt comparison between these two great lawgivers, judges, commanders, spiritual leaders, and prophets.

For Latter-day Saints, Alma’s life and lessons are rich and timeless. He serves as a hope to parents who have wandering children, and as a beacon to those who stray. He stands as a model public servant, a sterling illustration of the new life in Christ, a fearless preacher, missionary, and gifted theologian. Alma was a prophet who received a prophet’s reward.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Holland, Jeffrey R. “Alma, Son of Alma.” Ensign 7 (March 1977):79–84.
 Perry, L. Tom. “Alma the Younger.” CR (April 1979):16–17.

ROBERT L. MILLET

---

ALMANACS

Early Mormon almanacs (1845–1866) first borrowed heavily from standard almanacs being published, but then came to focus on interests of members of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Since 1973 the Church Almanac has printed only information pertaining to the Church.

Orson Pratt, an apostle, published the first Mormon almanacs in New York City in 1845 and 1846. Basing his Prophetic Almanac for 1845 on standard American almanacs, Elder Pratt added a few articles about doctrines of the Church. Then his 1846 issue broke from the standard mold and became a distinctively Mormon almanac.

Title page of the first Mormon Almanac, Orson Pratt's Prophetic Almanac, published in New York in 1845. It contained standard calendar information, significant historical dates, and a comparison of "the Doctrines of Christ" with "the Doctrines of Men." Recent LDS Church Almanacs have presented statistics and information about Church history and officers. Photographer: William W. Mahler. Courtesy Rare Books and Manuscripts, Brigham Young University.

Between 1851 and 1866, William Wine Phelps published fourteen known issues of Deseret Almanac (from 1859–1864 entitled Almanac) in Salt Lake City. Also borrowing from standard almanacs, he added religious and cultural articles and some notes pertaining to frontier-society needs.

The current Deseret News Church Almanac is prepared and edited by the staff of the CHURCH

NEWS, in cooperation with the Historical Department of the Church. It was published annually from 1974 to 1983, but biennially thereafter. Presently it is a 352-page, soft-bound, ready-reference of facts and statistics of the Church. It is intended for use in libraries, schools, and other institutions, as well as private homes. The Almanac prints thousands of historical and contemporary items about the Church, such as brief biographical sketches of all past and present GENERAL AUTHORITIES; a year-by-year historical chronology of the Church since the 1820s; a month-by-month chronology of major events in the Church during the past two years; and past and current information about STAKES, MISSIONS, AREAS, and TEMPLES throughout the world, including histories, populations, and numbers of Church units.

Liberal use is made of photographs. In addition to photos of current events, users see photographs of all current and past General Authorities for whom there are pictures available, including an 1853 daguerreotype of the Prophet Joseph SMITH's uncle, John Smith, who was an assistant counselor in the FIRST PRESIDENCY and later the PATRIARCH TO THE CHURCH.

Each biennial issue of the Almanac is updated and revised. Copies may be purchased at Church DISTRIBUTION CENTERS or ordered by mail from the Deseret News, P.O. Box 1257, Salt Lake City, UT 84110.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Deseret News Church Almanac. Salt Lake City, 1974–.

Whittaker, David J. "Almanacs in the New England Heritage of Mormonism." BYU Studies 29 (Fall 1989):89–113.

DELL VAN ORDEN

ALTAR

A focal point of religious worship throughout the ages, and in most cultures, has been the altar—a natural or man-made elevation used for prayer, sacrifice, and related purposes. Sacrifice on the altar was a basic rite. The characteristic worship practice in Old Testament times was sacrificial in nature, and consequently the altar became one of the most important ritual objects described in that book of scripture.

Title page of the first Mormon Almanac, Orson Pratt's Prophetic Almanac, published in New York in 1845. It contained standard calendar information, significant historical dates, and a comparison of "the Doctrines of Christ" with "the Doctrines of Men." Recent LDS Church Almanacs have presented statistics and information about Church history and officers. Photographer: William W. Mahler. Courtesy Rare Books and Manuscripts, Brigham Young University.

his 1846 issue broke from the standard mold and became a distinctively Mormon almanac.

Between 1851 and 1866, William Wine Phelps published fourteen known issues of Deseret Almanac (from 1859–1864 entitled Almanac) in Salt Lake City. Also borrowing from standard almanacs, he added religious and cultural articles and some notes pertaining to frontier-society needs.

The current Deseret News Church Almanac is prepared and edited by the staff of the CHURCH

NEWS, in cooperation with the Historical Department of the Church. It was published annually from 1974 to 1983, but biennially thereafter. Presently it is a 352-page, soft-bound, ready-reference of facts and statistics of the Church. It is intended for use in libraries, schools, and other institutions, as well as private homes. The Almanac prints thousands of historical and contemporary items about the Church, such as brief biographical sketches of all past and present GENERAL AUTHORITIES; a year-by-year historical chronology of the Church since the 1820s; a month-by-month chronology of major events in the Church during the past two years; and past and current information about STAKES, MISSIONS, AREAS, and TEMPLES throughout the world, including histories, populations, and numbers of Church units.

Liberal use is made of photographs. In addition to photos of current events, users see photographs of all current and past General Authorities for whom there are pictures available, including an 1853 daguerreotype of the Prophet Joseph SMITH's uncle, John Smith, who was an assistant counselor in the FIRST PRESIDENCY and later the PATRIARCH TO THE CHURCH.

Each biennial issue of the Almanac is updated and revised. Copies may be purchased at Church DISTRIBUTION CENTERS or ordered by mail from the Deseret News, P.O. Box 1257, Salt Lake City, UT 84110.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Deseret News Church Almanac. Salt Lake City, 1974–.

Whittaker, David J. "Almanacs in the New England Heritage of Mormonism." BYU Studies 29 (Fall 1989):89–113.

DELL VAN ORDEN

ALTAR

A focal point of religious worship throughout the ages, and in most cultures, has been the altar—a natural or man-made elevation used for prayer, sacrifice, and related purposes. Sacrifice on the altar was a basic rite. The characteristic worship practice in Old Testament times was sacrificial in nature, and consequently the altar became one of the most important ritual objects described in that book of scripture.

Sacred and symbolic meaning is ascribed to the altar. The stipulations of the “law of the altar” (Ex. 20:24–26) suggest that its construction is associated with the creation of the world and God’s COVENANTS with humankind. As the waters of creation receded, dry land appeared and was known as the primordial mound (first hill). Here, according to legend, the gods stood in order to complete the Creation. Because of divine presence, this spot became sacred or holy ground, a point of contact between this world and the heavenly world. The altar was built that people might kneel by it to communicate and make covenants with their God. The altar in Ezekiel 43:15 is named “the mountain of God” (Hebrew term, hahar’el), and becomes the symbolic embodiment of the Creation, the primordial mound, and the presence of God.

At an altar ADAM learned the meaning of sacrifice (Moses 5:5–8). Following the Flood, the patriarch NOAH immediately built an altar and offered his sacrifices to the Most High. When ABRAHAM received the promise and covenant of an inheritance for his posterity, he marked this sacred event with an altar (Gen. 12:6–7). On Mount Moriah the young Isaac was bound upon the sacrificial table or altar in preparation for his father’s supreme offering and demonstration of obedience (Gen. 22:9–14). Tradition says the place of this consecrated altar became the locus of the temple in Jerusalem.

The temple complex in Jerusalem had four different altars. In an ascending order of sacral primacy, they were as follows: First, the Altar of Sacrifice, often called the altar of burnt offering or the table of the Lord (Mal. 1:7, 12; 1 Cor. 10:21), was placed outside of the temple itself in the Court of Israel and was more public than the others. Sacrifices for the sins of Israel were offered here, anticipating fulfillment in the sacrifice of Jesus Christ (Heb. 9:25–26; Alma 34:9–10, 14–16). Second, the Altar of Incense stood in the “holy place” before the veil inside the temple proper. John describes the smoke of this altar as the “prayers of all saints upon the golden altar which was before the throne” (Rev. 8:3–4). Third, within the same area of the temple stood the Table of Shewbread, upon which rested twelve loaves of bread, frankincense, and a drink offering. And fourth, the ark of the covenant rested in the HOLY OF HOLIES, the most inner, sacred area within the temple. The ark was to Israel the portable throne or Mercy Seat and symbolized the presence of the Lord. It was here that the high priest, once a year on the Day of Atonement (Heb. 9:7; Lev. 16:1–17), made covenants with the Lord for all Israel, as though he represented all at the altar.

In LDS TEMPLES, altars of a different sort play a major role. Kneeling by them, Latter-day Saints participate in covenant-making ceremonies. They make these covenants, as was done anciently, in the symbolic presence of God at the altar (Ps. 43:4; cf. Ps. 118:27). Thus, while kneeling at an altar in a temple, a man and woman make covenants with God and each other in a marriage ceremony that is to be binding both in MORTALITY and in the eternal world. Here, if parents were not previously married in a temple, they and their children may be sealed together for time and eternity by the power and AUTHORITY of the priesthood. Likewise, these ORDINANCES may be performed by proxies at an altar within the temple on behalf of people identified in genealogical records as having died without these privileges.

As the ancients came to the altar to communicate and commune with God, so also do members of the Church, in a temple setting, surround the altar in a PRAYER CIRCLE and in supplication. United in heart and mind, the Saints petition God for his blessings upon mankind, his Church, and those who have special needs.

In a more public SACRAMENT MEETING, the Altar of Sacrifice is symbolized by the “sacrament table.” On this table are emblems of the sacrifice of Jesus Christ, the bread and the water respectively representing the body and blood of the Savior (Luke 22:19–20). Each week individuals may partake of the SACRAMENT and renew their covenants.

Today members of the Church make sacred covenants with God and consecrate their lives and all that they have been blessed with as they “come unto Christ” and lay all things symbolically upon the altar as a sacrifice. To them a sacred altar is a tangible symbol of the presence of God, before whom they kneel with “a broken heart and contrite spirit” (2 Ne. 2:7; 3 Ne. 11:20).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Eliade, Mircea. Patterns in Comparative Religion. New York, 1974.
 Talmage, James E. The House of the Lord. Salt Lake City, 1971.
 Packer, Boyd K. The Holy Temple. Salt Lake City, 1980.

BRUCE H. PORTER

---

AMEN

Among Latter-day Saints the saying of an audible “amen” is the seal and witness of all forms of worship and of priesthood ordinances. The Hebrew word, meaning “truly,” is transliterated into Greek in the New Testament, and thence to the English Bible. It is found many times in the Book of Mormon. The Hebrew infinitive conveys the notions “to confirm, support, uphold, be faithful, firm.” In antiquity the expression carried the weight of an oath. By saying “amen” the people solemnly pledged faithfulness and assented to curses upon themselves if found guilty (Deut. 27:14–26). And by saying “amen” the people also sealed their praises of God (1 Chr. 16:36; Ps. 106:48; Rom. 11:36; 1 Pet. 4:11). Nehemiah records a dramatic instance: “And Ezra blessed the Lord. . . . And all the people answered, Amen, Amen, with lifting up their hands: and they bowed their heads, and worshipped the Lord with their faces to the ground” (Neh. 8:6).

By saying “amen,” Latter-day Saints officially sustain what is said in formal and private prayer, as also in the words of sermons, official admonition, and testimony (see D&C 88:135). In the sacrament service, by repeating “amen” at the end of prayers on the bread and on the water, they covenant to always remember Christ, “that they may have his Spirit to be with them” (D&C 20:77–79). At temple dedications in solemn assembly they stand with uplifted hands and shout “Hosanna to God and the Lamb,” followed by a threefold “amen” (see HOSANNA SHOUT).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Welch, John W. “Amen.” BYU Religious Studies Center Newsletter 3 (Sep. 1988):3–4.

DANIEL B. MCKINLAY

---

AMMONITES

See: Book of Mormon Peoples

---

AMULEK

Amulek (fl. c. 82–74 B.C.), a Nephite inhabitant of the city Ammonihah (Alma 8:20), was a wealthy man in his community (Alma 10:4). Formerly rebellious toward God, he heeded an angel of the Lord and became a missionary companion to ALMA<sub>2</sub> (Alma 10:10). An articulate defender of gospel principles, he displayed virtues of long-suffering and faith, gave up his wealth to teach the gospel, and became a special witness for Christ (see Alma 8–16; 32–34).

Amulek bore powerful testimony to his own city, which earlier had rejected Alma. He confronted opposing lawyers and called upon them to repent—particularly Zeezrom, who had plotted to tempt and destroy him (Alma 11:25). He taught about the nature of the GODHEAD and the role of Christ, emphasizing the resurrection and final judgment (Alma 11:28–45). Touched by the words of Amulek and Alma, Zeezrom recognized the truth, repented, and defended the two missionaries (Alma 14:6–7).

When nonbelievers forced Alma and Amulek to witness the burning of women and children, Amulek desired to save them from the flames. He was restrained, however, by Alma (Alma 14:10–11; see MARTYRS). They themselves were bound, were smitten, and endured hunger as they lay naked in prison (Alma 14:14–22). At last, receiving strength according to their faith, they miraculously broke their bonds and walked out of the collapsing prison, while those who had smitten them died in its ruins (Alma 14:26–28).

Because of his faith in Christ, Amulek was rejected by his family and friends (Alma 15:16). When peace was restored after the Lamanite destruction of Ammonihah, Alma, Amulek, and others built up the church among the Nephites (Alma 16:15).

As a special witness for Christ and filled with the Holy Spirit, Amulek testified to the poor of the Zoramites that only in Christ was salvation possible (Alma 34:5–13). He stated that Christ would come into the world and make an infinite atonement for the sins of the people. “Not any man” could accomplish this act, which would be the great and last sacrifice, bringing mercy to satisfy the demands of justice and saving those who believe on his name (Alma 34:8–16). In return, Amulek said, Christ asked for faith unto repentance, charitable deeds, acceptance of the name of Christ, no contending against the Holy Ghost, no reviling of enemies, and bearing one’s afflictions patiently (Alma 34:17–41).

---

AMEN

Among Latter-day Saints the saying of an audible “amen” is the seal and witness of all forms of worship and of priesthood ordinances. The Hebrew word, meaning “truly,” is transliterated into Greek in the New Testament, and thence to the English Bible. It is found many times in the Book of Mormon. The Hebrew infinitive conveys the notions “to confirm, support, uphold, be faithful, firm.” In antiquity the expression carried the weight of an oath. By saying “amen” the people solemnly pledged faithfulness and assented to curses upon themselves if found guilty (Deut. 27:14–26). And by saying “amen” the people also sealed their praises of God (1 Chr. 16:36; Ps. 106:48; Rom. 11:36; 1 Pet. 4:11). Nehemiah records a dramatic instance: “And Ezra blessed the Lord. . . . And all the people answered, Amen, Amen, with lifting up their hands: and they bowed their heads, and worshipped the Lord with their faces to the ground” (Neh. 8:6).

By saying “amen,” Latter-day Saints officially sustain what is said in formal and private prayer, as also in the words of sermons, official admonition, and testimony (see D&C 88:135). In the sacrament service, by repeating “amen” at the end of prayers on the bread and on the water, they covenant to always remember Christ, “that they may have his Spirit to be with them” (D&C 20:77–79). At temple dedications in solemn assembly they stand with uplifted hands and shout “Hosanna to God and the Lamb,” followed by a threefold “amen” (see HOSANNA SHOUT).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Welch, John W. “Amen.” BYU Religious Studies Center Newsletter 3 (Sep. 1988):3–4.

DANIEL B. MCKINLAY

---

AMMONITES

See: Book of Mormon Peoples

---

AMULEK

Amulek (fl. c. 82–74 B.C.), a Nephite inhabitant of the city Ammonihah (Alma 8:20), was a wealthy man in his community (Alma 10:4). Formerly rebellious toward God, he heeded an angel of the Lord and became a missionary companion to ALMA<sub>2</sub> (Alma 10:10). An articulate defender of gospel principles, he displayed virtues of long-suffering and faith, gave up his wealth to teach the gospel, and became a special witness for Christ (see Alma 8–16; 32–34).

Amulek bore powerful testimony to his own city, which earlier had rejected Alma. He confronted opposing lawyers and called upon them to repent—particularly Zeezrom, who had plotted to tempt and destroy him (Alma 11:25). He taught about the nature of the GODHEAD and the role of Christ, emphasizing the resurrection and final judgment (Alma 11:28–45). Touched by the words of Amulek and Alma, Zeezrom recognized the truth, repented, and defended the two missionaries (Alma 14:6–7).

When nonbelievers forced Alma and Amulek to witness the burning of women and children, Amulek desired to save them from the flames. He was restrained, however, by Alma (Alma 14:10–11; see MARTYRS). They themselves were bound, were smitten, and endured hunger as they lay naked in prison (Alma 14:14–22). At last, receiving strength according to their faith, they miraculously broke their bonds and walked out of the collapsing prison, while those who had smitten them died in its ruins (Alma 14:26–28).

Because of his faith in Christ, Amulek was rejected by his family and friends (Alma 15:16). When peace was restored after the Lamanite destruction of Ammonihah, Alma, Amulek, and others built up the church among the Nephites (Alma 16:15).

As a special witness for Christ and filled with the Holy Spirit, Amulek testified to the poor of the Zoramites that only in Christ was salvation possible (Alma 34:5–13). He stated that Christ would come into the world and make an infinite atonement for the sins of the people. “Not any man” could accomplish this act, which would be the great and last sacrifice, bringing mercy to satisfy the demands of justice and saving those who believe on his name (Alma 34:8–16). In return, Amulek said, Christ asked for faith unto repentance, charitable deeds, acceptance of the name of Christ, no contending against the Holy Ghost, no reviling of enemies, and bearing one’s afflictions patiently (Alma 34:17–41).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Dahl, Larry E. "The Plan of Redemption—Taught and Rejected." In Studies in Scripture, ed. Kent P. Jackson, Vol. 8, pp. 307–320. Salt Lake City, 1987.

NORBERT H. O. DUCKWITZ

ANCESTRAL FILE™

Ancestral File™ is a large genealogical database published on compact disks (CD-ROM) for use in personal computers. Its purpose is to preserve genealogies of families throughout the world, make these genealogies available to researchers of all faiths and nationalities, and help them avoid unnecessary effort and expense. The file is produced and maintained by the FAMILY HISTORY LIBRARY of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints located in Salt Lake City.

By January 1990 Ancestral File contained approximately 7 million lineage-linked names; it is expected that millions more will be added each year. The distinguishing features of this file are that it:

1. displays and prints ancestors' individual records, pedigrees, family groups, and descendant charts;
2. uses standardized spelling of names, locality cross-references, and other convenient retrieval techniques;
3. facilitates correcting and updating the data;
4. gives a reference number for a microfilm copy of the original information;
5. contains the names and addresses of persons who contributed the information;
6. enables users to copy family-linked data onto diskettes to be matched and merged with their own files.

Open participation in Ancestral File is essential to its purposes. All researchers can contribute their genealogies by providing additional information on entire families, and by using PERSONAL ANCESTRAL FILE® or other genealogical software that accommodates the GEDCOM (Genealogical Data Communication) format. Ancestral File is available at the Family History Library in Salt Lake City and at hundreds of its affiliated FAMILY HISTORY

CENTERS in outlying stake centers of the Church. Mail-order printouts may be obtained by correspondence.

Ancestral File and Personal Ancestral File are trademarks of the Corporation of the President of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Mayfield, David M., and A. Gregory Brown. "Family Search." Genealogical Computing (July 1990).

DAVID M. MAYFIELD

ANGEL MORONI STATUE

A monument to the angel Moroni (see MORONI, ANGEL) stands atop the hill CUMORAH, four miles south of Palmyra, New York, where MORONI<sub>2</sub> gave

Angel Moroni Monument, by Torlief S. Knaphus (1935, granite and east bronze, 39'), at the Hill Cumorah, south of Palmyra, New York. This monument stands on the Hill Cumorah where the gold plates containing the Book of Mormon record were deposited and where the Angel Moroni delivered them in 1827 to Joseph Smith.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Dahl, Larry E. "The Plan of Redemption—Taught and Rejected." In Studies in Scripture, ed. Kent P. Jackson, Vol. 8, pp. 307–320. Salt Lake City, 1987.

NORBERT H. O. DUCKWITZ

ANCESTRAL FILE™

Ancestral File™ is a large genealogical database published on compact disks (CD-ROM) for use in personal computers. Its purpose is to preserve genealogies of families throughout the world, make these genealogies available to researchers of all faiths and nationalities, and help them avoid unnecessary effort and expense. The file is produced and maintained by the FAMILY HISTORY LIBRARY of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints located in Salt Lake City.

By January 1990 Ancestral File contained approximately 7 million lineage-linked names; it is expected that millions more will be added each year. The distinguishing features of this file are that it:

1. displays and prints ancestors' individual records, pedigrees, family groups, and descendant charts;
2. uses standardized spelling of names, locality cross-references, and other convenient retrieval techniques;
3. facilitates correcting and updating the data;
4. gives a reference number for a microfilm copy of the original information;
5. contains the names and addresses of persons who contributed the information;
6. enables users to copy family-linked data onto diskettes to be matched and merged with their own files.

Open participation in Ancestral File is essential to its purposes. All researchers can contribute their genealogies by providing additional information on entire families, and by using PERSONAL ANCESTRAL FILE® or other genealogical software that accommodates the GEDCOM (Genealogical Data Communication) format. Ancestral File is available at the Family History Library in Salt Lake City and at hundreds of its affiliated FAMILY HISTORY

CENTERS in outlying stake centers of the Church. Mail-order printouts may be obtained by correspondence.

Ancestral File and Personal Ancestral File are trademarks of the Corporation of the President of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Mayfield, David M., and A. Gregory Brown. "Family Search." Genealogical Computing (July 1990).

DAVID M. MAYFIELD

ANGEL MORONI STATUE

A monument to the angel Moroni (see MORONI, ANGEL) stands atop the hill CUMORAH, four miles south of Palmyra, New York, where MORONI<sub>2</sub> gave

Angel Moroni Monument, by Torlief S. Knaphus (1935, granite and east bronze, 39'), at the Hill Cumorah, south of Palmyra, New York. This monument stands on the Hill Cumorah where the gold plates containing the Book of Mormon record were deposited and where the Angel Moroni delivered them in 1827 to Joseph Smith.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Dahl, Larry E. "The Plan of Redemption—Taught and Rejected." In Studies in Scripture, ed. Kent P. Jackson, Vol. 8, pp. 307–320. Salt Lake City, 1987.

NORBERT H. O. DUCKWITZ

ANCESTRAL FILE™

Ancestral File™ is a large genealogical database published on compact disks (CD-ROM) for use in personal computers. Its purpose is to preserve genealogies of families throughout the world, make these genealogies available to researchers of all faiths and nationalities, and help them avoid unnecessary effort and expense. The file is produced and maintained by the FAMILY HISTORY LIBRARY of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints located in Salt Lake City.

By January 1990 Ancestral File contained approximately 7 million lineage-linked names; it is expected that millions more will be added each year. The distinguishing features of this file are that it:

1. displays and prints ancestors' individual records, pedigrees, family groups, and descendant charts;
2. uses standardized spelling of names, locality cross-references, and other convenient retrieval techniques;
3. facilitates correcting and updating the data;
4. gives a reference number for a microfilm copy of the original information;
5. contains the names and addresses of persons who contributed the information;
6. enables users to copy family-linked data onto diskettes to be matched and merged with their own files.

Open participation in Ancestral File is essential to its purposes. All researchers can contribute their genealogies by providing additional information on entire families, and by using PERSONAL ANCESTRAL FILE® or other genealogical software that accommodates the GEDCOM (Genealogical Data Communication) format. Ancestral File is available at the Family History Library in Salt Lake City and at hundreds of its affiliated FAMILY HISTORY

CENTERS in outlying stake centers of the Church. Mail-order printouts may be obtained by correspondence.

Ancestral File and Personal Ancestral File are trademarks of the Corporation of the President of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Mayfield, David M., and A. Gregory Brown. "Family Search." Genealogical Computing (July 1990).

DAVID M. MAYFIELD

ANGEL MORONI STATUE

A monument to the angel Moroni (see MORONI, ANGEL) stands atop the hill CUMORAH, four miles south of Palmyra, New York, where MORONI<sub>2</sub> gave

Angel Moroni Monument, by Torlief S. Knaphus (1935, granite and east bronze, 39'), at the Hill Cumorah, south of Palmyra, New York. This monument stands on the Hill Cumorah where the gold plates containing the Book of Mormon record were deposited and where the Angel Moroni delivered them in 1827 to Joseph Smith.

Joseph Smith the GOLD PLATES from which he translated the Book of Mormon (see MORONI, VISITATIONS OF). Mounted on a 25-foot shaft of white granite, the ten-foot bronze figure of Moroni points toward heaven with the right hand and holds a replica of the plates with the left. Created by Norwegian sculptor Torleif S. Knaphus, the monument was dedicated by Church President Heber J. GRANT on July 21, 1935.

Moroni was the last in a line of prophet-leaders in the Western Hemisphere whose history is recorded in the Book of Mormon. Latter-day Saints believe John the Revelator foretold Moroni's angelic ministry: "And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people" (Rev. 14:6).

Because Moroni's mission was vital to the RESTORATION of the gospel of Jesus Christ and the establishment of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, a statue of Moroni as a herald sounding a trumpet has been placed on several Latter-day Saint TEMPLES (e.g., Salt Lake City, Los Angeles, and Washington, D.C.).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Giles, John D. "The Symbolism of the Angel Moroni Monument—Hill Cumorah." Instructor 86 (Apr. 1951):98–99.

CORY H. MAXWELL

ANGELS

[This entry consists of three articles:

Angels

Archangels

Guardian Angels

The first article discusses the nature of angels as pertaining to their ministry to people on the earth, showing that different classes perform different types of service. The second article examines a hierarchy among angels, and identifies Michael as an archangel. The last article explores the concept of guardian angels, and examines what the scriptures and the Brethren have said. It proposes the Holy Spirit as a type of guardian angel.]

ANGELS

Latter-day Saints accept the reality of angels as messengers for the Lord. Angels are mentioned in the Old and New Testaments, the Book of Mormon, the Doctrine and Covenants, and the Pearl of Great Price and are prominent in the early history of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Angels are of various types and perform a variety of functions to implement the work of the Lord on the earth.

The skepticism of the modern age has tended to diminish belief in angels. However, Jesus Christ frequently spoke of angels, both literally and figuratively. When Jesus' disciples asked him to "declare unto us the parable of the tares of the field," he responded, "He that soweth the good seed is the Son of Man; the field is the world . . . and the reapers are the angels" (Matt. 13:36–39). Angels are actual beings participating in many incidents related in scripture (e.g., Luke 1:13, 19; 2:25; John 20:12, etc.). They exist as a part of the "whole family in heaven" (Eph. 3:15). All people, including angels, are the offspring of God.

In form angels are like human beings. They do not, of course, have the wings many artists symbolically show (TPJS, p. 162). Concerning the two angels who visited Lot's home in Sodom, the local residents inquired, "Where are the men which came in to thee this night?" (Gen. 19:1, 5, emphasis added). Daniel described the angel Gabriel as having "the appearance of a man" (Dan. 8:15). At the sepulcher of the risen Savior "the angel of the Lord descended from heaven" (Matt. 28:2) as "a young man . . . clothed in a long white garment" (Mark 16:5). A quite detailed description of an angel was given by Joseph Smith in recording the visit of the angel Moroni (JS—H 1:30–33, 43).

The angels who visit this earth are persons who have been assigned as messengers to this earth: "There are no angels who minister to this earth but those who do belong or have belonged to it" (D&C 130:5).

There are several types and kinds of beings, in various stages of progression, whom the Lord has used as angels in varying circumstances. One kind is a spirit child of the Eternal Father who has not yet been born on the earth but is intended for earthly mortality. Such is probably the type of angel who appeared to Adam (Moses 5:6–8).

In the early days of the mortal world, many righteous persons were taken from the earth, or translated (see TRANSLATED BEINGS). Enoch and his people (Moses 7:18–21, 31, 63, 69; Heb. 11:5), Moses (Alma 45:19), and Elijah (2 Kgs. 2:11–12) were all translated. The Prophet Joseph SMITH taught that translated beings "are designed for fu-

Joseph Smith the GOLD PLATES from which he translated the Book of Mormon (see MORONI, VISITATIONS OR). Mounted on a 25-foot shaft of white granite, the ten-foot bronze figure of Moroni points toward heaven with the right hand and holds a replica of the plates with the left. Created by Norwegian sculptor Torleif S. Knaphus, the monument was dedicated by Church President Heber J. GRANT on July 21, 1935.

Moroni was the last in a line of prophet-leaders in the Western Hemisphere whose history is recorded in the Book of Mormon. Latter-day Saints believe John the Revelator foretold Moroni's angelic ministry: "And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people" (Rev. 14:6).

Because Moroni's mission was vital to the RESTORATION of the gospel of Jesus Christ and the establishment of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, a statue of Moroni as a herald sounding a trumpet has been placed on several Latter-day Saint TEMPLES (e.g., Salt Lake City, Los Angeles, and Washington, D.C.).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Giles, John D. "The Symbolism of the Angel Moroni Monument—Hill Cumorah." Instructor 86 (Apr. 1951):98–99.

CORY H. MAXWELL

ANGELS

[This entry consists of three articles:

Angels

Archangels

Guardian Angels

The first article discusses the nature of angels as pertaining to their ministry to people on the earth, showing that different classes perform different types of service. The second article examines a hierarchy among angels, and identifies Michael as an archangel. The last article explores the concept of guardian angels, and examines what the scriptures and the Brethren have said. It proposes the Holy Spirit as a type of guardian angel.]

ANGELS

Latter-day Saints accept the reality of angels as messengers for the Lord. Angels are mentioned in the Old and New Testaments, the Book of Mormon, the Doctrine and Covenants, and the Pearl of Great Price and are prominent in the early history of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Angels are of various types and perform a variety of functions to implement the work of the Lord on the earth.

The skepticism of the modern age has tended to diminish belief in angels. However, Jesus Christ frequently spoke of angels, both literally and figuratively. When Jesus' disciples asked him to "declare unto us the parable of the tares of the field," he responded, "He that soweth the good seed is the Son of Man; the field is the world . . . and the reapers are the angels" (Matt. 13:36–39). Angels are actual beings participating in many incidents related in scripture (e.g., Luke 1:13, 19; 2:25; John 20:12, etc.). They exist as a part of the "whole family in heaven" (Eph. 3:15). All people, including angels, are the offspring of God.

In form angels are like human beings. They do not, of course, have the wings many artists symbolically show (TPJS, p. 162). Concerning the two angels who visited Lot's home in Sodom, the local residents inquired, "Where are the men which came in to thee this night?" (Gen. 19:1, 5, emphasis added). Daniel described the angel Gabriel as having "the appearance of a man" (Dan. 8:15). At the sepulcher of the risen Savior "the angel of the Lord descended from heaven" (Matt. 28:2) as "a young man . . . clothed in a long white garment" (Mark 16:5). A quite detailed description of an angel was given by Joseph Smith in recording the visit of the angel Moroni (JS—H 1:30–33, 43).

The angels who visit this earth are persons who have been assigned as messengers to this earth: "There are no angels who minister to this earth but those who do belong or have belonged to it" (D&C 130:5).

There are several types and kinds of beings, in various stages of progression, whom the Lord has used as angels in varying circumstances. One kind is a spirit child of the Eternal Father who has not yet been born on the earth but is intended for earthly mortality. Such is probably the type of angel who appeared to Adam (Moses 5:6–8).

In the early days of the mortal world, many righteous persons were taken from the earth, or translated (see TRANSLATED BEINGS). Enoch and his people (Moses 7:18–21, 31, 63, 69; Heb. 11:5), Moses (Alma 45:19), and Elijah (2 Kgs. 2:11–12) were all translated. The Prophet Joseph SMITH taught that translated beings "are designed for future missions" (TPJS, p. 191), and hence can be angelic ministrants.

Another kind of angel may be an individual who completed his mortal existence but whose labors continue in the SPIRIT WORLD while he awaits the RESURRECTION of the body. Such are referred to as "the spirits of just men made perfect" (Heb. 12:22–23; D&C 76:69; TPJS, p. 325). "Are they not all ministering spirits, sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation?" (Heb. 1:13–14).

Since the resurrection of Jesus Christ, some angels have been "resurrected personages, having bodies of flesh and bones" (D&C 129:1). The Prophet Joseph Smith indicated that resurrected angels have advanced further in light and glory than spirits (TPJS, p. 325). Such are the beings who have been instrumental in the RESTORATION OF THE GOSPEL in the DISPENSATION OF THE FULNESS OF TIMES. It was of this type of angel that John wrote, "And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people" (Rev. 14:6). ELIAS, MOSES, ELIJAH, MORONI, JOHN THE BAPTIST, PETER, and JAMES are examples of resurrected angels who ministered to the Prophet Joseph Smith.

Pursuant to John's prophecy in Revelation 14:6, the fulness of the gospel, in word and power, has been restored to the earth through the ministration of angels. The angel MORONI, a resurrected being, revealed the record of the Book of Mormon which contains the fulness of the gospel of Jesus Christ (D&C 20:8–11; see MORONI, VISITATIONS OF). Later he who was called John the Baptist in the New Testament, now also a resurrected being, came as an angel and restored the Aaronic Priesthood to Joseph Smith and Oliver COWDERY on May 15, 1829 (D&C 13; JS—H 1:68–72; see AARONIC PRIESTHOOD: RESTORATION OF). Likewise, Peter, James, and John, as angelic embodied messengers from God, restored the Melchizedek Priesthood (D&C 27:12–13; see MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOOD: RESTORATION OF). Moses, Elias, and Elijah each appeared as angels and committed once again the "keys of the gathering of Israel," the "dispensation of the gospel of Abraham" (including celestial or patriarchal marriage), and the keys of the sealing powers to "turn the hearts of the fathers to the children, and the children to the fathers" (D&C 110:11–16).

Other "divers angels" have come to deliver keys, power, priesthood, and glory (D&C 128:18–21); to teach (2 Ne. 10:3; Mosiah 3:2–3; Rev. 1:1), guide, and inspire (Rev. 5:11); and to make the gospel operative in the lives of men and women. However, the work of the angels of the restoration is not complete, and the scriptures indicate that there will yet be other angelic administrations before "the hour of [God's] judgment is come" (D&C 88:103–104; 133:36).

Angelic messengers bring knowledge, priesthood, comfort, and assurances from God to mortals. However, when priesthood or keys are to be conveyed, the ministering angel possesses a body of flesh and bones, either from resurrection or translation. Spirits can convey information, but they cannot confer priesthood upon mortal beings, because spirits do not lay hands on mortals (cf. D&C 129).

The Lord himself may also at times be called an angel, since the term means "messenger." He is the "messenger of salvation" (D&C 93:8), and the "messenger of the covenant" (Mal. 3:1), and is the "Angel which redeemed me" of whom Jacob spoke in Genesis 48:15–16.

Some of the Father's spirit children "kept not their first estate" (Jude 1:6; D&C 29:36–38; Rev. 12:3–9), and, as Peter explained, "God spared not the angels that sinned, but cast them down to hell" (2 Pet. 2:4). These are angels to the devil. Thus, Satan and those who chose to follow him are sometimes referred to as angels (2 Cor. 11:14–15; 2 Ne. 2:17; see also FIRST ESTATE; WAR IN HEAVEN).

A different usage of the term "angel" is applied to those who, because they have not obeyed the principles of the new and everlasting covenant of marriage, do not qualify for exaltation but remain separately and singly as ministering angels without EXALTATION in their saved condition for all eternity (D&C 132:16–17).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- McConkie, Bruce R. Mormon Doctrine. Salt Lake City, 1966.
 McConkie, Oscar W. Angels. Salt Lake City, Utah, 1975.
 Pratt, Parley P. "Angels and Spirits." In Key to the Science of Theology, 10th ed., pp. 112–19. Salt Lake City, 1973.

OSCAR W. MCCONKIE

ARCHANGELS

Traditionally, angels have been viewed as guardians of persons or places, and bearers of God's tidings. The prefix “arch” intensifies this meaning to denote one who rules or is outstanding, principal, or preeminent. Several biblical texts give prominence to four, six, or seven angels (Ezek. 9:2; Rev. 8:2). Dionysius, a sixth-century Christian theologian, purports the existence of nine angelic orders called choirs, one of which is called “archangels.” Milton’s Paradise Lost has the archangels Raphael and Michael appear to and instruct ADAM concerning the fall of the angels, the Creation, and the history of the world. Dante also refers to archangels in The Divine Comedy.

In the literature of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, an archangel is a chief angel, holding a position of PRIESTHOOD authority in the heavenly hierarchy. Michael (Adam) is the only one precisely so designated in scripture (D&C 29:26; 88:112; 107:54; 128:21; 1 Thes. 4:16; Jude 1:9), although others (Gabriel, who is also NOAH; Raphael, Raguel, etc.) are mentioned in scriptural, apocryphal, and pseudepigraphic works. Teachings of Latter-day Saint prophets indicate that a priesthood organization exists among the heavenly hosts (TPJS, pp. 157, 208). However, discussion of specific positions or functions in the celestial hierarchy beyond the scriptures cited above is conjectural.

JERRY C. GILES

GUARDIAN ANGELS

One of the functions of angels is to warn and protect mortals. The Lord whispered to David, “There shall no evil befall thee, neither shall any plague come nigh thy dwelling. For he shall give his angels charge over thee, to keep thee in all thy ways. They shall bear thee up in their hands, lest thou dash thy foot against a stone” (Ps. 91:10–12). The angel of the Lord’s presence saved Israel (Isa. 63:9). Daniel replied to the King: “My God hath sent his angel, and hath shut the lions’ mouths, that they have not hurt me . . .” (Dan. 6:22).

This well-known guardian function of angels has given rise to an assumption on the part of some that all persons, or at least the righteous, have individual angels assigned to them throughout life as guardians. There is no scriptural justification for this tradition, although it has been entertained sometimes among Latter-day Saints and others (TPJS, p. 368).

Latter-day Saints believe that every person born into the world is accorded protecting care and direction by God, provided in part by the LIGHT

OF CHRIST (D&C 84:44–48; Moro. 7:12–19). Those who have the GIFT OF THE HOLY GHOST may be warned, guarded, or shielded through the spirit of revelation (D&C 8:2–4). The term “guardian angel” may best be viewed as a figure of speech that has to do with God’s protecting care and direction or, in special instances, with an angel dispatched to earth in fulfillment of God’s purposes.

OSCAR W. MCCONKIE

---

ANIMALS

Latter-day Saints believe that animals, like humans, have SPIRITS, in the form of their bodies (D&C 77:2). Like humans and plants, animals were created first as spirits in heaven and then physically on the earth (Moses 3:5). Mortal and subject to death, animals will be saved through the ATONEMENT of Christ (TPJS, pp. 291–92). Humans and animals will eventually live in peace on this earth (Isa. 11:6–9; 2 Ne. 30:12–15; D&C 101:24–26). The Prophet Joseph SMITH taught that animals will be found in heaven, in myriad forms, from myriad worlds, enjoying eternal felicity, and praising God in languages God understands (TPJS, pp. 291–92).

Animals, like other “good things which come of the earth . . . are made for the benefit and the use of man,” but are “to be used, with judgment, not to excess, neither by extortion” (D&C 59:16–20). God gave Adam and Eve dominion over the animals (Gen. 1:28), but legitimate dominion is neither coercive nor exploitive (D&C 121:34–46). He sanctions the eating of animal flesh but forbids its waste (Gen. 9:2–5; D&C 49:18–21). The JOSEPH SMITH TRANSLATION OF THE BIBLE (JST) cautions, “Surely, blood shall not be shed, only for meat, to save your lives; and the blood of every beast will I require at your hands” (JST Gen. 9:11).

Destroying animal life merely for sport has been strongly criticized by several Latter-day Saint leaders, including Lorenzo SNOW, Joseph F. SMITH, Joseph Fielding SMITH, and Spencer W. KIMBALL. Lorenzo Snow called it a “murderous amusement.”

When the Prophet Joseph Smith saw his associates about to kill three rattlesnakes at their campsite, he said, “Let them alone—don’t hurt them! How will the serpent ever lose its venom, while the servants of God possess the same disposition, ings. The prefix “arch” intensifies this meaning to denote one who rules or is outstanding, principal, or preeminent. Several biblical texts give prominence to four, six, or seven angels (Ezek. 9:2; Rev. 8:2). Dionysius, a sixth-century Christian theologian, purports the existence of nine angelic orders called choirs, one of which is called “archangels.” Milton’s Paradise Lost has the archangels Raphael and Michael appear to and instruct ADAM concerning the fall of the angels, the Creation, and the history of the world. Dante also refers to archangels in The Divine Comedy.

In the literature of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, an archangel is a chief angel, holding a position of PRIESTHOOD authority in the heavenly hierarchy. Michael (Adam) is the only one precisely so designated in scripture (D&C 29:26; 88:112; 107:54; 128:21; 1 Thes. 4:16; Jude 1:9), although others (Gabriel, who is also NOAH; Raphael, Raguel, etc.) are mentioned in scriptural, apocryphal, and pseudepigraphic works. Teachings of Latter-day Saint prophets indicate that a priesthood organization exists among the heavenly hosts (TPJS, pp. 157, 208). However, discussion of specific positions or functions in the celestial hierarchy beyond the scriptures cited above is conjectural.

JERRY C. GILES

GUARDIAN ANGELS

One of the functions of angels is to warn and protect mortals. The Lord whispered to David, “There shall no evil befall thee, neither shall any plague come nigh thy dwelling. For he shall give his angels charge over thee, to keep thee in all thy ways. They shall bear thee up in their hands, lest thou dash thy foot against a stone” (Ps. 91:10–12). The angel of the Lord’s presence saved Israel (Isa. 63:9). Daniel replied to the King: “My God hath sent his angel, and hath shut the lions’ mouths, that they have not hurt me . . .” (Dan. 6:22).

This well-known guardian function of angels has given rise to an assumption on the part of some that all persons, or at least the righteous, have individual angels assigned to them throughout life as guardians. There is no scriptural justification for this tradition, although it has been entertained sometimes among Latter-day Saints and others (TPJS, p. 368).

Latter-day Saints believe that every person born into the world is accorded protecting care and direction by God, provided in part by the LIGHT

OF CHRIST (D&C 84:44–48; Moro. 7:12–19). Those who have the GIFT OF THE HOLY GHOST may be warned, guarded, or shielded through the spirit of revelation (D&C 8:2–4). The term “guardian angel” may best be viewed as a figure of speech that has to do with God’s protecting care and direction or, in special instances, with an angel dispatched to earth in fulfillment of God’s purposes.

OSCAR W. MCCONKIE

---

ANIMALS

Latter-day Saints believe that animals, like humans, have SPIRITS, in the form of their bodies (D&C 77:2). Like humans and plants, animals were created first as spirits in heaven and then physically on the earth (Moses 3:5). Mortal and subject to death, animals will be saved through the ATONEMENT of Christ (TPJS, pp. 291–92). Humans and animals will eventually live in peace on this earth (Isa. 11:6–9; 2 Ne. 30:12–15; D&C 101:24–26). The Prophet Joseph SMITH taught that animals will be found in heaven, in myriad forms, from myriad worlds, enjoying eternal felicity, and praising God in languages God understands (TPJS, pp. 291–92).

Animals, like other “good things which come of the earth . . . are made for the benefit and the use of man,” but are “to be used, with judgment, not to excess, neither by extortion” (D&C 59:16–20). God gave Adam and Eve dominion over the animals (Gen. 1:28), but legitimate dominion is neither coercive nor exploitive (D&C 121:34–46). He sanctions the eating of animal flesh but forbids its waste (Gen. 9:2–5; D&C 49:18–21). The JOSEPH SMITH TRANSLATION OF THE BIBLE (JST) cautions, “Surely, blood shall not be shed, only for meat, to save your lives; and the blood of every beast will I require at your hands” (JST Gen. 9:11).

Destroying animal life merely for sport has been strongly criticized by several Latter-day Saint leaders, including Lorenzo SNOW, Joseph F. SMITH, Joseph Fielding SMITH, and Spencer W. KIMBALL. Lorenzo Snow called it a “murderous amusement.”

When the Prophet Joseph Smith saw his associates about to kill three rattlesnakes at their campsite, he said, “Let them alone—don’t hurt them! How will the serpent ever lose its venom, while the servants of God possess the same disposition, and continue to make war upon it? Men must become harmless before the brute creation, and when men lose their vicious dispositions and cease to destroy the animal race, the lion and the lamb can dwell together, and the sucking child can play with the serpent in safety" (TPJS, p. 71).

Heber C. Kimball criticized the use of spurs and whips, saying, "[Horses] have the same life in them that you have, and we should not hurt them" (JD 5:137). Brigham YOUNG called neglect of livestock a "great sin" (JD 12:218). So far, no authoritative Church statement on the use of animals in medical research and product testing is available.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Jones, Gerald E. "The Gospel and Animals." Ensign 2 (Aug. 1972):62–65.
- Kimball, Spencer W. "Fundamental Principles to Ponder and Live." Ensign 8 (Nov. 1978):43–46.
- Smith, Joseph Fielding. Answers to Gospel Questions, Vol. 4, pp. 42–47. Salt Lake City, 1963.
- Snow, Lorenzo. Teachings of Lorenzo Snow, Williams, Clyde J., comp., pp. 188–89. Salt Lake City, 1984.

SANDRA BRADFORD PACKARD

ANTHON TRANSCRIPT

The Anthon Transcript was a sheet of paper, thought to be lost, upon which Joseph SMITH copied sample "reformed Egyptian" characters from the plates of the Book of Mormon. In the winter of 1828, Martin HARRIS showed these characters to Dr. Charles Anthon of Columbia College (now Columbia University), and hence the name.

In February 1828, Martin Harris, a farmer from Palmyra, New York, visited the Prophet Joseph Smith, who was then residing in HARMONY, PENNSYLVANIA, where he had just begun to translate the Book of Mormon (see BOOK OF MORMON TRANSLATION BY JOSEPH SMITH). Smith had earlier turned to Harris for financial backing for the translation; now Harris came to Harmony to take samples of the reformed Egyptian characters from the GOLD PLATES (cf. Morm. 9:32), thereafter to obtain scholarly opinion about their authenticity. Smith gave Harris a copy of some of the characters, along with a translation, which Harris then presented to at least three scholars in the eastern United States. The most important of these, given the nature of the inquiry, was Charles Anthon, an acclaimed classicist at Columbia College.

The two men's accounts of the meeting differ. Harris said that Professor Anthon gave him a certificate verifying the authenticity of the characters but that when Anthon learned that Joseph Smith claimed to have received the plates from an angel, he took the certificate back and destroyed it. Anthon, for his part, left written accounts in 1834 and 1841 in which he contradicted himself on whether he had given Harris a written opinion about the document. In both accounts, apparently to dissociate himself from appearing to promote the book, he maintained that he told Harris that he (Harris) was a victim of a fraud. Modern research suggests that, given the state of knowledge of Egyptian in 1828, Anthon's views would have been little more than opinion. Whatever the case may be about a written statement from Anthon, Harris returned to Harmony ready to assist Joseph Smith with the translation.

THE REORGANIZED CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER-DAY SAINTS possesses a handwritten

Charles Anthon (1787–1867), a professor of classical languages at Columbia College (now Columbia University) in New York from 1820 to 1867. His library in 1828 included recent works on hieroglyphic and demotic Egyptian.

and continue to make war upon it? Men must become harmless before the brute creation, and when men lose their vicious dispositions and cease to destroy the animal race, the lion and the lamb can dwell together, and the sucking child can play with the serpent in safety" (TPJS, p. 71).

Heber C. Kimball criticized the use of spurs and whips, saying, "[Horses] have the same life in them that you have, and we should not hurt them" (JD 5:137). Brigham YOUNG called neglect of livestock a "great sin" (JD 12:218). So far, no authoritative Church statement on the use of animals in medical research and product testing is available.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Jones, Gerald E. "The Gospel and Animals." Ensign 2 (Aug. 1972):62–65.
- Kimball, Spencer W. "Fundamental Principles to Ponder and Live." Ensign 8 (Nov. 1978):43–46.
- Smith, Joseph Fielding. Answers to Gospel Questions, Vol. 4, pp. 42–47. Salt Lake City, 1963.
- Snow, Lorenzo. Teachings of Lorenzo Snow, Williams, Clyde J., comp., pp. 188–89. Salt Lake City, 1984.

SANDRA BRADFORD PACKARD

ANTHON TRANSCRIPT

The Anthon Transcript was a sheet of paper, thought to be lost, upon which Joseph SMITH copied sample "reformed Egyptian" characters from the plates of the Book of Mormon. In the winter of 1828, Martin HARRIS showed these characters to Dr. Charles Anthon of Columbia College (now Columbia University), and hence the name.

In February 1828, Martin Harris, a farmer from Palmyra, New York, visited the Prophet Joseph Smith, who was then residing in HARMONY, PENNSYLVANIA, where he had just begun to translate the Book of Mormon (see BOOK OF MORMON TRANSLATION BY JOSEPH SMITH). Smith had earlier turned to Harris for financial backing for the translation; now Harris came to Harmony to take samples of the reformed Egyptian characters from the GOLD PLATES (cf. Morm. 9:32), thereafter to obtain scholarly opinion about their authenticity. Smith gave Harris a copy of some of the characters, along with a translation, which Harris then presented to at least three scholars in the eastern United States. The most important of these, given the nature of the inquiry, was Charles Anthon, an acclaimed classicist at Columbia College.

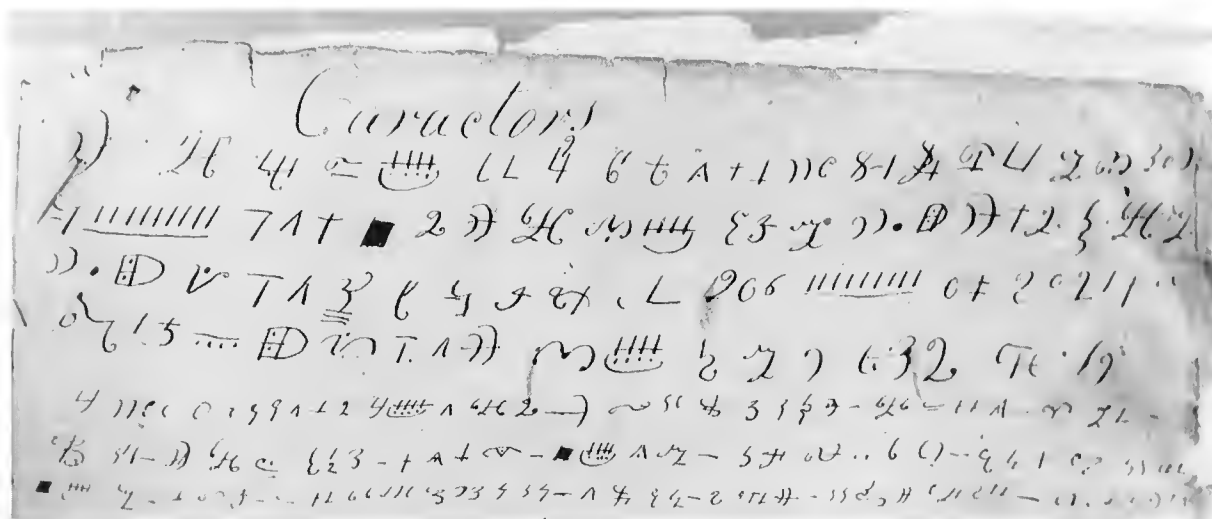

The two men's accounts of the meeting differ. Harris said that Professor Anthon gave him a certificate verifying the authenticity of the characters but that when Anthon learned that Joseph Smith claimed to have received the plates from an angel, he took the certificate back and destroyed it. Anthon, for his part, left written accounts in 1834 and 1841 in which he contradicted himself on whether he had given Harris a written opinion about the document. In both accounts, apparently to dissociate himself from appearing to promote the book, he maintained that he told Harris that he (Harris) was a victim of a fraud. Modern research suggests that, given the state of knowledge of Egyptian in 1828, Anthon's views would have been little more than opinion. Whatever the case may be about a written statement from Anthon, Harris returned to Harmony ready to assist Joseph Smith with the translation.

THE REORGANIZED CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER-DAY SAINTS possesses a handwritten

Charles Anthon (1787–1867), a professor of classical languages at Columbia College (now Columbia University) in New York from 1820 to 1867. His library in 1828 included recent works on hieroglyphic and demotic Egyptian.

This document represents the Book of Mormon characters on the gold plates. It may be the transcript taken by Martin Harris to Charles Anthon in 1828, or a copy of it. The heirs of David Whitmer sold this document to the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. This text is too short to be deciphered. Courtesy Library-Archives, Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

text known as the Anthon Transcript that contains seven horizontal lines of characters apparently copied from the plates. David WHITMER, who once owned the document, said it was this text that Martin Harris showed to Charles Anthon. However, this claim remains uncertain because the transcript does not correspond with Anthon's assertion that the manuscript he saw was arranged in vertical columns. Even if the document is not the original, it almost certainly represents characters either copied from the plates in Joseph Smith's possession or copied from the document carried by Harris. Twice in late 1844, after the Prophet's martyrdom, portions of these symbols were published as characters that Joseph Smith had copied from the gold plates—once as a broadside and once in the December 21 issue of the Mormon newspaper The Prophet (see MACAZINES). In 1980 a document surfaced that seemed to match Anthon's description and appeared to be the original Anthon Transcript. But in 1987, Mark W. Hofmann admitted that he had forged it (see FORGERIES).

Harris's visit with scholars was more than just an interesting sidelight in the history of Mormonism. By his own report, Harris returned to Harmony convinced that the characters were genuine. Thereafter, he willingly invested his time and resources to see the Book of Mormon published. Moreover, the Prophet, Harris himself, and later generations of Latter-day Saints have viewed his visit as a fulfillment of Isaiah 29:11–12, which speaks of "a book that is sealed" being delivered to "one that is learned" who could not read it (PJS 1:9; cf. 2 Ne. 27:6–24; see also BOOK OF MORMON, BIBLICAL PROPHECIES ABOUT). His efforts apparently encouraged Joseph Smith in the initial stages of the translation. The Anthon Transcript is also important to subsequent generations as an authentic sample of characters that were inscribed on the gold plates and thus one of the few tangible evidences of their existence.

[See also Book of Mormon Language.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Kimball, Stanley B. "I Cannot Read a Sealed Book." IE 60 (Feb. 1957):80–82, 104, 106.
 ———. "The Anthon Transcript: People, Primary Sources, and Problems." BYU Studies 10 (Spring 1970):325–52.
 "Martin Harris' Visit to Charles Anthon: Collected Documents on Short-hand Egyptian." F.A.R.M.S. Preliminary Report. Provo, Utah, 1985.

DANIEL W. BACHMAN

ANTICHRISTS

Antichrists are those who deny the divinity of JESUS CHRIST or essential parts of his gospel and actively oppose the followers of Christ or seek to destroy their faith.

This document represents the Book of Mormon characters on the gold plates. It may be the transcript taken by Martin Harris to Charles Anthon in 1828, or a copy of it. The heirs of David Whitmer sold this document to the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. This text is too short to be deciphered. Courtesy Library-Archives, Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, The Auditorium, Independence, Missouri.

text known as the Anthon Transcript that contains seven horizontal lines of characters apparently copied from the plates. David WHITMER, who once owned the document, said it was this text that Martin Harris showed to Charles Anthon. However, this claim remains uncertain because the transcript does not correspond with Anthon's assertion that the manuscript he saw was arranged in vertical columns. Even if the document is not the original, it almost certainly represents characters either copied from the plates in Joseph Smith's possession or copied from the document carried by Harris. Twice in late 1844, after the Prophet's martyrdom, portions of these symbols were published as characters that Joseph Smith had copied from the gold plates—once as a broadside and once in the December 21 issue of the Mormon newspaper The Prophet (see MACAZINES). In 1980 a document surfaced that seemed to match Anthon's description and appeared to be the original Anthon Transcript. But in 1987, Mark W. Hofmann admitted that he had forged it (see FORGERIES).

Harris's visit with scholars was more than just an interesting sidelight in the history of Mormonism. By his own report, Harris returned to Harmony convinced that the characters were genuine. Thereafter, he willingly invested his time and resources to see the Book of Mormon published. Moreover, the Prophet, Harris himself, and later generations of Latter-day Saints have viewed his visit as a fulfillment of Isaiah 29:11–12, which speaks of "a book that is sealed" being delivered to "one that is learned" who could not read it (PJS 1:9; cf. 2 Ne. 27:6–24; see also BOOK OF MORMON, BIBLICAL PROPHECIES ABOUT). His efforts apparently encouraged Joseph Smith in the initial stages of the translation. The Anthon Transcript is also important to subsequent generations as an authentic sample of characters that were inscribed on the gold plates and thus one of the few tangible evidences of their existence.

[See also Book of Mormon Language.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Kimball, Stanley B. "I Cannot Read a Sealed Book." IE 60 (Feb. 1957):80–82, 104, 106.
 ———. "The Anthon Transcript: People, Primary Sources, and Problems." BYU Studies 10 (Spring 1970):325–52.
 "Martin Harris' Visit to Charles Anthon: Collected Documents on Short-hand Egyptian." F.A.R.M.S. Preliminary Report. Provo, Utah, 1985.

DANIEL W. BACHMAN

ANTICHRISTS

Antichrists are those who deny the divinity of JESUS CHRIST or essential parts of his gospel and actively oppose the followers of Christ or seek to destroy their faith.

The epistles of John explicitly condemn as antichrists those with a lying spirit who deny that Jesus is the Christ and deny the physical resurrection. Antichrists are to be notably active in the last days (1 Jn. 2:18, 22; 4:3; 2 Jn. 1:7).

The Book of Mormon profiles many subtle and sophisticated aspects of antichrist characters, though the text explicitly refers to only one of them as antichrist.

Sherem (c. 540 B.C.) rejected the prophetic Christian teachings of the Nephite prophets, arguing that belief in the coming Christ perverted the law of Moses. He employed several archetypical arguments and methods, claiming that no one could know of things to come, including the coming of Christ. When confronted, Sherem asserted that if there were a Christ he would not deny him, but he knew "there is no Christ, neither has been, nor ever will be," thus contradicting his own argument that no one could "tell of things to come." Demanding a sign of divine power, Sherem was stricken by God, and then confessed that he had been deceived by the DEVIL in denying the Christ (Jacob 7:1–23).

Nehor (c. 91 B.C.), a practitioner of PRIESTCRAFT, preached and established a church to obtain riches and worldly honor and to satisfy his pride. He taught that God had created everyone, had redeemed everyone, and that people need not "fear and tremble" because everyone would be saved. Furthermore, he said priests should be supported by the people. Nehor attacked and killed a defender of the true doctrine of Christ, and was tried before Alma<sub>2</sub> and executed (Alma 1:2–16). He was not executed for being an antichrist, but for having enforced his beliefs "by the sword."

Korihor (c. 74 B.C.) was an extremist, rejecting all religious teachings, even to the point of not posturing either as a defender of traditions or as a reformer of corrupted religious practices. He was labeled "Anti-Christ" because he taught that there was no need for a Christ and that none would come. He described the religious teachings of the church as foolish traditions designed to subject the people to corrupt and lazy priests. In a dramatic confrontation with the Nephite chief judge, and with the prophet Alma<sub>2</sub>, Korihor claimed that one cannot know anything that cannot be seen, making knowledge or prophecy of future events impossible. He ridiculed all talk of visions, dreams, and the mysteries of God. He called belief in sin, the atonement of Christ, and the remission of sins a derangement of the mind caused by foolish religious traditions. He denied the existence of God and, after demanding a sign as proof of his existence, was struck dumb. After Alma accused him of possessing a lying spirit, Korihor confessed that he had been deceived by Satan, had taught words and doctrines pleasing to the carnal mind, and had even begun to believe them himself (Alma 30:6–60).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Riddle, Chauncey C. "Korihor: The Arguments of Apostasy." Ensign 7 (Sept. 1977):18–21.

RUSSELL M. FRANDSEN

---

ANTI-MORMON PUBLICATIONS

Anti-Mormonism includes any hostile or polemic opposition to Mormonism or to the Latter-day Saints, such as maligning the founding prophet, his successors, or the doctrines or practices of the Church. Though sometimes well intended, anti-Mormon publications have often taken the form of invective, falsehood, demeaning caricature, prejudice, and legal harassment, leading to both verbal and physical assault. From its beginnings, The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints and its members have been targets of anti-Mormon publications. Apart from collecting them for historical purposes and in response to divine direction, the Church has largely ignored these materials, for they strike most members as irresponsible misrepresentations.

Few other religious groups in the United States have been subjected to such sustained, vitriolic criticism and hostility. From the organization of the Church in 1830 to 1989, at least 1,931 anti-Mormon books, novels, pamphlets, tracts, and flyers have been published in English. Numerous other newsletters, articles, and letters have been circulated. Since 1960 these publications have increased dramatically.

A major reason for hostility against the Church has been its belief in extrabiblical REVELATION. The theological foundation of the Church rests on the claim by the Prophet Joseph SMITH that God the Father, Jesus Christ, and angels appeared to him and instructed him to restore a DISPENSATION of the gospel.

Initial skepticism toward Joseph Smith's testimony was understandable because others had made similar claims to receiving revelation from

The epistles of John explicitly condemn as antichrists those with a lying spirit who deny that Jesus is the Christ and deny the physical resurrection. Antichrists are to be notably active in the last days (1 Jn. 2:18, 22; 4:3; 2 Jn. 1:7).

The Book of Mormon profiles many subtle and sophisticated aspects of antichrist characters, though the text explicitly refers to only one of them as antichrist.

Sherem (c. 540 B.C.) rejected the prophetic Christian teachings of the Nephite prophets, arguing that belief in the coming Christ perverted the law of Moses. He employed several archetypical arguments and methods, claiming that no one could know of things to come, including the coming of Christ. When confronted, Sherem asserted that if there were a Christ he would not deny him, but he knew "there is no Christ, neither has been, nor ever will be," thus contradicting his own argument that no one could "tell of things to come." Demanding a sign of divine power, Sherem was stricken by God, and then confessed that he had been deceived by the DEVIL in denying the Christ (Jacob 7:1–23).

Nehor (c. 91 B.C.), a practitioner of PRIEST-CRAFT, preached and established a church to obtain riches and worldly honor and to satisfy his pride. He taught that God had created everyone, had redeemed everyone, and that people need not "fear and tremble" because everyone would be saved. Furthermore, he said priests should be supported by the people. Nehor attacked and killed a defender of the true doctrine of Christ, and was tried before Alma<sub>2</sub> and executed (Alma 1:2–16). He was not executed for being an antichrist, but for having enforced his beliefs "by the sword."

Korihor (c. 74 B.C.) was an extremist, rejecting all religious teachings, even to the point of not posturing either as a defender of traditions or as a reformer of corrupted religious practices. He was labeled "Anti-Christ" because he taught that there was no need for a Christ and that none would come. He described the religious teachings of the church as foolish traditions designed to subject the people to corrupt and lazy priests. In a dramatic confrontation with the Nephite chief judge, and with the prophet Alma<sub>2</sub>, Korihor claimed that one cannot know anything that cannot be seen, making knowledge or prophecy of future events impossible. He ridiculed all talk of visions, dreams, and the mysteries of God. He called belief in sin, the atonement of Christ, and the remission of sins a derangement of the mind caused by foolish religious traditions. He denied the existence of God and, after demanding a sign as proof of his existence, was struck dumb. After Alma accused him of possessing a lying spirit, Korihor confessed that he had been deceived by Satan, had taught words and doctrines pleasing to the carnal mind, and had even begun to believe them himself (Alma 30:6–60).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Riddle, Chauncey C. "Korihor: The Arguments of Apostasy." Ensign 7 (Sept. 1977):18–21.

RUSSELL M. FRANDSEN

---

ANTI-MORMON PUBLICATIONS

Anti-Mormonism includes any hostile or polemic opposition to Mormonism or to the Latter-day Saints, such as maligning the founding prophet, his successors, or the doctrines or practices of the Church. Though sometimes well intended, anti-Mormon publications have often taken the form of invective, falsehood, demeaning caricature, prejudice, and legal harassment, leading to both verbal and physical assault. From its beginnings, The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints and its members have been targets of anti-Mormon publications. Apart from collecting them for historical purposes and in response to divine direction, the Church has largely ignored these materials, for they strike most members as irresponsible misrepresentations.

Few other religious groups in the United States have been subjected to such sustained, vitriolic criticism and hostility. From the organization of the Church in 1830 to 1989, at least 1,931 anti-Mormon books, novels, pamphlets, tracts, and flyers have been published in English. Numerous other newsletters, articles, and letters have been circulated. Since 1960 these publications have increased dramatically.

A major reason for hostility against the Church has been its belief in extrabiblical REVELATION. The theological foundation of the Church rests on the claim by the Prophet Joseph SMITH that God the Father, Jesus Christ, and angels appeared to him and instructed him to restore a DISPENSATION of the gospel.

Initial skepticism toward Joseph Smith's testimony was understandable because others had made similar claims to receiving revelation from God. Moreover, Joseph Smith had brought forth the Book of Mormon, giving tangible evidence of his claim to revelation, and this invited testing. His testimony that the book originated from an ancient record engraved on metal PLATES that he translated by the gift and power of God was considered preposterous by disbelievers. Hostile anti-Mormon writing and other abuses grew largely out of the perceived need to supply an alternative explanation for the origin of the Book of Mormon. The early critics focused initially on discrediting the SMITH FAMILY, particularly Joseph Smith, Jr., and attempted to show that the Book of Mormon was entirely of nineteenth-century origin. Later critics have focused more on points of doctrine, individual leaders, and Church operation.

EARLY CRITICISMS (1829–1846). Joseph Smith's disclosure that heavenly messengers had visited him was met with derision, particularly by some local clergymen. When efforts to dissuade him failed, he became the object of ridicule. From the time of the FIRST VISION (1820) to the first visit by the ANGEL MORONI (1823), Joseph "suffered every kind of opposition and persecution from the different orders of religionists" (Lucy Mack Smith, History of Joseph Smith, p. 74).

The first serious attempt to discredit Joseph Smith and the Book of Mormon was by Abner Cole, editor of the Reflector, a local paper in Palmyra, New York. Writing under the pseudonym Obadiah Dogberry, Cole published in his paper extracts from two pirated chapters of the 1830 edition of the Book of Mormon, but was compelled to desist because he was violating copyright law. Cole resorted to satire. He attempted to malign Joseph Smith by associating him with money digging, and he claimed that Joseph was influenced by a magician named Walters.

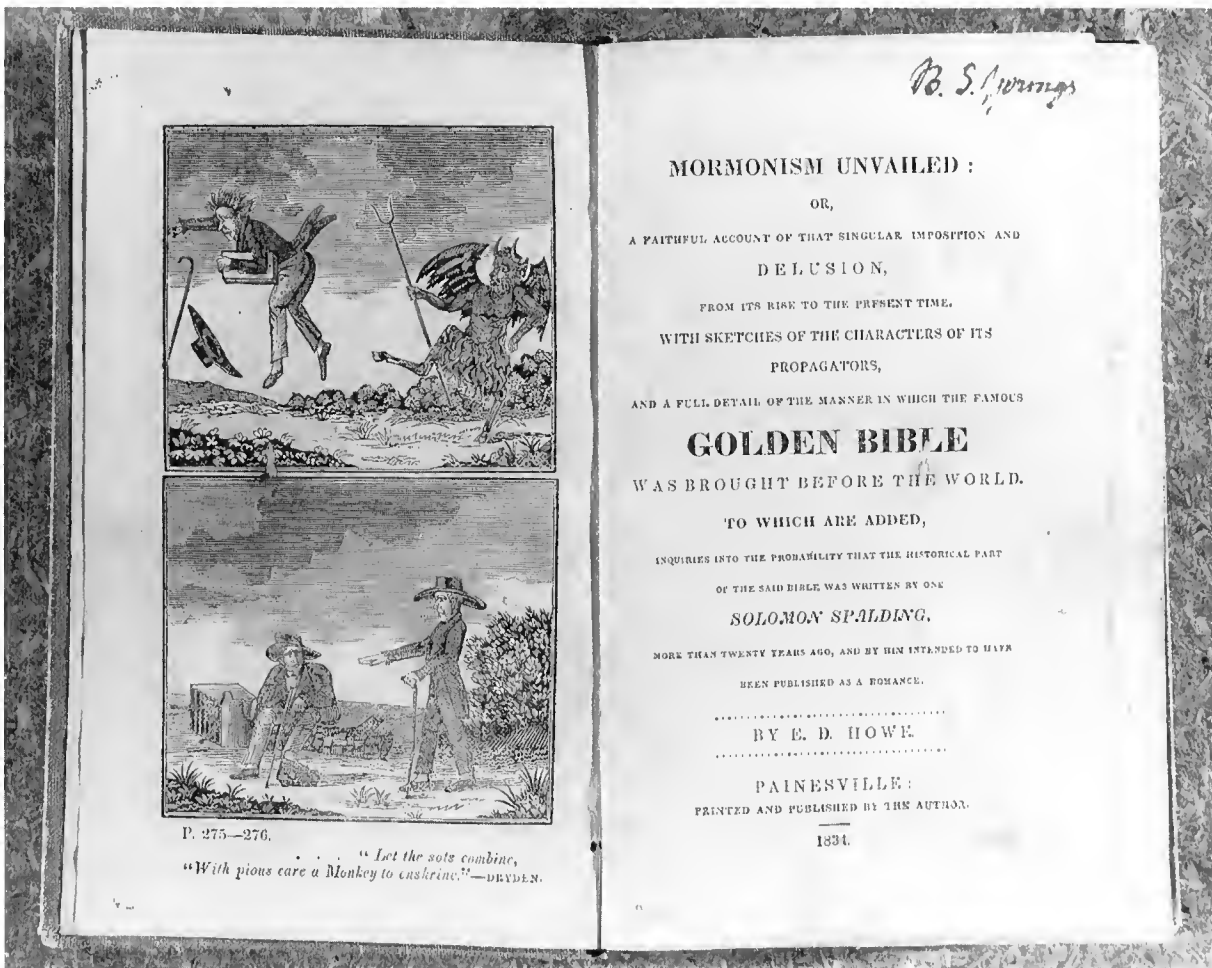

Alexander Campbell, founder of the Disciples of Christ, wrote the first published anti-Mormon pamphlet. The text appeared first as articles in his own paper, the Millennial Harbinger (1831), and then in a pamphlet entitled Delusions (1832). Campbell concluded, "I cannot doubt for a single moment that [Joseph Smith] is the sole author and proprietor of [the Book of Mormon]." Two years later he recanted this conclusion and accepted a new theory for the origin of the Book of Mormon, namely that Joseph Smith had somehow collaborated with Sidney RIGDON to produce the Book of Mormon from the SPAULDING MANUSCRIPT (see below).

The most notable anti-Mormon work of this period, Mormonism Unveiled (sic), was published by Eber D. Howe in 1834. Howe collaborated with apostate Philastus Hurlbut, twice excommunicated from the Church for immorality. Hurlbut was hired by an anti-Mormon committee to find those who would attest to Smith's dishonesty. He "collected" affidavits from seventy-two contemporaries who professed to know Joseph Smith and were willing to speak against him. Mormonism Unveiled attempted to discredit Joseph Smith and his family by assembling these affidavits and nine letters written by Ezra Booth, also an apostate from the Church. These documents allege that the Smiths were money diggers and irresponsible people. Howe advanced the theory that Sidney Rigdon obtained a manuscript written by Solomon Spaulding, rewrote it into the Book of Mormon, and then convinced Joseph Smith to tell the public that he had translated the book from plates received from an angel. This theory served as an alternative to Joseph Smith's account until the Spaulding Manuscript was discovered in 1884 and was found to be unrelated to the Book of Mormon.

The Hurlbut-Howe collection and Campbell's Delusions were the major sources for nearly all other nineteenth- and some twentieth-century anti-Mormon writings, notably the works of Henry Caswall, John C. Bennett, Pomeroy Tucker, Thomas Gregg, William Linn, and George Arbaugh. Most of these writers drew routinely from the same body of anti-Mormon lore (see H. Nibley, "How to Write an Anti-Mormon Book," Brigham Young University Extension Publications, Feb. 17, 1962, p. 30).

Perhaps the most infamous manifestation of anti-Mormonism came in the MISSOURI CONFLICT, during which Governor Lilburn W. Boggs issued an EXTERMINATION ORDER. "The Mormons," he wrote, "must be treated as enemies and must be exterminated or driven from the state, if necessary for the public good" (HC 3:175). This order led to the expulsion of the Mormons from Missouri and their resettlement in Illinois.

While incarcerated in LIBERTY JAIL in 1839, Joseph Smith wrote to the Saints and instructed them not to respond polemically but to "gather up the libelous publications that are afloat; and all that are in the magazines, and in the encyclopedias, and all the libelous histories that are published, and are writing, and by whom" so that they could bring to light all misleading and untruthful reports about the Church (D&C 123:4–5, 12–13). This procedure has been followed by Latter-day Saints over the years.

Title page of E. D. Howe's Mormonism Unveiled (1834), one of the earliest anti-Mormon publications. It advanced the theory that the historical part of the Book of Mormon "was written by one Solomon Spalding." Courtesy Rare Books and Manuscripts, Brigham Young University.

After the Saints moved to NAUVOO, Illinois, a principal antagonist was Thomas C. Sharp, editor of the Warsaw Signal. Alarmed over the Church's secular power, he used his paper to oppose it. In 1841 he published Mormonism Portrayed, by William Harris.

Six notable anti-Mormon books were published in 1842. The first was The History of the Saints; or, An Exposé of Joe Smith and Mormonism, by John C. Bennett, who had served as Joseph Smith's counselor in the First Presidency and was also the first mayor of Nauvoo. After he was excommunicated from the Church for immorality, he turned against the Mormons and published a series of letters in a Springfield, Missouri, newspaper. He charged that Joseph Smith was "one of the grossest and most infamous impostors that ever appeared upon the face of the earth." Bennett's history borrowed heavily from Mormonism Portrayed.

That same year, Joshua V. Himes published Mormon Delusions and Monstrosities, which incorporated much of Alexander Campbell's Delusions. The Reverend John A. Clark published Gleanings by the Way, and Jonathan B. Turner, Mormonism in All Ages. Both books relied heavily on Howe and Hurlbut's Mormonism Unveiled. Daniel P. Kidder's Mormonism and the Mormons expanded the Spaulding theory of Book of Mormon origins to include Oliver COWDERY in addition to Joseph Smith and Sidney Rigdon.

Called the "Anti-Mormon Extraordinaire," the Reverend Henry Caswall published The City of the Mormons, or Three Days at Nauvoo. He claimed that he gave Joseph Smith a copy of a Greek manuscript of the Psalms and that Smith identified it as a dictionary of Egyptian hieroglyphics. Caswall invented dialogue between himself and Smith to portray Joseph Smith as ignorant, uncouth, and deceptive. In 1843 Caswall published The Prophet of the Nineteenth Century in London, borrowing most of his material from Clark and Turner.

By 1844 Joseph Smith also faced serious dissension within the Church. Several of his closest associates disagreed with him over the PLURAL MARRIAGE revelation and other doctrines. Among the principal dissenters were William and Wilson Law, Austin Cowles, Charles Foster, Francis and Chauncey Higbee, Charles Ivins, and Robert Foster. They became allied with local anti-Mormon elements and published one issue of a newspaper, the Nauvoo Expositor. In it they charged that Joseph Smith was a fallen prophet, guilty of whoredoms, and dishonest in financial matters.

The Nauvoo City Council and Mayor Joseph Smith declared the newspaper an illegal "nuisance" and directed the town marshal to destroy the press. This destruction inflamed the hostile anti-Mormons around Nauvoo. On June 12, 1844, Thomas Sharp's newspaper, the Warsaw Signal, called for the extermination of the Latter-day Saints: "War and extermination is inevitable! Citizens arise, one and all!!! Can you stand by, and suffer such infernal devils! to rob men of their property and rights, without avenging them. . . . Let [your comment] be made with powder and ball!!!" Two weeks later Joseph Smith and his brother Hyrum were assassinated in CARTHAGE JAIL while awaiting trial on charges of treason.

Sharp defended the killing on the grounds that "the most respectable citizens" had called for it. Sharp and four others eventually were tried for the murders, but were acquitted for lack of evidence.

Many felt that the Church would die with its founders. When the members united under the leadership of the Twelve Apostles, anti-Mormon attacks began with new vigor. Sharp renewed his call for the removal of the Mormons from Illinois. By September 1845, more than 200 Church members' homes were burned in the outlying areas of Nauvoo. In February 1846, the Saints crossed the Mississippi and began the exodus to the West.

Revenge was possibly a motive of some anti-Mormons, especially apostates. Philastus Hurlbut, Simonds Ryder, Ezra Booth, and John C. Bennett sought revenge because the Church had disciplined them. Alexander Campbell was angered because he lost many of his Campbellite followers when they joined the Latter-day Saints. Mark Aldrich had invested in a real-estate development that failed because Mormon immigrants did not support it, and Thomas Sharp had lost many of his general business prospects.

MORMON STEREOTYPING AND THE CRUSADE AGAINST POLYGAMY (1847–1896). Settlement in the West provided welcome isolation for the Church, but public disclosure of the practice of POLYGAMY in 1852 brought a new barrage of ridicule and a confrontation with the federal government.

The years from 1850 to 1890 were turbulent ones for the Church because reformers, ministers, and the press openly attacked the practice of polygamy. Opponents founded antipolygamy societies, and Congress passed ANTIPOLYGAMY LEGISLATION. Mormons were stereotyped as people who defied the law and were immoral. The clear aim of the judicial and political crusade against the Mormons was to destroy the Church. Only the 1890 MANIFESTO, a statement by Church President Wilford WOODRUFF that abolished polygamy officially, pacified the government, allowing the return of confiscated Church property. Voluminous anti-Mormon writings, lectures, and cartoons at this time stereotyped the Church as a theocracy that defied the laws of conventional society; many portrayed its members as deluded and fanatical; and they alleged that polygamy, secret rituals, and BLOOD ATONEMENT were the theological underpinnings of the Church. The main motives were to discredit LDS belief, morally to reform a perceived evil, or to exploit the controversy for financial and political profit. The maligning tactics that were used included verbal attacks against Church leaders; caricatures in periodicals, magazines, and lectures; fictional inventions; and outright falsehoods.

Probably the most influential anti-Mormon work in this period was Pomeroy Tucker's Origin, Rise, and Progress of Mormonism (1867). A printer employed by E. B. Grandin, publisher of the Wayne Sentinel and printer of the first edition of the Book of Mormon, Tucker claimed to have been associated closely with Joseph Smith. He supported the Hurlbut-Howe charge that the Smiths were dishonest and alleged that they stole from their neighbors. However, he acknowledged that his insinuations were not "sustained by judicial investigation."

The Reverend M. T. Lamb's The Golden Bible or the Book of Mormon: Is It from God? (1887) ridiculed the Book of Mormon as "verbose, blundering, stupid, . . . improbable, . . . impossible, . . . [and] a foolish guess." He described the book as unnecessary and far inferior to the Bible, and he characterized those who believe the Book of Mormon as being misinformed.

Of fifty-six anti-Mormon novels published during the nineteenth century, four established a pattern for all of the others. The four were sensational, erotic novels focusing on the supposed plight of women in the Church. Alfreda Eva Bell's Boadicea, the Mormon Wife (1855) depicted Church members as "murderers, forgers, swindlers, gamblers, thieves, and adulterers!" Orvilla S. Belisle's Mormonism Unveiled (1855) had the heroine hopelessly trapped in a Mormon harem. Metta Victoria Fuller Victor's Mormon Wives (1856) characterized Mormons as a "horrid" and deluded people. Maria Ward (a pseudonym) depicted Mormon torture of women in Female Life Among the Mormons (1855). Authors wrote lurid passages designed to sell the publications. Excommunicated members tried to capitalize on their former membership in the Church to sell their stories. Fanny Stenhouse's Tell It All (1874) and Ann Eliza Young's Wife No. 19 (1876) sensationalized the polygamy theme. William Hickman sold his story to John H. Beadle, who exaggerated the DANITE myth in Brigham's Destroying Angel (1872) to caricature Mormons as a violent people.

Church leaders responded to these attacks and adverse publicity only through sermons and admonitions. They defended the Church's fundamental doctrine of revelation and authority from God. During the period of federal prosecution, the First Presidency condemned the acts against the Church by the U.S. Congress and Supreme Court as violations of the United States Constitution.

THE SEARCH FOR A PSYCHOLOGICAL EXPLANATION (1897–1945). After the Church officially discontinued polygamy in 1890, the public image of Mormonism improved and became moderately favorable. However, in 1898 Utah elected to the U.S. Congress B. H. Roberts, who had entered into plural marriages before the Manifesto. His election revived polygamy charges and further exposés by magazine muckrakers, and Congress refused to seat him. During the congressional debate, the Order of Presbytery in Utah issued a publication, Ten Reasons Why Christians Cannot Fellowship the Mormon Church, mainly objecting to the doctrine of modern revelation.

The election of Reed Smoot to the U.S. Senate (January 20, 1903) prompted additional controversy. Although he was not a polygamist, Smoot was a member of the QUORUM OF THE TWELVE APOSTLES. Ten months after he had been sworn in as a senator, his case was reviewed by the Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections. The SMOOT HEARINGS lasted from January 1904 to February 1907. Finally, in 1907 the Senate voted to allow him to take his seat. The First Presidency then published An Address to the World, explaining the Church's doctrines and answering charges. The Salt Lake Ministerial Association rebutted that address in the Salt Lake Tribune on June 4, 1907.

During 1910 and 1911, Pearson's, Collier's, Cosmopolitan, McClure's, and Everybody's magazines published vicious anti-Mormon articles. McClure's charged that the Mormons still practiced polygamy. Cosmopolitan compared Mormonism to a viper with tentacles reaching for wealth and power. The editors called the Church a "loathsome institution" whose "slimy grip" had served political and economic power in a dozen western states. These articles are classified by Church historians as the "magazine crusade."

The advent of the motion picture brought a repetition of the anti-Mormon stereotype. From 1905 to 1936, at least twenty-one anti-Mormon films were produced. The most sordid of them were A Mormon Maid (1917) and Trapped by the Mormons (1922). The films depicted polygamous leaders seeking women converts to satisfy their lusts, and Mormons murdering innocent travelers in secret rites. Some of the most virulent anti-Mormon writings at this time came from Britain. Winifred Graham (Mrs. Theodore Cory), a professional anti-Mormon novelist, charged that Mormon missionaries were taking advantage of World War I by proselytizing women whose husbands were away to war. The film Trapped by the Mormons was based on one of her novels.

When the Spaulding theory of Book of Mormon origins was discredited, anti-Mormon proponents turned to psychology to explain Joseph Smith's visions and revelations. Walter F. Prince and Theodore Schroeder offered explanations for BOOK OF MORMON NAMES by way of imaginative but remote psychological associations. I. Woodbridge Riley claimed in The Founder of Mormonism (New York, 1903) that “Joseph Smith, Junior was an epileptic.” He was the first to suggest that Ethan Smith’s View of the Hebrews (1823) and Josiah Priest’s The Wonders of Nature and Providence, Displayed (1825) were the sources for the Book of Mormon.

One of many political cartoons from the late nineteenth century, depicting Mormonism as a despotic, ignorant, adulterous threat to society. Charles W. Carter Collection.

At the time the Church commemorated its centennial in 1930, American historian Bernard De Voto asserted in the American Mercury, “Unquestionably, Joseph Smith was a paranoid.” He later admitted that the Mercury article was a “dishonest attack” (IE 49 [Mar. 1946]:154).

Harry M. Beardsley, in Joseph Smith and His Mormon Empire (1931), advanced the theory that Joseph Smith’s visions, revelations, and the Book of Mormon were by-products of his subconscious mind. Vardis Fisher, a popular novelist with Mormon roots in Idaho, published Children of God: An American Epic (1939). The work is somewhat sympathetic to the Mormon heritage, while offering a naturalistic origin for the Mormon practice of polygamy, and describes Joseph Smith in terms of “neurotic impulses.”

In 1945 Fawn Brodie published No Man Knows My History, a psychobiographical account of Joseph Smith. She portrayed him as a “prodigious mythmaker” who absorbed his theological ideas from his New York environment. The book repudiated the Rigdon-Spaulding theory, revived the Alexander Campbell thesis that Joseph Smith alone was the author of the book, and postulated that View of the Hebrews (following Riley, 1903) provided the basic source material for the Book of Mormon. Brodie’s interpretations have been followed by several other writers.

Church scholars have criticized Brodie’s methods for several reasons. First, she ignored valuable manuscript material in the Church archives that was accessible to her. Second, her sources were mainly biased anti-Mormon documents collected primarily in the New York Public Library, Yale Library, and Chicago Historical Library. Third, she began with a predetermined conclusion that shaped her work: “I was convinced,” she wrote, “before I ever began writing that Joseph Smith was not a true prophet,” and felt compelled to supply an alternative explanation for his works (quoted in Newell G. Bringham, “Applause, Attack, and Ambivalence—Varied Responses to Fawn M. Brodie’s No Man Knows My History,” Utah Historical Quarterly 57 [Winter 1989]:47–48). Fourth, by using a psychobiographical approach, she imputed thoughts and motives to Joseph Smith. Even Vardis Fisher criticized her book, writing that it was “almost more a novel than a biography because she rarely hesitates to give the content of a mind or to explain motives which at best can only be surmised” (p. 57).

REVIVAL OF OLD THEORIES AND ALLEGATIONS (1946–1990). Anti-Mormon writers were most prolific during the post-Brodie era. Despite a generally favorable press toward the Church during many of these years, of all anti-Mormon books, novels, pamphlets, tracts, and flyers published in English before 1990, more than half were published between 1960 and 1990 and a third of them between 1970 and 1990.

Networks of anti-Mormon organizations operate in the United States. The 1987 Directory of Cult Research Organizations contains more than a hundred anti-Mormon listings. These networks distribute anti-Mormon literature, provide lectures that attack the Church publicly, and proselytize Mormons. Pacific Publishing House in California lists more than a hundred anti-Mormon publications.

A broad spectrum of anti-Mormon authors has produced the invective literature of this period. Evangelicals and some apostate Mormons assert that Latter-day Saints are not Christians. The main basis for this judgment is that the Mormon belief in the Christian GODHEAD is different from the traditional Christian doctrine of the Trinity. They contend that Latter-day Saints worship a "different Jesus" and that their scriptures are contrary to the Bible. Another common tactic is to attempt to show how statements by past Church leaders contradict those by current leaders on such points as Adam as God, blood atonement, and plural marriage.

A current example of ridicule and distortion of Latter-day Saint beliefs comes from Edward Decker, an excommunicated Mormon and co-founder of Ex-Mormons for Jesus, now known as Saints Alive in Jesus. Professing love for the Saints, Decker has waged an attack on their beliefs. Latter-day Saints see his film and book, both entitled The Godmakers, as a gross misrepresentation of their beliefs, especially the TEMPLE ORDINANCES. A regional director of the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith and the Arizona Regional Board of the National Conference of Christians and Jews are among those who have condemned the film.

Though anti-Mormon criticisms, misrepresentations, and falsehoods are offensive to Church members, the First Presidency has counseled members not to react to or debate those who sponsor them and has urged them to keep their responses "in the form of a positive explanation of the doctrines and practices of the Church" (Church News, Dec. 18, 1983, p. 2).

Two prolific anti-Mormon researchers are Gerald and Sandra Tanner. They commenced writing in 1959 and now offer more than 200 publications.

Their main approach is to demonstrate discrepancies, many of which Latter-day Saints consider contrived or trivial, between current and past Church teachings. They operate and publish under the name of the Utah Lighthouse Ministry, Inc. Their most notable work, Mormonism—Shadow or Reality? (1964, revised 1972, 1987), contains the essence of their claims against the Church.

During the 1950s, 1960s, and early 1970s, the Church had a generally favorable public image as reflected in the news media. That image became more negative in the later 1970s and the early 1980s. Church opposition to the equal rights amendment and the excommunication of Sonia Johnson for apostasy, the Church's position with respect to priesthood and BLACKS (changed in 1978), a First Presidency statement opposing the MX missile, the John Singer episode including the bombing of an LDS meetinghouse, tensions between some historians and Church leaders, the forged "Salamander" letter, and the other Mark Hofmann FORGERIES and murders have provided grist for negative press and television commentary. The political leverage of the Church and its financial holdings have also been subjects of articles with a strong negative orientation.

A widely circulated anti-Mormon book, The Mormon Murders, by Steven Naifeh and Gregory White Smith (1988), employs several strategies reminiscent of old-style anti-Semitism. The authors use the Hofmann forgeries and murders as a springboard and follow the stock anti-Mormon themes and methods found in earlier works. They explain Mormonism in terms of wealth, power, deception, and fear of the past.

Church leaders have consistently appealed to the fairness of readers and urged them to examine the Book of Mormon and other latter-day SCRIPTURES and records for themselves rather than to prejudge the Church based on anti-Mormon publications. In 1972 the Church established the Public Communications Department, headquartered in Salt Lake City, to release public information about the Church.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

No definitive history of anti-Mormon activities has been written. A sample of LDS sources on anti-Mormonism follows: Allen, James B., and Leonard J. Arrington. "Mormon Origins in New York: An Introductory Analysis." BYU Studies 9 (1969):241–74. Analyzes pro-Mormon and anti-Mormon approaches.

Anderson, Richard Lloyd. "Joseph Smith's New York Reputation Reappraised." BYU Studies 10 (1970):283–314. Analyzes the Hurlbut-Howe affidavits published in Mormonism Unveiled.

Bunker, Gary L., and Davis Bitton. The Mormon Graphic Image 1834–1914. Salt Lake City, 1983. Traces the history of anti-Mormon caricature.

Bushman, Richard L. Joseph Smith and the Beginnings of Mormonism. Urbana, Ill., 1984. Discusses the early anti-Mormonism writings of Campbell, Howe, and Hurlbut.

Kirkham, Francis W. A New Witness for Christ in America, 2 vols. Independence, Mo., 1942, and Salt Lake City, 1952. Examines the early newspaper articles and anti-Mormon explanations for the origin of the Book of Mormon.

Nibley, Hugh W. The Mythmakers. Salt Lake City, 1961. Surveys the anti-Mormon writers during the Joseph Smith period.

———. "Censoring the Joseph Smith Story," IE 64 (July, Aug., Oct., Nov. 1961). Serialized articles examining how fifty anti-Mormon works treat the Joseph Smith story.

———. Sounding Brass. Salt Lake City, 1963. Surveys the anti-Mormon writers during the Brigham Young period.

———. The Prophetic Book of Mormon, CWIIN 8 chaps. 4–8, 10–12, examines anti-Mormon arguments.

Scharffs, Gilbert W. The Truth About the Godmakers. Salt Lake City, 1986. Treats the film The Godmakers.

WILLIAM O. NELSON

---

ANTIPOLYGAMY LEGISLATION

Bigamy is the crime of marrying while an undivorced spouse from a valid prior marriage is living. Because many prominent nineteenth-century Mormon men became polygamists under Church mandate, both their vulnerability to prosecution for bigamy and the legal attacks on the Church and its members for supporting PLURAL MARRIAGE created a crisis for Mormonism during the 1870s and 1880s.

Bigamy was recognized as an offense by the early English ecclesiastical courts, which considered it an affront to the marriage sacrament. Parliament enacted a statute in 1604 that made bigamy a felony cognizable in the English common law courts. After American independence, the states adopted antibigamy laws, but they received little attention until the nineteenth century in Utah.

The United States government has constitutional power to enact laws governing territories, and under that authority Congress enacted the Morrill Act (1862), making bigamy in a territory a crime punishable by a fine and five years in prison. The statute was upheld in REYNOLDS v. UNITED STATES (1879), although the defendant argued that the law violated the First Amendment guarantee of the free exercise of religion.

Few Mormons were prosecuted for bigamy because the government had difficulty obtaining testimony about plural wedding ceremonies. Rather, they were charged with bigamous cohabitation, a misdemeanor created by the Edmunds Act (1882). Proving cohabitation was easy enough, and over 1,300 Latter-day Saints were jailed as "cohabs" in the 1880s.

Antipolygamy legislation also put pressure on the Church by threatening members' civil rights and Church property rights. The Edmunds Act barred persons living in POLYGAMY from jury service, public office, and voting. The Edmunds-Tucker Act (1887) disincorporated both the Church and the Perpetual Emigrating Fund on the ground that they fostered polygamy. Furthermore, it authorized seizure of Church real estate not directly used for religious purposes, and acquired in excess of a $50,000 limitation imposed by the Morrill Act. In the Idaho Territory a test oath adopted in 1885 was used to ban all Mormons (and former Mormons) from voting because of the Church's position on polygamy.

In 1890 after the U.S. Supreme Court upheld the seizure of Church property under the Edmunds-Tucker Act in The Late Corporation of the Mormon Church v. United States and the Idaho test oath in Davis v. Beason, it became clear that plural marriage was leading toward the economic and political destruction of the Church. Shortly after these decisions, a revelation was received by President Wilford WOODRUFF, who then withdrew the requirement for worthy males to take plural wives and announced the MANIFESTO, formally stating his counsel to Latter-day Saints to abide by antibigamy laws (see D&C Official Declaration—1). The Manifesto ended the legal confrontation between the U.S. government and the Church.

Congress passed a final federal antibigamy provision in 1892, which excluded polygamists from immigration into the United States. This exclusion remains part of the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Code.

Utah, Oklahoma, New Mexico, and Arizona incorporated antibigamy provisions into their turn-of-the-century state constitutions as required by Congress for admission to the Union. Idaho's constitution not only outlaws bigamy but also bars polygamists and persons "celestially married" from public office and voting. However, that was interpreted in Budge v. Toncray by the Idaho court not

Anderson, Richard Lloyd. "Joseph Smith's New York Reputation Reappraised." BYU Studies 10 (1970):283–314. Analyzes the Hurlbut-Howe affidavits published in Mormonism Unveiled.

Bunker, Gary L., and Davis Bitton. The Mormon Graphic Image 1834–1914. Salt Lake City, 1983. Traces the history of anti-Mormon caricature.

Bushman, Richard L. Joseph Smith and the Beginnings of Mormonism. Urbana, Ill., 1984. Discusses the early anti-Mormonism writings of Campbell, Howe, and Hurlbut.

Kirkham, Francis W. A New Witness for Christ in America, 2 vols. Independence, Mo., 1942, and Salt Lake City, 1952. Examines the early newspaper articles and anti-Mormon explanations for the origin of the Book of Mormon.

Nibley, Hugh W. The Mythmakers. Salt Lake City, 1961. Surveys the anti-Mormon writers during the Joseph Smith period.

———. "Censoring the Joseph Smith Story," IE 64 (July, Aug., Oct., Nov. 1961). Serialized articles examining how fifty anti-Mormon works treat the Joseph Smith story.

———. Sounding Brass. Salt Lake City, 1963. Surveys the anti-Mormon writers during the Brigham Young period.

———. The Prophetic Book of Mormon, CWIIN 8 chaps. 4–8, 10–12, examines anti-Mormon arguments.

Scharffs, Gilbert W. The Truth About the Godmakers. Salt Lake City, 1986. Treats the film The Godmakers.

WILLIAM O. NELSON

---

ANTIPOLYGAMY LEGISLATION

Bigamy is the crime of marrying while an undivorced spouse from a valid prior marriage is living. Because many prominent nineteenth-century Mormon men became polygamists under Church mandate, both their vulnerability to prosecution for bigamy and the legal attacks on the Church and its members for supporting PLURAL MARRIAGE created a crisis for Mormonism during the 1870s and 1880s.

Bigamy was recognized as an offense by the early English ecclesiastical courts, which considered it an affront to the marriage sacrament. Parliament enacted a statute in 1604 that made bigamy a felony cognizable in the English common law courts. After American independence, the states adopted antibigamy laws, but they received little attention until the nineteenth century in Utah.

The United States government has constitutional power to enact laws governing territories, and under that authority Congress enacted the Morrill Act (1862), making bigamy in a territory a crime punishable by a fine and five years in prison. The statute was upheld in REYNOLDS v. UNITED STATES (1879), although the defendant argued that the law violated the First Amendment guarantee of the free exercise of religion.

Few Mormons were prosecuted for bigamy because the government had difficulty obtaining testimony about plural wedding ceremonies. Rather, they were charged with bigamous cohabitation, a misdemeanor created by the Edmunds Act (1882). Proving cohabitation was easy enough, and over 1,300 Latter-day Saints were jailed as "cohabs" in the 1880s.

Antipolygamy legislation also put pressure on the Church by threatening members' civil rights and Church property rights. The Edmunds Act barred persons living in POLYGAMY from jury service, public office, and voting. The Edmunds-Tucker Act (1887) disincorporated both the Church and the Perpetual Emigrating Fund on the ground that they fostered polygamy. Furthermore, it authorized seizure of Church real estate not directly used for religious purposes, and acquired in excess of a $50,000 limitation imposed by the Morrill Act. In the Idaho Territory a test oath adopted in 1885 was used to ban all Mormons (and former Mormons) from voting because of the Church's position on polygamy.

In 1890 after the U.S. Supreme Court upheld the seizure of Church property under the Edmunds-Tucker Act in The Late Corporation of the Mormon Church v. United States and the Idaho test oath in Davis v. Beason, it became clear that plural marriage was leading toward the economic and political destruction of the Church. Shortly after these decisions, a revelation was received by President Wilford WOODRUFF, who then withdrew the requirement for worthy males to take plural wives and announced the MANIFESTO, formally stating his counsel to Latter-day Saints to abide by antibigamy laws (see D&C Official Declaration—1). The Manifesto ended the legal confrontation between the U.S. government and the Church.

Congress passed a final federal antibigamy provision in 1892, which excluded polygamists from immigration into the United States. This exclusion remains part of the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Code.

Utah, Oklahoma, New Mexico, and Arizona incorporated antibigamy provisions into their turn-of-the-century state constitutions as required by Congress for admission to the Union. Idaho's constitution not only outlaws bigamy but also bars polygamists and persons "celestially married" from public office and voting. However, that was interpreted in Budge v. Toncray by the Idaho court not to include monogamous Mormons married in an LDS temple.

About 1,300 LDS men who had practiced plural marriage were jailed by federal officers pursuant to the Edmunds Act (1882), and many women were found "in contempt of court" and jailed for refusing to testify against their husbands. In the Utah penitentiary in 1885 are (from left to right) Francis A. Brown, Freddy Self, Moroni Brown, Amos Milton Musser, George H. Kellogg, Parley P. Pratt, Jr., Rudger Clawson, and Job Pingree. Photographer: John P. Soule.

During the twentieth century, federal and state governments have prosecuted other polygamists under a variety of general statutes. For example, federal officials have filed cases against polygamists charging unlawful use of the mails to proselytize for polygamy and alleging that moving plural wives across state boundaries violates laws against interstate kidnapping and interstate transportation of women for immoral purposes. Because of their practice of plural marriage, polygamists have also had legal troubles with state laws about adoption, inheritance, and government employment. Changing social attitudes about unconventional personal relationships may undermine the use of legislation in this way. For example, in 1988 an Arizona court held that it was illegal to deny a law enforcement security bond to an admitted polygamist merely because of his marital status.

Laws against plural marriage and its practitioners were enacted with reforming zeal. Congress and party platforms considered Mormon polygamy and southern slavery the "twin relics of barbarism." However, the lawmakers were not so forthcoming about their own religious bigotry: their aim was to destroy the Church's economic and political power, and bigamy was their tool. The Church's temporal position was eroded, but it survived the crisis.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- American Law Institute. Model Penal Code and Commentaries, Sec. 230.1. Philadelphia, 1980.
- Davis, Ray Jay. "The Polygamous Prelude." American Journal of Legal History 6 (1962):1-27.
- Driggs, Ken. "The Prosecutions Begin." Dialogue 21 (1988):109-125.

RAY JAY DAVIS

APOCALYPTIC TEXTS

Apocalypse is a Greek word meaning REVELATION, and apocalyptic as an adjective describes the genre of literature that contains visionary or revelatory experiences. Although such writings have been known from ancient times (examples include sections of ISAIAH, EZEKIEL, DANIEL, and the New Testament Revelation of JOHN), discoveries since the late nineteenth century of apocalyptic texts have increased scholarly interest in the subject. The apocalyptic tradition was one of those the early Christian church rejected in the third through the fifth centuries, only to be recovered in modern times through these discoveries. The importance of revelation in the RESTORATION of the gospel through the Prophet Joseph SMITH makes the study of apocalyptic texts as worthwhile to Latter-day Saints as it is interesting to scholars.

The relationship between the canonical prophetic and the apocalyptic in Jewish and Christian sources is acknowledged to be very close. Some of the major characteristics of revelation literature are as follows:

1. The seer often gives a brief autobiographical account in which he recounts his initial experiences and important personal events.
2. The recipient of a vision is often, but not always, ecstatic (the spirit apparently leaving the body during the vision).
3. The prophet may be taken on a journey through the heavens.
4. Visits to the SPIRIT WORLD, HEAVEN, and HELL are common.
5. The teachings imparted during such experiences are secrets that the prophet is counseled to keep to himself or share only with the community of believers (the experience may be shared, but most of what is learned cannot be disclosed).
6. Usually an account of the suffering that the righteous must endure is given.
7. The descent from heaven of a new order of society in the LAST DAYS is described.
8. Commonly an angelus interpres, a heavenly messenger, is sent to explain and interpret the vision.
9. After receiving such visions, the prophet is almost always overcome and has to wait some time before receiving back his strength or perhaps is raised up quickly by the right hand of divinity.

Although scholars have specifically identified and studied the genre of apocalyptic literature mainly since the 1950s, students of the Restoration will recognize every aspect of this ancient literary form in the life and writings of Joseph Smith before 1844. Accounts of the FIRST VISION contain an autobiographical introduction, as do visions of NEPHI<sub>1</sub> in the Book of Mormon and of Abraham in the Pearl of Great Price. In 1 Nephi 11, Nephi is taken in the spirit to a high mountain (a very popular theme in revelation), and Moses, ALMA<sub>2</sub>, Joseph Smith, and others speak of being overcome by the visions they received (Moses 1:10; Mosiah 27:19; JS—H 1:20). Enoch (Moses 7; see also 1 Enoch), Moses (Moses 1), and Joseph Smith (e.g., D&C 76) describe journeys into and through eternal realms, recording the infinite creations of God and numerous places where men may ultimately dwell. Those same prophets, and others whose accounts are found in the Book of Mormon, report visions of the last days, the wars and destructions among men, and the ultimate victory of God. In keeping with apocalyptic tradition, the details of such visions are sealed up with a promise that they will be given to the righteous in a time determined by the Lord. Angels appeared to Joseph Smith to instruct him and explain such things as how to find and recover PLATES seen in a vision and how to baptize properly and with the authority given by a messenger from God. In the Book of Mormon, Nephi saw a vision more completely through the assistance of an angel who pointed out and explained details of the apocalypse to him. These representative examples show how the apocalyptic tradition is as interwoven in the fabric of the Restoration as it was in the traditions of ancient Judaism or early Christianity.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Hellholm, David, ed. International Colloquium on Apocalypticism (1979: Uppsala, Sweden). Tübingen, 1983.
- Koch, Klaus. Ratlos vor der Apokalypik. Gutersloh, 1970. Translated by M. Kohl as The Rediscovery of Apocalyptic. London, 1972.
- Nibley, Hugh W. "Last Call: An Apocalyptic Warning from the Book of Mormon." In CWHN 8:498–532.

G. WILFRED GRIGGS

APOCRYPHA AND PSEUDEPIGRAPHIA

These two terms are often found together in modern scholarly writings, although they had quite different meanings in ancient times. "Apocrypha" in its various forms refers to something hidden or concealed, usually because of its special or sacred value to the one hiding it. "Pseudepigrapha" refers to writings falsely ascribed to some important or famous figure or to writings with a false title. Such writings are not considered genuine, at least in the sense of originating with the falsely ascribed name.

During the second century A.D., some Christian authors (for example, Irenaeus and Tertullian) began to use apocryphon (singular form) to designate a forged or false writing. Both authors, and those who followed them in this practice, were trying to discredit the secret and sacred writings of their opponents, whom they considered heretics. In time, therefore, many writings once kept hidden from the general public for reasons of their sacredness and holiness were rejected and branded as unreliable or false by church fathers who disliked them.

After Jerome translated the Bible into Latin (c. A.D. 400), the books known from the Greek version of the Old Testament but not contained in the Hebrew version became known as the Apocrypha, or writings of uncertain accuracy. This collection of writings was accepted as scripture by most Christians before the Council of Nicaea, but only by some following that council. In recent centuries, Catholics have generally accepted these books with the rest of the Old Testament, and Protestants have generally denied them scriptural status. In Joseph SMITH's day, some editions of the King James Version of the Bible placed the Apocrypha between the Old and New Testaments, and some other Protestant versions included the Apocrypha either with the Old Testament or as an appendix to the Bible.

When Joseph Smith was engaged in translating the Old Testament (see JOSEPH SMITH TRANSLATION OF THE BIBLE [JST]), he came to the Apocrypha and sought divine counsel on what to do with it. The revelation given in response to his prayer informed him that the Apocrypha contains both truth and error, but was "mostly translated correctly" (D&C 91:1). Although he was counseled not to translate the Apocrypha, the revelation states that any who read those writings with the HOLY SPIRIT as a guide "shall obtain benefit therefrom"; without the HOLY GHOST, a man "cannot be benefited" spiritually by reading the Apocrypha (D&C 91:5-6).

Since the nineteenth century, increased understanding of intertestamental Judaism and Hellenistic culture has shown the Apocrypha to be historically important and religiously valuable. These writings display a belief in resurrection, eternal life, and eschatological teachings concerning the LAST DAYS. The fall of Adam (see ADAM: ANCIENT SOURCES), sin, the Jewish Law, and the need for righteousness are topics also found in the Apocrypha.

Additionally, during the past two centuries many writings have been discovered that were purportedly written by ancient prophets or apostles, or were otherwise related to biblical texts (see LOST SCRIPTURE). Many of these writings were considered sacred to certain groups of Jews or Christians, but were rejected in the long process of biblical canonization (primarily from the second to the fifth centuries A.D.). Scholars routinely add these discoveries to the corpus of apocryphal and pseudepigraphical writings. The application of these terms in their modern sense (i.e., writings forged or falsely ascribed to an ancient religious figure) to ancient texts displays a modern bias against their spiritual or historical authenticity, but one should also note that often modern scholars do not consider most biblical books to be inspired by God or written by the authors associated with them.

One important aspect of the expanded collection of the Apocrypha has to do with the canon itself. Centuries after it was determined which books were to be included in the Bible, people began to believe and teach that the Bible was both complete (containing all that God had given through ancient prophets and apostles) and infallible (having been transmitted without any errors). Joseph Smith received corrections to both ideas, being given additional scripture originally written by ancient prophets and being inspired to make corrections in the texts of the Bible. Among the ancient writings he restored are the BOOK OF ABRAHAM and the writings of Moses (canonized as the BOOK OF MOSES, itself including a restoration to Moses of an older Enoch writing; see Moses 6-7); quotations from ancient biblical prophets in the Book of Mormon (such as JOSEPH OF EGYPT and four otherwise unknown writers named ZENOS, ZENOCK, NEUM, and EZIAS); and writings from the New Testament apostle John (see D&C 7 and 93). Corrections to the biblical text include an expanded version of Matthew 24 and alternate readings in Isaiah.

Not only has modern revelation resulted in the restoration of ancient prophetic records and opened the canon in modern times, but the recovery of many ancient texts shows how open and diverse the canon was in earlier times. One ancient religious tradition, repeated in different settings and at different times, attests to two levels of sacred writings, one for public discourse and the other for more restricted use within the community of believers. One might note in this regard that a similar injunction to keep some writings within a restricted community is found in the book of Moses revealed to Joseph Smith: "Show [these words] not unto any except them that believe" (Moses 1:42; cf. 4:32). Some recently found texts bear the title "Apoeryphon," used in the ancient sense of secret or hidden writing. It was this "advanced" level of instruction that was rejected by the church fathers, and the negative meaning of "apoeryphal" began to replace the positive or sacred sense. Because in ancient times many such writings were not made public by those who accepted them and because they were distorted and maligned by those who rejected them, scholars lack definitive methods by which to determine if these writings have been transmitted accurately.

In this large collection of writings, relating to both Old and New Testaments, many diverse subjects are discussed, and a few are found repeatedly. Revelation, in the form of APOCALYPTIC TEXTS, is perhaps the most common element: numerous apoeryphal texts claim to contain the mysteries, or secrets, of heaven revealed to man. Testaments of patriarchs frequently occur in the Old Testament apoeryphal writings; and instructions, eschatological warnings, ritual passages, and cosmic visions are transmitted by the resurrected Jesus to his disciples in many of the New Testament Apocrypha. The type of literature that encompasses these themes is often called Gnostic literature, and scholars generally view the gnosticism seen in apoeryphal texts as a fusion of many diverse elements (Hellenism, Judaism, mystery religions, and Christianity, to name a few) into a complex and mystical religious movement. Considerable study will be necessary before all the questions relating to the origin, accuracy, meaning, and significance of apoeryphal literature can be answered. Numerous versions of the fourteen books of the Old Testament Apocrypha known in Joseph Smith's time are available, either in separate publications or in modern printings of the Bible, such as the Jerusalem Bible or the New English Bible.

Joseph Smith was well in advance of modern perceptions concerning the Apocrypha when he was given the revelation warning the Saints to seek spiritual guidance when reading such works, alerting them to truths to be obtained therein.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Charlesworth, James H., ed. Old Testament Pseudepigrapha, 2 vols. New York, 1983, 1985.
- Cloward, Robert A. Old Testament Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha and the Dead Sea Scrolls: A Selected Bibliography of the Text Editions and English Translations. F.A.R.M.S. Reports. Provo, Utah, 1988.
- Griggs, C. Wilfred, ed. Apocryphal Writings and the Latter-day Saints. Provo, Utah, 1986.
- Hennecke, Edgar, and Wilhelm Schneemelcher, eds. New Testament Apocrypha, 2 vols. Translated by R. McL. Wilson. Philadelphia, 1963, 1965.

G. WILFRED GRIGGS

---

APOSTASY

Latter-day Saints believe that apostasy occurs whenever an individual or community rejects the revelations and ordinances of God, changes the gospel of Jesus Christ, or rebels against the commandments of God, thereby losing the blessings of the Holy Ghost and of divine AUTHORITY. The rise of revelatory communities, apostasies, and restorations has happened cyclically throughout the history of mankind, in a series of DISPENSATIONS from the time of Adam and Enoch (Moses 7) to the present. Latter-day Saints see a historical "great apostasy" and subsequent loss of authority beginning in the New Testament era and spreading in the centuries immediately following that era. Though Latter-day Saints have not emphasized the great apostasy as much as they have the concept that the Church is a revelatory RESTORATION, the need of a restoration implies that something important was lost after the departure of the primitive Christian church.

The English word "apostasy" derives from the Greek apostasía or apóstasis ("defection, revolt"; used in a political sense by Herodotus and Thucyd-ZENOS, ZENOCK, NEUM, and EZIAS); and writings from the New Testament apostle John (see D&C 7 and 93). Corrections to the biblical text include an expanded version of Matthew 24 and alternate readings in Isaiah.

Not only has modern revelation resulted in the restoration of ancient prophetic records and opened the canon in modern times, but the recovery of many ancient texts shows how open and diverse the canon was in earlier times. One ancient religious tradition, repeated in different settings and at different times, attests to two levels of sacred writings, one for public discourse and the other for more restricted use within the community of believers. One might note in this regard that a similar injunction to keep some writings within a restricted community is found in the book of Moses revealed to Joseph Smith: "Show [these words] not unto any except them that believe" (Moses 1:42; cf. 4:32). Some recently found texts bear the title "Apoeryphon," used in the ancient sense of secret or hidden writing. It was this "advanced" level of instruction that was rejected by the church fathers, and the negative meaning of "apoeryphal" began to replace the positive or sacred sense. Because in ancient times many such writings were not made public by those who accepted them and because they were distorted and maligned by those who rejected them, scholars lack definitive methods by which to determine if these writings have been transmitted accurately.

In this large collection of writings, relating to both Old and New Testaments, many diverse subjects are discussed, and a few are found repeatedly. Revelation, in the form of APOCALYPTIC TEXTS, is perhaps the most common element: numerous apoeryphal texts claim to contain the mysteries, or secrets, of heaven revealed to man. Testaments of patriarchs frequently occur in the Old Testament apoeryphal writings; and instructions, eschatological warnings, ritual passages, and cosmic visions are transmitted by the resurrected Jesus to his disciples in many of the New Testament Apocrypha. The type of literature that encompasses these themes is often called Gnostic literature, and scholars generally view the gnosticism seen in apoeryphal texts as a fusion of many diverse elements (Hellenism, Judaism, mystery religions, and Christianity, to name a few) into a complex and mystical religious movement. Considerable study will be necessary before all the questions relating to the origin, accuracy, meaning, and significance of apoeryphal literature can be answered. Numerous versions of the fourteen books of the Old Testament Apocrypha known in Joseph Smith's time are available, either in separate publications or in modern printings of the Bible, such as the Jerusalem Bible or the New English Bible.

Joseph Smith was well in advance of modern perceptions concerning the Apocrypha when he was given the revelation warning the Saints to seek spiritual guidance when reading such works, alerting them to truths to be obtained therein.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Charlesworth, James H., ed. Old Testament Pseudepigrapha, 2 vols. New York, 1983, 1985.
- Cloward, Robert A. Old Testament Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha and the Dead Sea Scrolls: A Selected Bibliography of the Text Editions and English Translations. F.A.R.M.S. Reports. Provo, Utah, 1988.
- Griggs, C. Wilfred, ed. Apocryphal Writings and the Latter-day Saints. Provo, Utah, 1986.
- Hennecke, Edgar, and Wilhelm Schneemelcher, eds. New Testament Apocrypha, 2 vols. Translated by R. McL. Wilson. Philadelphia, 1963, 1965.

G. WILFRED GRIGGS

---

APOSTASY

Latter-day Saints believe that apostasy occurs whenever an individual or community rejects the revelations and ordinances of God, changes the gospel of Jesus Christ, or rebels against the commandments of God, thereby losing the blessings of the Holy Ghost and of divine AUTHORITY. The rise of revelatory communities, apostasies, and restorations has happened cyclically throughout the history of mankind, in a series of DISPENSATIONS from the time of Adam and Enoch (Moses 7) to the present. Latter-day Saints see a historical "great apostasy" and subsequent loss of authority beginning in the New Testament era and spreading in the centuries immediately following that era. Though Latter-day Saints have not emphasized the great apostasy as much as they have the concept that the Church is a revelatory RESTORATION, the need of a restoration implies that something important was lost after the departure of the primitive Christian church.

The English word "apostasy" derives from the Greek apostasía or apóstasis ("defection, revolt"; used in a political sense by Herodotus and Thucydides); it is mentioned in a religious context in the Septuagint and the New Testament (e.g., Josh. 22:22 and 2 Chr. 29:19; 2 Thes. 2:3 states that an apostasía must come before the second coming of Christ). It can mean the intransitive “to stand away from,” or the active “to cause to stand away from.” Thus an apostasy can be an active, collective rebellion or a “falling away.”

Joseph SMITH in his FIRST VISION (1820) was told by Christ that all existing churches had gone astray, both in their teachings and in their practice, although they had “a form of godliness” (JS—H 1:18–19). Thus it was necessary for a “restoration” of the gospel to take place.

In addition, in the Book of Mormon (1 Ne. 11–14; 2 Ne. 28; cf. Morm. 8), the prophet NEPHI<sup>1</sup> had a vision of the early Christian church and its twelve apostles, against whom the “multitudes of the earth” and the house of Israel fought (1 Ne. 11:34–35). He foresaw a “great and abominable church” that persecuted true Christians and the poor, and whose members were motivated by such things as pride, clothing themselves in precious raiment, and indulging in sexual immorality (see GREAT AND ABOMINABLE CHURCH). It altered the simplicity of the gospel insidiously, did away with covenants, excised important scriptures, and denied the existence of miracles. This apostasy can be linked, in the ALLEGORY OF ZENOS, with the scattering of Israel when all the trees in the Lord’s vineyard had become corrupt (Jacob 5:39–48), and it was paralleled by the calamitous apostasy of the Nephites in the New World (1 Ne. 12:15–19; 4 Ne. 1:24–46).

However, this “great church” was not any one specific church, according to Nephi; in his apocalyptic vision there are only two churches, and “whoso belongeth not to the church of the Lamb of God belongeth to that great church” (1 Ne. 14:10). It is typological, symbolic of many historical and social movements (2 Ne. 27:1); even nominal adherents to Christ’s church, if driven by pride, wealth, prestige, and their appurtenances, may find themselves members of that “great church” (cf. 1 Ne. 8:27–28).

All through their history, Latter-day Saints have written and theorized about historical events involved in the “great apostasy,” a theme discussed in several Restorationist writings of the late eighteenth and early nineteenth centuries (see RESTORATIONISM, PROTESTANT). In 1833, referring to Mark 16:17–18 and 1 Corinthians 12, Joseph Smith stated: “By the foregoing testimonies we may look at the Christian world and see [that] the apostasy there has been from the apostolic platform” (TPJS, p. 15). Oliver COWDERY wrote on the apostasy in the first issue of the MESSENGER AND ADVOCATE (1834). In 1840 Orson PRATT spoke of “a general and awful apostasy from the religion of the New Testament” (Listen to the Voice of Truth, 1.1). He particularly emphasized a lack of binding ordinances because of the absence of PRIESTHOOD authority; baptism was a key example. In Pratt’s view all churches before the Restoration were wrong in some ways, doctrinally and ritually, even though they might be right in others. Benjamin Winchester, an early LDS pamphleteer, wrote an extensive treatise using New Testament sources to demonstrate that an apostasy had been prophesied (A History of Priesthood, Philadelphia, 1843, pp. 72–96). In the 1850s and 1860s many references were made to “the great apostasy” (O. Pratt, JD 12:247) and “the great falling away” (W. Woodruff, JD 8:262) in Latter-day Saint sermons.

This idea—breaking off from established religion because it seems out of tune with New Testament Christianity—has obvious Protestant overtones, but the LDS view differs from typical Protestant attitudes in its emphasis on the loss and restoration of exclusive, clear-cut priesthood authority, correct ordinances, and continuing revelation. In contrast, Protestants typically rely primarily on biblical reinterpretation.

In 1909 James E. Talmage wrote The Great Apostasy, in which he gathered New Testament passages that Latter-day Saints have cited to show that a great apostasy was predicted by Jesus Christ, Paul, and other apostles and prophets (esp. Matt. 24:4–13, 23–26; Acts 20:29–30; Gal. 1; 2 Thes. 2:7–8; 1 Tim. 4:1–3; 2 Tim. 3:1–6; 4:1–4; Jude 1:3–4; Rev. 13:4–9; 14:6–7; and in the Old Testament, Amos 8:11–12). Talmage also chronicled the persecution of early Christians that hastened the Apostasy and described the primitive Church as changing internally in several respects. He argued that the simple principles of the gospel were mixed with the pagan philosophical systems of the day (Trinitarianism, resulting in the Nicene Creed; false opposition of body and spirit, creating excessive asceticism); that rituals were changed and added to in unauthorized ways (simple early Christian rites were replaced by complex pagan-influenced ceremonies; baptism by immersion was lost; the baptism of infants was introduced [cf. Moro. 8]; communion was changed); and that church organization was altered (the apostles and prophets, the necessary foundation of the church of Christ, were martyred, leaving a void that could not be filled by bishops; thus the medieval church showed little similarity to the organization or practices of the New Testament church).

LDS teachings on the early Christian apostasy have received additional support in the twentieth century as some scholars have argued that the primitive Church began as a centralized Judaic organization, was faced with the challenge of a Hellenized/Oriental, ascetic Gnostic Christianity, and became like its enemy in order to compete. The very idea of a centralized Christianity has given way to a picture of diverse and fragmented early Christianity, where it is hard to determine what is orthodox and what is heretical, what is Gnostic and what is "mainstream." For instance, Peter Brown and William Phipps argue that Augustine's influential doctrine of ORIGINAL SIN, with its concomitant ritual, INFANT BAPTISM, was derived from his Gnostic background and was, in reality, heretical, while Pelagius' opposition to these ideas was orthodox. But Augustine's doctrines prevailed, and continue to influence Western theology and culture. Another early Christian doctrine that did not survive in Western Christianity was DEIFICATION, though it remained central to Eastern Christianity.

A complex religious and cultural milieu both nurtured and transformed early Christianity. Many factors must be taken into consideration in analyzing this transformation of Christianity. For example, some have put the blame exclusively on Greek philosophy and the influence of philosophy on Gnosticism for the rise of the great apostasy. But asceticism (i.e., hatred of the body, of sexuality, of the physical world) played a major role in the apostasy of the early church, and extreme asceticism is characteristically Oriental. Moreover, much of Greek philosophy has been found to be consistent with the gospel; Elder Orson F. Whitney referred to Plato and Socrates as "servants of the Lord," although in a "lesser sense" than the prophets (CR [April 1921]:33).

The concept of a historical apostasy from early Christianity can present a barrier between Latter-day Saints and others concerned with INTERFAITH RELATIONSHIPS. But Latter-day Saints do not view these events judgmentally; much of spiritual value happened during the Middle Ages and in other Christian churches. Brigham Young emphasized that good men before the restoration had "the spirit of revelation" and stated that John Wesley was as good a man "as ever walked on this earth" (JD 7:5; 6:170; 11:126). President Young held that all churches and religions have "more or less truth" (JD 7:283), and he admonished the Saints to seek and accept truths wherever they might be found. In conference talks, General Authorities, including President Spencer W. Kimball and President Thomas S. Monson, have quoted or praised such luminaries as Billy Graham and Mother Teresa.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Bauer, Walter. Orthodoxy and Heresy in Earliest Christianity. Philadelphia, 1971.
- Benson, Ezra T. "Apostasy from the Truth." IE 52 (Nov. 1949):713, 756-60.
- Brown, Peter. Augustine of Hippo, pp. 395-400. Berkeley, Calif., 1967.
- Brown, S. Kent. "Whither the Early Church?" Ensign 18 (Oct. 1988):7-10.
- Bushman, Richard L. Joseph Smith and the Beginnings of Mormonism, p. 207. Urbana, Ill., 1984.
- Dodds, Eric R. Pagan and Christian in an Age of Anxiety. Cambridge, 1965.
- Nibley, Hugh. The World and the Prophets. In CWIIN 3. ———. Mormonism and Early Christianity, in CWIIN 4, treats the disappearance of Christian baptisms for the dead (1948, pp. 100-167); the reshaping of early Christian texts and histories in light of the failure of the infant church to survive (1955, pp. 168-322); the forgotten teachings of Jesus during his forty-day ministry after his resurrection (1966, pp. 10-44); and the loss of the early Christian prayer circle (1978, pp. 45-99); bibliography (p. xii, n.8).
- Peterson, Daniel C., and Stephen D. Ricks. "Comparing LDS Beliefs with First Century Christianity." Ensign 18 (Mar. 1988):7-11.
- Phipps, William. "The Heresiarch: Pelagius or Augustine?" Anglican Theological Review 62 (1980):130-31.
- Roberts, B. H. The "Falling Away". Salt Lake City, 1931.
- . Outlines of Ecclesiastical History. Salt Lake City, 1893.
- Robinson, Stephen E. "Early Christianity and 1 Nephi 13-14." In First Nephi, The Doctrinal Foundation, ed. M. Nyman and C. Tate, pp. 177-91. Provo, Utah, 1988.
- Rudolph, Kurt. Gnosis: The Nature and History of Gnosticism. San Francisco, 1983.
- Sperry, Sidney B. "New Light on the Great Apostasy." IE 53 (Sept. 1950):710-11, 744-51.
- Talmage, James. The Great Apostasy. Salt Lake City, 1909.
- Vogel, Dan. Religious Seekers and the Advent of Mormonism, pp. 49-66. Salt Lake City, 1988, contains valuable bibliography; reviewed by Grant Underwood, BYU Studies 30 (Winter 1990):120-26.

TODD COMPTON

APOSTATE

Members of the Church vary in their levels of participation or belief (see ACTIVITY IN THE CHURCH). Latter-day Saints who have seriously contravened or ignored cardinal Church teachings (publicly or privately) are considered apostates, whether or not they have officially left the Church or affiliated with another religion. By not participating in Church meetings one is not considered apostate. However, when individuals ask to have their names removed from Church records, policy requires such requests to be honored. A Church DISCIPLINARY PROCEDURE may be held for any member who violates important commandments and “will not repent” (Mosiah 26:32; D&C 42:28). Open repudiation of the Church, its leaders, and teachings is one ground for excommunication.

The steps to apostasy are usually gradual. All members are counseled to guard against all manifestations of personal apostasy (DS 3:293–312; Asay, pp. 67–68). The most frequent causes of apostasy are failure to maintain strict standards of morality, taking personal offense (real or perceived), marrying someone who is of another faith or who is irreligious, neglecting to pray and maintain spirituality, or misunderstanding of the teachings of the Church.

Apostasy may be accelerated by a faulty assumption that scripture or Church leaders are infallible. Joseph SMITH taught that “a prophet was a prophet only when he was acting as such” (HC 5:265). He also declared he “was but a man, and [people] must not expect me to be perfect” (HC 5:181). Neither the Church nor its leaders and members claim infallibility.

Above all, the Church affirms that its members should seek personal revelation to know the truth and live in tune with the spirit of God. Those who have not done this may drop by the wayside when their faith is challenged or when difficulties arise.

Apostates sometimes become enemies of the Church. Leaving the Church, which claims to be God’s official church, containing the fulness of the gospel, often results in feelings of guilt. While many return, others develop a need to defend their actions, “disprove” the Church, or become hostile enemies. The fruits of apostasy are generally bitter. The Book of Mormon warns of unfavorable conditions that result from transgression contrary to “light and knowledge” (Alma 9:23).

LDS scriptures establish a loving and hopeful attitude toward apostates. Latter-day Saints are strongly counseled to love those who have left the faith, and to encourage, plead, and work with those who have strayed, inviting “the lost sheep” back to the fold (Luke 15:3–7). Of the wayward, the resurrected Savior taught, “Ye shall not cast him out of your . . . places of worship, for unto such shall ye continue to minister; for ye know not but what they will return and repent, and come unto me with full purpose of heart, and I shall heal them; and ye shall be the means of bringing salvation unto them” (3 Ne. 18:32). The desire to return is motivated by the reality of REPENTANCE enabled by the ATONEMENT of Jesus Christ. “He who has repented of his sins, the same is forgiven, and I, the Lord, remember them no more. By this ye may know if a man repenteth of his sins—behold, he will confess them and forsake them” (D&C 58:42–43).

[See also Anti-Mormon Publications; Schismatic Groups.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Asay, Carlos E. “Opposition to the Work of God.” Ensign 11 (Nov. 1981):67–68.
- Foster, Lawrence. “Career Apostates: Reflections on the Works of Jerald and Sandra Tanner.” Dialogue 17 (Summer 1984):35–60.
- Howard, F. Burton. “Come Back to the Lord.” Ensign 16 (Nov. 1986):76–78.

GILBERT W. SCHARFFS

APOSTLE

An “apostle” is an ordained leader in the MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOOD in The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Apostles are chosen through inspiration by the PRESIDENT OF THE CHURCH, sustained by the general membership of the Church, and ordained by the FIRST PRESIDENCY and the QUORUM OF THE TWELVE APOSTLES by the laying on of hands. They serve as GENERAL AUTHORITIES—as distinguished from local and regional officers—holding their office as apostle for the duration of their lives. The senior apostle is the President of the Church.

In addition to serving as witnesses of Jesus Christ to all the world (D&C 107:23), as Jesus’ apostles did, members of the current Quorum of

APOSTATE

Members of the Church vary in their levels of participation or belief (see ACTIVITY IN THE CHURCH). Latter-day Saints who have seriously contravened or ignored cardinal Church teachings (publicly or privately) are considered apostates, whether or not they have officially left the Church or affiliated with another religion. By not participating in Church meetings one is not considered apostate. However, when individuals ask to have their names removed from Church records, policy requires such requests to be honored. A Church DISCIPLINARY PROCEDURE may be held for any member who violates important commandments and “will not repent” (Mosiah 26:32; D&C 42:28). Open repudiation of the Church, its leaders, and teachings is one ground for excommunication.

The steps to apostasy are usually gradual. All members are counseled to guard against all manifestations of personal apostasy (DS 3:293–312; Asay, pp. 67–68). The most frequent causes of apostasy are failure to maintain strict standards of morality, taking personal offense (real or perceived), marrying someone who is of another faith or who is irreligious, neglecting to pray and maintain spirituality, or misunderstanding of the teachings of the Church.

Apostasy may be accelerated by a faulty assumption that scripture or Church leaders are infallible. Joseph SMITH taught that “a prophet was a prophet only when he was acting as such” (HC 5:265). He also declared he “was but a man, and [people] must not expect me to be perfect” (HC 5:181). Neither the Church nor its leaders and members claim infallibility.

Above all, the Church affirms that its members should seek personal revelation to know the truth and live in tune with the spirit of God. Those who have not done this may drop by the wayside when their faith is challenged or when difficulties arise.

Apostates sometimes become enemies of the Church. Leaving the Church, which claims to be God’s official church, containing the fulness of the gospel, often results in feelings of guilt. While many return, others develop a need to defend their actions, “disprove” the Church, or become hostile enemies. The fruits of apostasy are generally bitter. The Book of Mormon warns of unfavorable conditions that result from transgression contrary to “light and knowledge” (Alma 9:23).

LDS scriptures establish a loving and hopeful attitude toward apostates. Latter-day Saints are strongly counseled to love those who have left the faith, and to encourage, plead, and work with those who have strayed, inviting “the lost sheep” back to the fold (Luke 15:3–7). Of the wayward, the resurrected Savior taught, “Ye shall not cast him out of your . . . places of worship, for unto such shall ye continue to minister; for ye know not but what they will return and repent, and come unto me with full purpose of heart, and I shall heal them; and ye shall be the means of bringing salvation unto them” (3 Ne. 18:32). The desire to return is motivated by the reality of REPENTANCE enabled by the ATONEMENT of Jesus Christ. “He who has repented of his sins, the same is forgiven, and I, the Lord, remember them no more. By this ye may know if a man repenteth of his sins—behold, he will confess them and forsake them” (D&C 58:42–43).

[See also Anti-Mormon Publications; Schismatic Groups.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Asay, Carlos E. “Opposition to the Work of God.” Ensign 11 (Nov. 1981):67–68.
- Foster, Lawrence. “Career Apostates: Reflections on the Works of Jerald and Sandra Tanner.” Dialogue 17 (Summer 1984):35–60.
- Howard, F. Burton. “Come Back to the Lord.” Ensign 16 (Nov. 1986):76–78.

GILBERT W. SCHARFFS

APOSTLE

An “apostle” is an ordained leader in the MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOOD in The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Apostles are chosen through inspiration by the PRESIDENT OF THE CHURCH, sustained by the general membership of the Church, and ordained by the FIRST PRESIDENCY and the QUORUM OF THE TWELVE APOSTLES by the laying on of hands. They serve as GENERAL AUTHORITIES—as distinguished from local and regional officers—holding their office as apostle for the duration of their lives. The senior apostle is the President of the Church.

In addition to serving as witnesses of Jesus Christ to all the world (D&C 107:23), as Jesus’ apostles did, members of the current Quorum of the Twelve Apostles hold the KEYS OF THE PRIESTHOOD—that is, the rights of presidency (D&C 107:35; cf. 124:128). Of their priesthood authority, President Brigham Young said, “The keys of the eternal Priesthood, which is after the order of the Son of God, are comprehended by being an Apostle. All the Priesthood, all the keys, all the gifts, all the endowments, and everything preparatory to entering into the presence of the Father and of the Son, are in, composed of, circumscribed by, or I might say incorporated within the circumference of, the Apostleship” (JD 1:134–35). As a PRIESTHOOD QUORUM, the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles is next in authority to the Quorum of the First Presidency (D&C 107:24). Further, it directs the domestic and international ministry of the quorums of the SEVENTY (D&C 107:34; cf. 124:139–40), and except in the presence of a member of the First Presidency or a more senior member of the Twelve, an apostle presides wherever he may be in the Church.

Quorum of the Twelve Apostles (1961–1962): Front row (left to right): Joseph Fielding Smith, Harold B. Lee, Spencer W. Kimball, Ezra Taft Benson, Mark E. Petersen, Delbert L. Stapley. Back row (left to right): Marion G. Romney, LeGrand Richards, Richard L. Evans, George Q. Morris, Howard W. Hunter, Gordon B. Hinckley.

In the New Testament, an apostle (from Greek apostellein, to send forth [as a representative or agent]) was a divinely chosen envoy (Mark 3:14; John 15:16; Acts 1:21–26) who was a witness to Christ’s resurrection and carried a missionary obligation to testify to it.

Jesus himself was an apostle through whom God spoke (Heb. 1:2; 3:1). The Father sent Jesus, and whoever receives him receives the one who sent him (Mark 9:37; John 8:16–19). As the Father sent him, so Jesus sent his apostles (John 20:21). Initially, they were called from those who “companied with us [the Twelve] all the time that the Lord Jesus went in and out among us” (Acts 1:21). The number twelve, associated with the apostles, echoes the number of tribes of Israel whom the apostles are to judge (Matt. 19:28; Luke 22:30). In this connection, they stood as the foundation of the early Christian church (Eph. 2:19–21; 4:11–14).

At times, the term embraces more than the Twelve, as is implied both in the phrase “all the apostles” (1 Cor. 15:7)—which follows particular mention of “the twelve” by PAUL (1 Cor. 15:5)—and in references to persons named as apostles who were known not to be among the Twelve (Acts 14:14; Rom. 16:7). It is probable that by A.D. 54 the Lord’s brother James had become one of the Twelve (1 Cor. 15:7; Gal. 1:19). Even so, most New Testament references to apostles refer to members of Jesus' original Twelve or to Paul. They were the guarantors or prime witnesses of Jesus' resurrection, which itself constituted the assurance that he was the expected Messiah and Lord of glory (Acts 1:8–11). In the first century, apostles were traveling witnesses to Jesus' resurrection, sent by him into the world for this purpose (Acts 1:8; cf. Matt. 28:19–20). At the group's core—and the Church's foundation—stood PETER, JAMES, and JOHN, who had been with or near Jesus during critical experiences, including his transfiguration (Mark 9:2–9) and his agony in Gethsemane (Mark 14:32–34).

The significance of Jesus' twelve apostles is underscored in the Book of Mormon. First, about 600 B.C. both Lehi and his son Nephi<sup>1</sup> saw in vision the Twelve as followers of Jesus in Palestine and as victims of persecution (1 Ne. 1:10–11; 11:29, 34–36). Second, these Twelve are to judge the twelve tribes of Israel and the other twelve disciples whom the resurrected Jesus chose during his ministry in the Western Hemisphere about A.D. 34 (1 Ne. 12:9–10; Morm. 3:18–19; cf. D&C 29:12). Third, these latter twelve disciples—as distinguished from Jesus' twelve apostles in Palestine—are to judge their own people who are descended from the house of Israel (3 Ne. 27:27). Fourth, during his visit in the Western Hemisphere, the risen Jesus established the position of the Twelve in his church when he chose and instructed them carefully in his gospel (3 Ne. 11:18–12:1; cf. 13:25–34; 15:11–16:20; 18:36–37; 27:13–21). He conferred on them authority to teach the gospel and administer its ordinances—that is, to baptize both with water and the Spirit—thus making them the transmitters of the Church's doctrine and practices (3 Ne. 11:22; 18:36–37; 19:6–14; 26:17). Fifth, in harmony with the pattern in the New Testament, the Book of Mormon records that Jesus was sent by the Father (3 Ne. 18:27; cf. 16:3) and that he in turn commissioned those twelve disciples to “go forth unto this people, and declare the words which I have spoken” (3 Ne. 11:41).

Modern revelation adds further information. The apostolic office and authority were restored to the Prophet Joseph SMITH and Oliver COWDERY by Peter, James, and John, thus underscoring the continuing significance of this office in the Church (D&C 27:12; see also MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOOD: RESTORATION OF). As early as June 1829, nearly a year before the Church was organized, Oliver

Cowdery and David WHITMER, later joined by Martin HARRIS, were instructed concerning the kinds of men to be chosen as apostles and were commissioned to select the first Twelve in the modern era (D&C 18:26–38). This commission was carried out on February 14–15, 1835, when Cowdery, Whitmer, and Harris selected twelve men to be apostles and ordained the nine who were present (HC 2:186–98).

Modern scripture specifies that “every decision . . . must be by the unanimous voice” of the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles (D&C 107:27). Further, its members are empowered to baptize, declare the gospel, and ordain others to the priesthood (D&C 18:26–36). The Lord has instructed that the number of apostles in the Quorum of the Twelve must be maintained (D&C 118:1) and that their keys “have come down from the fathers, . . . being sent down from heaven” (D&C 112:32). Those who serve in this office are to “cleanse [their] hearts and [their] garments, lest the blood of this generation be required at [their] hands” (D&C 112:33).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Kittel, Gerhard, ed., and Geoffrey W. Bromiley, ed. and transl. Theological Dictionary of the New Testament, Vol. 1, pp. 407–447. Grand Rapids, Mich., 1964–1976.
- McConkie, Bruce R. The Mortal Messiah, Vol. 2, pp. 99–114, 303–326. Salt Lake City, 1980.

S. KENT BROWN

---

APRIL 6

April 6, 1830, is the date on which The church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints was organized. The Prophet Joseph SMITH was divinely authorized to reestablish the Church of Christ on this day (see RESTORATION) and it may be the anniversary of the Lord's birth on earth (D&C 20:1). The Church commemorates the importance of April 6 by scheduling its annual General Conference on or near this day.

Concerning the date of Christ's birth, one of the earliest known references to December 25 was in the third century A.D. (Hippolytus, Commentarii in Daniele, 4.23.3). Scholarly consensus recognizes that early Christians probably appropri-

members of Jesus' original Twelve or to Paul. They were the guarantors or prime witnesses of Jesus' resurrection, which itself constituted the assurance that he was the expected Messiah and Lord of glory (Acts 1:8–11). In the first century, apostles were traveling witnesses to Jesus' resurrection, sent by him into the world for this purpose (Acts 1:8; cf. Matt. 28:19–20). At the group's core—and the Church's foundation—stood PETER, JAMES, and JOHN, who had been with or near Jesus during critical experiences, including his transfiguration (Mark 9:2–9) and his agony in Gethsemane (Mark 14:32–34).

The significance of Jesus' twelve apostles is underscored in the Book of Mormon. First, about 600 B.C. both Lehi and his son Nephi<sup>1</sup> saw in vision the Twelve as followers of Jesus in Palestine and as victims of persecution (1 Ne. 1:10–11; 11:29, 34–36). Second, these Twelve are to judge the twelve tribes of Israel and the other twelve disciples whom the resurrected Jesus chose during his ministry in the Western Hemisphere about A.D. 34 (1 Ne. 12:9–10; Morm. 3:18–19; cf. D&C 29:12). Third, these latter twelve disciples—as distinguished from Jesus' twelve apostles in Palestine—are to judge their own people who are descended from the house of Israel (3 Ne. 27:27). Fourth, during his visit in the Western Hemisphere, the risen Jesus established the position of the Twelve in his church when he chose and instructed them carefully in his gospel (3 Ne. 11:18–12:1; cf. 13:25–34; 15:11–16:20; 18:36–37; 27:13–21). He conferred on them authority to teach the gospel and administer its ordinances—that is, to baptize both with water and the Spirit—thus making them the transmitters of the Church's doctrine and practices (3 Ne. 11:22; 18:36–37; 19:6–14; 26:17). Fifth, in harmony with the pattern in the New Testament, the Book of Mormon records that Jesus was sent by the Father (3 Ne. 18:27; cf. 16:3) and that he in turn commissioned those twelve disciples to “go forth unto this people, and declare the words which I have spoken” (3 Ne. 11:41).

Modern revelation adds further information. The apostolic office and authority were restored to the Prophet Joseph SMITH and Oliver COWDERY by Peter, James, and John, thus underscoring the continuing significance of this office in the Church (D&C 27:12; see also MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOOD: RESTORATION OF). As early as June 1829, nearly a year before the Church was organized, Oliver

Cowdery and David WHITMER, later joined by Martin HARRIS, were instructed concerning the kinds of men to be chosen as apostles and were commissioned to select the first Twelve in the modern era (D&C 18:26–38). This commission was carried out on February 14–15, 1835, when Cowdery, Whitmer, and Harris selected twelve men to be apostles and ordained the nine who were present (HC 2:186–98).

Modern scripture specifies that “every decision . . . must be by the unanimous voice” of the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles (D&C 107:27). Further, its members are empowered to baptize, declare the gospel, and ordain others to the priesthood (D&C 18:26–36). The Lord has instructed that the number of apostles in the Quorum of the Twelve must be maintained (D&C 118:1) and that their keys “have come down from the fathers, . . . being sent down from heaven” (D&C 112:32). Those who serve in this office are to “cleanse [their] hearts and [their] garments, lest the blood of this generation be required at [their] hands” (D&C 112:33).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Kittel, Gerhard, ed., and Geoffrey W. Bromiley, ed. and transl. Theological Dictionary of the New Testament, Vol. 1, pp. 407–447. Grand Rapids, Mich., 1964–1976.
- McConkie, Bruce R. The Mortal Messiah, Vol. 2, pp. 99–114, 303–326. Salt Lake City, 1980.

S. KENT BROWN

---

APRIL 6

April 6, 1830, is the date on which The church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints was organized. The Prophet Joseph SMITH was divinely authorized to reestablish the Church of Christ on this day (see RESTORATION) and it may be the anniversary of the Lord's birth on earth (D&C 20:1). The Church commemorates the importance of April 6 by scheduling its annual General Conference on or near this day.

Concerning the date of Christ's birth, one of the earliest known references to December 25 was in the third century A.D. (Hippolytus, Commentarii in Daniele, 4.23.3). Scholarly consensus recognizes that early Christians probably appropriated December 25 from pagan festivals such as the Dies Natalis Invicti, established by the Emperor Aurelian (cf. Hoehner, pp. 11–27). Controversy, ancient and modern, regarding that date has had little influence in the LDS community (see CHRISTMAS). Presidents of the Church, including Harold B. LEE (p. 2) and Spencer W. KIMBALL (p. 54), have reaffirmed that April 6 is the true anniversary of Christ's birth, but have encouraged Church members to join with other Christians in observing Christmas as a special day for remembering Jesus' birth and teachings.

Some discussion has centered on the actual year of Jesus' nativity. Some argue that the phrase "one thousand eight hundred and thirty years since the coming of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ in the flesh" (D&C 20:1) should be interpreted to mean that Christ was born exactly 1,830 years before April 6, 1830 (Lefgren). This view has been both challenged (Brown et al., pp. 375–83) and supported (Pratt, pp. 252–54). Others assert that the phrase was not intended to fix the year of Christ's birth but was simply an oratorical mode of expressing the current year.

Attempts to determine the exact date of Christ's birth or death are complicated by a dearth of pertinent historical information and multiple dating systems. The present dating system derives from the determination that Christ was born in 753 A.U.C. (ab urbe condita—from the founding of the city [of Rome]), made by the Scythian monk Dionysius, commissioned by Pope John I in A.D. 525 (1278 A.U.C.). The accuracy of Dionysius' system stands at the center of all discussion concerning the date of Christ's birth (Hoehner, p. 11).

John the Baptist's ministry began in the fifteenth year of the reign of Tiberius Caesar (Luke 3:1), the only precise date in the New Testament. The fifteenth year would have begun in September A.D. 28 and ended in September A.D. 29. On this basis alone the dates of Christ's life can be reckoned from the New Testament.

The LDS Church has not taken an official position on the issue of the year of Christ's birth. Bruce R. McConkie, an apostle, offers what for the present appears to be the most definitive word on the question: "We do not believe it is possible with the present state of our knowledge—including that which is known both in and out of the Church—to state with finality when the natal day of the Lord Jesus actually occurred" (Vol. 1, p. 349, n. 2).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Brown, S. Kent, et al. Book Review of Lefgren's April 6. BYU Studies 22 (Summer 1982):375–83.
- Filmer, W. E. "The Chronology of the Reign of Herod the Great." Journal of Theological Studies 17 (1966):283–98.
- Hoehner, H. W. Chronological Aspects of the Life of Christ. Grand Rapids, Mich., 1977.
- Kimball, Spencer W. "Remarks and Dedication of the Fayette, New York, Buildings." Ensign 10 (May 1980):54.
- Lee, Harold B. "Strengthening the Stakes of Zion." Ensign 3 (July 1973):2.
- Lefgren, J. April Sixth, Salt Lake City, 1980.
- McConkie, Bruce R. Mortal Messiah, Vol. 1, p. 349, n. 2. Salt Lake City, 1979.
- Pratt, J. "Afterwords" (Letter to the Editor). BYU Studies 23 (Spring 1983):252–54.

JOHN FRANKLIN HALL

---

ARCHAEOLOGY

Archaeology is the study and interpretation of past human cultures based on known material remains. Biblical and Mesoamerican archaeological research is of special interest to Latter-day Saints.

Archaeological data from the ancient Near East and the Americas have been used both to support and to discredit the Book of Mormon. Many scholars see no support for the Book of Mormon in the archaeological records, since no one has found any inscriptional evidence for, or material remains that can be tied directly to, any of the persons, places, or things mentioned in the book (Smithsonian Institution).

Several types of indirect archaeological evidence, however, have been used in support of the Book of Mormon. For example, John L. Sorenson and M. Wells Jakeman tentatively identified the Olmec (2000–600 B.C.) and Late Pre-Classic Maya (300 B.C.–A.D. 250) cultures in Central America with the JAREDITE and NEPHITE cultures, based on correspondences between periods of cultural development in these areas and the pattern of cultural change in the Book of Mormon.

Likewise, parallels between cultural traits of the ancient Near East and Mesoamerica perhaps indicate transoceanic contacts between the two regions. Among these are such minor secondary traits as horned incense burners, models of house types, wheel-made pottery, cement, the true arch, and the use of stone boxes. All of these may, howated December 25 from pagan festivals such as the Dies Natalis Invicti, established by the Emperor Aurelian (cf. Hoehner, pp. 11–27). Controversy, ancient and modern, regarding that date has had little influence in the LDS community (see CHRISTMAS). Presidents of the Church, including Harold B. LEE (p. 2) and Spencer W. KIMBALL (p. 54), have reaffirmed that April 6 is the true anniversary of Christ's birth, but have encouraged Church members to join with other Christians in observing Christmas as a special day for remembering Jesus' birth and teachings.

Some discussion has centered on the actual year of Jesus' nativity. Some argue that the phrase "one thousand eight hundred and thirty years since the coming of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ in the flesh" (D&C 20:1) should be interpreted to mean that Christ was born exactly 1,830 years before April 6, 1830 (Lefgren). This view has been both challenged (Brown et al., pp. 375–83) and supported (Pratt, pp. 252–54). Others assert that the phrase was not intended to fix the year of Christ's birth but was simply an oratorical mode of expressing the current year.

Attempts to determine the exact date of Christ's birth or death are complicated by a dearth of pertinent historical information and multiple dating systems. The present dating system derives from the determination that Christ was born in 753 A.U.C. (ab urbe condita—from the founding of the city [of Rome]), made by the Scythian monk Dionysius, commissioned by Pope John I in A.D. 525 (1278 A.U.C.). The accuracy of Dionysius' system stands at the center of all discussion concerning the date of Christ's birth (Hoehner, p. 11).

John the Baptist's ministry began in the fifteenth year of the reign of Tiberius Caesar (Luke 3:1), the only precise date in the New Testament. The fifteenth year would have begun in September A.D. 28 and ended in September A.D. 29. On this basis alone the dates of Christ's life can be reckoned from the New Testament.

The LDS Church has not taken an official position on the issue of the year of Christ's birth. Bruce R. McConkie, an apostle, offers what for the present appears to be the most definitive word on the question: "We do not believe it is possible with the present state of our knowledge—including that which is known both in and out of the Church—to state with finality when the natal day of the Lord Jesus actually occurred" (Vol. 1, p. 349, n. 2).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Brown, S. Kent, et al. Book Review of Lefgren's April 6. BYU Studies 22 (Summer 1982):375–83.
- Filmer, W. E. "The Chronology of the Reign of Herod the Great." Journal of Theological Studies 17 (1966):283–98.
- Hoehner, H. W. Chronological Aspects of the Life of Christ. Grand Rapids, Mich., 1977.
- Kimball, Spencer W. "Remarks and Dedication of the Fayette, New York, Buildings." Ensign 10 (May 1980):54.
- Lee, Harold B. "Strengthening the Stakes of Zion." Ensign 3 (July 1973):2.
- Lefgren, J. April Sixth, Salt Lake City, 1980.
- McConkie, Bruce R. Mortal Messiah, Vol. 1, p. 349, n. 2. Salt Lake City, 1979.
- Pratt, J. "Afterwords" (Letter to the Editor). BYU Studies 23 (Spring 1983):252–54.

JOHN FRANKLIN HALL

---

ARCHAEOLOGY

Archaeology is the study and interpretation of past human cultures based on known material remains. Biblical and Mesoamerican archaeological research is of special interest to Latter-day Saints.

Archaeological data from the ancient Near East and the Americas have been used both to support and to discredit the Book of Mormon. Many scholars see no support for the Book of Mormon in the archaeological records, since no one has found any inscriptional evidence for, or material remains that can be tied directly to, any of the persons, places, or things mentioned in the book (Smithsonian Institution).

Several types of indirect archaeological evidence, however, have been used in support of the Book of Mormon. For example, John L. Sorenson and M. Wells Jakeman tentatively identified the Olmec (2000–600 B.C.) and Late Pre-Classic Maya (300 B.C.–A.D. 250) cultures in Central America with the JAREDITE and NEPHITE cultures, based on correspondences between periods of cultural development in these areas and the pattern of cultural change in the Book of Mormon.

Likewise, parallels between cultural traits of the ancient Near East and Mesoamerica perhaps indicate transoceanic contacts between the two regions. Among these are such minor secondary traits as horned incense burners, models of house types, wheel-made pottery, cement, the true arch, and the use of stone boxes. All of these may, however, represent independent inventions. Stronger evidence for contacts may be found in the TREE OF LIFE motif, a common religious theme, on Stela 5 from Izapa in Chiapas, Mexico. Jakeman, in 1959, studied Stela 5 in detail and concluded that it represented the sons of a legendary ancestral couple absorbing and perhaps recording their knowledge of a munificent Tree of Life. This can be compared favorably to the account of Lehi's vision in the Book of Mormon (1 Ne. 8).

The presence of a bearded white deity, Quetzalcoatl or Kukulkan, in the pantheon of the Aztec, Toltec, and Maya has also been advanced as indirect evidence of Christ's visit to the New World. The deity is represented as a feathered serpent, and elements of his worship may have similarities to those associated with Christ's atonement.

Recent work by LDS professional archaeologists such as Ray Matheny at El Mirador and by the New World Archaeological Foundation in Chiapas has been directed toward an understanding of the factors that led to the development of complex societies in Mesoamerica in general. Under C. Wilfred Griggs, a team of Brigham Young University scholars has sponsored excavations in Egypt, and other LDS archaeologists have been involved in projects in Israel and Jordan.

Another area of archaeological investigation is in LDS history. Dale Berge's excavations at Nauvoo; the Whitmer farm in New York; the early Mormon settlement of Goshen (Utah); the Utah mining town of Mercur; and, most recently, Camp Floyd, the headquarters of Johnston's army in Utah, have provided information about the economic and social interactions between early Mormon and non-Mormon communities.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Griggs, C. Wilfred, ed. Excavations at Seila, Egypt. Provo, Utah, 1988.
- Jakeman, M. Wells. "The Main Challenge of the Book of Mormon to Archaeology; and a Summary of Archaeological Research to Date Giving a Preliminary Test of Book-of-Mormon Claims." In Progress in Archaeology, An Anthology, ed. R. Christensen, pp. 99-103. Provo, Utah, 1963.
- . "Stela 5, Izapa, as The Lehi Tree-of-Life Stone." In The Tree of Life in Ancient America, ed. R. Christensen. Provo, Utah, 1968.
- Matheny, Ray T. "An Early Maya Metropolis Uncovered, El-Mirador." National Geographic 172, no. 3 (1987):316-39.
- Smithsonian Institution. "Statement Regarding the Book of

An Egyptian gold-covered mummy, excavated in Egypt by Brigham Young University archaeologists in 1988. Courtesy C. Wilfred Griggs.

Mormon." Department of Anthropology, National Museum of Natural History, SIL-76, 1982.

Sorenson, John L. "An Evaluation of the Smithsonian Institution's 'Statement' Regarding the Book of Mormon" F.A.R.M.S. Paper. Provo, Utah, 1982.

———. An Ancient American Setting for the Book of Mormon. Salt Lake City, 1985.

DAVID J. JOHNSON

ARCHITECTURE

In the first generation the architecture of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints bore the stamp of individuality and originality. With a membership of less than fifteen thousand, Latter-day Saints undertook three daring projects: the KIRTLAND TEMPLE in Ohio, the master plan for the city of NAUVOO, Illinois, and the NAUVOO TEMPLE.

The Kirtland Temple, designed by the Prophet Joseph SMITH and Artemis Millett, has a pristine exterior free of extraneous detail and a well-planned interior bathed in natural light. The master plan for Nauvoo, created by Joseph Smith and others, was similar in concept to Smith's "plat for the City of Zion." It consisted of a grid of streets with gardens adjoining each dwelling. The highest hill was reserved for the temple, which rose above all other structures and made Nauvoo, as originally planned, a clear visual statement of the religious ever, represent independent inventions. Stronger evidence for contacts may be found in the TREE OF LIFE motif, a common religious theme, on Stela 5 from Izapa in Chiapas, Mexico. Jakeman, in 1959, studied Stela 5 in detail and concluded that it represented the sons of a legendary ancestral couple absorbing and perhaps recording their knowledge of a munificent Tree of Life. This can be compared favorably to the account of Lehi's vision in the Book of Mormon (1 Ne. 8).

The presence of a bearded white deity, Quetzalcoatl or Kukulkan, in the pantheon of the Aztec, Toltec, and Maya has also been advanced as indirect evidence of Christ's visit to the New World. The deity is represented as a feathered serpent, and elements of his worship may have similarities to those associated with Christ's atonement.

Recent work by LDS professional archaeologists such as Ray Matheny at El Mirador and by the New World Archaeological Foundation in Chiapas has been directed toward an understanding of the factors that led to the development of complex societies in Mesoamerica in general. Under C. Wilfred Griggs, a team of Brigham Young University scholars has sponsored excavations in Egypt, and other LDS archaeologists have been involved in projects in Israel and Jordan.

Another area of archaeological investigation is in LDS history. Dale Berge's excavations at Nauvoo; the Whitmer farm in New York; the early Mormon settlement of Goshen (Utah); the Utah mining town of Mercur; and, most recently, Camp Floyd, the headquarters of Johnston's army in Utah, have provided information about the economic and social interactions between early Mormon and non-Mormon communities.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Griggs, C. Wilfred, ed. Excavations at Seila, Egypt. Provo, Utah, 1988.
- Jakeman, M. Wells. "The Main Challenge of the Book of Mormon to Archaeology; and a Summary of Archaeological Research to Date Giving a Preliminary Test of Book-of-Mormon Claims." In Progress in Archaeology, An Anthology, ed. R. Christensen, pp. 99-103. Provo, Utah, 1963.
- . "Stela 5, Izapa, as The Lehi Tree-of-Life Stone." In The Tree of Life in Ancient America, ed. R. Christensen. Provo, Utah, 1968.
- Matheny, Ray T. "An Early Maya Metropolis Uncovered, El-Mirador." National Geographic 172, no. 3 (1987):316-39.
- Smithsonian Institution. "Statement Regarding the Book of

An Egyptian gold-covered mummy, excavated in Egypt by Brigham Young University archaeologists in 1988. Courtesy C. Wilfred Griggs.

Mormon." Department of Anthropology, National Museum of Natural History, SIL-76, 1982.

Sorenson, John L. "An Evaluation of the Smithsonian Institution's 'Statement' Regarding the Book of Mormon" F.A.R.M.S. Paper. Provo, Utah, 1982.

———. An Ancient American Setting for the Book of Mormon. Salt Lake City, 1985.

DAVID J. JOHNSON

ARCHITECTURE

In the first generation the architecture of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints bore the stamp of individuality and originality. With a membership of less than fifteen thousand, Latter-day Saints undertook three daring projects: the KIRTLAND TEMPLE in Ohio, the master plan for the city of NAUVOO, Illinois, and the NAUVOO TEMPLE.

The Kirtland Temple, designed by the Prophet Joseph SMITH and Artemis Millett, has a pristine exterior free of extraneous detail and a well-planned interior bathed in natural light. The master plan for Nauvoo, created by Joseph Smith and others, was similar in concept to Smith's "plat for the City of Zion." It consisted of a grid of streets with gardens adjoining each dwelling. The highest hill was reserved for the temple, which rose above all other structures and made Nauvoo, as originally planned, a clear visual statement of the religious and social priorities of Mormon life. The Nauvoo Temple, designed by William Weeks, was similar to the Kirtland Temple but larger and more ornate.

This stake center in Bountiful, Utah, is typical of an architectural style used in the 1950s.

After the westward migration to the Great Basin, other demanding projects were undertaken. CITY PLANNING for Salt Lake City was similar to the master plan for Nauvoo, with the temple as the dominant feature. Four temples were commissioned to be built in four Utah cities: in Salt Lake City, St. George, and Logan under architect Truman O. Angell, and in Manti under architect William H. Folsom. The block and bulwark form of the earlier temples was retained but, except for St. George, the facades were elaborate. The tower scheme of the Salt Lake Temple became the symbol of the new dispensation and embodied the growing proclivity of the Church to prefer complexity rather than simplicity in its architecture.

In addition to temples, the Church continued to produce other important buildings that were architecturally impressive, notably its tabernacles. Among the most distinguished were the Coleville, Logan, and Brigham City tabernacles. The SALT LAKE TABERNACLE, designed by Truman O. Angell assisted by William H. Folsom and Henry Grow, remains the ideal of architectural integrity and is the zenith of Mormon architecture.

After 1900 the rapidly growing Church continued to produce a wide variety of religious structures, including temples, meetinghouses, and educational buildings, especially at BRIGHAM YOUNG UNIVERSITY. Meetinghouses typically incorporated an axially organized chapel with pews arranged before an elevated central pulpit and an off-center sacrament table. Works of art and natural light were used sparingly (see MEETINGHOUSES). Early buildings in Salt Lake City included the classically detailed Church headquarters building, whose architect was Joseph Don Carlos Young, and the adjacent Hotel Utah. These structures, with the temple and tabernacle, became the architectural center of the Latter-day Saints and of Salt Lake City.

In the early decades of the twentieth century the Church commissioned temples in the western United States, Canada, Europe, and the South Pacific. The form of these structures differed from the earlier temples. Most were designed by Edward O. Anderson, and each featured a large, rectangular, flat-roofed assembly hall surmounted by a tower and enclosed by a lower mass of ancillary spaces. Natural light was admitted to the interior sparingly. The opaque character became the hallmark of future temples, including the Alberta Temple in Cardston, designed by Harold W. Burton. Its design received architectural commendation from outside the Church.

In response to worldwide growth and changes in organization, new buildings were added to the Church headquarters enclave. On Temple Square an annex was added to the temple, altering its symmetry. A 28-story office tower and plaza were constructed, designed by architect George Cannon Young. Restoration of the Lion and Beehive houses, originally Brigham Young's residences, was completed.

Burgeoning growth led to a centralized Church Building Committee. Standard plans were developed, first for meetinghouses or chapels and then for temples. The meetinghouses, categorized by size, phases, and configuration, were uniformly designed for wards and stakes regardless of location. The standard-plan temples, initially the work of architect Emil Fetzer, and first built in Ogden and Provo, were designed to accommodate up to 100 ENDOWMENT sessions a day with maximum mobility. These single-towered edifices, of which more than a dozen have been built, all followed the same basic plan but employed changes and decoration in an attempt to capture a sense of individuality. After 1980 a second generation of standard-plan temples, credited to the Church architectural staff, was commissioned. These small, slightly differentiated structures, built in large urban centers worldwide, typically featured a broad, low roof with various tower arrangements which, by replicating the most obvious elements of the Salt Lake Temple, announced the Church's presence.

The Assembly Hall (c. 1888), on Temple Square in Salt Lake City, has been used for over a century for Church meetings, conferences, firesides, public lectures, and concerts. Photographer: C. R. Savage.

Throughout its history Mormon architecture has been more functional than experimental, more temperate than ornate, more restrained than innovative. There is a marked tendency to avoid any distraction from direct and personal spirituality. Latter-day Saints' concern for uniting heavenly principles with earthly practices has been adequately expressed in practical, durable, and extraordinarily well-maintained buildings and grounds.

FRANKLIN T. FERGUSON

---

AREA, AREA PRESIDENCY

An area is the largest geographical administrative subdivision of the Church and is presided over by an area presidency, composed of three members of the quorums of the SEVENTY.

An area presidency consists of a president and two counselors who provide spiritual guidance and administrative direction to leaders and members of the Church in their area. As members of the quorums of the Seventy, area presidencies are also called to preach the gospel, to be special witnesses of Jesus Christ, and to build up and regulate the affairs of the Church as assigned under the direction of the FIRST PRESIDENCY and the QUORUM OF THE TWELVE APOSTLES.

The specific duties of an area presidency include implementing the policies and instructions of the General Authorities presiding over them; instructing area leaders and members in the principles of the gospel; selecting and training REGIONAL REPRESENTATIVES, stake presidencies, and mission leaders; counseling with local leaders, members, and missionaries about Church-related, personal, and spiritual problems; establishing priorities for a broad range of Church activities; supervising the work of area staff personnel; conferring with community and religious leaders on social and moral issues of common concern; and making regular reports to higher Church leaders on conditions and progress in their area.

Area presidencies in the United States and Canada live in Salt Lake City. On weekends they often travel to their assigned areas and meet with leaders and members in stake CONFERENCES and various regional and stake training meetings. They also spend several weeks a year touring MISSIONS

The Assembly Hall (c. 1888), on Temple Square in Salt Lake City, has been used for over a century for Church meetings, conferences, firesides, public lectures, and concerts. Photographer: C. R. Savage.

ated structures, built in large urban centers worldwide, typically featured a broad, low roof with various tower arrangements which, by replicating the most obvious elements of the Salt Lake Temple, announced the Church's presence.

Throughout its history Mormon architecture has been more functional than experimental, more temperate than ornate, more restrained than innovative. There is a marked tendency to avoid any distraction from direct and personal spirituality. Latter-day Saints' concern for uniting heavenly principles with earthly practices has been adequately expressed in practical, durable, and extraordinarily well-maintained buildings and grounds.

FRANKLIN T. FERGUSON

---

AREA, AREA PRESIDENCY

An area is the largest geographical administrative subdivision of the Church and is presided over by an area presidency, composed of three members of the quorums of the SEVENTY.

An area presidency consists of a president and two counselors who provide spiritual guidance and administrative direction to leaders and members of the Church in their area. As members of the quorums of the Seventy, area presidencies are also called to preach the gospel, to be special witnesses of Jesus Christ, and to build up and regulate the affairs of the Church as assigned under the direction of the FIRST PRESIDENCY and the QUORUM OF THE TWELVE APOSTLES.

The specific duties of an area presidency include implementing the policies and instructions of the General Authorities presiding over them; instructing area leaders and members in the principles of the gospel; selecting and training REGIONAL REPRESENTATIVES, stake presidencies, and mission leaders; counseling with local leaders, members, and missionaries about Church-related, personal, and spiritual problems; establishing priorities for a broad range of Church activities; supervising the work of area staff personnel; conferring with community and religious leaders on social and moral issues of common concern; and making regular reports to higher Church leaders on conditions and progress in their area.

Area presidencies in the United States and Canada live in Salt Lake City. On weekends they often travel to their assigned areas and meet with leaders and members in stake CONFERENCES and various regional and stake training meetings. They also spend several weeks a year touring MISSIONS and training missionaries and mission leaders. In addition, members of area presidencies in the United States have assignments at Church headquarters in Salt Lake City that occupy a large portion of their time during the week. Area presidencies in other parts of the world live in their assigned areas. They spend their full time directing the work of the Church in their area.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

"Area Presidencies Called as Church Modifies Geographical Administration." Ensign 14 (Aug. 1984):75.

Hinckley, Gordon B. "The Sustaining of Church Officers." Ensign 15 (May 1985):4-6.

PERRY H. CUNNINGHAM

---

ARIZONA, PIONEER SETTLEMENTS IN

Mormon pioneering in Arizona began in the mid-1800s and continued until well after 1900, and was especially active from 1873 until 1890. Latter-day Saints first came to Arizona in 1846, with the march of the MORMON BATTALION from Santa Fe to southern California. Later missionaries such as Alfred Billings, Jacob Hamblin, Ira Hatch, and Thales Haskell explored the territory in the 1850s and 1860s. By 1870 interest in transportation on the Colorado River, in grazing, in border control, and in the desert as a refuge led to the establishment of Callsville and Lees Ferry on the Colorado River and Pipe Spring on the Arizona Strip.

In 1873 COLONIZATION began in earnest. Brigham YOUNG, with Thomas L. KANE, planned a colonizing thrust that would eventually extend from Salt Lake City to a Mormon seaport at Guaymas, Mexico. A party of scouts under Lorenzo Rounly examined the San Francisco Mountains and the Little Colorado River drainages for town sites. Brigham Young called 200 colonizing and Indian missionaries who, without adequate preparation, hurried south in the winter and spring of 1873. This mission foundered in the desert country north of the Little Colorado, and the missionaries retreated to Utah. Only John D. Lee and a few others held on at Lees Ferry and Moenkopi.

The southward movement lay dormant for two years. When it revived, plans focused on UNITED ORDER settlements and Indian missions. Missionaries James S. Brown and Daniel W. Jones led expeditions south, and four colonizing companies were dispatched under Lot Smith, a tough Mormon Battalion veteran known for his exploits against the UTAH EXPEDITION. During 1876 these colonists established united order towns at Sunset, Brigham City, Obed, and Joseph City on the lower Little Colorado. By 1878 Latter-day Saints had settled farther upstream, at Snowflake, Taylor, St. Johns, Concho, and Eagar, as well as at several sites in western New Mexico. Colonists also moved farther south into the Salt River Valley, where several towns were established, including Mesa and Lehi. Others settled at Pima, Thatcher, and Safford in the Gila River country, and at St. David on the San Pedro River.

The intense united order impulse of the earliest companies soon diminished, and towns established after 1877 were organized on a less communal basis. Even the strongest orders at Sunset and Joseph City gave up communal organization by 1886. The proselytization of Indians also lapsed as economic competition created tensions between NATIVE AMERICANS and whites. Although irrigation was a continuing struggle, prosperous agricultural villages soon flourished in all the Mormon districts. Led by John W. Young, Arizona Latter-day Saints became a major force in building the Santa Fe railroad and in ranching on the Arizona Strip and near Flagstaff. Establishing a branch of Zion's Cooperative Mercantile Institution (ZCMI), they also engaged in commerce, freighting, and banking.

At first Latter-day Saints found political life in Arizona difficult. In Apache County, friction among Mexicans, ranchers, and traders escalated into fierce struggles by 1880. In 1884 David K. Udall and a few others were imprisoned for practicing PLURAL MARRIAGE; many fled to Mexico. But after the MANIFESTO was issued in 1890, two-party politics were embraced and Church members found a place in Arizona's political institutions.

The 1890 federal census counted 6,500 Latter-day Saints in Arizona. Although Church settlement continued well into the twentieth century, the pioneer period ended by 1900. By that time Latter-day Saints, firmly established Arizonans both in their own minds and in the eyes of others, comprised a distinctive cultural element in Arizona.

The erection of a temple at Mesa, dedicated in 1927, reflected the significance of Arizona to the

and training missionaries and mission leaders. In addition, members of area presidencies in the United States have assignments at Church headquarters in Salt Lake City that occupy a large portion of their time during the week. Area presidencies in other parts of the world live in their assigned areas. They spend their full time directing the work of the Church in their area.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

"Area Presidencies Called as Church Modifies Geographical Administration." Ensign 14 (Aug. 1984):75.

Hinckley, Gordon B. "The Sustaining of Church Officers." Ensign 15 (May 1985):4-6.

PERRY H. CUNNINGHAM

---

ARIZONA, PIONEER SETTLEMENTS IN

Mormon pioneering in Arizona began in the mid-1800s and continued until well after 1900, and was especially active from 1873 until 1890. Latter-day Saints first came to Arizona in 1846, with the march of the MORMON BATTALION from Santa Fe to southern California. Later missionaries such as Alfred Billings, Jacob Hamblin, Ira Hatch, and Thales Haskell explored the territory in the 1850s and 1860s. By 1870 interest in transportation on the Colorado River, in grazing, in border control, and in the desert as a refuge led to the establishment of Callsville and Lees Ferry on the Colorado River and Pipe Spring on the Arizona Strip.

In 1873 COLONIZATION began in earnest. Brigham YOUNG, with Thomas L. KANE, planned a colonizing thrust that would eventually extend from Salt Lake City to a Mormon seaport at Guaymas, Mexico. A party of scouts under Lorenzo Roundy examined the San Francisco Mountains and the Little Colorado River drainages for town sites. Brigham Young called 200 colonizing and Indian missionaries who, without adequate preparation, hurried south in the winter and spring of 1873. This mission foundered in the desert country north of the Little Colorado, and the missionaries retreated to Utah. Only John D. Lee and a few others held on at Lees Ferry and Moenkopi.

The southward movement lay dormant for two years. When it revived, plans focused on UNITED ORDER settlements and Indian missions. Missionaries James S. Brown and Daniel W. Jones led expeditions south, and four colonizing companies were dispatched under Lot Smith, a tough Mormon Battalion veteran known for his exploits against the UTAH EXPEDITION. During 1876 these colonists established united order towns at Sunset, Brigham City, Obed, and Joseph City on the lower Little Colorado. By 1878 Latter-day Saints had settled farther upstream, at Snowflake, Taylor, St. Johns, Concho, and Eagar, as well as at several sites in western New Mexico. Colonists also moved farther south into the Salt River Valley, where several towns were established, including Mesa and Lehi. Others settled at Pima, Thatcher, and Safford in the Gila River country, and at St. David on the San Pedro River.

The intense united order impulse of the earliest companies soon diminished, and towns established after 1877 were organized on a less communal basis. Even the strongest orders at Sunset and Joseph City gave up communal organization by 1886. The proselytization of Indians also lapsed as economic competition created tensions between NATIVE AMERICANS and whites. Although irrigation was a continuing struggle, prosperous agricultural villages soon flourished in all the Mormon districts. Led by John W. Young, Arizona Latter-day Saints became a major force in building the Santa Fe railroad and in ranching on the Arizona Strip and near Flagstaff. Establishing a branch of Zion's Cooperative Mercantile Institution (ZCMI), they also engaged in commerce, freighting, and banking.

At first Latter-day Saints found political life in Arizona difficult. In Apache County, friction among Mexicans, ranchers, and traders escalated into fierce struggles by 1880. In 1884 David K. Udall and a few others were imprisoned for practicing PLURAL MARRIAGE; many fled to Mexico. But after the MANIFESTO was issued in 1890, two-party politics were embraced and Church members found a place in Arizona's political institutions.

The 1890 federal census counted 6,500 Latter-day Saints in Arizona. Although Church settlement continued well into the twentieth century, the pioneer period ended by 1900. By that time Latter-day Saints, firmly established Arizonans both in their own minds and in the eyes of others, comprised a distinctive cultural element in Arizona.

The erection of a temple at Mesa, dedicated in 1927, reflected the significance of Arizona to the Church, and provided Native American members and other Church members in Mexico with closer access to temple ordinances. Among twentieth-century Church leaders with Arizona roots was Spencer W. KIMBALL, President of the Church from 1973 to 1985. By 1990 there were 236,000 Latter-day Saints in Arizona, most of them residing in urban areas.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Fish, Joseph. The Life and Times of Joseph Fish, Mormon Pioneer. Danville, Ill., 1970.
- McClintock, James H. Mormon Settlement in Arizona: Record of Peaceful Conquest of the Desert. Phoenix, Ariz., 1921.
- Peterson, Charles S. Take Up Your Mission: Mormon Colonizing Along the Little Colorado River 1870–1900. Tucson, Ariz., 1973.
- Smith, Jesse N. Journal of Jesse Nathaniel Smith. Salt Lake City, 1953.

CHARLES S. PETERSON

---

ARMAGEDDON

The name Armageddon is a Greek transliteration of the Hebrew har megiddo, mountain of Megiddo, and is used by John the Revelator to symbolize the assembling of a vast world army in the last days (Rev. 16:16). Sixty miles north of Jerusalem, the site of the ancient city of Har Megiddo overlooks the Plain of Esdraelon or the valley of Jezreel, forming a natural entrance to the heart of the land from the Mediterranean Sea.

Anciently the valley was the scene of violent and crucial battles. It was here, during the period of the Judges, that Deborah and Barak defeated the Canaanite general Sisera and delivered Israel from Canaanite rule (Judg. 4–5). Around 640 B.C., King Josiah of Judah was killed at Har Megiddo by the army of Pharaoh Necho, resulting in Judah's subjugation to Egypt (2 Chr. 35:20–23; 2 Kgs. 23:29).

Armageddon is destined to play a future role in world events. It is LDS belief that the prophecies of the scriptures will be fulfilled and that armies representing the nations of the earth will be gathered in the valley of Megiddo. It may be that given the extent of the conflict, Armageddon is a symbolic representation of worldwide conflict centered in this geographic area. The scriptures state that when the battle is at its zenith, Christ, the King of Kings, will appear on the Mount of Olives accompanied by dramatic upheavals. Subsequently, the armies spoken of by John will be destroyed, followed by Christ's millennial reign (cf. Zech. 11–14; Rev. 16:14–21; D&C 45:42–53; JD 7:189; MD, p. 71). How long it will take to bring about these events is not revealed. The name Armageddon does not occur in latter-day scripture, nor is there a known mention of it by the Prophet Joseph Smith.

V. DANIEL ROGERS

---

ARTICLES OF FAITH

In 1842, in response to a specific request from John Wentworth (editor of the Chicago Democrat), Joseph SMITH sent a succinct overview of his own religious experiences and the history of the Church over which he presided (see WENTWORTH LETTER). At the end of the historical sketch, he appended a list summarizing the “faith of the Latter-day Saints.” Later titled “Articles of Faith,” these thirteen items were first published in the Nauvoo Times and Seasons in March 1842 and were later included in the 1851 British Mission pamphlet The Pearl of Great Price, compiled by Elder Franklin D. Richards. That pamphlet was revised in 1878 and again in 1880. In 1880, a general conference of the Church voted to add the Pearl of Great Price to the STANDARD WORKS of the Church, thus including the thirteen articles. The Articles of Faith do not constitute a summation of all LDS beliefs, and they are not a creed in the traditional Christian sense, but they do provide a useful authoritative summary of fundamental LDS scriptures and beliefs.

The articles begin with an affirmative declaration that the GODHEAD is composed of three personages: the Father, his Son Jesus Christ, and the Holy Ghost (cf. Acts 7:55–56; 2 Cor. 13:14; 2 Ne. 31:21; JS—H 1:17).

The second item focuses attention on the beginning of mortal history and affirms that human beings have moral AGENCY and therefore accountability for their own acts: “Men will be punished for their own sins, and not for Adam’s transgression” (cf. Deut. 24:16; 2 Ne. 2:27).

The third article directs attention to the centrality of the ATONEMENT of Christ and how mankind benefits in relationship to it: “Through the Church, and provided Native American members and other Church members in Mexico with closer access to temple ordinances. Among twentieth-century Church leaders with Arizona roots was Spencer W. KIMBALL, President of the Church from 1973 to 1985. By 1990 there were 236,000 Latter-day Saints in Arizona, most of them residing in urban areas.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Fish, Joseph. The Life and Times of Joseph Fish, Mormon Pioneer. Danville, Ill., 1970.
- McClintock, James H. Mormon Settlement in Arizona: Record of Peaceful Conquest of the Desert. Phoenix, Ariz., 1921.
- Peterson, Charles S. Take Up Your Mission: Mormon Colonizing Along the Little Colorado River 1870–1900. Tucson, Ariz., 1973.
- Smith, Jesse N. Journal of Jesse Nathaniel Smith. Salt Lake City, 1953.

CHARLES S. PETERSON

---

ARMAGEDDON

The name Armageddon is a Greek transliteration of the Hebrew har megiddo, mountain of Megiddo, and is used by John the Revelator to symbolize the assembling of a vast world army in the last days (Rev. 16:16). Sixty miles north of Jerusalem, the site of the ancient city of Har Megiddo overlooks the Plain of Esdraelon or the valley of Jezreel, forming a natural entrance to the heart of the land from the Mediterranean Sea.

Anciently the valley was the scene of violent and crucial battles. It was here, during the period of the Judges, that Deborah and Barak defeated the Canaanite general Sisera and delivered Israel from Canaanite rule (Judg. 4–5). Around 640 B.C., King Josiah of Judah was killed at Har Megiddo by the army of Pharaoh Necho, resulting in Judah's subjugation to Egypt (2 Chr. 35:20–23; 2 Kgs. 23:29).

Armageddon is destined to play a future role in world events. It is LDS belief that the prophecies of the scriptures will be fulfilled and that armies representing the nations of the earth will be gathered in the valley of Megiddo. It may be that given the extent of the conflict, Armageddon is a symbolic representation of worldwide conflict centered in this geographic area. The scriptures state that when the battle is at its zenith, Christ, the King of Kings, will appear on the Mount of Olives accompanied by dramatic upheavals. Subsequently, the armies spoken of by John will be destroyed, followed by Christ's millennial reign (cf. Zech. 11–14; Rev. 16:14–21; D&C 45:42–53; JD 7:189; MD, p. 71). How long it will take to bring about these events is not revealed. The name Armageddon does not occur in latter-day scripture, nor is there a known mention of it by the Prophet Joseph Smith.

V. DANIEL ROGERS

---

ARTICLES OF FAITH

In 1842, in response to a specific request from John Wentworth (editor of the Chicago Democrat), Joseph SMITH sent a succinct overview of his own religious experiences and the history of the Church over which he presided (see WENTWORTH LETTER). At the end of the historical sketch, he appended a list summarizing the “faith of the Latter-day Saints.” Later titled “Articles of Faith,” these thirteen items were first published in the Nauvoo Times and Seasons in March 1842 and were later included in the 1851 British Mission pamphlet The Pearl of Great Price, compiled by Elder Franklin D. Richards. That pamphlet was revised in 1878 and again in 1880. In 1880, a general conference of the Church voted to add the Pearl of Great Price to the STANDARD WORKS of the Church, thus including the thirteen articles. The Articles of Faith do not constitute a summation of all LDS beliefs, and they are not a creed in the traditional Christian sense, but they do provide a useful authoritative summary of fundamental LDS scriptures and beliefs.

The articles begin with an affirmative declaration that the GODHEAD is composed of three personages: the Father, his Son Jesus Christ, and the Holy Ghost (cf. Acts 7:55–56; 2 Cor. 13:14; 2 Ne. 31:21; JS—H 1:17).

The second item focuses attention on the beginning of mortal history and affirms that human beings have moral AGENCY and therefore accountability for their own acts: “Men will be punished for their own sins, and not for Adam’s transgression” (cf. Deut. 24:16; 2 Ne. 2:27).

The third article directs attention to the centrality of the ATONEMENT of Christ and how mankind benefits in relationship to it: “Through the Church, and provided Native American members and other Church members in Mexico with closer access to temple ordinances. Among twentieth-century Church leaders with Arizona roots was Spencer W. KIMBALL, President of the Church from 1973 to 1985. By 1990 there were 236,000 Latter-day Saints in Arizona, most of them residing in urban areas.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Fish, Joseph. The Life and Times of Joseph Fish, Mormon Pioneer. Danville, Ill., 1970.
- McClintock, James H. Mormon Settlement in Arizona: Record of Peaceful Conquest of the Desert. Phoenix, Ariz., 1921.
- Peterson, Charles S. Take Up Your Mission: Mormon Colonizing Along the Little Colorado River 1870–1900. Tucson, Ariz., 1973.
- Smith, Jesse N. Journal of Jesse Nathaniel Smith. Salt Lake City, 1953.

CHARLES S. PETERSON

---

ARMAGEDDON

The name Armageddon is a Greek transliteration of the Hebrew har megiddo, mountain of Megiddo, and is used by John the Revelator to symbolize the assembling of a vast world army in the last days (Rev. 16:16). Sixty miles north of Jerusalem, the site of the ancient city of Har Megiddo overlooks the Plain of Esdraelon or the valley of Jezreel, forming a natural entrance to the heart of the land from the Mediterranean Sea.

Anciently the valley was the scene of violent and crucial battles. It was here, during the period of the Judges, that Deborah and Barak defeated the Canaanite general Sisera and delivered Israel from Canaanite rule (Judg. 4–5). Around 640 B.C., King Josiah of Judah was killed at Har Megiddo by the army of Pharaoh Necho, resulting in Judah's subjugation to Egypt (2 Chr. 35:20–23; 2 Kgs. 23:29).

Armageddon is destined to play a future role in world events. It is LDS belief that the prophecies of the scriptures will be fulfilled and that armies representing the nations of the earth will be gathered in the valley of Megiddo. It may be that given the extent of the conflict, Armageddon is a symbolic representation of worldwide conflict centered in this geographic area. The scriptures state that when the battle is at its zenith, Christ, the King of Kings, will appear on the Mount of Olives accompanied by dramatic upheavals. Subsequently, the armies spoken of by John will be destroyed, followed by Christ's millennial reign (cf. Zech. 11–14; Rev. 16:14–21; D&C 45:42–53; JD 7:189; MD, p. 71). How long it will take to bring about these events is not revealed. The name Armageddon does not occur in latter-day scripture, nor is there a known mention of it by the Prophet Joseph Smith.

V. DANIEL ROGERS

---

ARTICLES OF FAITH

In 1842, in response to a specific request from John Wentworth (editor of the Chicago Democrat), Joseph SMITH sent a succinct overview of his own religious experiences and the history of the Church over which he presided (see WENTWORTH LETTER). At the end of the historical sketch, he appended a list summarizing the “faith of the Latter-day Saints.” Later titled “Articles of Faith,” these thirteen items were first published in the Nauvoo Times and Seasons in March 1842 and were later included in the 1851 British Mission pamphlet The Pearl of Great Price, compiled by Elder Franklin D. Richards. That pamphlet was revised in 1878 and again in 1880. In 1880, a general conference of the Church voted to add the Pearl of Great Price to the STANDARD WORKS of the Church, thus including the thirteen articles. The Articles of Faith do not constitute a summation of all LDS beliefs, and they are not a creed in the traditional Christian sense, but they do provide a useful authoritative summary of fundamental LDS scriptures and beliefs.

The articles begin with an affirmative declaration that the GODHEAD is composed of three personages: the Father, his Son Jesus Christ, and the Holy Ghost (cf. Acts 7:55–56; 2 Cor. 13:14; 2 Ne. 31:21; JS—H 1:17).

The second item focuses attention on the beginning of mortal history and affirms that human beings have moral AGENCY and therefore accountability for their own acts: “Men will be punished for their own sins, and not for Adam’s transgression” (cf. Deut. 24:16; 2 Ne. 2:27).

The third article directs attention to the centrality of the ATONEMENT of Christ and how mankind benefits in relationship to it: “Through the Atonement of Christ, all mankind may be saved, by obedience to the laws and ordinances of the Gospel” (Mosiah 3:7–12; D&C 138:4).

The fourth article spells out the foundational principles and ordinances: faith in Jesus Christ, repentance, baptism by immersion for the remission of sins, and the laying on of hands for the GIFT OF THE HOLY GHOST (cf. Acts 8:14–19; Heb. 6:1–2; 3 Ne. 11:32–37).

The next two articles address issues of authority and organization: A man must be called of God, confirmed by divine inspiration and by the laying on of hands by those in authority, in order to preach the gospel and administer its ordinances (cf. 1 Tim. 4:14; D&C 42:11); further, the Church is essentially “the same organization that existed in the Primitive Church, namely, apostles, prophets, pastors, teachers, evangelists, and so forth” (cf. Eph. 4:11).

The seventh item affirms the LDS belief in the GIFTS OF THE SPIRIT, specifically naming several: the gift of tongues, prophecy, revelation, visions, healing, and the interpretation of tongues (cf. 1 Cor. 12:10; D&C 46:10–26).

The place of sacred scripture is addressed in the eighth article: Latter-day Saints “believe the Bible to be the word of God as far as it is translated correctly”; they also “believe the Book of Mormon to be the word of God” (cf. Ezek. 37:16; John 10:16; 2 Tim. 3:16).

The ninth article states that the restored gospel is not bound up in a closed set of books, but rather declares the principle of continuing REVELATION, and therefore an open canon. Latter-day Saints affirm belief in all past and present revelation, and they look forward to many future revelations (cf. Amos 3:7; D&C 76:7).

Article ten summarizes four great events of the last days: the literal gathering of Israel and the restoration of the Ten Tribes; the building of ZION, the New Jerusalem, in the Western Hemisphere; Christ’s personal reign on earth; and the eventual renewal of the earth itself, when it will receive its paradisiacal glory, the state of purity it had before the Fall of Adam (see 3 Ne. 21–22).

The eleventh article declares the LDS belief in freedom of worship and of conscience for both themselves and all others. It states: “We claim the privilege of worshipping Almighty God according to the dictates of our own conscience, and allow all men the same privilege, let them worship how, where, or what they may.” And the twelfth article states the political stance of the Latter-day Saints as law-abiding citizens (D&C 134; see POLITICS: POLITICAL TEACHINGS; TOLERANCE).

The final declaration provides a broad perspective for life and an invitation to the LDS approach to life: “We believe in being honest, true, chaste, benevolent, virtuous, and in doing good to all men; indeed, we may say that we follow the admonition of Paul—We believe all things, we hope all things, we have endured many things, and hope to be able to endure all things. If there is anything virtuous, lovely, or of good report or praiseworthy, we seek after these things” (cf. 1 Cor. 13:7; Philip. 4:8).

The Wentworth Letter was not the first attempt to summarize basic LDS beliefs. Earlier lists, some of which may have influenced the Wentworth listing, had appeared prior to 1842. As early as June 1829, Joseph Smith and Oliver COWDERY were committing to paper the “Articles and Covenants” of the soon-to-be-organized Church. Later known as Doctrine and Covenants Section 20, this text enumerates a number of basic beliefs, including the existence of God; the creation and fall of man; the centrality of Jesus Christ; the fundamental ordinances of the gospel, including baptism; and the basic duties of members (20:17–36). This document, the first accepted by a Church conference vote, was not an exhaustive listing of all beliefs but rather a basic charter for the infant organization, rooted in the Bible and the Book of Mormon.

In the first issue of the LDS Messenger and Advocate (Oct. 1834), published in Kirtland, Ohio, Oliver Cowdery enumerated eight “principles,” all of which had their parallel in section 20.

Other early lists that summarized the leading principles of Latter-day Saint beliefs prior to the Wentworth Letter include one prepared by Joseph Young for publication by John Haywood in The Religious Creeds and Statistics of Every Christian Denomination in the United States (Boston, 1836, pp. 139–40). In five paragraphs, he outlined the doctrines of (1) the Godhead and atonement of Jesus Christ; (2) the first principles and ordinances of the gospel performed by apostolic authority as in the ancient Church of Christ; (3) the gathering of lost Israel and the restoration of spiritual gifts to her; (4) the Second Coming of Christ; and (5) the resurrection and judgment of all mankind.

Another list of eighteen “principles and doctrines” was included by Parley P. Pratt in the introduction to his Late Persecution of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints (New York, 1840, pp. iii–xiii). For example, “The first principle of Theology as held by this Church, is Faith in God the eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, who verily was crucified for the sins of the world . . . and in the Holy Ghost who bears record of them” (pp. iii–iv). Many phrases in Pratt’s list are similar to those in the Wentworth Letter.

Orson Pratt offers an expansive and eloquent “sketch of the faith and doctrine” of the Church in his Interesting Account of Several Remarkable Visions (Edinburgh, 1840, pp. 24–31). The order in which it presents its themes in nineteen paragraphs (many of which begin, “We believe that . . .”) is nearly identical to that of the thirteen points of the Wentworth Letter. Orson Pratt’s explanations include biblical references and personal testimony of the truth and divine origins of these teachings.

Orson Hyde published in German a history of the Church that included a chapter of sixteen articles (actually essays) on such topics as the Godhead, the use of scripture, faith, repentance, baptism, confirmation, sacrament of bread and wine, confession of sins and Church discipline, children, revelations, lay priesthood, baptism for the dead, prayer, holidays, washing of the feet, and patriarchal blessings (A Cry from the Wilderness [Frankfurt, 1842]).

Even after the Wentworth Letter was published in March 1842, many other lists of LDS beliefs continued to appear for the next generation. In April 1849, James H. Flanigan included a list of fourteen statements in a pamphlet published in England, and this list was quoted and sometimes modified in various publications throughout the nineteenth century. For example, it was quoted in Charles MacKay’s popular book The Mormons; or the Latter-day Saints (London, 1851, pp. 46–47). This list follows the Wentworth Letter almost verbatim, adding such points as “the Lord’s supper” to Article 4; including “wisdom, charity, [and] brotherly love” among the gifts of the spirit in Article 7; and inserting a fourteenth article regarding the literal resurrection of the body. Other lists (usually composed by missionaries) were published in various parts of the world throughout this era.

The canonization of the Wentworth letter as part of the Pearl of Great Price in 1880 reflected and assured its undisputed priority. And when James E. Talmage was asked by the First Presidency in 1891 to prepare a work on theology for use as a textbook in Church schools, it was to these Articles of Faith that he turned for the outline of his volume. First published in 1899 and still in use today, Talmage’s Articles of Faith greatly elaborate on the themes of Joseph Smith’s Wentworth list. In twenty-four chapters, Talmage provides extensive commentary and scriptural references regarding each of the concepts mentioned in the thirteen articles, plus sections on the sacrament of the Lord’s Supper and resurrection (as in Flanigan’s listing), and finally a section on practical religion (benevolence, tithes and offerings, consecration, social order within the Church, eternal marriage, sanctity of the body, and keeping the Sabbath day holy).

As early as the 1850s, LDS missionaries printed broadsides that contained the Articles of Faith. In time, these missionary placards were reduced to wallet size and are still used by missionaries throughout the world. In the PRIMARY classes of the Church, children memorize the Articles of Faith as a requirement for graduation at age twelve, and adults have also been encouraged to learn and use them for personal study and in missionary work.

Although not a formal creed, the Articles of Faith are a marvelously abridged summary (less than 400 words) of the basic beliefs of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. While there have been many variations published since Joseph Smith’s day, a central core of beliefs stated in all these articles comes from the earliest years of the Restoration—a fact that testifies both to its internal consistency and its constancy.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Lyon, T. Edgar. “Origin and Purpose of the Articles of Faith.” Instructor 87 (Aug.–Oct. 1952):230–31, 264–65, 275, 298–99, 319.
- McConkie, Bruce R. A New Witness for the Articles of Faith. Salt Lake City, 1985.
- Sondrup, Steven P. “On Confessing Faith: Thoughts on the Language of the Articles of Faith.” In Literature of Belief, ed. N. Lambert, pp. 197–215. Provo, Utah, 1981.
- Talmage, James E. AF. Salt Lake City, 1899.
- Welch, John W. “[Joseph Smith and Paul:] Co-Authors of the Articles of Faith?” Instructor 114 (Nov. 1969):422–26.
- Whittaker, David J. “The ‘Articles of Faith’ in Early Mormon Literature and Thought.” In New Views of Mormon History, A Collection of Essays in Honor of Leonard J. Arrington, ed. D. Bitton and M. Beecher, pp. 63–92. Salt Lake City, 1987.

DAVID J. WHITTAKER

ARTIFICIAL INSEMINATION

Artificial insemination is defined as placing semen into the uterus or oviduct by artificial rather than natural means. The Church does not approve of artificial insemination of single women. It also discourages artificial insemination of married women using semen from anyone but the husband. "However, this is a personal matter that ultimately must be left to the husband and wife, with the responsibility for the decision resting solely upon them" (General Handbook of Instructions, 11-4). Children conceived by artificial insemination have the same family ties as children who are conceived naturally. The General Handbook of Instructions (1989) states: "A child conceived by artificial insemination and born after the parents are sealed in the temple is born in the covenant. A child conceived by artificial insemination before the parents are sealed may be sealed to them after they are sealed."

BIBLIOGRAPHY

General Handbook of Instructions, 11-4. Salt Lake City, 1989.

FRANK O. MAY, JR.

ARTISTS, VISUAL

While the work of LDS artists encompasses many historical and cultural styles, its unity derives from their shared religious beliefs and from recurring LDS religious themes in their works. The absence of an official liturgical art has kept the Church from directing its artists into specified stylistic traditions. This has been especially conducive to variety in art as the Church has expanded into many different cultures, with differing artistic styles and traditions. Some of the aesthetic constants of LDS artists are the narrative tradition in painting, a reverence for nature, absence of nihilism, support of traditional societal values, respect for the human body, a strong sense of aesthetic structure, and rigorous craftsmanship.

The history of LDS painters begins in NAUVOO in the 1840s, in the second decade following the establishment of the LDS Church (1830). Two factors especially influenced the early development of an artistic tradition within this small, new church on the American frontier: missionary work abroad and the desire of new converts to join the main body of the members.

The first two LDS painters, both English converts, were Sutcliffe Maudsley (1809-1881), from Lancashire, and William W. Major (1804-1854), from Bristol. Maudsley painted the earliest portraits among the Latter-day Saints—primitive but accurate profiles of members of the SMITH FAMILY in Nauvoo. Major, who crossed the plains in 1848, was the earliest painter in the Utah territory. His most famous painting, begun in WINTER QUARTERS and completed in the Salt Lake Valley, depicts Brigham YOUNG and his family in the stage-like interior of an imaginary English mansion, an attempt to transplant to the American frontier a British art tradition that goes back to Gainsborough.

In 1853 another English convert painter, Frederick H. Piercy (1830-1891), journeyed to Utah, making detailed sketches and watercolor drawings along the way to illustrate an LDS emigrant guide book, Route from Liverpool to Great Salt Lake Valley. This visual record is the earliest extant series showing the Mormon route. Many of its original paintings and drawings are in the Boston Museum of Fine Arts.

Over the next quarter of a century, many more British converts who were artists, most with limited formal education and modest art training in England, migrated to Utah. Almost all of them painted the mountains and the Great Salt Lake in the exaggerated and romantic styles then popular in England. Romantic landscapes were linked to their religious faith. They saw the face of the Lord in nature and ZION in the purity of the western wilderness. Very few of these early works by British converts depict genre or historical subjects. A major exception is the huge painting of Joseph SMITH preaching to the Indians done for the SALT LAKE TEMPLE by London-born William Armitage (1817-1890).

Other prominent English convert painters from this period were Alfred Lambourne (1850-1926) and Henry Lavender Adolphus Culmer (1854-1914). Culmer received the most national recognition, primarily through his large paintings of the canyons and deserts of southern Utah published in the March 1907 issue of the National Geographic Magazine.

Contemporaneous Scandinavian convert painters included C. C. A. (Carl Christian Anton) Christensen (1831-1912), from Denmark, and

ARTIFICIAL INSEMINATION

Artificial insemination is defined as placing semen into the uterus or oviduct by artificial rather than natural means. The Church does not approve of artificial insemination of single women. It also discourages artificial insemination of married women using semen from anyone but the husband. "However, this is a personal matter that ultimately must be left to the husband and wife, with the responsibility for the decision resting solely upon them" (General Handbook of Instructions, 11-4). Children conceived by artificial insemination have the same family ties as children who are conceived naturally. The General Handbook of Instructions (1989) states: "A child conceived by artificial insemination and born after the parents are sealed in the temple is born in the covenant. A child conceived by artificial insemination before the parents are sealed may be sealed to them after they are sealed."

BIBLIOGRAPHY

General Handbook of Instructions, 11-4. Salt Lake City, 1989.

FRANK O. MAY, JR.

ARTISTS, VISUAL

While the work of LDS artists encompasses many historical and cultural styles, its unity derives from their shared religious beliefs and from recurring LDS religious themes in their works. The absence of an official liturgical art has kept the Church from directing its artists into specified stylistic traditions. This has been especially conducive to variety in art as the Church has expanded into many different cultures, with differing artistic styles and traditions. Some of the aesthetic constants of LDS artists are the narrative tradition in painting, a reverence for nature, absence of nihilism, support of traditional societal values, respect for the human body, a strong sense of aesthetic structure, and rigorous craftsmanship.

The history of LDS painters begins in NAUVOO in the 1840s, in the second decade following the establishment of the LDS Church (1830). Two factors especially influenced the early development of an artistic tradition within this small, new church on the American frontier: missionary work abroad and the desire of new converts to join the main body of the members.

The first two LDS painters, both English converts, were Sutcliffe Maudsley (1809-1881), from Lancashire, and William W. Major (1804-1854), from Bristol. Maudsley painted the earliest portraits among the Latter-day Saints—primitive but accurate profiles of members of the SMITH FAMILY in Nauvoo. Major, who crossed the plains in 1848, was the earliest painter in the Utah territory. His most famous painting, begun in WINTER QUARTERS and completed in the Salt Lake Valley, depicts Brigham YOUNG and his family in the stage-like interior of an imaginary English mansion, an attempt to transplant to the American frontier a British art tradition that goes back to Gainsborough.

In 1853 another English convert painter, Frederick H. Piercy (1830-1891), journeyed to Utah, making detailed sketches and watercolor drawings along the way to illustrate an LDS emigrant guide book, Route from Liverpool to Great Salt Lake Valley. This visual record is the earliest extant series showing the Mormon route. Many of its original paintings and drawings are in the Boston Museum of Fine Arts.

Over the next quarter of a century, many more British converts who were artists, most with limited formal education and modest art training in England, migrated to Utah. Almost all of them painted the mountains and the Great Salt Lake in the exaggerated and romantic styles then popular in England. Romantic landscapes were linked to their religious faith. They saw the face of the Lord in nature and ZION in the purity of the western wilderness. Very few of these early works by British converts depict genre or historical subjects. A major exception is the huge painting of Joseph SMITH preaching to the Indians done for the SALT LAKE TEMPLE by London-born William Armitage (1817-1890).

Other prominent English convert painters from this period were Alfred Lambourne (1850-1926) and Henry Lavender Adolphus Culmer (1854-1914). Culmer received the most national recognition, primarily through his large paintings of the canyons and deserts of southern Utah published in the March 1907 issue of the National Geographic Magazine.

Contemporaneous Scandinavian convert painters included C. C. A. (Carl Christian Anton) Christensen (1831-1912), from Denmark, and

C. C. A. Christensen (1831–1912), a Danish convert trained at the Royal Academy of Fine Arts in Copenhagen, created a series of Mormon history panoramas and used them to give missionary lectures. He also painted murals in the Manti and St. George temples. From the Brigham Young University photograph collection. Courtesy Nelson Wadsworth.

Danquart A. Weggeland (1827–1918), from Norway. Both were trained at the Royal Academy of Art in Copenhagen and favored historical and genre paintings. Christensen's Mormon Panorama is the most significant series of LDS historical paintings from the nineteenth century. It includes twenty-three tempera paintings, each six feet by ten feet, recounting the pre-Utah history of the Church in epic dimensions. These paintings have been widely published (Art in America 58 [May-June 1970]:52–65) and exhibited (Whitney Museum of American Art, 1970).

An American-born painter in this early period was George M. Ottinger (1833–1917), from Philadelphia. His art includes both historical and landscape painting.

In 1890 the Church called some of the most skilled younger LDS painters to study in Paris. These “art missionaries,” John Hafen (1856–1910), Lorus Pratt (1855–1923), John B. Fairbanks (1855–1940), Edwin Evans (1860–1946), and Herman H. Haag (1871–1895), studied art to prepare to paint the murals in the Salt Lake Temple. They studied academic figure drawing formally and impressionism informally. Other artists who also studied in Paris in this early period were James T. Harwood (1860–1940) and John W. Clawson (1858–1936), a grandson of Brigham Young.

These artists returned to Utah to paint and teach, and then sent their best students to Paris to study. This second wave included Mahonri M. Young (1877–1957), also a grandson of Brigham Young, and Donald Beauregard (1884–1914). Young returned to Utah and then went to New York City, where he taught at the Art Students League. In his lifetime he developed a national reputation as a sculptor and graphic artist. Beauregard spent most of his short artistic life in New Mexico, contributing to the early Santa Fe art tradition.

With the coming of World War I, the center of training for Utah painters shifted from Paris to New York City. The two most significant LDS artists of this period were Minerva K. Teichert (1888–1976) and LeConte Stewart (1891–1990). Both sought to celebrate their faith and tradition artistically, but in different ways. Teichert painted historical and genre scenes from LDS and western history and religious scenes from the Book of Mormon, while Stewart celebrated the pioneer landscape of Utah.

The next major leaders in LDS painting were Arnold Friberg (b. 1913) from Illinois, and Alvin Gittens (1921–1981), a convert from England. Both taught at the University of Utah. Friberg's most significant commissions included work for Cecil B. DeMille's Ten Commandments (for which he was nominated for an Academy Award), a series of scenes from the Book of Mormon, and portraits of Great Britain's Prince Charles and Queen Elizabeth II. Gittens was best known as a portrait painter and a teacher. He put his students through rigorous courses in anatomy and perspective when other art schools were emphasizing expressionism. Gittens was the region's preeminent portrait painter until his death.

Self-Portrait, by Minerva Kohlhepp Teichert (1937, graphite). Raised in Pocatello, Idaho, Minerva Teichert (1889-1976) studied art at the Art Institute of Chicago and the Art Students League in New York, then came home in 1917 to marry a Wyoming rancher. Throughout her life she painted scenes from the West and its people and from LDS history and scripture. Her impressionistic style is reflected in this self-portrait. Courtesy Museum of Fine Arts, Brigham Young University.

In the early 1970s a new group of LDS painters began to form around Brigham Young University. These artists were particularly interested in exploring the interface between their religious faith and their art. The leading artists of the group were Gary E. Smith (b. 1942), a convert from Oregon; Dennis Smith (b. 1942) and William F. Whitaker, Jr. (b. 1943) from Utah; James Christensen (b. 1943) from California; and Trevor Southey (b. 1940), a convert from Zimbabwe. The Mormon Arts Festival, held annually at BYU from 1969 to 1984, served as a showplace for some of their best religious work.

Utah continues to attract LDS convert artists from outside the United States, and BYU has become a focus for this artistic immigration. Two of the most recent immigrant faculty are Wulf Barsch (b. 1943) from Germany and Soren Edsberg (b. 1945) from Denmark. Barsch, a winner of the 1975-1976 Prix de Rome, has built a national reputation from his strong semiastract paintings, which often include LDS themes. Edsberg, the son of Knud Edsberg (b. 1911), a prominent Danish portrait and genre painter, has built a European reputation for his geometric paintings.

There are many other LDS painters who have not come to Utah. Giovanna Lacerti (b. 1935) and Pino Drago (b. 1947) from Italy and Johan Bentin (b. 1936) from Copenhagen are notable European LDS artists. Some of the most prominent Latin American and Caribbean LDS painters are Jorge Cocco (b. 1936) of Mexico, Antonio Madrid (b. 1949) of Panama, and Henri-Robert Bresil (b. 1952) from Haiti. They have produced important LDS paintings using artistic approaches totally different from their fellow LDS artists in Utah. Cocco and Madrid look to Spain for stylistic models. Bresil draws on the bright and exuberant folk tradition of Haiti.

In the South Pacific, Rei Hamon (b. around 1915), a part-Maori member of the Church from New Zealand, is an environmental artist. His tight stipple drawings celebrate his profoundly religious attachment to the land, plants, and animals of New Zealand.

In the American Southwest, many Native Americans have joined the Church as a result of missionary work going back to the 1850s. Some of the finest Hopi artists are LDS. Among the most prominent are Fannie Nampeyo Polacca (c. 1900-1987), her son Thomas (b. 1935), and Helen Naha (b. 1922), potters; Lowell Talishoma (b. 1950) and Emil Pooley (1908-1980), kachina carvers; and Wayne Sekaquaptewa (1923-1979) and Michael Soekyma (b. 1942), silversmiths. Among the Navajo, Lucy McKelvey (b. 1946) has a national reputation as a potter. Ida Redbird (1888-1971) is perhaps the most famous Maricopa potter. Among the Santa Clara, Christina (1892-1980) and Terrisita Naranjo (b. 1919) have national and international reputations as potters.

In Indonesia, where batik is the preeminent art form, Hadi Pranoto (b. 1937), from Java, is a respected batik artist. In Guatemala, where textile weaving is the main national art form, Juan Zarate (b. 1930), is an accomplished weaver.

Many Latter-day Saint women are fine quilters. Those with national reputations include Charlotte Anderson (b. 1952), from Kearns, Utah; Joyce Stewart (b. 1940), from Rexburg, Idaho; and Marva Dalebout (b. 1928), from St. George, Utah.

In the mountain West many LDS painters are known for their western and wildlife art. The rise of this art is part of a new self-confidence in a growing region of the country that is beginning to come of age. Jackson Hole, Wyoming; Santa Fe, New Mexico; and Scottsdale, Arizona, are significant centers of the American art market. The West, with its landscape, people, and animals, has become the wellspring of American mythology, and because many LDS people live in the West and have experienced much of the western heroic experience, western art has been a natural area of interest for them. Some of the leading LDS artists in this genre are Michael Coleman (b. 1946), Robert Duncan (b. 1941), Valoy Eaton (b. 1938), and Jim Norton (b. 1953), from Utah; Nancy Glazier (b. 1947) and Gary Carter (b. 1939), living in Montana; and Jim Wilcox (b. 1941), Harold Hopkinson (b. 1918), and Mel Fillerup (b. 1924), from Wyoming. Most paint in either a realist or an impressionist manner. In theme and intention, they are philosophical descendants of the early British and Scandinavian LDS immigrant artists who came west and were awed by the land but held to the epic tradition of which they were a part.

The geographical and cultural diversity of the LDS people has brought aesthetic variety to the LDS art tradition. The artists' shared religious faith and values have constantly infused that tradition with meaning.

Many works by LDS artists are displayed in the Museum of Church History and Art in Salt Lake City, which plays an important role in sharing LDS art with the world.

[See also Art in Mormonism; Musicians; Sculptors.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Gibbs, Linda Jones. Masterworks. Salt Lake City, 1984.
- . Harvesting the Light: The Paris Art Mission and Beginnings of Utah Impressionism. Salt Lake City, 1987.
- Haseltine, James L. 100 Years of Utah Painting. Salt Lake City, 1965.
- Horne, Alice Merrill. Devotees and Their Shrines: A Hand Book of Utah Art. Salt Lake City, 1914.
- Olpin, Robert S. Dictionary of Utah Art. Salt Lake City, 1980.
- Oman, Richard G. "LDS Southwest Indian Art." Ensign 12 (Sept. 1982):33–48.
- , and Richard L. Jensen. C. C. A. Christensen, 1831–1912: Mormon Immigrant Artist. Salt Lake City, 1984.
- Piercy, Frederick H. Route from Liverpool to Great Salt Lake Valley. Liverpool, 1855.

RICHARD G. OMAN

ART IN MORMONISM

From the earliest days of the Church, its leaders have recognized the significant role art plays in enlightening and inspiring Church members. For this reason, the First Presidency encouraged a group of young artists to study in France in the 1880s. They brought back both new artistic skills and an enthusiasm for the art they had seen in Europe. The many temple murals and other paintings done by these artists continue to educate, encourage, and inspire generations of Latter-day Saints. Because Mormon art has been primarily oriented toward service in the Church, much of it has been didactic. Artworks have been used to help teach gospel principles. Images illustrating Book of Mormon and Church history events have become familiar reminders of them. Artworks are also used to teach non-Mormons about Church history and doctrine.

Lux Aeterna, pencil and graphite drawing, by Hagen G. Haltern (1989). An LDS artist, Haltern strives to integrate artistic representation of eternal reality based on five levels of meaning detectable in Exodus 31:1–4 (the anagogical, allegorical, legal, literal, and practical). Courtesy Hagen G. Haltern.

known for their western and wildlife art. The rise of this art is part of a new self-confidence in a growing region of the country that is beginning to come of age. Jackson Hole, Wyoming; Santa Fe, New Mexico; and Scottsdale, Arizona, are significant centers of the American art market. The West, with its landscape, people, and animals, has become the wellspring of American mythology, and because many LDS people live in the West and have experienced much of the western heroic experience, western art has been a natural area of interest for them. Some of the leading LDS artists in this genre are Michael Coleman (b. 1946), Robert Duncan (b. 1941), Valoy Eaton (b. 1938), and Jim Norton (b. 1953), from Utah; Nancy Glazier (b. 1947) and Gary Carter (b. 1939), living in Montana; and Jim Wilcox (b. 1941), Harold Hopkinson (b. 1918), and Mel Fillerup (b. 1924), from Wyoming. Most paint in either a realist or an impressionist manner. In theme and intention, they are philosophical descendants of the early British and Scandinavian LDS immigrant artists who came west and were awed by the land but held to the epic tradition of which they were a part.

The geographical and cultural diversity of the LDS people has brought aesthetic variety to the LDS art tradition. The artists' shared religious faith and values have constantly infused that tradition with meaning.

Many works by LDS artists are displayed in the Museum of Church History and Art in Salt Lake City, which plays an important role in sharing LDS art with the world.

[See also Art in Mormonism; Musicians; Sculptors.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Gibbs, Linda Jones. Masterworks. Salt Lake City, 1984.
- . Harvesting the Light: The Paris Art Mission and Beginnings of Utah Impressionism. Salt Lake City, 1987.
- Haseltine, James L. 100 Years of Utah Painting. Salt Lake City, 1965.
- Horne, Alice Merrill. Devotees and Their Shrines: A Hand Book of Utah Art. Salt Lake City, 1914.
- Olpin, Robert S. Dictionary of Utah Art. Salt Lake City, 1980.
- Oman, Richard G. "LDS Southwest Indian Art." Ensign 12 (Sept. 1982):33–48.
- , and Richard L. Jensen. C. C. A. Christensen, 1831–1912: Mormon Immigrant Artist. Salt Lake City, 1984.
- Piercy, Frederick H. Route from Liverpool to Great Salt Lake Valley. Liverpool, 1855.

RICHARD G. OMAN

ART IN MORMONISM

From the earliest days of the Church, its leaders have recognized the significant role art plays in enlightening and inspiring Church members. For this reason, the First Presidency encouraged a group of young artists to study in France in the 1880s. They brought back both new artistic skills and an enthusiasm for the art they had seen in Europe. The many temple murals and other paintings done by these artists continue to educate, encourage, and inspire generations of Latter-day Saints. Because Mormon art has been primarily oriented toward service in the Church, much of it has been didactic. Artworks have been used to help teach gospel principles. Images illustrating Book of Mormon and Church history events have become familiar reminders of them. Artworks are also used to teach non-Mormons about Church history and doctrine.

Lux Aeterna, pencil and graphite drawing, by Hagen G. Haltern (1989). An LDS artist, Haltern strives to integrate artistic representation of eternal reality based on five levels of meaning detectable in Exodus 31:1–4 (the anagogical, allegorical, legal, literal, and practical). Courtesy Hagen G. Haltern.

The Church has supported the production of art vocally by pronouncement from the pulpit and financially by purchasing artwork for most of its buildings other than meetinghouses. It has established a Church art museum, which provides exhibition space for past and present LDS artists. Additionally, it sponsors an annual art competition. Many of its leaders, especially President Spencer W. Kimball (1972–1985), have challenged Church members to develop their artistic talents so that they can tell the story of the Church in art. Many LDS artists have accepted the challenge and are trying to create art that is both instructive and spiritually inspiring. Consequently, much LDS art has to do with things peculiar to the heritage of the Church and the LDS experience.

Alpha and Omega: On My Way Home, by Wulf Barsch (1985, oil on paper, 24" × 50"). This LDS artist uses images from Utah landscapes and a stylized Alpha and Omega to depict a sense of mankind's eternal journey homeward to God. Courtesy Church Museum of History and Art.

The Miracle of the Gulls, by Minerva K. Teichert (1936, oil on canvas, 40" × 46"). In the early years following the arrival of the Mormon pioneers in the Salt Lake Valley, infestations of crickets threatened their badly needed crops. The arrival of seagulls, who ate the crickets, saved much of the harvest. The event has become known as the "miracle of the gulls."

The purposes of inspiration and encouragement are equally important to the purpose of instruction in LDS art. Whether it is conveyed through a painted landscape or a sculpted human figure in solitary prayer, the spirit of LDS art is essentially the same: it evokes a sense of the goodness of God and of a belief in his eternal plan for mankind. It is this overarching philosophy, this spiritual perspective, that binds LDS artists together.

Even though LDS artists have been aware of contemporary trends in art, they have generally chosen not to follow the current avant-garde fashion. They have tried to relate their art in a pervasive, eternal sense to concerns that continually affect mankind. Their quest consists of the attempt to translate their religious ideals into their various mediums. Their search thus takes them on a different path from that of many other artists and attempts to lead them to the spiritual sources of their beliefs. Feeling that they will reach their goals only through direct access to this spiritual source, LDS artists seek inspiration as a means of attaining this quality in their art. For them, painting or sculpting is a private activity imbued with purpose that affects more than their artistic lives. By conducting their lives with a sense of truth and integrity, they hope to be brought closer to this spiritual core.

Much discussion about a "Mormon aesthetic" has taken place in recent years, but it seems that the very personal nature of this spiritual artistic quest prevents the attainment of a prevalent aesthetic. LDS artists are now found in many parts of the world, and their diverse cultures are providing the input of a wide variety of heritages. While LDS art is characterized by stylistic diversity, it also shows certain common features because of the shared faith of the artists.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Bradshaw, Merrill K. "Toward a Mormon Aesthetic." BYU Studies 21 (Winter 1981):91-99.
- Carmer, Carl. "A Panorama of Mormon Life." Art in America 58 (May-June 1970):52-65.
- Packer, Boyd K. "The Arts and the Spirit of the Lord." BYU Studies 16 (Summer 1976):575-88.
- "A Portfolio of Mormon Painters." Ensign 7 (July 1977):39-57.
- Wheelwright, Lorin F., and Lael J. Woodbury, eds. Mormon Arts. Provo, Utah, 1972.
- Young, Mahonri Sharp. "Mormon Art and Architecture." Art in America 58 (May-June 1970):66-69.

MARTHA MOFFIT PEACOCK

ASIA, THE CHURCH IN

[This entry is made up of two articles:

Asia, East

Asia, South and Southeast

Asia, East discusses the growth and development of the Church in China, Japan, South Korea, Hong Kong, and Taiwan. Asia, South and Southeast discusses Church growth in the Philippines, Thailand, Singapore, Indonesia, Vietnam, India, and Sri Lanka.]

ASIA, EAST

EARLY LDS MISSIONARY ATTEMPTS IN CHINA AND JAPAN. President Brigham YOUNG sent Hosea Stout, James Lewis, and Chapman Duncan to China in August 1852. They reached Hong Kong on April 28, 1853. Although they preached the gospel to the people, they could not gain a foothold

Latter-day Saints in Osaka, Japan, in 1917, where missionaries taught an English Bible class every Tuesday evening. Photographer: Joseph H. Stimpson.

ment are equally important to the purpose of instruction in LDS art. Whether it is conveyed through a painted landscape or a sculpted human figure in solitary prayer, the spirit of LDS art is essentially the same: it evokes a sense of the goodness of God and of a belief in his eternal plan for mankind. It is this overarching philosophy, this spiritual perspective, that binds LDS artists together.

Even though LDS artists have been aware of contemporary trends in art, they have generally chosen not to follow the current avant-garde fashion. They have tried to relate their art in a pervasive, eternal sense to concerns that continually affect mankind. Their quest consists of the attempt to translate their religious ideals into their various mediums. Their search thus takes them on a different path from that of many other artists and attempts to lead them to the spiritual sources of their beliefs. Feeling that they will reach their goals only through direct access to this spiritual source, LDS artists seek inspiration as a means of attaining this quality in their art. For them, painting or sculpting is a private activity imbued with purpose that affects more than their artistic lives. By conducting their lives with a sense of truth and integrity, they hope to be brought closer to this spiritual core.

Much discussion about a "Mormon aesthetic" has taken place in recent years, but it seems that the very personal nature of this spiritual artistic quest prevents the attainment of a prevalent aesthetic. LDS artists are now found in many parts of the world, and their diverse cultures are providing the input of a wide variety of heritages. While LDS art is characterized by stylistic diversity, it also shows certain common features because of the shared faith of the artists.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Bradshaw, Merrill K. "Toward a Mormon Aesthetic." BYU Studies 21 (Winter 1981):91-99.
- Carmer, Carl. "A Panorama of Mormon Life." Art in America 58 (May-June 1970):52-65.
- Packer, Boyd K. "The Arts and the Spirit of the Lord." BYU Studies 16 (Summer 1976):575-88.
- "A Portfolio of Mormon Painters." Ensign 7 (July 1977):39-57.
- Wheelwright, Lorin F., and Lael J. Woodbury, eds. Mormon Arts. Provo, Utah, 1972.
- Young, Mahonri Sharp. "Mormon Art and Architecture." Art in America 58 (May-June 1970):66-69.

MARTHA MOFFIT PEACOCK

ASIA, THE CHURCH IN

[This entry is made up of two articles:

Asia, East

Asia, South and Southeast

Asia, East discusses the growth and development of the Church in China, Japan, South Korea, Hong Kong, and Taiwan. Asia, South and Southeast discusses Church growth in the Philippines, Thailand, Singapore, Indonesia, Vietnam, India, and Sri Lanka.]

ASIA, EAST

EARLY LDS MISSIONARY ATTEMPTS IN CHINA AND JAPAN. President Brigham YOUNG sent Hosea Stout, James Lewis, and Chapman Duncan to China in August 1852. They reached Hong Kong on April 28, 1853. Although they preached the gospel to the people, they could not gain a foothold and sailed home after fifty-six days. On January 9, 1921, David O. MCKAY, an apostle, visited Beijing and dedicated the Chinese realm to missionary work, but the Church did not attempt to go to China until 1949.

Latter-day Saints in Osaka, Japan, in 1917, where missionaries taught an English Bible class every Tuesday evening. Photographer: Joseph H. Stimpson.

Efforts to establish the Church in Japan came almost fifty years after the unsuccessful first Chinese attempt. In February 1901, President Lorenzo SNOW announced plans to open a mission in Japan, with Heber J. GRANT, an apostle, as president and Louis A. Kelsch, Horace S. Eusign, and eighteen-year-old Alma O. Taylor also to serve. Elder Grant dedicated Japan to the preaching of the gospel on September 1, 1901, at Yokohama. Learning the language, customs, and traditions was so difficult, however, that the new missionaries spent eighteen months studying before they ventured out among the Japanese people. The slow start was symptomatic of the entire mission until its closure in August 1924. Although they had baptized only 166 people in 23 years, they did publish a Japanese translation of the Book of Mormon (1909), several tracts, and a hymnal.

THE CHURCH IN JAPAN SINCE WORLD WAR II. In the spring of 1947, the First Presidency assigned Edward L. Clissold to reopen the Japanese mission, and missionary work was resumed in Japan in 1948. President Clissold had served in the U.S. occupation forces in Japan and was acquainted with government offices and procedures. The first group of missionaries arrived on June 26, 1948. They were helped by LDS service personnel, who contributed much to the success of the postwar mission. For example, Sato Tatsuo, the first Japanese to join the Church after World War II, was taught the gospel by Boyd K. Packer, later an apostle, and three of his fellow servicemen. Sato organized the first Sunday School in Nagoya in 1946. He later translated the Doctrine and Covenants and the Pearl of Great Price, and retranslated the Book of Mormon into contemporary Japanese. By August 1949, missionaries were proselytizing in at least ten major cities and Japanese members numbered 211.

The Church has grown steadily in Japan, and native Japanese serve in all levels of leadership in the Church. When the Tokyo stake was organized on March 15, 1970, the president was Tanaka Kenji, and all the stake officers were Japanese. Most of the mission presidents have been either native Japanese or Americans of Japanese ancestry, and by 1990 almost one-third of the more than two thousand LDS missionaries in Japan were local Japanese. In 1977, Yoshihiko Kikuchi became the first Japanese and Asian called as a GENERAL AUTHORITY of the Church.

Members of the Church in Japan have access to the full program of the Church: for example, SEMINARIES and INSTITUTES (started in 1972); a translation services department to provide Church written materials in the Japanese language; and genealogy services through the microfilming of registers at civic and Buddhist repositories. At an area conference held in Tokyo in August 1975, President Spencer W. KIMBALL announced to the 12,300 participants plans to build a temple in Tokyo. He returned to dedicate the completed structure on October 27–29, 1980.

By 1955, the Japanese mission included South Korea and Okinawa, and the name of the mission was changed to the Northern Far East Mission. At the same time, the Church organized the Southern Far East Mission with H. Grant Heaton as its first president. That mission included Hong Kong, Taiwan, the Philippines, and Guam. For several years during the Korean conflict, the successive Japan mission presidents, Vinal G. Mauss and Hilton A. Robertson, supervised proselytizing as well as Church organizations for military people throughout East Asia, Guam, and the Philippines. With the truce in Korea, it became possible to establish missionary work there.

CHURCH GROWTH IN SOUTH KOREA. Although the Church did not officially move into Korea until 1955, LDS military personnel had taught and baptized some twenty Koreans by May 1953. Kim Ho Jik, a Korean who had studied for a doctorate at Cornell University, joined the Church in New York in 1951. On returning home he became an influential member of the Church and of the Korean government. Until his death in 1959, Kim facilitated the founding of the Church in South Korea. As in Japan, the Church in Korea is in the hands of local leaders.

The newly appointed mission president, Paul Andrus, sent the first two elders from Japan to

← The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in Asia and the Far East, as of January 1, 1991.

Seoul in April 1956. By the summer of 1962, when Korea became a separate mission with Gail E. Carr as president, there were over 1,600 members. In 1968, the Church was established in every major city and all provincial capitals. Unlike most other areas of the world, the majority of Koreans baptized were men, and even in the late 1970s, 55 percent of converts were male. Korea has remained the most fruitful Asian mission other than the Christian Philippines.

The second and third mission presidents, Spencer J. Palmer and Robert H. Slover, did much to enlarge the Church in Korea. Both men emphasized public relations, translation work (the Book of Mormon was published in Korean in 1967 and the Doctrine and Covenants and Pearl of Great Price in 1968), leadership training, the purchase of property for chapels and other uses, and preparation for stakes. President Edward Brown later supervised the beginning of the seminary and institute program. In March 1973, Rhee Ho Nam was sustained as president of the first Korean stake. Two years later, in 1975, the Korea Seoul Mission was divided and a new mission was organized in Pusan with Han In Sang as president. On December 14–15, 1985, President Gordon B. Hinckley dedicated the Seoul Korea Temple.

CHURCH DEVELOPMENT IN THE CHINESE REALM. The Chinese-speaking area of Asia has over a billion inhabitants, but the Church has had access only to Taiwan (twenty million), Hong Kong (five million), and Macao. Political conditions in the People's Republic of China have not allowed proselytizing. Church growth in Hong Kong and Taiwan has, however, been significant.

In 1949, the Church briefly opened missionary work in Hong Kong, but because of the Chinese civil war between the Nationalists and the Communists (which ended in October 1949) and the Korean conflict, the Hong Kong colony had many problems. Although nine missionaries served and fourteen Chinese joined the Church, the Hong Kong Mission was closed on February 6, 1951. After the end of the Korean conflict, when missionary numbers had increased, Church leaders reopened the Chinese area mission in August 1955. It was comprised of Hong Kong, Taiwan, Guam, the Philippines and other parts of Southeast Asia, and the People's Republic of China, even though the latter was still closed to missionary work. By June 1956, there were forty missionaries in Hong Kong and three hundred Chinese had been baptized.

On June 4, 1956, four elders flew from Hong Kong to Taipei, Taiwan, to commence missionary work in the Mandarin Chinese language. LDS military people gave considerable support during the founding stages in Taiwan. By mid-1958 there were 286 Chinese members there. On June 1, 1959, Mark E. Petersen, an apostle, dedicated Taiwan to the preaching of the gospel, reinvoking Elder McKay's 1921 dedication of the entire Chinese realm.

The founding of LDS missionary work in the Philippines and other parts of Southeast Asia was

CHURCH IN ASIA as of December 31, 1989 (For more recent figures see Appendix 13.)

Area	Members	Missions	Stakes/Districts	Wards and Branches
China	NA	0	0/0	3
Hong Kong	17,000	1	4/0	26
India	800	0	0/3	9
Indonesia	4,100	0	0/3	18
Japan	91,000	9	23/15	264
Korea, Republic	50,000	4	14/4	146
Macao	200	0	0/0	1
Malaysia	300	0	0/1	3
Pakistan	NA	0	0/0	2
Papua New Guinea	2,100	0	0/1	13
Philippines	213,000	9	38/39	638
Singapore	1,400	1	0/1	5
Sri Lanka	100	0	0/0	1
Taiwan	17,000	2	3/2	47
Thailand	3,600	1	0/3	16
Asia Total:	400,600	27	82/72	1,192

directed by the presidents of the Southern Far East Mission during the 1960s. Because various countries were broken off to form new missions, the name and scope of the Southern Far East Mission were changed to the Hong Kong-Taiwan Mission on November 1, 1969. Fourteen months later, on January 11, 1971, a separate mission was established in Taiwan.

Since then, development has been separate but quite parallel. On April 22, 1976, Chang I-Ch'ing was sustained as president of the Taiwan Taipei Stake. Three days later, Poon Shiu-Tat (Sheldon) was sustained as Hong Kong's first stake president. The founding of seminaries and institutes in 1975 and the development of translation work were also parallel. In 1990 each region had multiple missions and stakes. The Taipei Taiwan Temple was dedicated November 17-18, 1984, by Gordon B. Hinckley of the First Presidency.

MAINLAND CHINA. Formal missionary work has not been undertaken in the People's Republic of China. Three branches of the Church were organized on the Chinese mainland in 1990, but they were restricted to expatriates. Since 1979, a number of Brigham Young University performance groups have toured the People's Republic of China, garnering high praise and great popularity.

ASIA, SOUTH AND SOUTHEAST

EARLY HISTORY. The first two Latter-day Saints to reach India were George Barber and Benjamin Riehey, British sailors who in 1849 visited Calcutta and made friends who asked for missionaries. In June 1851, Elder Joseph Richards arrived. He baptized eight people, ordained Maurice White an elder, and appointed him branch president of the "Wanderer's Branch," the first unit of the Church in Asia. That December, William Willes, a second missionary, arrived in Calcutta. By mid-May, when he counted 19 Europeans and 170 Indian farmers as Church members, he wrote to Utah for more missionaries. However, his branch withered quickly when the Indian farmers learned that there would be no immediate, direct material gain from joining the Church. Meanwhile, President Brigham Young dispatched nine additional missionaries from Utah to India and four to Siam (Thailand) in August 1852. After a difficult trip, they arrived in Calcutta on April 23, 1853.

Although they and some of their converts traversed thousands of miles of dusty or muddy Indian and Burmese roads, preached in notable and humble surroundings, published tracts in five languages (and had the Book of Mormon translated into Urdu), and bore a witness to the peoples of India, Burma, and Siam that the gospel had been restored, they had little success, and the Church was not established in India or Southeast Asia until after World War II.

LDS chapel in Taiwan. The first four LDS missionaries were transferred from Hong Kong to Taipei in 1956. Large meetinghouses were completed in Taipei and Kaohsiung in the 1960s.

THE CHURCH IN THE PHILIPPINES. Joseph Fielding SMITH, an apostle, dedicated the Philippines for the preaching of the gospel on August 21, 1955, and the first four missionaries arrived from Hong Kong in June 1961. Establishing the Church in the Philippines progressed more smoothly than in any other part of Asia because over 90 percent of the population were Christian, almost 50 percent used English to some degree, and Americans who were teaching a religion with American origins were generally popular. By 1967, the Philippines was made a separate mission with Paul Rose as president, and by 1973, over 13,000 Filipinos had been baptized. On May 20, 1973, Ezra Taft BENSON, an apostle, organized the Manila Philippines Stake with Augusto A. Lim as president. Four years later the Manila stake was divided into three stakes. The developing of experienced leadership and building of adequate meetinghouses have been a challenge, but members have had the full program of the Church, including seminaries and institutes since 1972. Selections from the Book of Mormon were published in Tagalog (1987); a missionary training center was established in Manila (1986); and on September 25–27, 1984, President Gordon B. Hinckley dedicated the Manila Philippines Temple. In 1988 the First Presidency made Manila the headquarters for the Philippines/Micronesia area of the Church and assigned an area president to live there. Church growth in the Philippines has been the most rapid of all Asian countries, and over 80 percent of the missionaries in 1990 were local Filipinos.

THE CHURCH IN THAILAND. Church growth in Thailand has progressed slowly because the Thais' devotion to king, country, the Buddhist religion (94 percent), and tradition appears to form a seamless whole. The Church entered Thailand when Latter-day Saints were part of the U.S. military personnel sent there in 1961. In July 1966, an LDS servicemen's branch was organized with two hundred members. On November 2, 1966, Gordon B. Hinckley, then an apostle, dedicated Thailand for the preaching of the gospel. By late 1967, the first six elders were sent to Bangkok from Hong Kong. In July 1973, the Thailand Bangkok Mission was organized, and the Book of Mormon was published in Thai in 1976.

THE SINGAPORE MISSION AREA. Missionary activity began in Singapore in 1968, the first branch of the Church being organized on October 13. Earlier that year, on March 19, two missionaries had been assigned there from Hong Kong. Elder Ezra Taft Benson dedicated Singapore for the preaching of the gospel on April 14, 1969, and on November 1, it became the headquarters for the Southeast Asia Mission with G. Carlos Smith, Jr., as president. He was responsible for missionary work in all the nations of South and Southeast Asia except the Philippines.

LDS expansion in Singapore has not been easy because the government banned all foreign missionaries from Singapore and prohibited open proselytizing in 1970. The Church is allowed only a limited number of visas, including those of the mission president and his wife, at any one time, but through the efforts of young local missionaries the growth of the Church has been steady.

INDONESIAN CHURCH GROWTH. Since 1980, virtually all LDS missionary work in Indonesia has been performed by local members. Indonesia is the only Muslim country where Church proselytizing has succeeded. The Church officially entered Indonesia when Elder Ezra Taft Benson dedicated that country for the teaching of the gospel on October 26, 1969. G. Carlos Smith, Jr., the newly called president of the Southeast Asia Mission, sent six elders from Singapore on January 5, 1970. But on April 11, the Indonesian government halted door-to-door proselytizing and church meetings until the Church obtained official recognition. Although government recognition came nine days later, relations between the Church and various departments of the Indonesian government have not been smooth.

In April 1975, the First Presidency organized the Indonesia Jakarta Mission with Hendrik Gout as president. He had the Book of Mormon translated and published in Bahasa Indonesian (1977), fostered the work of welfare services missionaries, and facilitated the establishment of an elementary school in Jakarta in 1976. (It closed in 1988.)

In 1978, government regulations required that Indonesian nationals hold all missionary (and ministerial) positions, and by late 1980 all non-Indonesian LDS missionaries were removed from the country. It was necessary to recombine the Indonesia Jakarta Mission with the Singapore Mission until 1985, when Effian Kadarusman, an Indonesian, was appointed president over the reestablished mission. By 1988, close to one hundred Indonesians were serving full-time missions in their country. In 1989 the Indonesia Jakarta Mission was again made a part of the Singapore Mission.

THE CHURCH'S BRIEF ENCOUNTER WITH VIETNAM. The first Latter-day Saints in Vietnam were military advisers in the early 1960s, and by 1968 more than five thousand LDS servicemen were assigned there. The first servicemen's group was organized in Saigon on June 30, 1963. In December 1965, Vietnam became a district of the Southern Far East Mission with headquarters in Hong Kong. At the same time, six servicemen were called to serve as part-time missionaries. By February 1966, several U.S. servicemen and thirty Vietnamese had been baptized. On October 30, 1966, Elder Gordon B. Hinckley dedicated Vietnam for the preaching of the gospel.

On April 6, 1973, four full-time missionaries were transferred to Saigon from Hong Kong. The Vietnamese Book of Mormon was distributed to members in photocopy form in May 1974. By March 1975, the Church had fifteen missionaries and more than three thousand Vietnamese members. At that point the missionaries were withdrawn, and a month later, Saigon fell. Almost all of the LDS members eventually left Vietnam and migrated to the United States.

CHURCH GROWTH IN INDIA AND SRI LANKA. India and Sri Lanka have laws prohibiting proselytizing by foreigners, and the Church respects those laws. Most of the growth within India and Sri Lanka has been the result of efforts of local members who have conveyed the gospel message to their friends. For example, in 1965, S. Paul Thiruthuvadoss was baptized after an individual search for the gospel of Jesus Christ. He was briefly assisted by foreign missionaries, and his efforts resulted in the baptism of more than two hundred Tamil-speaking South Indians.

In December 1978, Edwin Dharmaraju and his wife, both of whom had been baptized in Western Samoa, served a short mission in their home city of Hyderabad, India. Before returning to Samoa, Dharmaraju baptized twenty-two family members, ordained four men to the Aaronic Priesthood, and organized a group of the Church. Also, Sister Dharmaraju's father, a Baptist minister, had found such interest in the Book of Mormon that he translated it into the Telugu language (48 million speakers). It was published in 1982, as was the complete Hindi (175 million speakers) version and selections in Tamil (42 million speakers). Bengali (48 million speakers) selections of the Book of Mormon were published in 1985.

Another important Indian missionary was Raj Kumar, who strengthened new members and branches as they were established. By 1986 local missionaries were serving full-time missions for the Church in India and Sri Lanka, assisted by North American friendship-missionary couples sent from the Singapore Mission to make friends for the Church in various cities. They and other expatriates, such as business and government personnel stationed in India, did not proselytize, but answered questions and taught the gospel to those who sought them out.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Britsch, R. Lanier. "The Latter-day Saint Mission to India: 1851-1856." BYU Studies 12 (Spring 1972):262-78.
- . "The Closing of the Early Japan Mission." BYU Studies 15 (Winter 1975):171-90.

———. "From Bhutan to Wangts'ang: Taking the Gospel to Asia." Ensign 10 (June 1980):6-10.

———. "The Church's Years in Vietnam." Ensign 10 (Aug. 1980):25-30.

Moss, James R.; R. Lanier Britsch; James R. Christianson; and Richard O. Cowan. The International Church. Provo, Utah, 1982.

Palmer, Speneer J. The Church Encounters Asia. Salt Lake City, 1970.

R. LANIER BRITSCH

---

ASSISTANTS TO THE TWELVE

In 1941 five men were called as Assistants to the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles. J. Reuben Clark, Jr., of the First Presidency explained at the conference that they had been called because of the rapid growth of the Church and the ever-expanding demands upon the Quorum of the Twelve. A total of thirty-eight men served the Church as Assistants to the Twelve before the office was merged with the SEVENTY in 1976.

As General Authorities, Assistants to the Twelve had the authority to minister throughout the Church and to fulfill assignments as directed by the Quorum of the Twelve. They presided over, and spoke at, stake conferences; helped organize stakes; toured missions; and directed missionary work in many parts of the world.

A number of men who first served as Assistants to the Twelve were later called to be members of the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles: George Q. Morris, Boyd K. Packer, Marvin J. Ashton, L. Tom Perry, David B. Haight, James E. Faust, Neal A. Maxwell, and Joseph B. Wirthlin. Several others who had served as Assistants to the Twelve also served in the Quorum of the Twelve and later as Counselors in the First Presidency, including Hugh B. Brown, N. Eldon Tanner, Marion G. Romney, and Gordon B. Hinckley.

An important 1835 revelation on priesthood describes the Seventy as the quorum standing next in authority to the Twelve, and under their direction, the Seventy share responsibility for the Church throughout the world (D&C 107:25-26, 33-34). According to President Spencer W. KIMBALL in 1976, the calling of the Assistants was "similar to that envisioned by the revelations for the First Quorum of Seventy," but "the scope and demands of the work at that time [1941]" did not yet justify the reconstitution of that quorum (p. 9).

members in photocopy form in May 1974. By March 1975, the Church had fifteen missionaries and more than three thousand Vietnamese members. At that point the missionaries were withdrawn, and a month later, Saigon fell. Almost all of the LDS members eventually left Vietnam and migrated to the United States.

CHURCH GROWTH IN INDIA AND SRI LANKA. India and Sri Lanka have laws prohibiting proselytizing by foreigners, and the Church respects those laws. Most of the growth within India and Sri Lanka has been the result of efforts of local members who have conveyed the gospel message to their friends. For example, in 1965, S. Paul Thiruthuvadoss was baptized after an individual search for the gospel of Jesus Christ. He was briefly assisted by foreign missionaries, and his efforts resulted in the baptism of more than two hundred Tamil-speaking South Indians.

In December 1978, Edwin Dharmaraju and his wife, both of whom had been baptized in Western Samoa, served a short mission in their home city of Hyderabad, India. Before returning to Samoa, Dharmaraju baptized twenty-two family members, ordained four men to the Aaronic Priesthood, and organized a group of the Church. Also, Sister Dharmaraju's father, a Baptist minister, had found such interest in the Book of Mormon that he translated it into the Telugu language (48 million speakers). It was published in 1982, as was the complete Hindi (175 million speakers) version and selections in Tamil (42 million speakers). Bengali (48 million speakers) selections of the Book of Mormon were published in 1985.

Another important Indian missionary was Raj Kumar, who strengthened new members and branches as they were established. By 1986 local missionaries were serving full-time missions for the Church in India and Sri Lanka, assisted by North American friendship-missionary couples sent from the Singapore Mission to make friends for the Church in various cities. They and other expatriates, such as business and government personnel stationed in India, did not proselytize, but answered questions and taught the gospel to those who sought them out.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Britsch, R. Lanier. "The Latter-day Saint Mission to India: 1851-1856." BYU Studies 12 (Spring 1972):262-78.
- . "The Closing of the Early Japan Mission." BYU Studies 15 (Winter 1975):171-90.

———. "From Bhutan to Wangts'ang: Taking the Gospel to Asia." Ensign 10 (June 1980):6-10.

———. "The Church's Years in Vietnam." Ensign 10 (Aug. 1980):25-30.

Moss, James R.; R. Lanier Britsch; James R. Christianson; and Richard O. Cowan. The International Church. Provo, Utah, 1982.

Palmer, Speneer J. The Church Encounters Asia. Salt Lake City, 1970.

R. LANIER BRITSCH

---

ASSISTANTS TO THE TWELVE

In 1941 five men were called as Assistants to the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles. J. Reuben Clark, Jr., of the First Presidency explained at the conference that they had been called because of the rapid growth of the Church and the ever-expanding demands upon the Quorum of the Twelve. A total of thirty-eight men served the Church as Assistants to the Twelve before the office was merged with the SEVENTY in 1976.

As General Authorities, Assistants to the Twelve had the authority to minister throughout the Church and to fulfill assignments as directed by the Quorum of the Twelve. They presided over, and spoke at, stake conferences; helped organize stakes; toured missions; and directed missionary work in many parts of the world.

A number of men who first served as Assistants to the Twelve were later called to be members of the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles: George Q. Morris, Boyd K. Packer, Marvin J. Ashton, L. Tom Perry, David B. Haight, James E. Faust, Neal A. Maxwell, and Joseph B. Wirthlin. Several others who had served as Assistants to the Twelve also served in the Quorum of the Twelve and later as Counselors in the First Presidency, including Hugh B. Brown, N. Eldon Tanner, Marion G. Romney, and Gordon B. Hinckley.

An important 1835 revelation on priesthood describes the Seventy as the quorum standing next in authority to the Twelve, and under their direction, the Seventy share responsibility for the Church throughout the world (D&C 107:25-26, 33-34). According to President Spencer W. KIMBALL in 1976, the calling of the Assistants was "similar to that envisioned by the revelations for the First Quorum of Seventy," but "the scope and demands of the work at that time [1941]" did not yet justify the reconstitution of that quorum (p. 9).

After accelerating growth in many parts of the world led to the organization of the First Quorum of Seventy in 1975, the nearly two dozen Assistants then serving became members of that quorum in 1976.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Kimball, Spencer W. "The Reconstitution of the First Quorum of the Seventy." Ensign (Nov. 1976):9.

Widtsoe, John A. "Assistants to the Twelve." IE 44 (May 1941):288.

BYRON R. MERRILL

---

ASTRONOMY, SCRIPTURAL REFERENCES TO

Latter-day Saint scriptures indicate that both biblical and latter-day prophets and seers were shown visions of the heavenly realms to orient them to God's dominion and eternal purposes. These visions gave information about (1) the governing of systems of WORLDS and stellar objects; (2) a heliocentric, planetary cosmology; (3) the plurality of worlds; (4) the spiritual and physical CREATION of the EARTH and the universe; and (5) the role of Jesus Christ as creator.

The BOOK OF ABRAHAM states that God's physical dominion (throne) is located near a star called Kolob (Abr. 3:2–3). While it might seem reasonable to suppose that this refers to some distinguishing feature of the universe, all efforts to identify it are speculative and not authoritative. Wherever Kolob is located, its purpose is to "govern" all planets that are of the same "order" as the Earth (Abr. 3:9). Since ABRAHAM says no more than that, it is not clear whether he is speaking physically, metaphorically, or allegorically. Thus, "to govern" might mean a physical bonding as with gravity, while "order" could conceivably mean planets similar to the Earth in size, or planets in the same region of this galaxy or even in the entire Milky Way galaxy. Kolob was also said by the Egyptians to provide the light for all stars, including that for our sun (Abr. Facsimile 2). Even so, Latter-day Saints have made no definitive comment on the meaning of these passages.

In contrast to some interpretations of biblical scholars who attribute a geocentric cosmology to the words of Joshua (10:12–14), Job (9:6–7), Isaiah (38:7–8), and other Old Testament passages, the Book of Mormon affirms the sun-centered (heliocentric) view accepted by modern planetary physics. The prophets Nephi<sub>2</sub> (Hel. 12:13–15) and Alma<sub>2</sub> agree that "surely it is the earth that moveth and not the sun" (Alma 30:44).

Psalm 8:3–4 has been the classic text for discussion of the "plurality of worlds." LDS scriptures give even more direct support for modern astronomers' search for extraterrestrial intelligence. The prophets Enoch, Moses, and Joseph Smith all received revelations dealing with the existence of sentient life on other planets. Moses revealed both the spatial and temporal existence of countless worlds: that God had created "worlds without number," that "many worlds. . . have [already] passed away," and that other worlds are yet to be created (Moses 1:33–38). Joseph Smith received revelations explaining that through Jesus Christ these worlds are created and inhabited (D&C 76:22–24; 93:9–10; Moses 1:33), that all kingdoms are bound by certain LAWS and conditions (D&C 88:36–38, 42–47), and that resurrected beings reside on celestialized planets (D&C 130:4–7).

The various creation accounts in LDS scripture outline a spirit creation of the heavens and the earth that preceded the physical creation, thus affirming the spiritual nature of the cosmos (Moses 2–3; Abr. 4–5); spirit is indeed "matter" of a different order (D&C 131:7–8). While Moses calls creation periods "days," Abraham speaks of "times" and of thousand-year days (Abr. 3:4; 5:13), suggesting a complex physical creation process.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Athay, R. Grant. "Worlds Without Number: The Astronomy of Enoch, Abraham, and Moses." BYU Studies 8 (Spring 1968):255–69.

Hansen, H. Kimball. "Astronomy and the Scriptures." In Science and Religion: Toward a More Useful Dialogue, ed. W. Hess and R. Matheny, Vol. 1, 181–96. Geneva, Ill., 1979.

Salisbury, Frank B. The Creation. Salt Lake City, 1976.

ERICH ROBERT PAUL

---

ATONEMENT OF JESUS CHRIST

The atonement of Jesus Christ is the foreordained but voluntary act of the Only Begotten Son of God. He offered his life, including his innocent body, blood, and spiritual anguish as a redeeming ransom (1) for the effect of the fall of Adam upon all

After accelerating growth in many parts of the world led to the organization of the First Quorum of Seventy in 1975, the nearly two dozen Assistants then serving became members of that quorum in 1976.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Kimball, Spencer W. "The Reconstitution of the First Quorum of the Seventy." Ensign (Nov. 1976):9.

Widtsoe, John A. "Assistants to the Twelve." IE 44 (May 1941):288.

BYRON R. MERRILL

---

ASTRONOMY, SCRIPTURAL REFERENCES TO

Latter-day Saint scriptures indicate that both biblical and latter-day prophets and seers were shown visions of the heavenly realms to orient them to God's dominion and eternal purposes. These visions gave information about (1) the governing of systems of WORLDS and stellar objects; (2) a heliocentric, planetary cosmology; (3) the plurality of worlds; (4) the spiritual and physical CREATION of the EARTH and the universe; and (5) the role of Jesus Christ as creator.

The BOOK OF ABRAHAM states that God's physical dominion (throne) is located near a star called Kolob (Abr. 3:2–3). While it might seem reasonable to suppose that this refers to some distinguishing feature of the universe, all efforts to identify it are speculative and not authoritative. Wherever Kolob is located, its purpose is to "govern" all planets that are of the same "order" as the Earth (Abr. 3:9). Since ABRAHAM says no more than that, it is not clear whether he is speaking physically, metaphorically, or allegorically. Thus, "to govern" might mean a physical bonding as with gravity, while "order" could conceivably mean planets similar to the Earth in size, or planets in the same region of this galaxy or even in the entire Milky Way galaxy. Kolob was also said by the Egyptians to provide the light for all stars, including that for our sun (Abr. Facsimile 2). Even so, Latter-day Saints have made no definitive comment on the meaning of these passages.

In contrast to some interpretations of biblical scholars who attribute a geocentric cosmology to the words of Joshua (10:12–14), Job (9:6–7), Isaiah (38:7–8), and other Old Testament passages, the Book of Mormon affirms the sun-centered (heliocentric) view accepted by modern planetary physics. The prophets Nephi<sub>2</sub> (Hel. 12:13–15) and Alma<sub>2</sub> agree that "surely it is the earth that moveth and not the sun" (Alma 30:44).

Psalm 8:3–4 has been the classic text for discussion of the "plurality of worlds." LDS scriptures give even more direct support for modern astronomers' search for extraterrestrial intelligence. The prophets Enoch, Moses, and Joseph Smith all received revelations dealing with the existence of sentient life on other planets. Moses revealed both the spatial and temporal existence of countless worlds: that God had created "worlds without number," that "many worlds. . . have [already] passed away," and that other worlds are yet to be created (Moses 1:33–38). Joseph Smith received revelations explaining that through Jesus Christ these worlds are created and inhabited (D&C 76:22–24; 93:9–10; Moses 1:33), that all kingdoms are bound by certain LAWS and conditions (D&C 88:36–38, 42–47), and that resurrected beings reside on celestialized planets (D&C 130:4–7).

The various creation accounts in LDS scripture outline a spirit creation of the heavens and the earth that preceded the physical creation, thus affirming the spiritual nature of the cosmos (Moses 2–3; Abr. 4–5); spirit is indeed "matter" of a different order (D&C 131:7–8). While Moses calls creation periods "days," Abraham speaks of "times" and of thousand-year days (Abr. 3:4; 5:13), suggesting a complex physical creation process.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Athay, R. Grant. "Worlds Without Number: The Astronomy of Enoch, Abraham, and Moses." BYU Studies 8 (Spring 1968):255–69.

Hansen, H. Kimball. "Astronomy and the Scriptures." In Science and Religion: Toward a More Useful Dialogue, ed. W. Hess and R. Matheny, Vol. 1, 181–96. Geneva, Ill., 1979.

Salisbury, Frank B. The Creation. Salt Lake City, 1976.

ERICH ROBERT PAUL

---

ATONEMENT OF JESUS CHRIST

The atonement of Jesus Christ is the foreordained but voluntary act of the Only Begotten Son of God. He offered his life, including his innocent body, blood, and spiritual anguish as a redeeming ransom (1) for the effect of the fall of Adam upon all

After accelerating growth in many parts of the world led to the organization of the First Quorum of Seventy in 1975, the nearly two dozen Assistants then serving became members of that quorum in 1976.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Kimball, Spencer W. "The Reconstitution of the First Quorum of the Seventy." Ensign (Nov. 1976):9.

Widtsoe, John A. "Assistants to the Twelve." IE 44 (May 1941):288.

BYRON R. MERRILL

---

ASTRONOMY, SCRIPTURAL REFERENCES TO

Latter-day Saint scriptures indicate that both biblical and latter-day prophets and seers were shown visions of the heavenly realms to orient them to God's dominion and eternal purposes. These visions gave information about (1) the governing of systems of WORLDS and stellar objects; (2) a heliocentric, planetary cosmology; (3) the plurality of worlds; (4) the spiritual and physical CREATION of the EARTH and the universe; and (5) the role of Jesus Christ as creator.

The BOOK OF ABRAHAM states that God's physical dominion (throne) is located near a star called Kolob (Abr. 3:2–3). While it might seem reasonable to suppose that this refers to some distinguishing feature of the universe, all efforts to identify it are speculative and not authoritative. Wherever Kolob is located, its purpose is to "govern" all planets that are of the same "order" as the Earth (Abr. 3:9). Since ABRAHAM says no more than that, it is not clear whether he is speaking physically, metaphorically, or allegorically. Thus, "to govern" might mean a physical bonding as with gravity, while "order" could conceivably mean planets similar to the Earth in size, or planets in the same region of this galaxy or even in the entire Milky Way galaxy. Kolob was also said by the Egyptians to provide the light for all stars, including that for our sun (Abr. Facsimile 2). Even so, Latter-day Saints have made no definitive comment on the meaning of these passages.

In contrast to some interpretations of biblical scholars who attribute a geocentric cosmology to the words of Joshua (10:12–14), Job (9:6–7), Isaiah (38:7–8), and other Old Testament passages, the Book of Mormon affirms the sun-centered (heliocentric) view accepted by modern planetary physics. The prophets Nephi<sub>2</sub> (Hel. 12:13–15) and Alma<sub>2</sub> agree that "surely it is the earth that moveth and not the sun" (Alma 30:44).

Psalm 8:3–4 has been the classic text for discussion of the "plurality of worlds." LDS scriptures give even more direct support for modern astronomers' search for extraterrestrial intelligence. The prophets Enoch, Moses, and Joseph Smith all received revelations dealing with the existence of sentient life on other planets. Moses revealed both the spatial and temporal existence of countless worlds: that God had created "worlds without number," that "many worlds. . . have [already] passed away," and that other worlds are yet to be created (Moses 1:33–38). Joseph Smith received revelations explaining that through Jesus Christ these worlds are created and inhabited (D&C 76:22–24; 93:9–10; Moses 1:33), that all kingdoms are bound by certain LAWS and conditions (D&C 88:36–38, 42–47), and that resurrected beings reside on celestialized planets (D&C 130:4–7).

The various creation accounts in LDS scripture outline a spirit creation of the heavens and the earth that preceded the physical creation, thus affirming the spiritual nature of the cosmos (Moses 2–3; Abr. 4–5); spirit is indeed "matter" of a different order (D&C 131:7–8). While Moses calls creation periods "days," Abraham speaks of "times" and of thousand-year days (Abr. 3:4; 5:13), suggesting a complex physical creation process.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Athay, R. Grant. "Worlds Without Number: The Astronomy of Enoch, Abraham, and Moses." BYU Studies 8 (Spring 1968):255–69.

Hansen, H. Kimball. "Astronomy and the Scriptures." In Science and Religion: Toward a More Useful Dialogue, ed. W. Hess and R. Matheny, Vol. 1, 181–96. Geneva, Ill., 1979.

Salisbury, Frank B. The Creation. Salt Lake City, 1976.

ERICH ROBERT PAUL

---

ATONEMENT OF JESUS CHRIST

The atonement of Jesus Christ is the foreordained but voluntary act of the Only Begotten Son of God. He offered his life, including his innocent body, blood, and spiritual anguish as a redeeming ransom (1) for the effect of the fall of Adam upon all mankind and (2) for the personal sins of all who repent, from Adam to the end of the world. Latter-day Saints believe this is the central fact, the crucial foundation, the chief doctrine, and the greatest expression of divine love in the PLAN OF SALVATION. The Prophet Joseph SMITH declared that all “things which pertain to our religion are only appendages” to the atonement of Christ (TPJS, p. 121).

The literal meaning of the word “atonement” is self-evident: at-one-ment, the act of unifying or bringing together what has been separated and estranged. The atonement of Jesus Christ was indispensable because of the separating transgression, or fall, of Adam, which brought death into the world when Adam and Eve partook of the fruit of the tree of knowledge of good and evil (Gen. 2:9; 3:1–24). Latter-day Saints readily acknowledge both the physical and the SPIRITUAL DEATH that Adam and Eve brought upon themselves and all of their posterity, physical death bringing the temporary separation of the spirit from the body, and spiritual death bringing the estrangement of both the spirit and the body from God. But they also believe that the Fall was part of a divine, foreordained plan without which mortal children would not have been born to Adam and Eve. Had not these first parents freely chosen to leave the Garden of Eden via their transgression, there would have been on this earth no human family to experience opposition and growth, moral AGENCY and choice, and the joy of RESURRECTION, redemption, and ETERNAL LIFE (2 Ne. 2:23; Moses 5:11).

The need for a future atonement was explained in a premortal COUNCIL IN HEAVEN at which the spirits of the entire human family were in attendance and over which GOD THE FATHER presided. The two principal associates of God in that council were the premortal Jesus (also known as Jehovah; see JESUS CHRIST, JEHOVAH) and the premortal Adam (also known as Michael). It was in this premortal setting that Christ voluntarily entered into a covenant with the Father, agreeing to enhance the moral agency of humankind even as he atoned for their sins, and he returned to the Father all honor and glory for such selflessness. This preordained role of Christ as mediator explains why the book of Revelation describes Christ as “the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world” (Rev. 13:8) and why Old Testament prophets, priests, and kings, including Moses (Deut. 18:15, 17–19), Job (19:25–27), the Psalmist (Ps. 2, 22), Zechariah (9:9; 12:10; 13:6), Isaiah (7:14; 9:6–7; 53), and Micah (5:2), could speak of the Messiah and his divine role many centuries before his physical birth. A Book of Mormon prophet wrote, “I say unto you that none of the prophets have written, nor prophesied, save they have spoken concerning this Christ” (Jacob 4:4; 7:11). To the brother of Jared who lived some two thousand years before the Redeemer’s birth, the premortal Christ declared, “Behold, I am he who was prepared from the foundation of the world to redeem my people” (Ether 3:14). Such scriptural foreshadowings are reflected in the conversation Christ had with two of his disciples on the road to Emmaus: “Beginning at Moses and all the prophets, he expounded unto them in all the scriptures the things concerning himself” (Luke 24:27; cf. also 24:44).

For Latter-day Saints, it is crucially important to see the agreed-upon and understood fall of man only in the context of the equally agreed-upon and understood redemption of man—redemption provided through the atonement of Jesus Christ. Thus, one of the most important and oft-quoted lines of Latter-day Saint scripture says, “Adam fell that men might be; and men are, that they might have joy. And the Messiah cometh in the fulness of time, that he may redeem the children of men from the fall” (2 Ne. 2:25–26).

Gethsemane, by James C. Christensen (1984, oil on panel, 40" × 44"). Jesus kneels in the Garden of Gethsemane, strengthened by an angel from heaven, as he suffers and atones for the sins of the world (see Luke 22:43). Courtesy James C. Christensen.

LDS scripture teaches that the mission of Christ as Redeemer and the commandment to offer animal sacrifice as an anticipatory reminder and symbol of that divine atonement to come were first taught to Adam and Eve soon after they had been expelled from the Garden of Eden (Moses 5:4–8). The atonement of Christ was taught to the parents of the family of man with the intent that they and their posterity would observe the sacrificial ordinances down through their generations, remembering as they did so the mission and mercy of Christ who was to come. Latter-day Saints emphatically teach that the extent of this atonement is universal, opening the way for the redemption of all mankind—non-Christians as well as Christians, the godless as well as the god-fearing, the untaught infant as well as the fully converted and knowledgeable adult. “It is expedient that there should be a great and last sacrifice,” said Amulek in the Book of Mormon, “an infinite and eternal sacrifice. . . . There can be nothing which is short of an infinite atonement which will suffice for the sins of the world” (Alma 34:10, 12).

This infinite atonement of Christ—and of Christ only—was possible because (1) he was the only sinless man ever to live on this earth and therefore was not subject to the spiritual death that comes as a result of sin; (2) he was the Only Begotten of the Father and therefore possessed the attributes of Godhood, which gave him power over physical death (see 2 Ne. 9:5–9; Alma 34:9–12); and (3) he was the only one sufficiently humble and willing in the premortal council to be foreordained there to that service (JC, pp. 21–62).

The universal, infinite, and unconditional aspects of the atonement of Jesus Christ are several. They include his ransom for Adam’s original transgression so that no member of the human family is held responsible for that sin (A of F 2; see ORIGINAL SIN). Another universal gift is the resurrection from the dead of every man, woman, and child who lives, has ever lived, or ever will live, on the earth. Thus, the Atonement is not only universal in the sense that it saves the entire human family from physical death, but it is also infinite in the sense that its impact and efficacy in making redemption possible for all reach back in one direction to the beginning of time and forward in the other direction throughout all eternity. In short, the Atonement has universal, infinite, and unconditional consequences for all mankind throughout the duration of all eternity.

Emphasizing these unconditional gifts arising out of Christ’s atoning sacrifice, Latter-day Saints believe that other aspects of Christ’s gift are conditional upon obedience and diligence in keeping God’s commandments. For example, while members of the human family are freely and universally given a reprieve from Adam’s sin through no effort or action of their own, they are not freely and universally given a reprieve of their own sins unless they pledge faith in Christ, repent of those sins, are baptized in his name, receive the GIFT OF THE HOLY GHOST and confirmation into Christ’s church, and press forward with a brightness of hope and faithful endurance for the remainder of life’s journey. Of this personal challenge, Christ said, “For behold, I, God, have suffered these things for all, that they might not suffer if they would repent; but if they would not repent they must suffer even as I; which suffering caused myself, even God, the greatest of all, to tremble because of pain, and to bleed at every pore, and to suffer both body and spirit—and would that I might not drink the bitter cup, and shrink” (D&C 19:16–18).

Furthermore, although the breaking of the bonds of mortal death by the resurrection of the body is a free and universal gift from Christ, a product of his victory over death and the grave, the kind or nature of the body (or “degree of glory” of the body), as well as the time of one’s resurrection, is affected very directly by the extent of one’s faithfulness in this life (see DEGREES OF GLORY). The apostle Paul made clear, for example, that those most fully committed to Christ will “rise first” in the resurrection (1 Thes. 4:16). Paul also speaks of different orders of resurrected bodies (1 Cor. 15:40). The bodies of the highest orders or degrees of glory in the Resurrection are promised to those who faithfully adhere to the principles and ordinances of the gospel of Jesus Christ; they will not only enjoy IMMORTALITY (a universal gift to everyone) but also ETERNAL LIVES in the celestial kingdom of glory (D&C 88:4; 132:24; see also RESURRECTION).

Latter-day Saints stress that neither the unconditional nor the conditional blessings of the Atonement would be available to mankind except through the grace and goodness of Christ. Obviously the unconditional blessings of the Atonement are unearned, but the conditional ones are also not fully merited. By living faithfully and keeping the commandments of God, one can receive additional privileges; but they are still given freely, not fully earned. They are always and ever a product of God's grace. Latter-day Saint scripture is emphatic in its declaration that "there is no flesh that can dwell in the presence of God, save it be through the merits, and mercy, and grace of the Holy Messiah" (2 Ne. 2:8).

The Church is also emphatic about the salvation of little children, the mentally impaired, those who lived without ever hearing the gospel of Jesus Christ, and so forth: these are redeemed by the universal power of the atonement of Christ and will have the opportunity to receive the fulness of the gospel in the SPIRIT WORLD (see SALVATION FOR THE DEAD).

To meet the demands of the Atonement, the sinless Christ went first into the Garden of GETHSEMANE, there to bear the spiritual agony of soul only he could bear. He "began to be sorrowful and very heavy," saying to his three chief disciples, "My soul is exceeding sorrowful, unto death" (Mark 14:34). Leaving them to keep watch, he went further into the garden, where he would suffer "the pains of all men, yea, the pains of every living creature, both men, women, and children, who belong to the family of Adam" (2 Ne. 9:21). There he "struggled and groaned under a burden such as no other being who has lived on earth might even conceive as possible" (JC, p. 613).

Christ's atonement satisfied the demands of justice and thereby ransomed and redeemed the souls of all men, women, and children "that his bowels may be filled with mercy, according to the flesh, that he may know according to the flesh how to succor his people according to their infirmities" (Alma 7:12). Thus, Latter-day Saints teach that Christ "descended below all things"—including every kind of sickness, infirmity, and dark despair experienced by every mortal being—in order that he might "comprehend all things, that he might be in all and through all things, the light of truth" (D&C 88:6). This spiritual anguish of plumbing the depths of human suffering and sorrow was experienced primarily in the Garden of Gethsemane. It was there that he was "in an agony" and "prayed more earnestly." It was there that his sweat was "as it were great drops of blood falling down to the ground" (Luke 22:44) for he bled "at every pore" (D&C 19:18). It was there that he began the final march to Calvary.

The majesty and triumph of the Atonement reached its zenith when, after unspeakable abuse at the hands of the Roman soldiers and others, Christ appealed from the cross, "Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do" (Luke 23:34). Forgiveness was the key to the meaning of all the suffering he had come to endure.

Such an utterly lonely and excruciating mission is piercingly expressed in that near-final and most agonizing cry of all, "Eli, Eli, lama sabachthani? that is to say, My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" (Matt. 27:46). In the depths of that anguish, even nature itself convulsed, "and there was a darkness over all the earth. . . . The sun was darkened. . . . And, behold, the veil of the temple was rent in twain from the top to the bottom; and the earth did quake, and the rocks rent" (Luke 23:43–45; Matt. 27:51–52). Finally, even the seemingly unbearable had been borne and Jesus said, "It is finished" (John 19:30), and then, saying "Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit," he "gave up the ghost" (Luke 23:46). Latter-day Saints believe that every tongue will someday, somewhere confess as did a Roman centurion at the Crucifixion, "Truly this was the Son of God" (Matt. 27:54).

"The Savior thus becomes master of the situation—the debt is paid, the redemption made, the covenant fulfilled, justice satisfied, the will of God done, and all power is now given into the hands of the Son of God—the power of the resurrection, the power of the redemption, the power of salvation. . . . He becomes the author of eternal life and exaltation. He is the Redeemer, the Resurrector, the Savior of man and the world" (Taylor, p. 171). Furthermore, his atonement extends to all life—beasts, fish, fowl, and the earth itself.

To the thoughtful woman and man, it is "a matter of surpassing wonder" (AF, p. 77) that the voluntary and merciful sacrifice of a single being could satisfy the infinite and eternal demands of justice, atone for every human transgression and misdeed, and thereby sweep all mankind into the encompassing arms of his merciful embrace. A President and prophet of the LDS Church writing on this subject said:

In some mysterious, incomprehensible way, Jesus assumed the responsibility which naturally would have devolved upon Adam; but which could only be accomplished through the mediation of Himself, and by taking upon Himself their sorrows, assuming their responsibilities, and bearing their transgressions or sins. In a manner to us incomprehensible and inexplicable, He bore the weight of the sins of the whole world, not only of Adam, but of his posterity; and in doing that opened the kingdom of heaven, not only to all believers and all who obeyed the law of God, but to more than one-half of the human family who die before they come to years of maturity as well as to the heathen, who having died without law, will, through His mediation, be resurrected without law, and be judged without law, and thus participate . . . in the blessings of His atonement [Taylor, pp. 148–49].

Latter-day Saints sing a favorite hymn, written by Charles H. Gabriel, that expresses their deepest feelings regarding this greatest of all gifts:

I stand all amazed at the love Jesus offers me,
Confused at the grace that so fully he proffers me.

I tremble to know that for me he was crucified,

That for me, a sinner, he suffered, He bled and died.

Oh, it is wonderful that he should care for me
Enough to die for me!

Oh, it is wonderful, wonderful to me!
[Hymns, No. 193].

BIBLIOGRAPHY

McConkie, Bruce R. The Promised Messiah. Salt Lake City, 1978.

Nibley, Hugh W. "The Atonement of Jesus Christ," Ensign 20 (July 1990):18–23; (Aug. 1990):30–34; (Sept. 1990):22–26; (Oct. 1990):26–31.

Taylor, John. The Mediation and Atonement. Salt Lake City, 1882.

JEFFREY R. HOLLAND

AUSTRALIA, THE CHURCH IN

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints was introduced into Australia when a seventeen-year-old British convert, William James Barratt, emigrated from England to Adelaide in November 1840. He had been ordained an elder by George A. Smith, a member of the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles, who instructed him to share the gospel whenever he could. Barratt, whose descendants still live in the Adelaide area, eventually drifted away from the Church, but not until after he had baptized Robert Beauchamp, probably the first Australian convert. Beauchamp later became president of the Australian mission. Andrew and Elizabeth Anderson, also British converts, immigrated to Wellington, near Dubbo, New South Wales, with their three children in 1841. Anderson baptized several converts and in 1844 organized the first Australian BRANCH of the Church, in Wellington.

Official LDS missionary work did not begin in Australia until John Murdock and Charles W. Wandell arrived in Sydney from Utah on October 30, 1851. Thereafter, the Church grew slowly in Australia until President David O. MCKAY visited the area in 1955 and authorized construction of meetinghouses for the branches. The first Anstra-

THE ZION'S WATCHMAN,

PUBLISHED BY THE AUTHORITY OF THE

Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints,
IN SYDNEY.

No. 1.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 13, 1853,

Vol. I.

PROSPECTUS OF THE "ZION'S WATCHMAN."

"The Law of the Lord is perfect, converting the Son! :
The testimony of the Lord is sure,
Making wise the Simple."—19 Psalm, 7 v.

To the Saints and all the friends of TRUTH. The "Zion's Watchman" we intend to issue monthly. We would say to the friends of truth, who wish to subscribe for the "Watchman," that we design to pursue a course which will show the difference between the error which has often been published by the Periodicals of the day, and the truth as it exists with the Saints of God;—which truths have been revealed from heaven by the Angels of the Lord to the Prophet Joseph Smith, and which truths are still being revealed to the servants of God, who still hold the power of the Holy Melchisedic Priesthood upon the earth at the present day, and are authorised to administer in its ordinances according to the Law of the Holy Priesthood, which is without father, without mother, without descent, having neither beginning of days nor end of life, but made like unto the Son of God—abideth a Priest continually. Peter like, we judge between the truth and error, and as the Apostles and Elders, by the gift of the Beginning in 1853, Church leaders in Sydney, Australia, published a monthly periodical entitled The Zion's Watchman, addressed "To the Saints and all the friends of Truth." Courtesy Rare Books and Manuscripts, Brigham Young University.

In some mysterious, incomprehensible way, Jesus assumed the responsibility which naturally would have devolved upon Adam; but which could only be accomplished through the mediation of Himself, and by taking upon Himself their sorrows, assuming their responsibilities, and bearing their transgressions or sins. In a manner to us incomprehensible and inexplicable, He bore the weight of the sins of the whole world, not only of Adam, but of his posterity; and in doing that opened the kingdom of heaven, not only to all believers and all who obeyed the law of God, but to more than one-half of the human family who die before they come to years of maturity as well as to the heathen, who having died without law, will, through His mediation, be resurrected without law, and be judged without law, and thus participate . . . in the blessings of His atonement [Taylor, pp. 148–49].

Latter-day Saints sing a favorite hymn, written by Charles H. Gabriel, that expresses their deepest feelings regarding this greatest of all gifts:

I stand all amazed at the love Jesus offers me,
Confused at the grace that so fully he proffers me.

I tremble to know that for me he was crucified,

That for me, a sinner, he suffered, He bled and died.

Oh, it is wonderful that he should care for me
Enough to die for me!

Oh, it is wonderful, wonderful to me!
[Hymns, No. 193].

BIBLIOGRAPHY

McConkie, Bruce R. The Promised Messiah. Salt Lake City, 1978.

Nibley, Hugh W. "The Atonement of Jesus Christ," Ensign 20 (July 1990):18–23; (Aug. 1990):30–34; (Sept. 1990):22–26; (Oct. 1990):26–31.

Taylor, John. The Mediation and Atonement. Salt Lake City, 1882.

JEFFREY R. HOLLAND

AUSTRALIA, THE CHURCH IN

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints was introduced into Australia when a seventeen-year-old British convert, William James Barratt, emigrated from England to Adelaide in November 1840. He had been ordained an elder by George A. Smith, a member of the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles, who instructed him to share the gospel whenever he could. Barratt, whose descendants still live in the Adelaide area, eventually drifted away from the Church, but not until after he had baptized Robert Beauchamp, probably the first Australian convert. Beauchamp later became president of the Australian mission. Andrew and Elizabeth Anderson, also British converts, immigrated to Wellington, near Dubbo, New South Wales, with their three children in 1841. Anderson baptized several converts and in 1844 organized the first Australian BRANCH of the Church, in Wellington.

Official LDS missionary work did not begin in Australia until John Murdock and Charles W. Wandell arrived in Sydney from Utah on October 30, 1851. Thereafter, the Church grew slowly in Australia until President David O. MCKAY visited the area in 1955 and authorized construction of meetinghouses for the branches. The first Anstra-

THE ZION'S WATCHMAN,

PUBLISHED BY THE AUTHORITY OF THE

Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints,
IN SYDNEY.

No. 1.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 13, 1853,

Vol. I.

PROSPECTUS OF THE "ZION'S WATCHMAN."

"The Law of the Lord is perfect, converting the Son! :
The testimony of the Lord is sure,
Making wise the Simple."—19 Psalm, 7 v.

To the Saints and all the friends of TRUTH. The "Zion's Watchman" we intend to issue monthly. We would say to the friends of truth, who wish to subscribe for the "Watchman," that we design to pursue a course which will show the difference between the error which has often been published by the Periodicals of the day, and the truth as it exists with the Saints of God;—which truths have been revealed from heaven by the Angels of the Lord to the Prophet Joseph Smith, and which truths are still being revealed to the servants of God, who still hold the power of the Holy Melchisedic Priesthood upon the earth at the present day, and are authorised to administer in its ordinances according to the Law of the Holy Priesthood, which is without father, without mother, without descent, having neither beginning of days nor end of life, but made like unto the Son of God—abideth a Priest continually. Peter like, we judge between the truth and error, and as the Apostles and Elders, by the gift of the lian STAKES were organized in 1960 in Sydney, Brisbane, and Melbourne. Significant growth has continued since then, leading to the building of a temple in Sydney. It was dedicated in September 1984. By 1990 the Church was strong throughout Australia, with the Pacific Area presidency based in Sydney, and with a temple, 5 missions, 18 stakes, and 205 wards and branches serving 73,200 members in the country as a whole. Australian members of the Church appear to have successfully blended their cultural values of ruggedness and individualism with gospel teachings, creating a uniquely Australian Church culture.

Beginning in 1853, Church leaders in Sydney, Australia, published a monthly periodical entitled The Zion's Watchman, addressed "To the Saints and all the friends of Truth." Courtesy Rare Books and Manuscripts, Brigham Young University.

The early days of the Church in Australia were difficult. Prompted by the public preaching of the LDS missionaries, newspapers published articles attacking the Church's doctrines. The missionaries countered with articles, tracts, and spirited defenses of the Church and its teachings in public meetings, many of which were held at the Sydney racecourse. Many of the early converts immigrated to Utah in the spirit of gathering to Zion, some dying en route in the wreck of the Julia Ann in 1852 (Devitry-Smith, 1989). This spirit of migration also brought to Australia a significant number of British Saints who were hoping to find gold in the newly discovered goldfields in order to fund their further travel to Utah. Most were unsuccessful in reaching their monetary goal. After 1900 Church leaders encouraged members to stay in their own nations to strengthen the local membership.

When the American missionaries were called home during the UTAH EXPEDITION in 1857, the Church branches in Australia were left to the few members who had not emigrated. When the missionaries returned to the region a few years later, much of their effort was directed toward New Zealand, where many Maoris were joining the Church. During the 1880s the Sydney Branch was discontinued, but the Melbourne Branch remained strong. In 1896, the Sydney Branch was reestablished, and in 1898 the Australian Mission, which then also included New Zealand, was divided, making New Zealand a separate mission. In 1904, with Church assistance in funding, the Brisbane Saints built the first LDS meetinghouse in Australia at Wooloongabba.

Most members of the Church in Australia live in large cities and towns, but many branches also thrive in small rural towns and communities throughout the Australian bush and outback. A small meetinghouse to accommodate aboriginal members of the Church was erected in 1984 at Elliott, about 450 miles south of Darwin. Many Australian members travel considerable distances to attend Church meetings; for example, members of the Alice Springs Branch travel more than 900 miles to attend district conferences in Darwin. Other members live in outback communities totally isolated from personal contact with organized branches. In 1929, recognizing the need for better communication among members scattered over such a large area as Australia, mission president Clarence Tingey began publication of Austral Star, which provided members with local and international news of the Church and messages and instructions from Church leaders.

LDS chapel in Sydney, Australia (c. 1962). Missionary work progressed slowly in Australia from 1840 until the 1950s. The first LDS meetinghouse was built in Brisbane in 1906. New meetinghouses authorized by David O. McKay in the 1950s accelerated Church growth.

Among prominent Church members with Australian connections are Joseph Ridges, the designer of the original Mormon Tabernacle organ; William Fowler, author of the LDS hymn "We Thank Thee, O God, for a Prophet"; and Robert E. Sackley of the Quorums of the Seventy. Both Marion G. Romney and Bruce R. McConkie, later of the Council of the Twelve, served missions in Australia.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Britsch, R. Lanier. Unto the Islands of the Sea: A History of the Latter-day Saints in the Pacific. Salt Lake City, 1986.

Devitry-Smith, John. "William James Barratt: The First Mormon Down Under." BYU Studies 28 (Summer 1988):53–66.

———. "The Wreck of the Julia Ann." BYU Studies 29 (Spring 1989):5–29.

Newton, Marjorie. "The Gathering of the Australian Saints in the 1850s." BYU Studies 27 (Spring 1987):67–78.

WILLIAM G. EGGINGTON

AUTHORITY

The claim of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints to be the only TRUE AND LIVING CHURCH on the earth is centered on the concept of authority. The LDS belief has been well stated by President Joseph F. SMITH: "As to the question of authority, nearly everything depends upon it. No ordinance can be performed to the acceptance of God without divine authority. No matter how fervently men may believe or pray, unless they are endowed with divine authority they can only act in their own name, and not legally nor acceptably in the name of Jesus Christ, in whose name all things must be done" (Smith, p. 102).

Because several different definitions are associated with authority in the scriptures, this doctrine has often been misunderstood:

1. Authority refers to formalized power associated with position, function, or legal designation as exemplified by the authority given Joseph in Egypt by Pharaoh (Gen. 41:40–41), by the man who gave his servants authority over his house when he departed (Mark 13:34), and by Church officers designated to have authority over members (Matt. 8:9; D&C 107:8). Authority in these cases presumes control by virtue of assigned position.

2. Authority is strength, might, or control of resources. This is exemplified by the power established by the Philistines over the Jews (Judg. 15) and by Rome's control of Judea at the time of Christ (Matt. 27:2). Authority in this sense connotes superiority or stature above another resulting from acquisitions, possessions, or physical strength.

3. Authority is expertise, as in the case of an expert on a subject. Examples include the authority ascribed to the twelve-year-old Jesus as a result of his teachings in the temple (Luke 2:42, 46–47), and the authority associated with the preaching of prophets such as NEPHI<sub>1</sub>, LEHI, ABINADI, and the sons of MOSIAH<sub>2</sub> (Mosiah 13:6; Alma 17:3; Hel. 5:18).

4. Authority is a divine commission or calling from God. For example, Jesus gave his apostles specific authority to preach and to administer his gospel (Matt. 10:1; John 15:16; 3 Ne. 12:1), and certain individuals were empowered to baptize and perform miracles by this authority (Acts 5:12–16; 8:5–17; Alma 5:3; Mosiah 18:13, 18; Moro. 2:1–3). As conveyed by Jesus Christ, this authority meant that ORDINANCES performed on earth would be honored in heaven and, conversely, to loose (dissolve an ordinance) on earth would mean it was loosed in heaven (Matt. 16:19). The name given to this kind of authority in the scriptures is PRIESTHOOD (Heb. 7:11–12, 14, 24; 1 Pet. 2:5, 9; D&C 84:107).

That these meanings have often been confused is exemplified by the scribes' query of Jesus regarding his own basis of authority: "By what authority doest thou these things?" (Matt. 21:23–27). Is your authority political (definition 1) or power from on high (definition 4)? they asked.

As Christ's authority was based on power from on high, so does the Church rest its claim as the only true and living church upon possessing the divine authority to act for God. This authority differentiates the Church from all others. Other systems and organizations may possess other types of authority, but the divine authority associated with Christ's church, the priesthood, resides only in this one.

An explanation of the characteristics of divine authority helps clarify the claims of the Church. First, "no man taketh this honour unto himself, but he that is called of God, as was Aaron" (Heb. 5:4). Divine authority cannot be obtained by study, graduation from school, or mere desire (Acts 19:13–16). It must be obtained in the divinely appointed way, as was the case with AARON (Ex. 28:41).

Second, obtaining the authority to act in the name of God comes by the LAYING ON OF HANDS by one already holding this authority or priesthood (1 Tim. 4:14; 2 Tim. 1:6; Moro. 2:1–3; Deut. 34:9). Simon, for example, desired to purchase the apostles' authority, as he might have done with other types of authority. He was condemned by Peter for desiring to obtain the "gift of God" with money (Acts 8:14–20), and purchasing authority carries his name, simony.

Third, ordinances performed in the Church are spiritually binding only when performed under this divinely commissioned authority, received in Devitry-Smith, John. "William James Barratt: The First Mormon Down Under." BYU Studies 28 (Summer 1988):53–66.

———. "The Wreck of the Julia Ann." BYU Studies 29 (Spring 1989):5–29.

Newton, Marjorie. "The Gathering of the Australian Saints in the 1850s." BYU Studies 27 (Spring 1987):67–78.

WILLIAM G. EGGINGTON

AUTHORITY

The claim of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints to be the only TRUE AND LIVING CHURCH on the earth is centered on the concept of authority. The LDS belief has been well stated by President Joseph F. SMITH: "As to the question of authority, nearly everything depends upon it. No ordinance can be performed to the acceptance of God without divine authority. No matter how fervently men may believe or pray, unless they are endowed with divine authority they can only act in their own name, and not legally nor acceptably in the name of Jesus Christ, in whose name all things must be done" (Smith, p. 102).

Because several different definitions are associated with authority in the scriptures, this doctrine has often been misunderstood:

1. Authority refers to formalized power associated with position, function, or legal designation as exemplified by the authority given Joseph in Egypt by Pharaoh (Gen. 41:40–41), by the man who gave his servants authority over his house when he departed (Mark 13:34), and by Church officers designated to have authority over members (Matt. 8:9; D&C 107:8). Authority in these cases presumes control by virtue of assigned position.

2. Authority is strength, might, or control of resources. This is exemplified by the power established by the Philistines over the Jews (Judg. 15) and by Rome's control of Judea at the time of Christ (Matt. 27:2). Authority in this sense connotes superiority or stature above another resulting from acquisitions, possessions, or physical strength.

3. Authority is expertise, as in the case of an expert on a subject. Examples include the authority ascribed to the twelve-year-old Jesus as a result of his teachings in the temple (Luke 2:42, 46–47), and the authority associated with the preaching of prophets such as NEPHI<sub>1</sub>, LEHI, ABINADI, and the sons of MOSIAH<sub>2</sub> (Mosiah 13:6; Alma 17:3; Hel. 5:18).

4. Authority is a divine commission or calling from God. For example, Jesus gave his apostles specific authority to preach and to administer his gospel (Matt. 10:1; John 15:16; 3 Ne. 12:1), and certain individuals were empowered to baptize and perform miracles by this authority (Acts 5:12–16; 8:5–17; Alma 5:3; Mosiah 18:13, 18; Moro. 2:1–3). As conveyed by Jesus Christ, this authority meant that ORDINANCES performed on earth would be honored in heaven and, conversely, to loose (dissolve an ordinance) on earth would mean it was loosed in heaven (Matt. 16:19). The name given to this kind of authority in the scriptures is PRIESTHOOD (Heb. 7:11–12, 14, 24; 1 Pet. 2:5, 9; D&C 84:107).

That these meanings have often been confused is exemplified by the scribes' query of Jesus regarding his own basis of authority: "By what authority doest thou these things?" (Matt. 21:23–27). Is your authority political (definition 1) or power from on high (definition 4)? they asked.

As Christ's authority was based on power from on high, so does the Church rest its claim as the only true and living church upon possessing the divine authority to act for God. This authority differentiates the Church from all others. Other systems and organizations may possess other types of authority, but the divine authority associated with Christ's church, the priesthood, resides only in this one.

An explanation of the characteristics of divine authority helps clarify the claims of the Church. First, "no man taketh this honour unto himself, but he that is called of God, as was Aaron" (Heb. 5:4). Divine authority cannot be obtained by study, graduation from school, or mere desire (Acts 19:13–16). It must be obtained in the divinely appointed way, as was the case with AARON (Ex. 28:41).

Second, obtaining the authority to act in the name of God comes by the LAYING ON OF HANDS by one already holding this authority or priesthood (1 Tim. 4:14; 2 Tim. 1:6; Moro. 2:1–3; Deut. 34:9). Simon, for example, desired to purchase the apostles' authority, as he might have done with other types of authority. He was condemned by Peter for desiring to obtain the "gift of God" with money (Acts 8:14–20), and purchasing authority carries his name, simony.

Third, ordinances performed in the Church are spiritually binding only when performed under this divinely commissioned authority, received in the proper way (Mosiah 23:17; D&C 20:73; 132:13; 2 Sam. 6:6–7). For example, Paul rebaptized certain Ephesians who had been previously baptized by an unauthorized person (Acts 19:1–6). King Limhi and many of his followers were converted to Christ and were desirous of being baptized, but they waited to receive that ordinance because the one with authority did not feel worthy (Mosiah 21:33–35).

A fourth fact concerning divine authority is that it was lost from the earth sometime after the resurrection and ascension of Christ into heaven (see APOSTASY), so a restoration of divine authority was needed (2 Thes. 2:1–4; 1 Tim. 4:1–3; 2 Tim. 3:1–7). In 1829 heavenly messengers, previously endowed with divine authority by Christ himself, conferred authority upon Joseph Smith and Oliver COWDERY as part of the RESTORATION of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints (see AARONIC PRIESTHOOD: RESTORATION OF; MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOOD: RESTORATION OF). Members of the Church ordained to this authority now record their personal “line of authority.” This record indicates the path of ordinations connecting their priesthood authority to Jesus Christ himself.

Fifth, the authority to preside is efficacious for an individual only when it is accompanied by the COMMON CONSENT of the members of the Church over whom that person will preside (D&C 20:65; 26:2; 42:11).

Abuses of authority and authoritarianism are inherent in any organized system, and such abuses are especially associated with authority based solely on position, strength, or knowledge. Organizations such as the Church are sometimes perceived by outsiders as authoritarian, primarily because of confusion over the meanings of authority. If authority in the Church were based on politics, personal attributes, or expertise, then a charge of authoritarianism might have some validity. However, divine authority (definition 4) is inseparably connected to principles of righteousness, and when we “undertake to cover our sins, or to gratify our pride, our vain ambition, or to exercise control or dominion or compulsion upon the souls of the children of men, in any degree of unrighteousness, behold, the heavens withdraw themselves; the Spirit of the Lord is grieved; and when it is withdrawn, Amen to the priesthood or the authority of that man” (D&C 121:37).

Members of the Church understand that the exercise of divine authority includes the responsibility to bless people and minister to their well-being. Proper use of this authority is inconsistent with authoritarianism and the abuses of authority, so the negative connotations sometimes associated with authority are not generally present in the Church.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Ehat, Andrew F., and Lyndon W. Cook, eds. The Words of Joseph Smith. Provo, Utah, 1980.
 Richards, LeGrand. A Marvelous Work and a Wonder. Salt Lake City, 1968.
 Smith, Joseph F. Gospel Doctrine. Salt Lake City, 1977.
 Talmage, James E. AF. Salt Lake City, 1977.

KIM S. CAMERON

---

AUTOPSY

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints holds that an autopsy may be performed if the family of the deceased gives consent and if the autopsy complies with the law of the community. The purpose of an autopsy is, where possible, to examine the results of trauma or disease recorded in the vital organs of the body so as to define the specific cause of death for the family, the community, and the professionals who attended the deceased. It also permits the training and instruction of those who continue the search for better ways of coping with disease. It is one of the methods whereby both those who die and those who examine them contribute to improving the quality of life and health of their fellow human beings.

FRANK D. ALLAN

---

AUXILIARY ORGANIZATIONS

The LDS Church is characterized by two types of organizational entities: PRIESTHOOD QUORUMS and organizations auxiliary to the priesthood. Members of priesthood quorums, or groups of priesthood holders, along with those called to priesthood leadership positions, have the ecclesiastical responsibility and authority for carrying out the missions of the Church. The auxiliary organizations are complementary to priesthood line organization and exist primarily to assist the priesthood. The auxiliaries are the RELIEF SOCIETY (women, eighteen and older), SUNDAY SCHOOL (all members twelve and older), YOUNG WOMEN (twelve through eighteen), the proper way (Mosiah 23:17; D&C 20:73; 132:13; 2 Sam. 6:6–7). For example, Paul rebaptized certain Ephesians who had been previously baptized by an unauthorized person (Acts 19:1–6). King Limhi and many of his followers were converted to Christ and were desirous of being baptized, but they waited to receive that ordinance because the one with authority did not feel worthy (Mosiah 21:33–35).

A fourth fact concerning divine authority is that it was lost from the earth sometime after the resurrection and ascension of Christ into heaven (see APOSTASY), so a restoration of divine authority was needed (2 Thes. 2:1–4; 1 Tim. 4:1–3; 2 Tim. 3:1–7). In 1829 heavenly messengers, previously endowed with divine authority by Christ himself, conferred authority upon Joseph Smith and Oliver COWDERY as part of the RESTORATION of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints (see AARONIC PRIESTHOOD: RESTORATION OF; MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOOD: RESTORATION OF). Members of the Church ordained to this authority now record their personal “line of authority.” This record indicates the path of ordinations connecting their priesthood authority to Jesus Christ himself.

Fifth, the authority to preside is efficacious for an individual only when it is accompanied by the COMMON CONSENT of the members of the Church over whom that person will preside (D&C 20:65; 26:2; 42:11).

Abuses of authority and authoritarianism are inherent in any organized system, and such abuses are especially associated with authority based solely on position, strength, or knowledge. Organizations such as the Church are sometimes perceived by outsiders as authoritarian, primarily because of confusion over the meanings of authority. If authority in the Church were based on politics, personal attributes, or expertise, then a charge of authoritarianism might have some validity. However, divine authority (definition 4) is inseparably connected to principles of righteousness, and when we “undertake to cover our sins, or to gratify our pride, our vain ambition, or to exercise control or dominion or compulsion upon the souls of the children of men, in any degree of unrighteousness, behold, the heavens withdraw themselves; the Spirit of the Lord is grieved; and when it is withdrawn, Amen to the priesthood or the authority of that man” (D&C 121:37).

Members of the Church understand that the exercise of divine authority includes the responsibility to bless people and minister to their well-being. Proper use of this authority is inconsistent with authoritarianism and the abuses of authority, so the negative connotations sometimes associated with authority are not generally present in the Church.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Ehat, Andrew F., and Lyndon W. Cook, eds. The Words of Joseph Smith. Provo, Utah, 1980.
- Richards, LeGrand. A Marvelous Work and a Wonder. Salt Lake City, 1968.
- Smith, Joseph F. Gospel Doctrine. Salt Lake City, 1977.
- Talmage, James E. AF. Salt Lake City, 1977.

KIM S. CAMERON

---

AUTOPSY

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints holds that an autopsy may be performed if the family of the deceased gives consent and if the autopsy complies with the law of the community. The purpose of an autopsy is, where possible, to examine the results of trauma or disease recorded in the vital organs of the body so as to define the specific cause of death for the family, the community, and the professionals who attended the deceased. It also permits the training and instruction of those who continue the search for better ways of coping with disease. It is one of the methods whereby both those who die and those who examine them contribute to improving the quality of life and health of their fellow human beings.

FRANK D. ALLAN

---

AUXILIARY ORGANIZATIONS

The LDS Church is characterized by two types of organizational entities: PRIESTHOOD QUORUMS and organizations auxiliary to the priesthood. Members of priesthood quorums, or groups of priesthood holders, along with those called to priesthood leadership positions, have the ecclesiastical responsibility and authority for carrying out the missions of the Church. The auxiliary organizations are complementary to priesthood line organization and exist primarily to assist the priesthood. The auxiliaries are the RELIEF SOCIETY (women, eighteen and older), SUNDAY SCHOOL (all members twelve and older), YOUNG WOMEN (twelve through eighteen), the proper way (Mosiah 23:17; D&C 20:73; 132:13; 2 Sam. 6:6–7). For example, Paul rebaptized certain Ephesians who had been previously baptized by an unauthorized person (Acts 19:1–6). King Limhi and many of his followers were converted to Christ and were desirous of being baptized, but they waited to receive that ordinance because the one with authority did not feel worthy (Mosiah 21:33–35).

A fourth fact concerning divine authority is that it was lost from the earth sometime after the resurrection and ascension of Christ into heaven (see APOSTASY), so a restoration of divine authority was needed (2 Thes. 2:1–4; 1 Tim. 4:1–3; 2 Tim. 3:1–7). In 1829 heavenly messengers, previously endowed with divine authority by Christ himself, conferred authority upon Joseph Smith and Oliver COWDERY as part of the RESTORATION of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints (see AARONIC PRIESTHOOD: RESTORATION OF; MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOOD: RESTORATION OF). Members of the Church ordained to this authority now record their personal “line of authority.” This record indicates the path of ordinations connecting their priesthood authority to Jesus Christ himself.

Fifth, the authority to preside is efficacious for an individual only when it is accompanied by the COMMON CONSENT of the members of the Church over whom that person will preside (D&C 20:65; 26:2; 42:11).

Abuses of authority and authoritarianism are inherent in any organized system, and such abuses are especially associated with authority based solely on position, strength, or knowledge. Organizations such as the Church are sometimes perceived by outsiders as authoritarian, primarily because of confusion over the meanings of authority. If authority in the Church were based on politics, personal attributes, or expertise, then a charge of authoritarianism might have some validity. However, divine authority (definition 4) is inseparably connected to principles of righteousness, and when we “undertake to cover our sins, or to gratify our pride, our vain ambition, or to exercise control or dominion or compulsion upon the souls of the children of men, in any degree of unrighteousness, behold, the heavens withdraw themselves; the Spirit of the Lord is grieved; and when it is withdrawn, Amen to the priesthood or the authority of that man” (D&C 121:37).

Members of the Church understand that the exercise of divine authority includes the responsibility to bless people and minister to their well-being. Proper use of this authority is inconsistent with authoritarianism and the abuses of authority, so the negative connotations sometimes associated with authority are not generally present in the Church.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Ehat, Andrew F., and Lyndon W. Cook, eds. The Words of Joseph Smith. Provo, Utah, 1980.
 Richards, LeGrand. A Marvelous Work and a Wonder. Salt Lake City, 1968.
 Smith, Joseph F. Gospel Doctrine. Salt Lake City, 1977.
 Talmage, James E. AF. Salt Lake City, 1977.

KIM S. CAMERON

---

AUTOPSY

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints holds that an autopsy may be performed if the family of the deceased gives consent and if the autopsy complies with the law of the community. The purpose of an autopsy is, where possible, to examine the results of trauma or disease recorded in the vital organs of the body so as to define the specific cause of death for the family, the community, and the professionals who attended the deceased. It also permits the training and instruction of those who continue the search for better ways of coping with disease. It is one of the methods whereby both those who die and those who examine them contribute to improving the quality of life and health of their fellow human beings.

FRANK D. ALLAN

---

AUXILIARY ORGANIZATIONS

The LDS Church is characterized by two types of organizational entities: PRIESTHOOD QUORUMS and organizations auxiliary to the priesthood. Members of priesthood quorums, or groups of priesthood holders, along with those called to priesthood leadership positions, have the ecclesiastical responsibility and authority for carrying out the missions of the Church. The auxiliary organizations are complementary to priesthood line organization and exist primarily to assist the priesthood. The auxiliaries are the RELIEF SOCIETY (women, eighteen and older), SUNDAY SCHOOL (all members twelve and older), YOUNG WOMEN (twelve through eighteen),

YOUNG MEN (twelve through eighteen), and PRIMARY (all children eighteen months through eleven years).

Auxiliary organizations seek to provide gospel instruction, wholesome activities, the sharing of resources, settings where supportive friendships can form, and formal and informal opportunities for the sharing of faith and values. Each organization tailors its program to a specific age group and gender and provides members with opportunities for Christian service. Each has a set of leaders functioning at the ward, stake, and general levels of the Church organization, and ward and stake auxiliary leaders receive training each year at an auxiliary training meeting.

Although the Relief Society (1842) had roots in the early years of the Church's development, the auxiliary organizations developed as formal parts of Church structure after it moved to Utah in 1847. The Relief Society and the Sunday School were established Churchwide in the early 1860s by President Brigham YOUNG, followed by the Cooperative Retrenchment Association in 1869 (forerunner of the Young Women organization), and the Young Men's Mutual Improvement Association in 1875 (forerunner to the Young Men organization). The Primary Association, emphasizing religious activities for children, began in 1878; weekday religion classes for children, emphasizing religious instruction, were instituted in 1890. These two entities were merged in 1929 to form the present-day Primary.

During the opening decades of the twentieth century, each auxiliary organization developed in its own way into a major facet of the Church programs for its members. Under the leadership of a presidency and board called at the general level of the Church to provide resources and direction to the local congregations, each auxiliary developed its own Churchwide curriculum, magazine, and set of regular meetings and activities. In addition, there was a general movement to structure classes and activities by age groupings. As each auxiliary expanded its program, it also developed a leadership structure staffed by the lay membership. Today, a presidency and board or staff are called at the ward level to implement the program and serve the members; at the stake level to provide leadership training and support and combine resources and activities; and at the general Church level to establish program guidelines and policies, develop materials and provide leadership.

In the early 1970s, an organization for SINGLE ADULTS was established at the general Church level under the direction of the Melchizedek Priesthood Committee. Its purpose was to develop programs and policies to address the needs and concerns of single adult members. Activities were instituted at the ward and stake level, and leaders were called to plan such activities. The general level was not continued beyond the 1970s, and local leaders and activities function under the direction of local priesthood and Relief Society leaders.

As the auxiliary programs expanded in the first half of the twentieth century, one of the challenges became coordinating and maintaining the relationship between the priesthood line of ultimate responsibility for the work of the Church and the auxiliaries as agents of the priesthood in accomplishing it. This challenge was recognized by President Joseph F. SMITH as early as 1906. In the latter part of the twentieth century, the Church has made significant efforts to structure and define its work so that the principle of priesthood governance can be fully realized (see CORRELATION OF THE CHURCH, ADMINISTRATION). The thrust has been to link the efforts of priesthood leaders and auxiliary leaders more closely and to align them with the priesthood channel of decision making and action. Specifically, at each level of the Church organization, auxiliary leaders are accountable to priesthood leaders rather than to the auxiliary organization.

Priesthood correlation provides more direct representation of the needs of all Church members in Church government. When properly implemented, it is the process through which women participate in the governance of the Church. Female leaders express their views, represent their concerns, and share in the decision-making process in partnership with men holding priesthood offices.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Cowan, Richard O. The Church in the Twentieth Century. Salt Lake City, 1985.
- Jenson, Andrew. Encyclopedic History of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Salt Lake City, 1941.
- Smith, Joseph Fielding. Essentials in Church History. Salt Lake City, 1950.

IRENE HEWETTE ERICKSEN

---

B

---

---

BABYLON

See: Worldly, Worldliness

---

BALLANTYNE, RICHARD

Richard Ballantyne was born in Whitridgebog, Roxburgshire, Scotland, on August 26, 1817, to David Ballantyne and Ann Bannerman. He was strong-minded, and ever worked for justice for the oppressed and mercy for the sinner and the weak. In his early days, Richard was frugal, somewhat austere, and honest in his business; in later years, he displayed sympathy and affection. His concern for the moral and spiritual welfare of children led him to establish the first LDS SUNDAY SCHOOL, in 1849, in Salt Lake City.

Ballantyne was brought up in the Relief Presbyterian Church. As a youth he worked on his parents' farm. Between the ages of nine and fourteen he occasionally attended school during the winter. At fourteen he was apprenticed to a baker; subsequently, he bought the business and managed it until he left Scotland.

In December 1842, at age twenty-five, Ballantyne was baptized into the Church at Leith, in the waters of the Firth of Forth. The following year he, his mother, two sisters, and a brother immigrated to NAUVOO, where he managed several businesses and engaged in farming along the Mississippi River. In Nauvoo he suffered persecution along with many of the Saints. In the summer of 1846, he and four other men were kidnapped by a mob, held hostage, and threatened with death. After two weeks, the mob bargained with Church leaders and returned the men to Nauvoo to avoid being charged with the kidnapping.

That same year, Ballantyne was ordained a SEVENTY and, soon after, a HIGH PRIEST. At the exodus from Nauvoo in 1846, he remained behind to help settle the Saints' affairs. In September of that year, having completed his assignment, he moved to WINTER QUARTERS. On February 17, 1847, he married Hulda Meriah Clark. They entered Utah in 1848, their first son having been born while they were crossing the plains.

Upon arriving in Salt Lake City, Ballantyne immediately considered the possibilities of schooling for the children. He asked for and received his bishop's permission to establish a Sunday School. Because no suitable meeting place was available, he added a room onto his home and held the first Sunday School in the Church on December 9, 1849. Approximately fifty students attended. Later this Sunday School was moved to the Fourteenth

Richard Ballantyne (1817–1898) was a native of Scotland, where he taught Sunday School in the Presbyterian Church. He began Sunday Sabbath instruction for LDS children in his Salt Lake City home in 1849. He later organized Sunday Schools in other communities where he lived. His success inspired a churchwide movement. Courtesy the Utah State Historical Society.

Ward meetinghouse. When asked why he had been so desirous of organizing a Sunday School, he replied:

I was early called to this work by the voice of the spirit, and I have felt many times that I have been ordained to this work before I was born, for even before I joined the church I was moved upon to work for the young. Surely no more joyful nor profitable labor can be performed by an Elder [Jenson, Vol. 1, p. 705].

In the fall of 1852, Ballantyne was called on a mission to India, and arrived in Calcutta on July 24, 1853. Although the work was very discouraging, he worked hard until his release and return to Utah in September 1855 (see ASIA: SOUTH AND SOUTHEAST).

He married Mary Pierce on November 27, 1855, as a plural wife, and about two years later married Caroline Sanderson. He and his three wives had twenty-two children and more than one hundred grandchildren.

During his life in Utah, Ballantyne managed several businesses, including two railroads, a newspaper, and several merchandising companies.

He was a member of the Weber County Court for fourteen years. At the time of his death, November 8, 1898, he was a senior member of the HIGH COUNCIL of the Ogden Utah Stake.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Ashton, Wendell J. Theirs in the Kingdom, 2nd ed., pp. 235–58. Salt Lake City, 1970.

Cannon, Donald Q., and David J. Whittaker, eds. Supporting Saints: Life Stories of Nineteenth-Century Mormons. Provo, Utah, 1985.

CHC, 3:6–9; 4:72–73; 5:478–80.

Jenson, Andrew, ed. Latter-Day Saint Biographical Encyclopedia, Vol. 1, pp. 703–706. Salt Lake City, 1971.

J. HUGH BAIRD

---

BAPTISM

The fourth ARTICLE OF FAITH of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints declares that “baptism by immersion for the remission of sins” is one of the “first principles and ordinances of the Gospel.” Latter-day Saints believe, as do many Christians, that baptism is an essential initiatory ordinance for all persons who are joining the Church, as it admits them to Christ’s church on earth (John 3:3–5; D&C 20:37, 68–74). It is a primary step in the process, which includes faith, repentance, BAPTISM OF FIRE AND OF THE HOLY GHOST, and enduring to the end, whereby members may receive remission of their sins and gain access to the CELESTIAL KINGDOM and ETERNAL LIFE (e.g., Mark 16:15–16; 2 Ne. 31:13–21; D&C 22:1–4; 84:64, 74; MD, pp. 69–72).

Latter-day Saint baptisms are performed for converts who have been properly instructed, and are at least eight years of age (the age of accountability). Baptism must be performed by one who has proper priesthood AUTHORITY. The major features of the ordinance include the raising of the right hand, the reciting of the prescribed BAPTISMAL PRAYER by the one performing the baptism, and the complete immersion of the candidate (3 Ne. 11:23–26; D&C 20:71–74; 68:27). Baptism symbolizes the covenant by which people promise to come into the fold of God, to take upon themselves the name of Christ, to stand as a witness for God, to keep his commandments, and to bear one another’s burdens, manifesting a determination to serve him to the end, and to prepare to

Richard Ballantyne (1817–1898) was a native of Scotland, where he taught Sunday School in the Presbyterian Church. He began Sunday Sabbath instruction for LDS children in his Salt Lake City home in 1849. He later organized Sunday Schools in other communities where he lived. His success inspired a churchwide movement. Courtesy the Utah State Historical Society.

Ward meetinghouse. When asked why he had been so desirous of organizing a Sunday School, he replied:

I was early called to this work by the voice of the spirit, and I have felt many times that I have been ordained to this work before I was born, for even before I joined the church I was moved upon to work for the young. Surely no more joyful nor profitable labor can be performed by an Elder [Jenson, Vol. 1, p. 705].

In the fall of 1852, Ballantyne was called on a mission to India, and arrived in Calcutta on July 24, 1853. Although the work was very discouraging, he worked hard until his release and return to Utah in September 1855 (see ASIA: SOUTH AND SOUTHEAST).

He married Mary Pierce on November 27, 1855, as a plural wife, and about two years later married Caroline Sanderson. He and his three wives had twenty-two children and more than one hundred grandchildren.

During his life in Utah, Ballantyne managed several businesses, including two railroads, a newspaper, and several merchandising companies.

He was a member of the Weber County Court for fourteen years. At the time of his death, November 8, 1898, he was a senior member of the HIGH COUNCIL of the Ogden Utah Stake.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Ashton, Wendell J. Theirs in the Kingdom, 2nd ed., pp. 235–58. Salt Lake City, 1970.

Cannon, Donald Q., and David J. Whittaker, eds. Supporting Saints: Life Stories of Nineteenth-Century Mormons. Provo, Utah, 1985.

CHC, 3:6–9; 4:72–73; 5:478–80.

Jenson, Andrew, ed. Latter-Day Saint Biographical Encyclopedia, Vol. 1, pp. 703–706. Salt Lake City, 1971.

J. HUGH BAIRD

BAPTISM

The fourth ARTICLE OF FAITH of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints declares that “baptism by immersion for the remission of sins” is one of the “first principles and ordinances of the Gospel.” Latter-day Saints believe, as do many Christians, that baptism is an essential initiatory ordinance for all persons who are joining the Church, as it admits them to Christ’s church on earth (John 3:3–5; D&C 20:37, 68–74). It is a primary step in the process, which includes faith, repentance, BAPTISM OF FIRE AND OF THE HOLY GHOST, and enduring to the end, whereby members may receive remission of their sins and gain access to the CELESTIAL KINGDOM and ETERNAL LIFE (e.g., Mark 16:15–16; 2 Ne. 31:13–21; D&C 22:1–4; 84:64, 74; MD, pp. 69–72).

Latter-day Saint baptisms are performed for converts who have been properly instructed, and are at least eight years of age (the age of accountability). Baptism must be performed by one who has proper priesthood AUTHORITY. The major features of the ordinance include the raising of the right hand, the reciting of the prescribed BAPTISMAL PRAYER by the one performing the baptism, and the complete immersion of the candidate (3 Ne. 11:23–26; D&C 20:71–74; 68:27). Baptism symbolizes the covenant by which people promise to come into the fold of God, to take upon themselves the name of Christ, to stand as a witness for God, to keep his commandments, and to bear one another’s burdens, manifesting a determination to serve him to the end, and to prepare to receive the spirit of Christ for the remission of sins. The Lord, as his part of the covenant, is to pour out his spirit upon them, redeem them from their sins, raise them in the first resurrection, and give them eternal life (Mosiah 18:7–10; D&C 20:37).

The rich symbolism of the ordinance invites candidates and observers to reflect on its meanings. Burial in the water and arising out of the water symbolize the candidate's faith in the death, burial, and resurrection of Jesus Christ, as well as the future resurrection of all people. It also represents the candidate's new birth to a life in Christ, being BORN OF GOD, thus born again of the water and of the spirit (Rom. 6:3–6; Mosiah 18:13–14; Moses 6:59–60; D&C 128:12–13).

Latter-day Saint scriptures indicate that the history of this ordinance predates the ministry of John the Baptist. Beginning with Adam (Moses 6:64–66), baptism by immersion in water was introduced as standard practice, and has been observed in all subsequent dispensations of the gospel when priesthood authority was on the earth (D&C 20:25–27; 84:27–28). For variants of such precedents, Latter-day Saints trace the baptismal initiations in many pre-Christian religions (see Meslin, 1987). As recorded in the Book of Mormon, LEHI and NEPHI foresaw the baptism of Jesus Christ in vision and taught their people to follow his righteous example (1 Ne. 10:7–10; 11:27; 2 Ne. 31:4–9). Moreover, before the time of Jesus Christ, ALMA<sub>1</sub> initiated converts into the church of God by baptism as a sign of their covenant (Mosiah 18:8–17; Alma 4:4–5).

According to the account of his appearance to the Nephites, Jesus taught the necessity of faith, repentance, baptism, and the GIFT OF THE HOLY GHOST, and he authorized twelve disciples to baptize (3 Ne. 11:18–41; 19:11–13; 26:17–21). The Book of Mormon provides adequate instructions for baptism and proper words for the baptismal prayer (3 Ne. 11:23–28; Moro. 6:1–4; cf. D&C 20:73).

In addition to relying on information in the Book of Mormon, Latter-day Saints follow the New Testament teachings on baptism. Jesus taught that baptism is necessary for salvation. He told Nicodemus, "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God" (John 3:1–5). He required baptism of those who professed to become his disciples (John 4:1–2). His farewell commission to his apostles was that they should go to all nations, teaching and baptizing

A boy is baptized a member of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Jesus said, "Ye shall go down and stand in the water, and in my name shall ye baptize them" (3 Ne. 11:23); "and he commandeth all men that they must repent, and be baptized in his name" (2 Ne. 9:23). A person who is baptized covenants with God to serve him and keep his commandments.

(Matt. 28:19), and he declared, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned" (Mark 16:16; emphasis added). Paul, after his miraculous vision on the road to Damascus, was taught the gospel by Ananias who told him to "arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins" (Acts 22:16). To the penitent multitude on the day of Pentecost, Peter proclaimed, "Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins" (Acts 2:38).

Latter-day Saints do not accept baptismal practices and teachings that arose among some Christian groups in the centuries after the death of the apostles, including INFANT BAPTISM, baptism by means other than immersion, and the idea that baptism is not necessary for salvation. The Nephite prophet MORMON denounced the practice of infant baptism, which had apparently crept in among his people, and declared that anyone who supposed that little children need baptism would deny the mercies of Christ, setting at naught the value of his atonement and the power of his redemption (Moro. 8:4–20).

The authority to baptize was restored by John the Baptist to Joseph Smith and Oliver COWDERY on May 15, 1829 (JS—II 1:68–72). From the early days of the restored Church, missionaries have been sent to “declare repentance and faith on the Savior, and remission of sins by baptism” (D&C 19:31; 55:2; 84:27, 74). “He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, and he that believeth not, and is not baptized, shall be damned” (D&C 112:29). This is the central teaching of the GOSPEL OF JESUS CHRIST (3 Ne. 11:31–40).

Consequently, persons coming into The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints at age eight or older are required to submit to baptism, even though they may have been previously baptized in other churches (D&C 22). Likewise, ex-communicants undergo baptism again once they have qualified for readmission into the Church.

The form of the ordinance is prescribed in latter-day revelation, which makes clear that the baptism must be performed by a person who has priesthood authority and that it requires completely immersing the penitent candidate below the water and then bringing the person out of the water (3 Ne. 11:25–26; D&C 20:72–74). Baptism is followed by the LAYING ON OF HANDS for the gift of the Holy Ghost.

Contemporary Church practice provides for the candidate to be interviewed and approved by an authorized priesthood official (usually the BISHOP or other officer presiding over the congregation or a MISSION official), who determines whether the applicant meets the qualifying conditions of repentance, faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, and an understanding of and willingness to obey the laws and ordinances of the gospel. It is also necessary that an official record of each baptism be kept by the Church.

Baptism may be performed in the font provided in many meetinghouses or in any body of water that is suitable for the sacred occasion and deep enough for complete immersion. The candidate and the person performing the ordinance will be dressed in plain and modest white clothing. The ceremony is unpretentious, typically attended by the candidate’s family, close friends, and interested members of the congregation. A speaker or two may offer a few words of instruction and joyous welcome to the candidate.

The earlier practice of rebaptism to manifest repentance and recommitment, or for a restoration of health in time of sickness, is no longer practiced in the Church.

Belief that baptism is necessary for the salvation of all persons who reach the age of accountability (D&C 84:64, 74) does not condemn persons who have died without the opportunity to hear the true gospel of Jesus Christ or to receive baptism from proper priesthood authority. Latter-day Saints believe that proxy BAPTISM FOR THE DEAD should be performed vicariously (1 Cor. 15:29; D&C 124:28–35, 127–128), and that it becomes effective if the deceased beneficiary accepts the gospel while in the spirit world awaiting resurrection (see 1 Pet. 3:18–20; 4:6; cf. D&C 45:54). This vicarious work for the benefit of previous generations, binding the hearts of the children to their fathers (Mal. 4:5–6), is one of the sacred ordinances performed in Latter-day Saint TEMPLES (D&C 128:12–13).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Meslin, Michel. “Baptism.” In Encyclopedia of Religion, Mircea Eliade, ed. Vol. 2, pp. 59–63. New York, 1987.
- Smith, Joseph Fielding. Doctrines of Salvation, Vol. 2, pp. 323–37. Salt Lake City, 1955.
- Talmage, James E. AF, pp. 109–42. Salt Lake City, 1984.

CARL S. HAWKINS

---

BAPTISMAL COVENANT

When a person enters into a Latter-day Saint baptism, he or she makes a covenant with God. Baptism is a “sign . . . that we will do the will of God, and there is no other way beneath the heavens whereby God hath ordained for man to come to Him to be saved” (TPJS, p. 198).

Candidates promise to “come into the fold of God, and to be called his people, . . . to bear one another’s burdens, . . . to mourn with those that mourn, and . . . to stand as witnesses of God . . . even until death” (Mosiah 18:8–9). A person must enter this covenant with the proper attitudes of HUMILITY, REPENTANCE, and determination to keep the Lord’s commandments, and serve God to the end (2 Ne. 31:6–17; Moro. 6:2–4; D&C 20:37). In turn, God promises remission of sins, redemption, and cleansing by the Holy Ghost (Acts 22:16; 3 Ne. 30:2). This covenant is made in the name of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost.

mercies of Christ, setting at naught the value of his atonement and the power of his redemption (Moro. 8:4–20).

The authority to baptize was restored by John the Baptist to Joseph Smith and Oliver COWDERY on May 15, 1829 (JS—H 1:68–72). From the early days of the restored Church, missionaries have been sent to “declare repentance and faith on the Savior, and remission of sins by baptism” (D&C 19:31; 55:2; 84:27, 74). “He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, and he that believeth not, and is not baptized, shall be damned” (D&C 112:29). This is the central teaching of the GOSPEL OF JESUS CHRIST (3 Ne. 11:31–40).

Consequently, persons coming into The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints at age eight or older are required to submit to baptism, even though they may have been previously baptized in other churches (D&C 22). Likewise, ex-communicants undergo baptism again once they have qualified for readmission into the Church.

The form of the ordinance is prescribed in latter-day revelation, which makes clear that the baptism must be performed by a person who has priesthood authority and that it requires completely immersing the penitent candidate below the water and then bringing the person out of the water (3 Ne. 11:25–26; D&C 20:72–74). Baptism is followed by the LAYING ON OF HANDS for the gift of the Holy Ghost.

Contemporary Church practice provides for the candidate to be interviewed and approved by an authorized priesthood official (usually the BISHOP or other officer presiding over the congregation or a MISSION official), who determines whether the applicant meets the qualifying conditions of repentance, faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, and an understanding of and willingness to obey the laws and ordinances of the gospel. It is also necessary that an official record of each baptism be kept by the Church.

Baptism may be performed in the font provided in many meetinghouses or in any body of water that is suitable for the sacred occasion and deep enough for complete immersion. The candidate and the person performing the ordinance will be dressed in plain and modest white clothing. The ceremony is unpretentious, typically attended by the candidate’s family, close friends, and interested members of the congregation. A speaker or two may offer a few words of instruction and joyous welcome to the candidate.

The earlier practice of rebaptism to manifest repentance and recommitment, or for a restoration of health in time of sickness, is no longer practiced in the Church.

Belief that baptism is necessary for the salvation of all persons who reach the age of accountability (D&C 84:64, 74) does not condemn persons who have died without the opportunity to hear the true gospel of Jesus Christ or to receive baptism from proper priesthood authority. Latter-day Saints believe that proxy BAPTISM FOR THE DEAD should be performed vicariously (1 Cor. 15:29; D&C 124:28–35, 127–128), and that it becomes effective if the deceased beneficiary accepts the gospel while in the spirit world awaiting resurrection (see 1 Pet. 3:18–20; 4:6; cf. D&C 45:54). This vicarious work for the benefit of previous generations, binding the hearts of the children to their fathers (Mal. 4:5–6), is one of the sacred ordinances performed in Latter-day Saint TEMPLES (D&C 128:12–13).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Meslin, Michel. “Baptism.” In Encyclopedia of Religion, Mircea Eliade, ed. Vol. 2, pp. 59–63. New York, 1987.
- Smith, Joseph Fielding. Doctrines of Salvation, Vol. 2, pp. 323–37. Salt Lake City, 1955.
- Talmage, James E. AF, pp. 109–42. Salt Lake City, 1984.

CARL S. HAWKINS

---

BAPTISMAL COVENANT

When a person enters into a Latter-day Saint baptism, he or she makes a covenant with God. Baptism is a “sign . . . that we will do the will of God, and there is no other way beneath the heavens whereby God hath ordained for man to come to Him to be saved” (TPJS, p. 198).

Candidates promise to “come into the fold of God, and to be called his people, . . . to bear one another’s burdens, . . . to mourn with those that mourn, and . . . to stand as witnesses of God . . . even until death” (Mosiah 18:8–9). A person must enter this covenant with the proper attitudes of HUMILITY, REPENTANCE, and determination to keep the Lord’s commandments, and serve God to the end (2 Ne. 31:6–17; Moro. 6:2–4; D&C 20:37). In turn, God promises remission of sins, redemption, and cleansing by the Holy Ghost (Acts 22:16; 3 Ne. 30:2). This covenant is made in the name of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost.

The baptized can renew this covenant at each SACRAMENT MEETING by partaking of the SACRAMENT. This continual willingness to remember Christ and to keep his commandments brings the Lord's promise of his Spirit and produces the "fruits" (Gal. 5:22) and "gifts" (D&C 46) that lead to ETERNAL LIFE.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Tripp, Robert M. Oaths, Covenants and Promises, pp. 11–19. Salt Lake City, 1973.

JERRY A. WILSON

BAPTISMAL PRAYER

The wording of the baptismal prayer used in The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is prescribed in the earliest compilation of instructions for Church operations (D&C 20). When an individual is baptized, the person with the proper priesthood AUTHORITY goes down into the water with the candidate, raises his right arm to the square, calls the individual by the full legal name, and says, "Having been commissioned of Jesus Christ, I baptize you in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. Amen," and then immerses the candidate (D&C 20:73). A version of the prayer that differs only slightly from this was given by Jesus Christ to the NEPHITES and is recorded in the Book of Mormon (3 Ne. 11:25).

Earlier in the Book of Mormon there is a somewhat different account of the baptismal prayer that was spoken. When ALMA<sub>1</sub> in the second century B.C. established the Church among the Nephites, he prayed: "O Lord, pour out thy Spirit upon thy servant, that he may do this work with holiness of heart" (Mosiah 18:12). The baptismal prayer that followed emphasized the COVENANT represented in BAPTISM and the need for a subsequent baptism of the Spirit: "I baptize thee, having authority from the Almighty God, as a testimony that ye have entered into a covenant to serve him until you are dead as to the mortal body; and may the Spirit of the Lord be poured out upon you; and may he grant unto you eternal life, through the redemption of Christ, whom he has prepared from the foundation of the world" (Mosiah 18:13; see BAPTISM OF FIRE AND OF THE HOLY GHOST).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

It is informative to compare LDS practice and scriptural accounts with the Christian tradition as reported in E. C. Whitaker, Documents of the Baptismal Liturgy, London, 1970.

JERRY A. WILSON

BAPTISM FOR THE DEAD

[This entry consists of two articles:

LDS Practice Ancient Sources

The first article traces the development of the LDS doctrine of baptizing for the dead. In the second article, the dean of the Harvard School of Theology discusses the practice in ancient times.]

LDS PRACTICE

Baptism for the dead is the proxy performance of the ORDINANCE of baptism for one deceased. Joseph SMITH taught, "If we can baptize a man in the name of the Father [and] of the Son and of the Holy Ghost for the remission of sins it is just as much our privilege to act as an agent and be baptized for the remission of sins for and in behalf of our dead kindred who have not heard the gospel or fulness of it" (Kenney, p. 165).

The first public affirmation of the ordinance of baptism for the dead in the Church was Joseph Smith's funeral sermon for Seymour Brunson in NAUVOO in August 1840. Addressing a widow who had lost a son who had not been baptized, he called the principle "glad tidings of great joy," in contrast to the prevailing tradition that all unbaptized are damned. The first baptisms for the dead in modern times were done in the Mississippi River near Nauvoo.

Revelations clarifying the doctrine and practice have been given from time to time:

1. This was a New Testament practice (1 Cor. 15:29; cf. D&C 128; see BAPTISM FOR THE DEAD: ANCIENT SOURCES).
2. The ministry of Christ in the SPIRIT WORLD was for the benefit of those who had died without hearing the gospel or the fulness of it (1 Pet. 4:6; see SALVATION FOR THE DEAD).
3. Such baptisms are to be performed in temple fonts dedicated to the purpose (TPJS, p. 308; cf. D&C 124:29–35). In November 1841 the font

The baptized can renew this covenant at each SACRAMENT MEETING by partaking of the SACRAMENT. This continual willingness to remember Christ and to keep his commandments brings the Lord's promise of his Spirit and produces the "fruits" (Gal. 5:22) and "gifts" (D&C 46) that lead to ETERNAL LIFE.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Tripp, Robert M. Oaths, Covenants and Promises, pp. 11–19. Salt Lake City, 1973.

JERRY A. WILSON

BAPTISMAL PRAYER

The wording of the baptismal prayer used in The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is prescribed in the earliest compilation of instructions for Church operations (D&C 20). When an individual is baptized, the person with the proper priesthood AUTHORITY goes down into the water with the candidate, raises his right arm to the square, calls the individual by the full legal name, and says, "Having been commissioned of Jesus Christ, I baptize you in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. Amen," and then immerses the candidate (D&C 20:73). A version of the prayer that differs only slightly from this was given by Jesus Christ to the NEPHITES and is recorded in the Book of Mormon (3 Ne. 11:25).

Earlier in the Book of Mormon there is a somewhat different account of the baptismal prayer that was spoken. When ALMA<sub>1</sub> in the second century B.C. established the Church among the Nephites, he prayed: "O Lord, pour out thy Spirit upon thy servant, that he may do this work with holiness of heart" (Mosiah 18:12). The baptismal prayer that followed emphasized the COVENANT represented in BAPTISM and the need for a subsequent baptism of the Spirit: "I baptize thee, having authority from the Almighty God, as a testimony that ye have entered into a covenant to serve him until you are dead as to the mortal body; and may the Spirit of the Lord be poured out upon you; and may he grant unto you eternal life, through the redemption of Christ, whom he has prepared from the foundation of the world" (Mosiah 18:13; see BAPTISM OF FIRE AND OF THE HOLY GHOST).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

It is informative to compare LDS practice and scriptural accounts with the Christian tradition as reported in E. C. Whitaker, Documents of the Baptismal Liturgy, London, 1970.

JERRY A. WILSON

BAPTISM FOR THE DEAD

[This entry consists of two articles:

LDS Practice Ancient Sources

The first article traces the development of the LDS doctrine of baptizing for the dead. In the second article, the dean of the Harvard School of Theology discusses the practice in ancient times.]

LDS PRACTICE

Baptism for the dead is the proxy performance of the ORDINANCE of baptism for one deceased. Joseph SMITH taught, "If we can baptize a man in the name of the Father [and] of the Son and of the Holy Ghost for the remission of sins it is just as much our privilege to act as an agent and be baptized for the remission of sins for and in behalf of our dead kindred who have not heard the gospel or fulness of it" (Kenney, p. 165).

The first public affirmation of the ordinance of baptism for the dead in the Church was Joseph Smith's funeral sermon for Seymour Brunson in NAUVOO in August 1840. Addressing a widow who had lost a son who had not been baptized, he called the principle "glad tidings of great joy," in contrast to the prevailing tradition that all unbaptized are damned. The first baptisms for the dead in modern times were done in the Mississippi River near Nauvoo.

Revelations clarifying the doctrine and practice have been given from time to time:

1. This was a New Testament practice (1 Cor. 15:29; cf. D&C 128; see BAPTISM FOR THE DEAD: ANCIENT SOURCES).
2. The ministry of Christ in the SPIRIT WORLD was for the benefit of those who had died without hearing the gospel or the fulness of it (1 Pet. 4:6; see SALVATION FOR THE DEAD).
3. Such baptisms are to be performed in temple fonts dedicated to the purpose (TPJS, p. 308; cf. D&C 124:29–35). In November 1841 the font

The baptized can renew this covenant at each SACRAMENT MEETING by partaking of the SACRAMENT. This continual willingness to remember Christ and to keep his commandments brings the Lord's promise of his Spirit and produces the "fruits" (Gal. 5:22) and "gifts" (D&C 46) that lead to ETERNAL LIFE.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Tripp, Robert M. Oaths, Covenants and Promises, pp. 11–19. Salt Lake City, 1973.

JERRY A. WILSON

BAPTISMAL PRAYER

The wording of the baptismal prayer used in The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is prescribed in the earliest compilation of instructions for Church operations (D&C 20). When an individual is baptized, the person with the proper priesthood AUTHORITY goes down into the water with the candidate, raises his right arm to the square, calls the individual by the full legal name, and says, "Having been commissioned of Jesus Christ, I baptize you in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. Amen," and then immerses the candidate (D&C 20:73). A version of the prayer that differs only slightly from this was given by Jesus Christ to the NEPHITES and is recorded in the Book of Mormon (3 Ne. 11:25).

Earlier in the Book of Mormon there is a somewhat different account of the baptismal prayer that was spoken. When ALMA<sub>1</sub> in the second century B.C. established the Church among the Nephites, he prayed: "O Lord, pour out thy Spirit upon thy servant, that he may do this work with holiness of heart" (Mosiah 18:12). The baptismal prayer that followed emphasized the COVENANT represented in BAPTISM and the need for a subsequent baptism of the Spirit: "I baptize thee, having authority from the Almighty God, as a testimony that ye have entered into a covenant to serve him until you are dead as to the mortal body; and may the Spirit of the Lord be poured out upon you; and may he grant unto you eternal life, through the redemption of Christ, whom he has prepared from the foundation of the world" (Mosiah 18:13; see BAPTISM OF FIRE AND OF THE HOLY GHOST).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

It is informative to compare LDS practice and scriptural accounts with the Christian tradition as reported in E. C. Whitaker, Documents of the Baptismal Liturgy, London, 1970.

JERRY A. WILSON

BAPTISM FOR THE DEAD

[This entry consists of two articles:

LDS Practice
Ancient Sources

The first article traces the development of the LDS doctrine of baptizing for the dead. In the second article, the dean of the Harvard School of Theology discusses the practice in ancient times.]

LDS PRACTICE

Baptism for the dead is the proxy performance of the ORDINANCE of baptism for one deceased. Joseph SMITH taught, "If we can baptize a man in the name of the Father [and] of the Son and of the Holy Ghost for the remission of sins it is just as much our privilege to act as an agent and be baptized for the remission of sins for and in behalf of our dead kindred who have not heard the gospel or fulness of it" (Kenney, p. 165).

The first public affirmation of the ordinance of baptism for the dead in the Church was Joseph Smith's funeral sermon for Seymour Brunson in NAUVOO in August 1840. Addressing a widow who had lost a son who had not been baptized, he called the principle "glad tidings of great joy," in contrast to the prevailing tradition that all unbaptized are damned. The first baptisms for the dead in modern times were done in the Mississippi River near Nauvoo.

Revelations clarifying the doctrine and practice have been given from time to time:

1. This was a New Testament practice (1 Cor. 15:29; cf. D&C 128; see BAPTISM FOR THE DEAD: ANCIENT SOURCES).
2. The ministry of Christ in the SPIRIT WORLD was for the benefit of those who had died without hearing the gospel or the fulness of it (1 Pet. 4:6; see SALVATION FOR THE DEAD).
3. Such baptisms are to be performed in temple fonts dedicated to the purpose (TPJS, p. 308; cf. D&C 124:29–35). In November 1841 the font

Baptismal font in the Salt Lake Temple. In such fonts, Latter-day Saints perform proxy baptisms on behalf of people who have died without being baptized. In the ancient Temple of Solomon, a deep brass basin similarly "stood upon twelve oxen . . . and the sea was set above them, and all their hinder parts were inward" (1 Kings 7:25).

in the unfinished NAUVOO TEMPLE was so dedicated.

4. The language of the BAPTISMAL PRAYER is the same as for the living, with the addition of "for and in behalf of" the deceased.
5. Witnesses are to be present for proxy baptisms and a record is to be kept in Church archives (D&C 128:3, 8).
6. Women are to be baptized for women and men for men.
7. Not only baptism but CONFIRMATION and the higher TEMPLE ORDINANCES may also be performed by proxy (TPJS, pp. 362–63).
8. The law of AGENCY is inviolate in this world and the world to come. Thus, those served by proxy have the right to accept or reject the ordinances.

In the early years of the Church, proxy baptisms were performed only for direct blood ancestors, usually no more than four generations back.

Today, Latter-day Saints are baptized not only for their own forebears but also for other persons, unrelated to them, identified through the NAME EXTRACTION PROGRAM. The practice reflects the yearning of children for their parents and of parents for their children, and charitable feelings for others as well, that they receive the fulness of the blessings of the gospel of Jesus Christ. In LDS perspective, whatever else one may do to mourn, give honorable burial to, cherish, or memorialize the dead, this divinely authorized ordinance of baptism is a demonstration of love and has eternal implications.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Kenney, Scott G., ed. Wilford Woodruff's Journal, Vol. 2. Midvale, Utah, 1983.
- Widtsoe, John A. "Fundamentals of Temple Doctrine." Utah Genealogical and Historical Magazine 13 (July 1922):129–35.

H. DAVID BURTON

ANCIENT SOURCES

In his first epistle to the Corinthians Paul wrote: "Otherwise, what shall they do who are being baptized for the dead? If the dead are not raised at all, why are they being baptized for them" (Conzelmann, 1 Corinthians 15:29).

This verse is part of Paul's argumentation against those who denied a future resurrection (cf. 2 Tim. 2:18, Justin, Dial. 80). He refers to a practice of vicarious baptism, a practice for which we have no other evidence in the Pauline or other New Testament or early Christian writings. Interpreters have puzzled over the fact that Paul seems to accept this practice. At least he does not see fit to condemn it as heretical, but Paul clearly refers to a distinct group within the Church, a group that he accuses of inconsistency between ritual and doctrine.

A practice of vicarious baptism for the dead (for example among the Marcionites, A.D. 150) was known and seen as heretical by the ancient commentators. Thus they interpreted Paul's words in 1 Corinthians 15:29 so as not to lend support to such practices or to any theology implicit in it. Through the ages their interpretations have persisted and multiplied (B. M. Foschini reports and evaluates forty distinct explanations of this verse). Most of the Greek fathers understood "the dead" to refer to one's own body; others have interpreted the verse as referring to pagans seeking baptism "for the sake of joining" lost Christian relatives. Still others have suggested different sentence structures: "Otherwise what will they achieve who are being baptized? Something merely for their dead bodies?"

Once the theological pressures from later possible developments of practice and doctrine are felt less constricting, the text seems to speak plainly enough about a practice within the Church of vicarious baptism for the dead. This is the view of most contemporary critical exegetes. Such a practice can be understood in partial analogy with Paul's reference to how the pagan spouses and joint children in mixed marriages are sanctified and cleansed by the Christian partners (1 Cor. 7:14). Reference has often been made to 2 Maccabees 12:39–46, where Judas Maccabeus, "taking account of the resurrection," makes atonement for his dead comrades. (This was the very passage which Dr. Eck used in favor of purgatory in his 1519 Leipzig debate with Martin Luther. So it became part of the reason why Protestant Bibles excluded the Apocrypha or relegated them to an Appendix.)

To this could be added that the next link in Paul's argument for a future resurrection is his own exposure to martyrdom (1 Cor. 15:30–32), a martyrdom that Paul certainly thinks of as having a vicarious effect (Phil. 2:17, Rom. 15:16, cf. Col. 1:24).

Such a connection may be conscious or unconscious. In either case it makes it quite reasonable that Paul's remark refers to a practice of a vicarious baptism for the dead.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Conzelmann, H. 1 Corinthians. Hermeneia Series. Philadelphia, 1975.
- Foschini, B. "Those Who Are Baptized for the Dead; 1 Cor. 15:29." Catholic Biblical Quarterly 12 (1950):260–76, 378–88; 13 (1951):46–78, 172–98, 276–85.

KRISTER STENDAHL

---

BAPTISM OF FIRE AND OF THE HOLY GHOST

Baptism of fire and the Holy Ghost refers to the experience of an individual who receives the ordinance of the LAYING ON OF HANDS for the GIFT OF THE HOLY GHOST. It is the second in a two-part sequence following baptism by immersion in water through which a repentant person committed to Christ and his gospel is BORN OF GOD or born again. As Jesus explained to Nicodemus, "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God" (John 3:5). Commenting on this passage, Joseph Smith remarked, "Baptism by water is but half a baptism, and is good for nothing without . . . the baptism of the Holy Ghost" (TPJS, p. 314). The baptism of fire, ministered by the Holy Ghost, is manifested through a set of personal sensations, impressions, and insights that constitute a spiritual witness from deity that one has received a remission of sins (2 Ne. 31:17). The baptism of fire inaugurates the transmission of spiritual gifts to the faithful to assist them throughout life in remaining true to their baptismal COVENANT (1 Cor. 12; Moro. 10:8–23; D&C 46:10–33).

ANCIENT SOURCES

In his first epistle to the Corinthians Paul wrote: "Otherwise, what shall they do who are being baptized for the dead? If the dead are not raised at all, why are they being baptized for them" (Conzelmann, 1 Corinthians 15:29).

This verse is part of Paul's argumentation against those who denied a future resurrection (cf. 2 Tim. 2:18, Justin, Dial. 80). He refers to a practice of vicarious baptism, a practice for which we have no other evidence in the Pauline or other New Testament or early Christian writings. Interpreters have puzzled over the fact that Paul seems to accept this practice. At least he does not see fit to condemn it as heretical, but Paul clearly refers to a distinct group within the Church, a group that he accuses of inconsistency between ritual and doctrine.

A practice of vicarious baptism for the dead (for example among the Marcionites, A.D. 150) was known and seen as heretical by the ancient commentators. Thus they interpreted Paul's words in 1 Corinthians 15:29 so as not to lend support to such practices or to any theology implicit in it. Through the ages their interpretations have persisted and multiplied (B. M. Foschini reports and evaluates forty distinct explanations of this verse). Most of the Greek fathers understood "the dead" to refer to one's own body; others have interpreted the verse as referring to pagans seeking baptism "for the sake of joining" lost Christian relatives. Still others have suggested different sentence structures: "Otherwise what will they achieve who are being baptized? Something merely for their dead bodies?"

Once the theological pressures from later possible developments of practice and doctrine are felt less constricting, the text seems to speak plainly enough about a practice within the Church of vicarious baptism for the dead. This is the view of most contemporary critical exegetes. Such a practice can be understood in partial analogy with Paul's reference to how the pagan spouses and joint children in mixed marriages are sanctified and cleansed by the Christian partners (1 Cor. 7:14). Reference has often been made to 2 Maccabees 12:39–46, where Judas Maccabeus, "taking account of the resurrection," makes atonement for his dead comrades. (This was the very passage which Dr. Eck used in favor of purgatory in his 1519 Leipzig debate with Martin Luther. So it became part of the reason why Protestant Bibles excluded the Apocrypha or relegated them to an Appendix.)

To this could be added that the next link in Paul's argument for a future resurrection is his own exposure to martyrdom (1 Cor. 15:30–32), a martyrdom that Paul certainly thinks of as having a vicarious effect (Phil. 2:17, Rom. 15:16, cf. Col. 1:24).

Such a connection may be conscious or unconscious. In either case it makes it quite reasonable that Paul's remark refers to a practice of a vicarious baptism for the dead.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Conzelmann, H. 1 Corinthians. Hermeneia Series. Philadelphia, 1975.
- Foschini, B. "Those Who Are Baptized for the Dead; 1 Cor. 15:29." Catholic Biblical Quarterly 12 (1950):260–76, 378–88; 13 (1951):46–78, 172–98, 276–85.

KRISTER STENDAHL

---

BAPTISM OF FIRE AND OF THE HOLY GHOST

Baptism of fire and the Holy Ghost refers to the experience of an individual who receives the ordinance of the LAYING ON OF HANDS for the GIFT OF THE HOLY GHOST. It is the second in a two-part sequence following baptism by immersion in water through which a repentant person committed to Christ and his gospel is BORN OF GOD or born again. As Jesus explained to Nicodemus, "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God" (John 3:5). Commenting on this passage, Joseph Smith remarked, "Baptism by water is but half a baptism, and is good for nothing without . . . the baptism of the Holy Ghost" (TPJS, p. 314). The baptism of fire, ministered by the Holy Ghost, is manifested through a set of personal sensations, impressions, and insights that constitute a spiritual witness from deity that one has received a remission of sins (2 Ne. 31:17). The baptism of fire inaugurates the transmission of spiritual gifts to the faithful to assist them throughout life in remaining true to their baptismal COVENANT (1 Cor. 12; Moro. 10:8–23; D&C 46:10–33).

The doctrine of the two baptisms was taught by John the Baptist: “I indeed baptize you with water, . . . but he that cometh after me . . . shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost, and with fire” (Matt. 3:11). At Christ’s baptism the Holy Ghost was manifested in the sign of a DOVE (Luke 3:22), and he appeared to the disciples on the day of Pentecost as cloven tongues of fire (Acts 2:3; see JESUS CHRIST). The ordinance of conferring the Holy Ghost initiated early Christian converts into the Church (Acts 8:12–17; 3 Ne. 18; Moro. 2–3; 6), and is a practice (often referred to as CONFIRMATION) restored to the latter-day Church and administered by the MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOOD (D&C 20:38–41).

As symbols for baptism, both water (used for washing) and fire (used in the smelting of metals, hence a “refiner’s fire,” Mal. 3:2–3) represent agents that cleanse and purify, the former externally, the latter internally, leading to SANCTIFICATION (Alma 13:12; Moro. 6:4). In addition, fire suggests warmth and light, realized in tangible sensations such as a burning in the bosom and an awareness of enlightenment accompanying the reception of the divine spirit (D&C 9:8; 88:49).

For Latter-day Saints, baptism by fire and the Holy Ghost is a real phenomenon in literal fulfillment of God’s covenant to those who repent and are baptized (2 Ne. 31:10–21). Through this experience a person may realize the promises Jesus made with regard to how the Holy Ghost would function as a Comforter, a witness of the ATONEMENT, a teacher, and a guide to truth (John 14:16, 26; 15:26).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Cannon, Elaine, and Ed J. Pinegar. The Mighty Change. Salt Lake City, 1978.

WILLIAM S. BRADSHAW

---

BEATITUDES

The Beatitudes, or promises of blessings in Jesus’ SERMON ON THE MOUNT (Matt. 5:3–12), hold a particular significance for Latter-day Saints because the resurrected Lord gave essentially that same sermon to the Nephites and the Lamanites in the Western Hemisphere, as recorded in 3 Nephi

12–14. The words in the Beatitudes echo Isaiah 61:1–2 and Psalm 107:4–7, 9. Church members cite the setting of the Book of Mormon sermon as well as a few notable verbal differences (such as “Blessed are the poor in spirit who come unto me,” and the phrase “for they shall be filled with the Holy Ghost”) as examples of how the Book of Mormon complements the Bible, attesting to its message while clarifying and expanding it (cf. 1 Ne. 13 [esp. verses 39–42]; 2 Ne. 27, 29).

In the Book of Mormon, most of the sermon is addressed to baptized members of the Church (cf. 3 Ne. 11 and 12:1–2). Thus, the expectations in the sermon concern those living the law of the gospel as taught by Christ. Other parts of the sermon are directed specifically to leaders.

Some significant differences appear in the wording of the biblical and Book of Mormon versions of the Beatitudes. In the Book of Mormon, two new “beatitudes” precede those in Matthew: baptized members are blessed if they give heed to their leaders and have faith in Christ (3 Ne. 12:1), and “more blessed” are those who receive the testimony of emissaries whom Christ has called (3 Ne. 12:2). These two additional beatitudes are incorporated into the biblical sermon in the JOSEPH SMITH TRANSLATION OF THE BIBLE (JST). Matthew 5:3 is elaborated as noted above (cf. D&C 84:49–53). Matthew 5:4 is virtually unchanged at 3 Nephi 12:4 but is somewhat developed at 3 Nephi 12:19 (cf. Morm. 2:11–13). The words “shall be filled with the Holy Ghost” (3 Ne. 12:6) express on a spiritual level (cf. Ps. 17:15, Septuagint) the implicit meaning of cattle feeding upon grass (Matt. 5:6; Greek, chortasthêsontai; cf. the grass [chortos] where the disciples are miraculously fed at Matt. 14:19 and the verb “filled” at Matt. 15:33, 37). Matthew 5:5 is unchanged, as are Matthew 5:7–9; but Matthew 5:10 reads “which are persecuted for righteousness’ sake,” while 3 Nephi 12:10 has “who are persecuted for my name’s sake,” reflecting the Christ-centered theme throughout the Nephite version of the sermon. For the first two verbs of Matthew 5:12, which the KJV takes as imperatives, 3 Nephi 12:12 has “For ye shall have great joy and be exceedingly glad.”

Church leaders often refer to the Beatitudes as the Lord’s promises of blessings and happiness to those who follow him and as the result of obedience or the “fruit of the Spirit” (Gal. 5:22–23). Those who would be obedient have the individual

The doctrine of the two baptisms was taught by John the Baptist: “I indeed baptize you with water, . . . but he that cometh after me . . . shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost, and with fire” (Matt. 3:11). At Christ’s baptism the Holy Ghost was manifested in the sign of a DOVE (Luke 3:22), and he appeared to the disciples on the day of Pentecost as cloven tongues of fire (Acts 2:3; see JESUS CHRIST). The ordinance of conferring the Holy Ghost initiated early Christian converts into the Church (Acts 8:12–17; 3 Ne. 18; Moro. 2–3; 6), and is a practice (often referred to as CONFIRMATION) restored to the latter-day Church and administered by the MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOOD (D&C 20:38–41).

As symbols for baptism, both water (used for washing) and fire (used in the smelting of metals, hence a “refiner’s fire,” Mal. 3:2–3) represent agents that cleanse and purify, the former externally, the latter internally, leading to SANCTIFICATION (Alma 13:12; Moro. 6:4). In addition, fire suggests warmth and light, realized in tangible sensations such as a burning in the bosom and an awareness of enlightenment accompanying the reception of the divine spirit (D&C 9:8; 88:49).

For Latter-day Saints, baptism by fire and the Holy Ghost is a real phenomenon in literal fulfillment of God’s covenant to those who repent and are baptized (2 Ne. 31:10–21). Through this experience a person may realize the promises Jesus made with regard to how the Holy Ghost would function as a Comforter, a witness of the ATONEMENT, a teacher, and a guide to truth (John 14:16, 26; 15:26).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Cannon, Elaine, and Ed J. Pinegar. The Mighty Change. Salt Lake City, 1978.

WILLIAM S. BRADSHAW

---

BEATITUDES

The Beatitudes, or promises of blessings in Jesus’ SERMON ON THE MOUNT (Matt. 5:3–12), hold a particular significance for Latter-day Saints because the resurrected Lord gave essentially that same sermon to the Nephites and the Lamanites in the Western Hemisphere, as recorded in 3 Nephi

12–14. The words in the Beatitudes echo Isaiah 61:1–2 and Psalm 107:4–7, 9. Church members cite the setting of the Book of Mormon sermon as well as a few notable verbal differences (such as “Blessed are the poor in spirit who come unto me,” and the phrase “for they shall be filled with the Holy Ghost”) as examples of how the Book of Mormon complements the Bible, attesting to its message while clarifying and expanding it (cf. 1 Ne. 13 [esp. verses 39–42]; 2 Ne. 27, 29).

In the Book of Mormon, most of the sermon is addressed to baptized members of the Church (cf. 3 Ne. 11 and 12:1–2). Thus, the expectations in the sermon concern those living the law of the gospel as taught by Christ. Other parts of the sermon are directed specifically to leaders.

Some significant differences appear in the wording of the biblical and Book of Mormon versions of the Beatitudes. In the Book of Mormon, two new “beatitudes” precede those in Matthew: baptized members are blessed if they give heed to their leaders and have faith in Christ (3 Ne. 12:1), and “more blessed” are those who receive the testimony of emissaries whom Christ has called (3 Ne. 12:2). These two additional beatitudes are incorporated into the biblical sermon in the JOSEPH SMITH TRANSLATION OF THE BIBLE (JST). Matthew 5:3 is elaborated as noted above (cf. D&C 84:49–53). Matthew 5:4 is virtually unchanged at 3 Nephi 12:4 but is somewhat developed at 3 Nephi 12:19 (cf. Morm. 2:11–13). The words “shall be filled with the Holy Ghost” (3 Ne. 12:6) express on a spiritual level (cf. Ps. 17:15, Septuagint) the implicit meaning of cattle feeding upon grass (Matt. 5:6; Greek, chortasthêsontai; cf. the grass [chortos] where the disciples are miraculously fed at Matt. 14:19 and the verb “filled” at Matt. 15:33, 37). Matthew 5:5 is unchanged, as are Matthew 5:7–9; but Matthew 5:10 reads “which are persecuted for righteousness’ sake,” while 3 Nephi 12:10 has “who are persecuted for my name’s sake,” reflecting the Christ-centered theme throughout the Nephite version of the sermon. For the first two verbs of Matthew 5:12, which the KJV takes as imperatives, 3 Nephi 12:12 has “For ye shall have great joy and be exceedingly glad.”

Church leaders often refer to the Beatitudes as the Lord’s promises of blessings and happiness to those who follow him and as the result of obedience or the “fruit of the Spirit” (Gal. 5:22–23). Those who would be obedient have the individual responsibilities of turning to the Lord and of implementing the principles inherent in the qualities described in the Beatitudes (cf. D&C 88:63–65 and 97:16, which adapt the sixth beatitude to temple worship).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Thomas, Catherine. "The Sermon on the Mount: The Sacrifice of the Human Heart (Matthew 5–7; Luke 6:17–49)." In Studies in Scripture, ed. R. Millet, Vol. 5, pp. 236–50. Salt Lake City, 1986.

Welch, John W. The Sermon at the Temple and the Sermon on the Mount. Salt Lake City, 1990.

Wilcox, S. Michael. "The Beatitudes—Pathway to the Savior." Ensign 21 (Jan. 1991):19–23.

THOMAS W. MACKAY

BEEHIVE SYMBOL

Nineteenth-century leaders of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints consciously created symbols to buttress their community. The most persistent of these pioneer symbols was the beehive.

Its origin may relate to the statement in the Book of Mormon that the JAREDITES carried "with them deseret, which, by interpretation, is a honey bee" (Ether 2:3). The Deseret News (Oct. 11, 1881) described the symbol of the beehive in this way: "The hive and honey bees form our communal coat of arms. . . . It is a significant representation of the industry, harmony, order and frugality of the people, and of the sweet results of their toil, union and intelligent cooperation."

Working together during this early period, individuals contributed specialized talents and skills for building an integrated and well-planned community in a hostile environment. Community, not individuality, created this persistent symbol. The beehive has appeared on public and private Mormon buildings (such as temples, tabernacles, and meetinghouses, Brigham Young's Beehive House, and the mercantile institution ZCMI) as well as in folk art and on furniture.

Today it appears as a logo of some Church-related organizations, on the seals of the state of Utah and of two universities, on Church WELFARE products, and on some commercial signs in Utah.

It links the Mormon community across time while symbolizing the Mormon pioneer past.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Cannon, Hal. The Grand Beehive. Salt Lake City, 1980.

Oman, Richard, and Susan Oman. "Mormon Iconography." In Utah Folk Art: A Catalog of Material Culture, ed. H. Cannon. Provo, Utah, 1980.

RICHARD G. OMAN

BENJAMIN

Benjamin, son of MOSIAH<sub>1</sub>, was an important king in Nephite history (d. c. 121 B.C.). His reign came at a crucial juncture in the history of the NEPHITES and was important both culturally and politically. His father, Mosiah<sub>1</sub>, "being warned of the Lord," had led the Nephites out of the land of Nephi to the land of Zarahemla (Omni 1:12, 19). Thereafter, during his own reign, Benjamin fought, as was customary for kings in the ancient world (cf. Mosiah 10:10), with his "own arm" against invading LAMANITES (W of M 1:13), keeping his people "from falling into the hands of [their] enemies" (Mosiah 2:31). He succeeded in consolidating Nephite rule over the land of Zarahemla (Omni 1:19) and reigned there "in righteousness" over his people (W of M 1:17).

Benjamin, described as a "holy man" (W of M 1:17) and "a just man before the Lord," also led his people as a prophet (Omni 1:25) and was, with the assistance of other prophets and holy men, able to overcome the contentions among his people and to "once more establish peace in the land" (W of M 1:18). Accordingly, Amaleki, who was himself "without seed," entrusted Benjamin with the record on the "small plates" (Omni 1:25). Keenly interested in the preservation of sacred records, Benjamin taught his sons "in all the language of his fathers" and "concerning the records . . . on the plates of brass" (Mosiah 1:2–3).

Mosiah 2–6 records Benjamin's farewell address, designed primarily to effect a "change in heart" in his people and to bring them to Jesus Christ. He deals with man's obligations to his fellow men and to God, punishment for rebellion against God, gratitude, faith, and service. This address is as relevant now as it was when first presented. In addition, reporting the words spoken to responsibilities of turning to the Lord and of implementing the principles inherent in the qualities described in the Beatitudes (cf. D&C 88:63–65 and 97:16, which adapt the sixth beatitude to temple worship).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Thomas, Catherine. "The Sermon on the Mount: The Sacrifice of the Human Heart (Matthew 5–7; Luke 6:17–49)." In Studies in Scripture, ed. R. Millet, Vol. 5, pp. 236–50. Salt Lake City, 1986.

Welch, John W. The Sermon at the Temple and the Sermon on the Mount. Salt Lake City, 1990.

Wilcox, S. Michael. "The Beatitudes—Pathway to the Savior." Ensign 21 (Jan. 1991):19–23.

THOMAS W. MACKAY

BEEHIVE SYMBOL

Nineteenth-century leaders of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints consciously created symbols to buttress their community. The most persistent of these pioneer symbols was the beehive.

Its origin may relate to the statement in the Book of Mormon that the JAREDITES carried "with them deseret, which, by interpretation, is a honey bee" (Ether 2:3). The Deseret News (Oct. 11, 1881) described the symbol of the beehive in this way: "The hive and honey bees form our communal coat of arms. . . . It is a significant representation of the industry, harmony, order and frugality of the people, and of the sweet results of their toil, union and intelligent cooperation."

Working together during this early period, individuals contributed specialized talents and skills for building an integrated and well-planned community in a hostile environment. Community, not individuality, created this persistent symbol. The beehive has appeared on public and private Mormon buildings (such as temples, tabernacles, and meetinghouses, Brigham Young's Beehive House, and the mercantile institution ZCMI) as well as in folk art and on furniture.

Today it appears as a logo of some Church-related organizations, on the seals of the state of Utah and of two universities, on Church WELFARE products, and on some commercial signs in Utah.

It links the Mormon community across time while symbolizing the Mormon pioneer past.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Cannon, Hal. The Grand Beehive. Salt Lake City, 1980.

Oman, Richard, and Susan Oman. "Mormon Iconography." In Utah Folk Art: A Catalog of Material Culture, ed. H. Cannon. Provo, Utah, 1980.

RICHARD G. OMAN

BENJAMIN

Benjamin, son of MOSIAH<sub>1</sub>, was an important king in Nephite history (d. c. 121 B.C.). His reign came at a crucial juncture in the history of the NEPHITES and was important both culturally and politically. His father, Mosiah<sub>1</sub>, "being warned of the Lord," had led the Nephites out of the land of Nephi to the land of Zarahemla (Omni 1:12, 19). Thereafter, during his own reign, Benjamin fought, as was customary for kings in the ancient world (cf. Mosiah 10:10), with his "own arm" against invading LAMANITES (W of M 1:13), keeping his people "from falling into the hands of [their] enemies" (Mosiah 2:31). He succeeded in consolidating Nephite rule over the land of Zarahemla (Omni 1:19) and reigned there "in righteousness" over his people (W of M 1:17).

Benjamin, described as a "holy man" (W of M 1:17) and "a just man before the Lord," also led his people as a prophet (Omni 1:25) and was, with the assistance of other prophets and holy men, able to overcome the contentions among his people and to "once more establish peace in the land" (W of M 1:18). Accordingly, Amaleki, who was himself "without seed," entrusted Benjamin with the record on the "small plates" (Omni 1:25). Keenly interested in the preservation of sacred records, Benjamin taught his sons "in all the language of his fathers" and "concerning the records . . . on the plates of brass" (Mosiah 1:2–3).

Mosiah 2–6 records Benjamin's farewell address, designed primarily to effect a "change in heart" in his people and to bring them to Jesus Christ. He deals with man's obligations to his fellow men and to God, punishment for rebellion against God, gratitude, faith, and service. This address is as relevant now as it was when first presented. In addition, reporting the words spoken to responsibilities of turning to the Lord and of implementing the principles inherent in the qualities described in the Beatitudes (cf. D&C 88:63–65 and 97:16, which adapt the sixth beatitude to temple worship).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Thomas, Catherine. "The Sermon on the Mount: The Sacrifice of the Human Heart (Matthew 5–7; Luke 6:17–49)." In Studies in Scripture, ed. R. Millet, Vol. 5, pp. 236–50. Salt Lake City, 1986.

Welch, John W. The Sermon at the Temple and the Sermon on the Mount. Salt Lake City, 1990.

Wilcox, S. Michael. "The Beatitudes—Pathway to the Savior." Ensign 21 (Jan. 1991):19–23.

THOMAS W. MACKAY

BEEHIVE SYMBOL

Nineteenth-century leaders of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints consciously created symbols to buttress their community. The most persistent of these pioneer symbols was the beehive.

Its origin may relate to the statement in the Book of Mormon that the JAREDITES carried "with them deseret, which, by interpretation, is a honey bee" (Ether 2:3). The Deseret News (Oct. 11, 1881) described the symbol of the beehive in this way: "The hive and honey bees form our communal coat of arms. . . . It is a significant representation of the industry, harmony, order and frugality of the people, and of the sweet results of their toil, union and intelligent cooperation."

Working together during this early period, individuals contributed specialized talents and skills for building an integrated and well-planned community in a hostile environment. Community, not individuality, created this persistent symbol. The beehive has appeared on public and private Mormon buildings (such as temples, tabernacles, and meetinghouses, Brigham Young's Beehive House, and the mercantile institution ZCMI) as well as in folk art and on furniture.

Today it appears as a logo of some Church-related organizations, on the seals of the state of Utah and of two universities, on Church WELFARE products, and on some commercial signs in Utah.

It links the Mormon community across time while symbolizing the Mormon pioneer past.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Cannon, Hal. The Grand Beehive. Salt Lake City, 1980.

Oman, Richard, and Susan Oman. "Mormon Iconography." In Utah Folk Art: A Catalog of Material Culture, ed. H. Cannon. Provo, Utah, 1980.

RICHARD G. OMAN

BENJAMIN

Benjamin, son of MOSIAH<sub>1</sub>, was an important king in Nephite history (d. c. 121 B.C.). His reign came at a crucial juncture in the history of the NEPHITES and was important both culturally and politically. His father, Mosiah<sub>1</sub>, "being warned of the Lord," had led the Nephites out of the land of Nephi to the land of Zarahemla (Omni 1:12, 19). Thereafter, during his own reign, Benjamin fought, as was customary for kings in the ancient world (cf. Mosiah 10:10), with his "own arm" against invading LAMANITES (W of M 1:13), keeping his people "from falling into the hands of [their] enemies" (Mosiah 2:31). He succeeded in consolidating Nephite rule over the land of Zarahemla (Omni 1:19) and reigned there "in righteousness" over his people (W of M 1:17).

Benjamin, described as a "holy man" (W of M 1:17) and "a just man before the Lord," also led his people as a prophet (Omni 1:25) and was, with the assistance of other prophets and holy men, able to overcome the contentions among his people and to "once more establish peace in the land" (W of M 1:18). Accordingly, Amaleki, who was himself "without seed," entrusted Benjamin with the record on the "small plates" (Omni 1:25). Keenly interested in the preservation of sacred records, Benjamin taught his sons "in all the language of his fathers" and "concerning the records . . . on the plates of brass" (Mosiah 1:2–3).

Mosiah 2–6 records Benjamin's farewell address, designed primarily to effect a "change in heart" in his people and to bring them to Jesus Christ. He deals with man's obligations to his fellow men and to God, punishment for rebellion against God, gratitude, faith, and service. This address is as relevant now as it was when first presented. In addition, reporting the words spoken to him by an angel, Benjamin prophesied that “the Lord Omnipotent . . . shall come down from heaven among the children of men” as the Messiah, “working mighty miracles” (Mosiah 3:5). Further, Benjamin declared that the Messiah would “be called Jesus Christ, the Son of God, . . . and his mother shall be called Mary” (3:8)—the earliest mention of her name in the Book of Mormon. Moreover, Jesus would “suffer temptations, and pain of body, hunger, thirst, and fatigue, even more than man can suffer” (3:7). After being crucified, Jesus would “rise the third day from the dead; and behold, he standeth to judge the world” (3:10). Significantly, Benjamin taught that the power of the atonement of Jesus Christ was in effect for him and his people, “as though he had already come” to earth (3:13).

The impact of Benjamin’s address on subsequent Nephite generations can be gauged by how much it is mentioned later in the Book of Mormon. Following Benjamin’s death, his son and successor, MOSIAH<sub>2</sub>, sent Ammon and fifteen other representatives from Zarahemla to the land of Nephi (Mosiah 7:1–6), where they found the Nephite king Limhi and his people in bondage to the Lamanites. After the representatives had identified themselves, Limhi caused his people to gather at the local temple, where he addressed them. Thereafter, Ammon “rehearsed unto them the last words which king Benjamin had taught them, and explained them to the people of king Limhi, so that they might understand all the words which he spake” (Mosiah 8:3). Similarly, HELAMAN<sub>2</sub> (c. 30 B.C.) admonished his sons LEHI<sub>4</sub> and NEPHI<sub>2</sub> to “remember . . . the words which king Benjamin spake unto his people; yea, remember that there is no other way nor means whereby man can be saved, only through the atoning blood of Jesus Christ” (Hel. 5:9). These words mirror one of the central themes of Benjamin’s address: “Salvation was, and is, and is to come, in and through the atoning blood of Christ” (Mosiah 3:18–19; cf. Hel. 14:12).

After a long and prosperous reign, Benjamin died about 121 B.C. No higher tribute was paid to his greatness than that given by his son Mosiah<sub>2</sub>. In a discourse given at the end of his own reign, in which he considers the advantages and pitfalls of various forms of government, Mosiah says, “If ye could have men for your kings who would do even as my father Benjamin did for this people, . . . then it would be expedient that ye should always have kings to rule over you” (Mosiah 29:13).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Nibley, Hugh W. An Approach to the Book of Mormon. In CWHN 4:295–310.

STEPHEN D. RICKS

---

BENSON, EZRA TAFT

Ezra Taft Benson (1899–), thirteenth President of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, is noted for his extensive Church service and his distinguished career in government. He served forty-two years as a member of the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles and was U.S. secretary of agriculture for eight years in the administration of President Dwight D. Eisenhower. As President of the Church, he repeatedly bore witness that the Book of Mormon is the major instrument to bring the members of the Church and the world to Christ, and he admonished the Saints to strengthen their families and to preserve their God-given freedoms.

President Benson was born August 4, 1899, in the small rural community of Whitney, Idaho, the oldest of eleven children born to George Taft Benson, Jr., and Sarah Dunkley. He was named after his great-grandfather, Ezra T. (Taft) Benson, an APOSTLE, who entered the Salt Lake Valley with the first Mormon pioneer company in July 1847. The pioneer Ezra T. was the son of John Benson, Jr., and Chloe Taft of Mendon, Massachusetts. John Benson, Sr., was an officer during the American Revolution.

Ezra Taft Benson was reared on the family farm in Whitney, driving a team of horses at the age of five, milking cows, and thinning sugar beets. He entered grade school at the age of eight. “Be as careful of the books you read as of the company you keep” was the counsel that governed his reading habits (Dew, p. 24). In addition to the scriptures, he read Bunyan’s Pilgrim’s Progress; biographies of George Washington, Benjamin Franklin, and Abraham Lincoln, and success stories by Horatio Alger. His grandparents gave him a two-volume set by Orison S. Marden, Little Visits with Great Americans (1905), which he devoured.

Increased responsibility was thrust on him as a youth when his father was called as a missionary him by an angel, Benjamin prophesied that “the Lord Omnipotent . . . shall come down from heaven among the children of men” as the Messiah, “working mighty miracles” (Mosiah 3:5). Further, Benjamin declared that the Messiah would “be called Jesus Christ, the Son of God, . . . and his mother shall be called Mary” (3:8)—the earliest mention of her name in the Book of Mormon. Moreover, Jesus would “suffer temptations, and pain of body, hunger, thirst, and fatigue, even more than man can suffer” (3:7). After being crucified, Jesus would “rise the third day from the dead; and behold, he standeth to judge the world” (3:10). Significantly, Benjamin taught that the power of the atonement of Jesus Christ was in effect for him and his people, “as though he had already come” to earth (3:13).

The impact of Benjamin’s address on subsequent Nephite generations can be gauged by how much it is mentioned later in the Book of Mormon. Following Benjamin’s death, his son and successor, MOSIAH<sub>2</sub>, sent Ammon and fifteen other representatives from Zarahemla to the land of Nephi (Mosiah 7:1–6), where they found the Nephite king Limhi and his people in bondage to the Lamanites. After the representatives had identified themselves, Limhi caused his people to gather at the local temple, where he addressed them. Thereafter, Ammon “rehearsed unto them the last words which king Benjamin had taught them, and explained them to the people of king Limhi, so that they might understand all the words which he spake” (Mosiah 8:3). Similarly, HELAMAN<sub>2</sub> (c. 30 B.C.) admonished his sons LEHI<sub>4</sub> and NEPHI<sub>2</sub> to “remember . . . the words which king Benjamin spake unto his people; yea, remember that there is no other way nor means whereby man can be saved, only through the atoning blood of Jesus Christ” (Hel. 5:9). These words mirror one of the central themes of Benjamin’s address: “Salvation was, and is, and is to come, in and through the atoning blood of Christ” (Mosiah 3:18–19; cf. Hel. 14:12).

After a long and prosperous reign, Benjamin died about 121 B.C. No higher tribute was paid to his greatness than that given by his son Mosiah<sub>2</sub>. In a discourse given at the end of his own reign, in which he considers the advantages and pitfalls of various forms of government, Mosiah says, “If ye could have men for your kings who would do even as my father Benjamin did for this people, . . . then it would be expedient that ye should always have kings to rule over you” (Mosiah 29:13).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Nibley, Hugh W. An Approach to the Book of Mormon. In CWHN 4:295–310.

STEPHEN D. RICKS

---

BENSON, EZRA TAFT

Ezra Taft Benson (1899–), thirteenth President of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, is noted for his extensive Church service and his distinguished career in government. He served forty-two years as a member of the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles and was U.S. secretary of agriculture for eight years in the administration of President Dwight D. Eisenhower. As President of the Church, he repeatedly bore witness that the Book of Mormon is the major instrument to bring the members of the Church and the world to Christ, and he admonished the Saints to strengthen their families and to preserve their God-given freedoms.

President Benson was born August 4, 1899, in the small rural community of Whitney, Idaho, the oldest of eleven children born to George Taft Benson, Jr., and Sarah Dunkley. He was named after his great-grandfather, Ezra T. (Taft) Benson, an APOSTLE, who entered the Salt Lake Valley with the first Mormon pioneer company in July 1847. The pioneer Ezra T. was the son of John Benson, Jr., and Chloe Taft of Mendon, Massachusetts. John Benson, Sr., was an officer during the American Revolution.

Ezra Taft Benson was reared on the family farm in Whitney, driving a team of horses at the age of five, milking cows, and thinning sugar beets. He entered grade school at the age of eight. “Be as careful of the books you read as of the company you keep” was the counsel that governed his reading habits (Dew, p. 24). In addition to the scriptures, he read Bunyan’s Pilgrim’s Progress; biographies of George Washington, Benjamin Franklin, and Abraham Lincoln, and success stories by Horatio Alger. His grandparents gave him a two-volume set by Orison S. Marden, Little Visits with Great Americans (1905), which he devoured.

Increased responsibility was thrust on him as a youth when his father was called as a missionary to the Northern States Mission, leaving behind his wife and seven children; the eighth was born while he was in the mission field. A spirit of missionary work enveloped the home, and all eleven children eventually served at least one full-time mission.

In 1914, Ezra entered the Church-sponsored Oneida Academy in Preston, Idaho, graduating in 1918. That year as Scoutmaster, he led his Scouts into choral competition and won the Cache Valley chorus championship. Also during that year he enlisted in the military service just before the close of World War I.

As a young man, he developed a love for the land and for the Lord, two fundamental influences in his ensuing life. He felt that the basic ingredient for successful farming was intelligent, hard work. To increase his agricultural skills, he took correspondence courses and began attending the Utah State Agricultural College (now Utah State University). He accepted a mission call to England in 1921, where he served as Newcastle Conference clerk, Sunderland Branch president, and president of the Newcastle Conference, which included all of northern England. Upon his return, he soon enrolled at Brigham Young University, where he was president of the Agriculture Club and Men's Glee Club and was named the most popular man on campus. He graduated with honors, majoring in animal husbandry with a minor in agronomy.

He married Flora Smith Amussen in the Salt Lake Temple on September 10, 1926. She was the youngest child of Carl Christian Amussen, a Danish convert who crossed the plains and became a prominent Utah jeweler, and Barbara McIsaac Smith. Flora attended Utah State Agricultural College, where she served as vice-president of the student body, took the lead in a Shakespearean play, and won the women's singles tennis championship. She served a mission in the Hawaiian Islands.

Of his wife, President Benson said, "She had more faith in me than I had in myself" (Dew, p. 96). One Church leader commented that if there were more women in the Church like Sister Benson, there would be more men in the Church like Brother Benson. They became the parents of six children—Reed, Mark, Barbara, Beverly, Bonnie, and Beth.

Benson received a research scholarship to Iowa State College, where he obtained his master's degree in agricultural economics on June 13, 1927. He returned to the family farm, which he and his brother Orval had purchased from their father, and on March 4, 1929, was appointed Franklin County agricultural agent. He helped farmers solve their problems by setting up demonstration farms, inviting in specialists, teaching crop rotation, and introducing improved varieties of grains.

In 1930, he was promoted to agricultural economist and marketing specialist for the University of Idaho, with offices in the state capitol in Boise. Traveling throughout Idaho, he encouraged farmers to work cooperatively in producing and marketing their goods. For five years, he served as the executive secretary of the Idaho Cooperative Council. He took a leave in 1936 for additional graduate study, attending the University of California in Berkeley on a fellowship awarded by the Giannini Foundation for Agricultural Economics. Soon after his return to Boise, he was called by the Church in November 1938 to serve as stake president. In April 1939, he became executive secretary of the National Council of Farmer Cooperatives at its headquarters in Washington, D.C. The council represented some 4,000 cooperative purchasing and marketing organizations involving almost 1.6 million farmers. Ezra Benson represented cooperatives before committees of Congress and served on a four-man national agriculture advisory committee to President Franklin D. Roosevelt during World War II.

On June 30, 1940, the Church called him as the first president of the Washington, D.C., stake, and on July 26, 1943, he was called to the QUORUM OF THE TWELVE APOSTLES. He was sustained in that position at the October general conference and was ordained an apostle by President Heber J. GRANT on October 7, 1943.

The Benson family in 1943 at the time of Elder Benson's call to the apostleship: Ezra and his wife, Flora Amussen Benson, with their children (left to right) Bonnie, Mark, Barbara, Beverly, and (standing) Reed.

In December 1945, following the devastation of World War II, President George Albert SMITH called Elder Benson to be the European mission president. His faith in the Lord, administrative skills, and experience in dealing with government helped him accomplish the four-point charge given to him by the First Presidency: "First, to attend to the spiritual affairs of the Church in Europe; second, to work to make available food, clothing, and bedding to our suffering Saints in all parts of Europe; third, to direct the reorganization of the missions of Europe; and, fourth, to prepare for the return of missionaries to those countries" (IE 50 [May 1947]:293). He was among the first American civilians to administer relief in many of the devastated areas. During his first five months in Europe, he visited over one hundred cities in thirteen countries. Within ten months, he completed his mission, having distributed ninety-two boxcar loads of food, clothing, bedding, and medical supplies; reopened missions with new mission presidents and full-time missionaries; and given the Latter-day Saints in Europe a renewed spirit of hope.

U.S. President Dwight D. Eisenhower looks on as Chief Justice Fred M. Vinson administers the oath of office to Secretary of Agriculture Ezra Taft Benson in January 1953.

In 1952, following the counsel of President David O. McKay, Ezra Taft Benson accepted the Cabinet position of secretary of agriculture in the Eisenhower administration. His selection was greeted with widespread approval. In his "General Statement on Agricultural Policy," he said, "The supreme test of any government policy, agricultural or other, should be 'How will it affect the character, morale, and well-being of our people?' . . . A completely planned and subsidized economy weakens initiative, discourages industry, destroys character, and demoralizes the people" (Benson, 1962, p. 602).

He assumed office when farm income was declining and wartime legislation was piling up surpluses in government warehouses, inviting increased government controls of agriculture. He worked to reverse that course, winning significant legislative victories in spite of intense political opposition.

He became known for his integrity, and friend and foe alike acknowledged that he was a man of religious principles who stood by his convictions despite political pressures. He traveled hundreds of thousands of miles, carrying his farm message throughout the nation and the world, and aggressively encouraged consumption of U.S. farm products. He authored three books, Farmers at the Crossroads (1956), Freedom to Farm (1960), and Crossfire: The Eight Years with Eisenhower (1962).

He served eight years in the Cabinet, meeting with heads of state and agriculture leaders and farmers in over forty nations. He had discussions with such leaders as Chiang Kai-shek, Nehru, Khrushchev, King Hussein, and David Ben-Gurion. During this time, his example and activities brought positive and widespread attention to the Church. President David O. McKay said that Secretary Benson's work in the Cabinet would "stand for all time as a credit to the Church and the nation" (Benson, 1962, p. 519).

With the encouragement of President David O. McKay, a major thrust of Elder Benson's many Church and civic addresses pertained to freedom and the threats to it. The substance of those messages is found in his books The Red Carpet (1962), Title of Liberty (1964), and An Enemy Hath Done This (1969). In Church general conference in April 1965, he warned, "To have been on the wrong side of the freedom issue during the war in heaven meant eternal damnation. How then can Latter-day Saints expect to be on the wrong side in this life and escape the eternal consequences?" (IE 68 [June 1965]:537).

Elder Benson, with LDS Scout leader Bertram Stokes, greets Scouts from throughout the British Mission at a gathering in the Birmingham District (c. 1946).

President Benson's international stature helped to facilitate the acceptance and growth of the Church throughout the world. He dedicated several nations to the preaching of the gospel, established the first stakes in many countries, and supervised various areas of the world. He served as chairman of Quorum of the Twelve committees and sat on numerous boards.

In December 1973, Ezra Taft Benson became president of the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles. His executive abilities were again demonstrated in this calling. A great spirit of unity was manifest, and he measured proposed policies or procedures by the yardstick "What is best for the kingdom?" (Petersen, p. 3).

Brigham Young University honored him by establishing the Ezra Taft Benson Agriculture and Food Institute in 1975 to help relieve world food problems and raise the quality of global life through improved nutrition and enlightened agriculture practices.

Many national and international citations and awards, including a number of honorary doctorate degrees, were bestowed on him. From the Boy Scouts of America he received the Silver Beaver, Silver Antelope, and Silver Buffalo; he served on their National Executive Board. On April 1, 1989, he was presented world Scouting's highest award, the Bronze Wolf. During his ninetieth birthday celebration, the President of the United States conferred upon him the Presidential Citizens Medal, naming him "one of the most distinguished Americans of his time" (Church News, Aug. 5, 1989, p. 4).

Upon the death of President Spencer W. Kimball, Ezra Taft Benson became President of the Church on November 10, 1985, at the age of eighty-six. At that time he delivered a statement reiterating the mission of the Church—to preach the gospel, perfect the Saints, and redeem the dead—and reaffirming that the Church is led by the Lord Jesus Christ. He selected as his counselors in the First Presidency Gordon B. Hinckley and Thomas S. Monson. The new First Presidency soon issued a special invitation to those members who had ceased activity or become critical of the Church to "come back" (Church News, Dec. 22, 1985, p. 3), and they opened the temples to worthy members married to unwedded spouses.

In a solemn assembly at general conference April 6, 1986, he was sustained by Church members as the PROPHET, SEER, AND REVELATOR, and President of the Church. In his opening address at that conference, President Benson stressed the need to "cleanse the inner vessel (see Alma 60:23), beginning first with ourselves, then with our families, and finally with the Church" (Ensign 16 [May 1986]:4). In commencing that cleansing, he declared, "The Book of Mormon has not been, nor is it yet, the center of our personal study, family teaching, preaching, and missionary work. Of this we must repent" (Ensign 16 [May 1986]:5–6).

In his concluding address of the conference, he said, "The Lord inspired His servant Lorenzo Snow to reemphasize the principle of tithing to redeem the Church from financial bondage. . . . Now, in our day, the Lord has revealed the need to reemphasize the Book of Mormon to get the Ezra Taft Benson was ordained and set apart as the thirteenth President of the Church on November 10, 1985. During his administration he emphasized the Book of Mormon and the theme “Come Unto Christ” in strengthening missionary work and families.

Church and all the children of Zion out from under condemnation—the scourge and judgment” (Ensign 16 [May 1986]:78; see D&C 84:54–58). To that end, his address “The Book of Mormon Is the Word of God” was repeated in regional conferences throughout the Church. This emphasis greatly accelerated the distribution and reading of the Book of Mormon and “brought more souls to Christ, both within and without the Church, than ever before” (Ensign 18 [Nov. 1988]:4).

Continuing to help set the Church in order and perfect the Saints, he delivered another landmark address entitled “Beware of Pride” and gave separate messages to the children, young men, young women, single adult brethren, single adult sisters, fathers, mothers, and the elderly.

Throughout the years, the home and family were the center of many of President Benson’s conference messages, such as his widely broadcast address “Our Homes—Divinely Ordained” (IE 52 [May 1949]:278–79, 332–33) and his frequent reference to his goal that there be “no empty chairs” in the family circle in the next life (Dew, p. 363). He has manifested a great love for the children and youth of the Church.

He was President during the Bicentennial of the U.S. Constitution and, as one of its greatest defenders, he delivered messages honoring this divine document and its inspired framers (The Constitution: A Heavenly Banner, Salt Lake City, 1986).

During his presidency, new temples were announced and several were dedicated, and missionary work expanded around the world with special opportunities being afforded, particularly in Eastern Europe, in countries previously closed.

For nearly fifty years his thousands of speeches stressed mankind’s three great loyalties—loyalty to God, loyalty to family, and loyalty to country. His life has been exemplary in striving to live those loyalties as a prophet, a patriarch, and a patriot.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Benson, Ezra Taft. A Witness and a Warning. Salt Lake City, 1988.

———. Come, Listen to a Prophet’s Voice. Salt Lake City, 1990.

———. Crossfire: The Eight Years With Eisenhower. New York, 1962.

———. God, Family, Country. Salt Lake City, 1974.

———. The Teachings of Ezra Taft Benson. Salt Lake City, 1988.

Dew, Sheri L. Ezra Taft Benson: A Biography. Salt Lake City, 1987.

Petersen, Mark E. “President Ezra Taft Benson.” Ensign 16 [Jan. 1986]:2–4.

REED A. BENSON

SHERI L. DEW

---

BIBLE

[The entry on the Bible is designed as an overview of the positive LDS appraisal and extensive use of this scriptural collection. Articles under this entry are:

Bible

LDS Belief in the Bible

King James Version

LDS Publication of the Bible

The first article explains the importance of the Bible among the standard works of the Church. The second

Ezra Taft Benson was ordained and set apart as the thirteenth President of the Church on November 10, 1985. During his administration he emphasized the Book of Mormon and the theme "Come Unto Christ" in strengthening missionary work and families.

Church and all the children of Zion out from under condemnation—the scourge and judgment" (Ensign 16 [May 1986]:78; see D&C 84:54–58). To that end, his address "The Book of Mormon Is the Word of God" was repeated in regional conferences throughout the Church. This emphasis greatly accelerated the distribution and reading of the Book of Mormon and "brought more souls to Christ, both within and without the Church, than ever before" (Ensign 18 [Nov. 1988]:4).

Continuing to help set the Church in order and perfect the Saints, he delivered another landmark address entitled "Beware of Pride" and gave separate messages to the children, young men, young women, single adult brethren, single adult sisters, fathers, mothers, and the elderly.

Throughout the years, the home and family were the center of many of President Benson's conference messages, such as his widely broadcast address "Our Homes—Divinely Ordained" (IE 52 [May 1949]:278–79, 332–33) and his frequent reference to his goal that there be "no empty chairs" in the family circle in the next life (Dew, p. 363). He has manifested a great love for the children and youth of the Church.

He was President during the Bicentennial of the U.S. Constitution and, as one of its greatest defenders, he delivered messages honoring this divine document and its inspired framers (The Constitution: A Heavenly Banner, Salt Lake City, 1986).

During his presidency, new temples were announced and several were dedicated, and missionary work expanded around the world with special opportunities being afforded, particularly in Eastern Europe, in countries previously closed.

For nearly fifty years his thousands of speeches stressed mankind's three great loyalties—loyalty to God, loyalty to family, and loyalty to country. His life has been exemplary in striving to live those loyalties as a prophet, a patriarch, and a patriot.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Benson, Ezra Taft. A Witness and a Warning. Salt Lake City, 1988.
- . Come, Listen to a Prophet's Voice. Salt Lake City, 1990.
- . Crossfire: The Eight Years With Eisenhower. New York, 1962.
- . God, Family, Country. Salt Lake City, 1974.
- . The Teachings of Ezra Taft Benson. Salt Lake City, 1988.
- Dew, Sheri L. Ezra Taft Benson: A Biography. Salt Lake City, 1987.
- Petersen, Mark E. "President Ezra Taft Benson." Ensign 16 [Jan. 1986]:2–4.

REED A. BENSON
SHERI L. DEW

---

BIBLE

[The entry on the Bible is designed as an overview of the positive LDS appraisal and extensive use of this scriptural collection. Articles under this entry are:

- Bible
- LDS Belief in the Bible
- King James Version
- LDS Publication of the Bible

The first article explains the importance of the Bible among the standard works of the Church. The second article explores the depth of belief in the Bible. The third article examines the use by the Church of the King James Version of the Bible. The concluding article gives information contained in the Bible published by the Church in 1979 and details of the publication. Articles that address related issues include Old Testament and New Testament. For discussions of the range of matters associated with the LDS view of scripture in general, see Standard Works and particularly the set of articles under the general heading Scripture.]

BIBLE

The Bible stands at the foundation of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, constitutes one of its standard works, and is accepted as the word of God. In 1820 a New Testament passage in the epistle of James prompted the young Joseph Smith to ask God about the religions of his time, and thereupon he received his FIRST VISION, in which he saw God the Father and Jesus Christ (James 1:5; JS—H 1:11–12, 17–18). Three years later, Old Testament and New Testament passages provided the principal scriptural foundation of Joseph's second major spiritual experience when the angel MORONI appeared to him and taught him from Malachi, Isaiah, Joel, Daniel, and other scriptures (JS—H 1:36–41; JD 24:241; Messenger and Advocate 1 [Apr. 1835]:109). After completing the Book of Mormon translation and organizing the restored Church of Jesus Christ in 1830, the Prophet Joseph Smith thoroughly studied the Bible as instructed by the Lord and prepared the JOSEPH SMITH TRANSLATION OF THE BIBLE (JST).

From childhood, Latter-day Saints are introduced to the teachings of the Bible. Certain passages are emphasized in teaching children. Most children in PRIMARY—and particularly those in families who hold FAMILY HOME EVENING and follow scripture reading programs—become familiar with the events recorded in Genesis, including stories of Adam and Eve, Noah, Abraham, Jacob, and Joseph. Later episodes of the prophets, judges, and kings (such as Moses, Samson, Samuel, David, Solomon, Jonah, and Daniel), as well as those of New Testament personalities (e.g., Peter, Paul, and Stephen), are also favorites. The stories of Deborah, Ruth, Esther, and Mary are especially loved by girls. However, the life and teachings of Jesus Christ are the most studied and appreciated (see JESUS CHRIST: MINISTRY OF JESUS CHRIST).

Richer gospel teachings come into focus in repeated study of the Bible by Latter-day Saints.

In addition to Sunday School instruction, teenagers attending SEMINARY classes spend two years of their four-year curriculum on the Bible. A similar emphasis is found in college-level religion classes in the universities and colleges of the Church educational system and in INSTITUTE OF RELIGION classes at other universities and colleges. LDS missionaries often refer to Bible passages as they teach investigators of the Church. One of the strongest demonstrations of the importance of Bible study to the Latter-day Saints is found in the adult Sunday School program. In the Gospel Doctrine classes, two of every four years are devoted to reading, studying, and discussing the Bible. Another strong evidence of LDS commitment to the Bible is the effort and expense incurred to produce the LDS PUBLICATION OF THE BIBLE in 1979. The General Authorities of the Church frequently quote from the Bible in their writings and general and stake conference addresses. Thus, the Bible forms an important gospel foundation for all Church members, from the newly baptized to the presiding leaders.

PREVALENT BIBLICAL TEACHINGS AND PRACTICES. Among the teachings found in the Bible, some concepts receive special emphasis. For example, Latter-day Saints readily identify with the Old Testament pattern of God speaking through living prophets (Amos 3:7), a pattern visible in the Church today. They also relate to the house of Israel through their individual PATRIARCHAL BLESSINGS, which usually identify a genealogical line back to one of the tribes of Israel. The concept of a covenant people, as taught in Genesis, Exodus, and Deuteronomy, conforms to LDS beliefs about being a covenant people today. Many laws and commandments, in particular a health code, distinguish both ancient Israel and its modern spiritual counterpart in the Church (Lev. 11; D&C 89; see WORD OF WISDOM). The wanderings of ancient Israel and the challenges in settling the PROMISED LAND also parallel early LDS history, so much so that Brigham YOUNG has been called a modern Moses (e.g., Arrington, 1985; see also PERSECUTION; PIONEERS).

New Testament teachings that are emphasized among Latter-day Saints include the teachings of the Savior and the apostles on basic gospel principles, especially faith and repentance, and covenant ordinances, particularly baptism and the GIFT OF THE HOLY GHOST (see FIRST PRINCIPLES OF THE GOSPEL). Latter-day parallels to the New Testament Church organization, PRIESTHOOD offices, and missionary work have their counterparts in contemporary LDS beliefs, practices, and Church organization (see ORGANIZATION OF THE CHURCH IN NEW TESTAMENT TIMES).

BIBLICAL EMPHASIS WITHIN THE BOOK OF MORMON. Among Old Testament writings, those of Moses, Isaiah, and Malachi receive special attention from Latter-day Saints because of their prominence within the Book of Mormon. The teachings of Moses as found in the Pentateuch (an expanded portion of Genesis 1–6 being available also in the PEARL OF GREAT PRICE) provide the foundation for understanding the Mosaic DISPENSATION of the house of Israel. The Book of Mormon record, which originated with LEHI and with the people of Zarahemla (see MULEK), came mostly out of this Israelite setting. The record includes Adam and Eve and events in the Garden of Eden (e.g., 2 Ne. 2:15–25), and references to the flood at the time of Noah (e.g., Alma 10:22), to people divinely led to the Americas at the time of the Tower of Babel (Ether 1:3–5, 33), to events in the lives of the patriarchs (e.g., 2 Ne. 3:4–16), and to the calling, works, and words of Moses (e.g., 1 Ne. 17:23–31; 2 Ne. 3:16–17; see also LAW OF MOSES). The fifth chapter of 1 Nephi reviews the biblical records that Lehi's family brought out of Jerusalem (see BOOK OF MORMON PLATES AND RECORDS) and, along with 1 Nephi 17, highlights key biblical events, particularly the Israelite exodus from Egypt, although without the details found in the Pentateuch. The examples and teachings of Old Testament prophets, judges, and kings were also part of the biblical records of the community of Lehi. Because this group lived under the law of Moses (2 Ne. 25:24), Old Testament religious practices are continued in the Book of Mormon.

Fully one-third of the writings of Isaiah are found in the Book of Mormon, making Isaiah the most frequently quoted biblical book there. Twenty-two of the sixty-six chapters of Isaiah are quoted in whole or in part in the Book of Mormon (a total of 433 of Isaiah's 1,292 verses). Book of Mormon prophets and writers typically selected those chapters highlighting God's covenant relationships and his promises to Israel, the role and calling of the MESSIAH, and prophecies concerning the LAST DAYS. These themes are prevalent in contemporary LDS theology as well (A of F 3, 4, 9, 10).

Malachi's teachings in the Book of Mormon are important because the resurrected Jesus quoted them and thus emphasized them (cf. 3 Ne. 24–25; Mal. 3–4; D&C 2:1–3). Malachi's words concerning a messenger sent to prepare the way for Christ's second coming, the payment of tithes and offerings, and the latter-day mission of ELIJAH thus form another important nucleus of Old Testament teachings within LDS society.

Because the main Book of Mormon colony left Jerusalem approximately six hundred years before the beginning of the New Testament period, Book of Mormon writers did not have access to New Testament records. However, they had access to two important sources of doctrines paralleling some of the New Testament: the resurrected Christ and divine revelation. The resurrected Christ delivered to his hearers in the Americas a sermon essentially the same as the one he had delivered near the Sea of Galilee. He also gave important additions and clarifications that focus on him as the Redeemer and Lord, on the fulfillment of the law of Moses, and on the latter days (3 Ne. 11–18; see also BEATTITUDES; SERMON ON THE MOUNT). In addition, he amplified teachings recorded in John 10, especially verse 16, about his role as the Good Shepherd of the scattered sheep of Israel (3 Ne. 15:12–24). MORMON'S important teachings about baptism and about faith, hope, and charity parallel New Testament teachings, especially those of Paul in 1 Corinthians 13.

IS THE BIBLE COMPLETE? Latter-day Saints revere the Bible as the word of God revealed to humankind. However, Joseph Smith recognized that translations do not reflect totally and exactly the original words and intentions of the ancient prophets and other biblical writers. Thus, in the WENTWORTH LETTER he wrote, "We believe the Bible to be the word of God as far as it is translated correctly" (A of F 8). Joseph Smith observed that "our latitude and longitude can be determined in the original Hebrew with far greater accuracy than in the English version. There is a grand distinction between the actual meaning of the prophets and the present translation" (TPJS, pp. 290–91). While Latter-day Saints accept rather explicitly what the Bible now says, they realize that more is to be accounted for than is available in the extant biblical record.

In addition to difficulties associated with translating from ancient to modern languages, other scriptures also declare that some parts of the original biblical text have been lost or corrupted (e.g., 1 Ne. 13:28–29; D&C 6:26–27; 93:6–18). Joseph Smith commented on the Bible’s incompleteness: “It was apparent that many important points touching the salvation of men, had been taken from the Bible, or lost before it was compiled” (TPJS, pp. 10–11). He later said, “Much instruction has been given to man since the beginning which we do not possess now. . . . We have what we have, and the Bible contains what it does contain” (TPJS, p. 61). The Prophet Joseph further stated, “I believe the Bible as it read when it came from the pen of the original writers. Ignorant translators, careless transcribers, or designing and corrupt priests have committed many errors” (TPJS, p. 327). Thus, the elements of mistranslation, incompleteness, and other errors weaken the Bible; but the spirit of its messages still reveals enough of God’s word to fulfill his appointed purposes. Joseph Smith summarized thus: “Through the kind providence of our Father a portion of His word which He delivered to His ancient saints, has fallen into our hands [and] is presented to us with a promise of a reward if obeyed, and with a penalty if disobeyed” (TPJS, p. 61). Latter-day Saints have continued to trust in the general accuracy of the biblical texts even though they know that that text may not always be correct. Thus, they study and revere the Bible, especially in the context of other scriptures and modern revelation, which have much to say about the Bible and how it is to be interpreted, and as they study they ponder and pray that they may receive inspiration from God and come to understand the Bible’s messages as they need to be applied in their lives (cf. Moro. 10:3–5).

FIRST PRESIDENCY’S ENDORSEMENT OF BIBLE READING. Each of the Presidents of the Church has encouraged Latter-day Saints to read the scriptures and to apply scriptural teachings in their lives, as the scriptures also admonish (cf. 2 Tim. 3:16; 1 Ne. 19:23). As a demonstration of this emphasis, in 1983, a year proclaimed as the “Year of the Bible” in the United States, the members of the FIRST PRESIDENCY of the Church issued a strong statement in support of Bible reading and application: “We commend to all people everywhere the daily reading, pondering and heeding of the divine truths of the Holy Bible.” They also declared the Church’s attitude toward the Bible by saying that “the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints accepts the Holy Bible as essential to faith and doctrine” and that the Church is committed to Bible reading and scholarship as demonstrated by the publishing of an enhanced edition of the King James Version. “Moreover,” they continued, “the Holy Bible is the textbook for adult, youth and children’s classes throughout the Church each year.”

In the same statement, the First Presidency highlighted the role and value of the Bible in the lives of individuals. They observed that when “read reverently and prayerfully, the Holy Bible becomes a priceless volume, converting the soul to righteousness. Principal among its virtues is the declaration that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God, through whom eternal salvation may come to all.” They continued with the promise that “as we read the scripture, we avail ourselves of the better part of this world’s literature” and they encouraged all to “go to the fountain of truth, searching the scriptures, reading them in our homes, and teaching our families what the Lord has said through the inspired and inspiring passages of the Holy Bible” (“Statement of the First Presidency,” p. 3).

The Latter-day Saint use of the Bible differs from the Judeo-Christian norm because it is not the sole LDS source of authority (see SCRIPTURE: AUTHORITY OF SCRIPTURE). The Bible is interpreted and understood by Latter-day Saints through four important means: (1) other LDS scriptures, which enrich and give perspective to an understanding of biblical teachings; (2) statements of modern prophets and apostles on the meaning of some biblical passages; (3) the Joseph Smith Translation of the Bible; and (4) personal revelation through the gift of the Holy Ghost enhancing the comprehension of the scriptures. Consequently, Latter-day Saints are not left without information about the meaning of many difficult passages that have divided the entire Christian world for two millennia.

The LDS perspective on the Bible is summarized well in the statement of the seventh Church president, Heber J. GRANT, who said, “All my life I have been finding additional evidences that the Bible is the Book of books, and that the Book of Mormon is the greatest witness for the truth of the Bible that has ever been published” (IE 39 [Nov. 1936]:660).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Anderson, Richard L. Understanding Paul. Salt Lake City, 1983.
- Arrington, Leonard. Brigham Young: American Moses. New York, 1985.
- Barlow, Philip L. Mormons and the Bible. New York, 1990.
- Harrison, Roland Kenneth. Introduction to the Old Testament. Grand Rapids, Mich., 1969.
- Ludlow, Daniel H. A Companion to Your Study of the Old Testament. Salt Lake City, 1981.
- Ludlow, Victor L. Unlocking the Old Testament. Salt Lake City, 1981.
- . Isaiah: Prophet, Seer, and Poet. Salt Lake City, 1982.
- Matthews, Robert J. A Bible! A Bible!. Salt Lake City, Utah, 1990.
- McConkie, Bruce R. The Mortal Messiah. Salt Lake City, 1979.
- Nyman, Monte S., ed. Isaiah and the Prophets. Provo, Utah, 1984.
- Reynolds, Noel B. "The Brass Plates Version of Genesis." In By Study and Also by Faith, ed. J. Lundquist and S. Ricks, Vol. 2, pp. 136–73. Salt Lake City, 1990.
- Sperry, Sidney B. Paul's Life and Letters. Salt Lake City, 1955.
- . The Voice of Israel's Prophets. Salt Lake City, 1965.
- . The Spirit of the Old Testament. Salt Lake City, 1970.
- "Statement of the First Presidency." Church News, Mar. 20, 1983, p. 3.
- Talmage, James E. Jesus the Christ. Salt Lake City, 1915.
- Welch, John W. The Sermon at the Temple and the Sermon on the Mount. Salt Lake City, 1990.

VICTOR L. LUDLOW

LDS BELIEF IN THE BIBLE

The Church believes the word of God contained in the Bible. It accepts the Bible "as the foremost of [the Church's] standard works, first among the books which have been proclaimed as . . . written guides in faith and doctrine. In the respect and sanctity with which the Latter-day Saints regard the Bible they are of like profession with Christian denominations in general" (AF, 1966 ed., p. 236).

Latter-day Saints value the Bible for many reasons. The Bible presents the revelations of God in several DISPENSATIONS or eras, each headed by prophets. They also read and follow the Bible for the instructional and spiritual value of the events it describes. While some of the Old Testament describes the law of Moses that Latter-day Saints believe was fulfilled with the atonement of Christ (3 Ne. 9:17), nevertheless the Old Testament stories, commandments, ordinances, proverbs, and prophetic writings still express the basic patterns of God's will toward his children and how they should act toward him.

Latter-day Saints revere the New Testament for its account of the birth, ministry, atonement, and resurrection of the Savior, Jesus Christ. The teachings of Jesus in the New Testament comprise the core of LDS doctrine, and their preeminence is evidenced by their frequent appearance in other LDS STANDARD WORKS accepted as scripture and in LDS speaking and writing.

The writings of the New Testament apostles are accepted and appreciated for their doctrine and wise and inspired counsel and for documenting the apostolic challenge of proclaiming the gospel, adhering to the original teachings of Christ, establishing the unity of the faith, and promoting the righteousness of believers in a rapidly growing Church. Latter-day Saints also find references in several letters of the early apostles of the falling away (see APOSTASY) that necessitated the RESTORATION, alerting the faithful to remain fervent and active in the faith and to stay true to the love of Jesus Christ.

While Latter-day Saints devoutly regard the Bible, they do not consider it the sole authoritative source of religious instruction and personal guidance. They also study accounts of God's dealings with other ancient peoples such as those found in the Book of Mormon along with the teachings of the Prophet Joseph SMITH and the latter-day prophets and apostles (see DOCTRINE AND COVENANTS; GENERAL AUTHORITIES; JOSEPH SMITH TRANSLATION OF THE BIBLE [JST]; PEARL OF GREAT PRICE). Latter-day Saints consider personal revelation the individual's ultimate source for understanding scripture and knowing God's will.

Viewed as being harmonious with each other, all these sources enhance and clarify one another, and aid modern readers in correctly comprehending and translating these texts.

Latter-day Saints believe all that God has revealed. They seek to know and do the word of God wherever it has been made known in truth and authority. They believe that salvation is in Jesus Christ and not in any combination of words or books. They believe in God and in his son Jesus Christ, whose words and ways can be known through a lifetime of SCRIPTURE STUDY, service, and prayer, and by personal revelation through the power of the Holy Ghost.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Matthews, Robert J. A Bible! A Bible! Salt Lake City, 1990.

PAUL HEDENGREN

KING JAMES VERSION

In various lands where The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints has been established, it uses a translation of the Bible in the local language. In English-speaking areas, the Church uses the King James (or Authorized) Version (KJV), mainly because it was the basic English text used by the Prophet Joseph Smith and because subsequent Church leaders have approved its use. The Church does not claim that the KJV is perfect, but it is currently the preferred English version and was used in the Church's 1979 edition and later printings of the Bible.

The books of the Bible were originally written in Hebrew, Aramaic, or Greek. No original biblical manuscripts exist today, but they were copied and translated into many languages in antiquity. Many early papyri and parchments have survived. From those records, numerous modern translations have been made.

From 1604 to 1611, some fifty-four scholars worked to produce the KJV of the Bible. This was not the first English translation. In 1382, John Wycliffe translated the Bible from the Latin Vulgate; a revised edition was published in 1388. From 1523 to 1530, William Tyndale translated the Pentateuch from Hebrew and the New Testament from Greek. Still later in the 1500s, other translations appeared, including the Protestant Geneva Bible in 1560 and the Bishops' Bible in 1568. The former became popular with the laity and the latter with Protestant bishops. The Catholic Rheims-Douai Bible was finished in 1609 (1582 New Testament, 1609 Old Testament), based on the Latin Vulgate.

In an attempt to heal differences between Anglicans and Puritans, King James I appointed a body of scholars to produce a version of the Bible to be authorized for use in the English churches. They used the best texts available to them, mainly the "Received Text of the New Testament in the multilanguage ("polyglot") editions, presenting the Old and New Testaments in Hebrew and Greek respectively, and other languages. The long and respected line of English Bibles was also diligently compared and used.

The resulting King James Version was published in 1611. Various editions of the KJV appeared throughout the 1600s, which resulted in many printing inaccuracies. The Cambridge (1762) and Oxford (1769) editions featured a revised text, updated spelling, corrected punctuation, increased italics, and changed marginal notes.

Many other English versions have appeared, especially in light of the discovery of additional early manuscripts, beginning with Constantin von Tischendorf's first find at St. Catherine's Monastery in the Sinai peninsula in 1844. These translations have generally endeavored to render the ancient texts into contemporary usage while reflecting the form of the oldest available manuscripts as much as possible.

Latter-day Saints have not made extensive use of these other translations. Many feel that popularization tends to dilute the sacred nature of the Bible. They also find the ancient textual variants to be relatively insignificant, usually not changing the important messages of the Bible, most of which, in any event, are corroborated elsewhere in LDS scripture.

Although the KJV was Joseph Smith's English Bible, he did not regard it as a perfect or official translation; this is why he studied Hebrew and undertook the task of producing an inspired revision of the scriptures. He commented that he preferred some aspects of the Martin Luther translation (HC 6:307, 364), and several other nineteenth-century Church leaders stressed the need for greater accuracy and truth in Bible translations.

Twentieth-century Church leaders have given a variety of reasons for the continued use of the KJV: it was the common translation in use in the English-speaking world at the time of the Restoration; its language prevails in all the STANDARD WORKS; a large number of passages in the Book of Mormon, which parallel the Bible, were translated into the English style of the KJV; the JOSEPH SMITH TRANSLATION OF THE BIBLE (JST) was based on the KJV, with 90 percent of the verses unchanged. All latter-day prophets have used the KJV, and using the KJV in all Church publications has made it possible to standardize annotations and indices.

The KJV is viewed by many as a masterpiece of English literature. It has been called "the noblest monument of English prose," and it is certainly the most influential; its translators "showed great sensitivity," and the result was "destined for extraordinary influence and acclaim" (Speiser, pp. lxxiii–iv). H. L. Mencken praised it as "probably the most beautiful piece of writing in all the literature of the world" (Paine, p. viii).

The KJV is a relatively conservative translation. This is generally a strength, although at times it produces obscure renderings. Moreover, some of its diction is now archaic and ungrammatical in current usage, and it is not consistent in the spelling of names in the Old and New Testaments (for example, Isaiah/Esaías and Elijah/Elias). Identical words in the synoptic Gospels are sometimes translated differently, and some misprints were never corrected (for instance, in Matt. 23:24, “strain at a gnat” should have been rendered “strain out a gnat”).

After studying many modern English translations, however, President J. Reuben Clark, Jr., a counselor in the First Presidency, said in 1956 that the KJV was “the best version of any yet produced” (Clark, p. 33). For example, he felt that the KJV translators clearly portrayed Jesus as the promised Messiah and as the Son of God, and accepted the gift of prophecy, the reality of miracles, and the uniqueness of the love of Christ; whereas modern translations have tended to promote naturalistic explanations for divine action, preferred the word “sign” instead of “miracle,” and used “love” in place of “charity,” and “appoint” instead of “ordain.” His views have been influential among most Latter-day Saints. Not all alternative translations, of course, suffer from the problems identified by President Clark.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Barlow, Philip L. Mormons and the Bible, pp. 132–62. New York, 1990.
- Bruce, F. F. History of the Bible in English, 3rd ed. New York, 1978.
- Clark, J. Reuben, Jr. Why the King James Version. Salt Lake City, 1956.
- Daiches, David. The King James Version of the English Bible. Chicago, 1941.
- Metzger, Bruce M. The Text of the New Testament. New York, 1968.
- Paine, G. The Learned Men, p. viii. New York, 1959.
- Speiser, E. Genesis, pp. lxiii–iv. Garden City, N.Y., 1964.

D. KELLY OGDEN

LDS PUBLICATION OF THE BIBLE

An edition of the King James Version of the Bible with new Bible study aids was published by The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in 1979, culminating seven years' work by Church leaders and scholars. The goals were to make Bible study more meaningful for Church members by supplying maps, charts, definitions, headnotes, footnotes, and cross-references to all of the four STANDARD WORKS, and also to provide a single Bible edition for use in the Church curriculum.

This project began in 1972, about the time the study of the scriptures became the primary goal for the adult curriculum of the Church. Previously Church teachers had relied mainly on lesson manuals prepared by individuals or committees. The work was commissioned by the FIRST PRESIDENCY, who appointed a Bible Aids committee to oversee the project. This committee (later called the Scriptures Publications Committee) consisted initially of Thomas S. Monson, Boyd K. Packer, and Marvin J. Ashton of the QUORUM OF THE TWELVE APOSTLES. Ashton was later given another assignment and Bruce R. McConkie was appointed.

The committee called scholars, editors, and publication specialists from BRIGHAM YOUNG UNIVERSITY, the CHURCH EDUCATIONAL SYSTEM, and DESERET BOOK COMPANY to prepare Latter-day Saint-oriented aids to help readers better understand the King James text. Early in the project the First Presidency determined that the King James text would be used without change. This text of the Bible, along with the Book of Mormon, the Doctrine and Covenants and the Pearl of Great Price, was entered into a computer data base. Each verse was reviewed, and key topics and terms identified. Computer printouts were generated comprising long lists of possible cross-references from which useful citations were then selected. Emphasis was given to references from the Book of Mormon, Doctrine and Covenants, and Pearl of Great Price that helped clarify Bible passages along with abundant interbiblical cross-references. These now appear in the footnotes and in the TOPICAL GUIDE (an extensive subject index and modified concordance). A BIBLE DICTIONARY, 24 pages of full-color maps, and a complete gazetteer were included. The Bible Dictionary provides concise explanations of biblical items and often adds points of interest to Latter-day Saints. Brief explanations of some words or phrases from Hebrew and Greek were also included as footnotes, along with about 600 passages from the JOSEPH SMITH TRANSLATION OF THE BIBLE (JST). Unique summaries at the beginning of each chapter in this edition of the King James Bible suggest the doctrinal and historical content of each chapter from an LDS point of view.

The footnote system organizes all the aids available in this publication of the Bible. Some earlier Bible editions place cross-references in a center column on the page, but this format limits the amount of material that can be included. A flexible system of three footnote columns at the bottom of each page was designed, with "callout" letters (a, b, c, etc.) allocated separately for each verse placed in the text as needed. Included in the footnotes are cross-references to other scriptures, the Topical Guide, and the Bible Dictionary; also explanatory Greek and Hebrew idioms and other clarifying information.

Once the scholarly and editorial work was completed in early 1978, typesetting began. Cambridge University Press in Cambridge, England, was selected as typesetter, because that press, one of the early printers of the King James Version after it was first issued in 1611, has been continuously involved in Bible publications since the late 1500s. Its expert staff proved invaluable to Church members who worked with them in editing the copy for typesetting and preparing the final pages. All the type was set in Monotype hot metal. Each page was prepared so that every footnote was contained on the same page as the verse to which it pertained. To serve the needs of programs in the Church Educational System, a self-imposed delivery deadline of September 1979 for the first copies of the Bible loomed over those involved in this production. The formidable task of typesetting and paginating 2,423 pages of complex text was completed in May 1979 after fifteen months of intense effort.

Printing and binding were first contracted with University Press and Publishers Book Bindery of Winchester, Massachusetts, who subcontracted some of the work to National Bible Press in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. What at first seemed impossible production deadlines all came together and the first copies were delivered August 8, 1979. Many Latter-day Saints acknowledged the hand of God at work in this monumental publication.

This edition of the King James Version of the Bible has stimulated further interest in Bible study throughout the Church. It has extended and deepened members' understanding of and appreciation for the Bible as the word of God. It has also demonstrated that all the Latter-day Saint books of sacred scripture are correlated in many mutually supportive and enriching ways.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Anderson, Lavina Fielding. "Church Publishes First LDS Edition of the Bible." Ensign 9 (Oct. 1979):8-18.

Matthews, Robert J. "The New Publications of the Standard Works—1979, 1981." BYU Studies 22 (Fall 1982):387-424.

Mortimer, William James. "The Coming Forth of the LDS Editions of Scripture." Ensign 13 (Aug. 1983):35-41.

Packer, Boyd K. "Scriptures." Ensign 12 (Nov. 1982):51-53.

WILLIAM JAMES MORTIMER

---

BIBLE, LDS

[The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints reveres the Bible as the word of God given through ancient prophets and apostles, though it recognizes that the current text is not identical with the original. The Church has consistently used the King James Version (KJV) for formal classes, missionary work, and personal study among English-speaking peoples, utilizing KJV editions issued by the major Bible publishing houses. However, because latter-day revelation offers insight, interpretation, and supplemental material to thousands of biblical passages and in order to make the message of the Bible more readily accessible to LDS readers, the Church published in 1979 an edition of the KJV with multiple study helps. These include chapter headings, cross-references to other LDS scriptural works, explanatory footnotes, clarification of Greek and Hebrew terms and idioms, a subject-matter guide, a dictionary, maps, and excerpts from an inspired translation of the Bible by the Prophet Joseph Smith.]

Articles directly related to this subject are Bible: LDS Publication of the Bible; Bible Dictionary; Joseph Smith Translation of the Bible (JST); and Topical Guide. Other relevant articles are Bible: LDS Belief in the Bible; Bible: King James Version; Scripture; Scripture Study; Standard Works.]

---

BIBLE DICTIONARY

In 1979 The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints published its own edition of the King James Version of the Bible with many reader's aids, including a new Bible dictionary. This dictionary contains much information relevant to the Bible that is unique to Mormonism. Bible dictionaries have traditionally been geographic and cultural word books, dating back to works such as Langenstein's Vocabularius Biblicae (1476) and Heyden's Biblisches Namen Buch (1567), which surveyed biblical history and archaeology then known. The increase in biblical scholarship since World War II has seen both a proliferation of linguistic materials and changes in dictionaries to include doctrinal concepts as well as people and ter column on the page, but this format limits the amount of material that can be included. A flexible system of three footnote columns at the bottom of each page was designed, with "callout" letters (a, b, c, etc.) allocated separately for each verse placed in the text as needed. Included in the footnotes are cross-references to other scriptures, the Topical Guide, and the Bible Dictionary; also explanatory Greek and Hebrew idioms and other clarifying information.

Once the scholarly and editorial work was completed in early 1978, typesetting began. Cambridge University Press in Cambridge, England, was selected as typesetter, because that press, one of the early printers of the King James Version after it was first issued in 1611, has been continuously involved in Bible publications since the late 1500s. Its expert staff proved invaluable to Church members who worked with them in editing the copy for typesetting and preparing the final pages. All the type was set in Monotype hot metal. Each page was prepared so that every footnote was contained on the same page as the verse to which it pertained. To serve the needs of programs in the Church Educational System, a self-imposed delivery deadline of September 1979 for the first copies of the Bible loomed over those involved in this production. The formidable task of typesetting and paginating 2,423 pages of complex text was completed in May 1979 after fifteen months of intense effort.

Printing and binding were first contracted with University Press and Publishers Book Bindery of Winchester, Massachusetts, who subcontracted some of the work to National Bible Press in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. What at first seemed impossible production deadlines all came together and the first copies were delivered August 8, 1979. Many Latter-day Saints acknowledged the hand of God at work in this monumental publication.

This edition of the King James Version of the Bible has stimulated further interest in Bible study throughout the Church. It has extended and deepened members' understanding of and appreciation for the Bible as the word of God. It has also demonstrated that all the Latter-day Saint books of sacred scripture are correlated in many mutually supportive and enriching ways.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Anderson, Lavina Fielding. "Church Publishes First LDS Edition of the Bible." Ensign 9 (Oct. 1979):8–18.

Matthews, Robert J. "The New Publications of the Standard Works—1979, 1981." BYU Studies 22 (Fall 1982):387–424.

Mortimer, William James. "The Coming Forth of the LDS Editions of Scripture." Ensign 13 (Aug. 1983):35–41.

Packer, Boyd K. "Scriptures." Ensign 12 (Nov. 1982):51–53.

WILLIAM JAMES MORTIMER

---

BIBLE, LDS

[The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints reveres the Bible as the word of God given through ancient prophets and apostles, though it recognizes that the current text is not identical with the original. The Church has consistently used the King James Version (KJV) for formal classes, missionary work, and personal study among English-speaking peoples, utilizing KJV editions issued by the major Bible publishing houses. However, because latter-day revelation offers insight, interpretation, and supplemental material to thousands of biblical passages and in order to make the message of the Bible more readily accessible to LDS readers, the Church published in 1979 an edition of the KJV with multiple study helps. These include chapter headings, cross-references to other LDS scriptural works, explanatory footnotes, clarification of Greek and Hebrew terms and idioms, a subject-matter guide, a dictionary, maps, and excerpts from an inspired translation of the Bible by the Prophet Joseph Smith.]

Articles directly related to this subject are Bible: LDS Publication of the Bible; Bible Dictionary; Joseph Smith Translation of the Bible (JST); and Topical Guide. Other relevant articles are Bible: LDS Belief in the Bible; Bible: King James Version; Scripture; Scripture Study; Standard Works.]

---

BIBLE DICTIONARY

In 1979 The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints published its own edition of the King James Version of the Bible with many reader's aids, including a new Bible dictionary. This dictionary contains much information relevant to the Bible that is unique to Mormonism. Bible dictionaries have traditionally been geographic and cultural word books, dating back to works such as Langenstein's Vocabularius Bibliæ (1476) and Heyden's Biblisches Namen Buch (1567), which surveyed biblical history and archaeology then known. The increase in biblical scholarship since World War II has seen both a proliferation of linguistic materials and changes in dictionaries to include doctrinal concepts as well as people and ter column on the page, but this format limits the amount of material that can be included. A flexible system of three footnote columns at the bottom of each page was designed, with "callout" letters (a, b, c, etc.) allocated separately for each verse placed in the text as needed. Included in the footnotes are cross-references to other scriptures, the Topical Guide, and the Bible Dictionary; also explanatory Greek and Hebrew idioms and other clarifying information.

Once the scholarly and editorial work was completed in early 1978, typesetting began. Cambridge University Press in Cambridge, England, was selected as typesetter, because that press, one of the early printers of the King James Version after it was first issued in 1611, has been continuously involved in Bible publications since the late 1500s. Its expert staff proved invaluable to Church members who worked with them in editing the copy for typesetting and preparing the final pages. All the type was set in Monotype hot metal. Each page was prepared so that every footnote was contained on the same page as the verse to which it pertained. To serve the needs of programs in the Church Educational System, a self-imposed delivery deadline of September 1979 for the first copies of the Bible loomed over those involved in this production. The formidable task of typesetting and paginating 2,423 pages of complex text was completed in May 1979 after fifteen months of intense effort.

Printing and binding were first contracted with University Press and Publishers Book Bindery of Winchester, Massachusetts, who subcontracted some of the work to National Bible Press in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. What at first seemed impossible production deadlines all came together and the first copies were delivered August 8, 1979. Many Latter-day Saints acknowledged the hand of God at work in this monumental publication.

This edition of the King James Version of the Bible has stimulated further interest in Bible study throughout the Church. It has extended and deepened members' understanding of and appreciation for the Bible as the word of God. It has also demonstrated that all the Latter-day Saint books of sacred scripture are correlated in many mutually supportive and enriching ways.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Anderson, Lavina Fielding. "Church Publishes First LDS Edition of the Bible." Ensign 9 (Oct. 1979):8–18.

Matthews, Robert J. "The New Publications of the Standard Works—1979, 1981." BYU Studies 22 (Fall 1982):387–424.

Mortimer, William James. "The Coming Forth of the LDS Editions of Scripture." Ensign 13 (Aug. 1983):35–41.

Packer, Boyd K. "Scriptures." Ensign 12 (Nov. 1982):51–53.

WILLIAM JAMES MORTIMER

---

BIBLE, LDS

[The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints reveres the Bible as the word of God given through ancient prophets and apostles, though it recognizes that the current text is not identical with the original. The Church has consistently used the King James Version (KJV) for formal classes, missionary work, and personal study among English-speaking peoples, utilizing KJV editions issued by the major Bible publishing houses. However, because latter-day revelation offers insight, interpretation, and supplemental material to thousands of biblical passages and in order to make the message of the Bible more readily accessible to LDS readers, the Church published in 1979 an edition of the KJV with multiple study helps. These include chapter headings, cross-references to other LDS scriptural works, explanatory footnotes, clarification of Greek and Hebrew terms and idioms, a subject-matter guide, a dictionary, maps, and excerpts from an inspired translation of the Bible by the Prophet Joseph Smith.]

Articles directly related to this subject are Bible: LDS Publication of the Bible; Bible Dictionary; Joseph Smith Translation of the Bible (JST); and Topical Guide. Other relevant articles are Bible: LDS Belief in the Bible; Bible: King James Version; Scripture; Scripture Study; Standard Works.]

---

BIBLE DICTIONARY

In 1979 The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints published its own edition of the King James Version of the Bible with many reader's aids, including a new Bible dictionary. This dictionary contains much information relevant to the Bible that is unique to Mormonism. Bible dictionaries have traditionally been geographic and cultural word books, dating back to works such as Langenstein's Vocabularius Bibliæ (1476) and Heyden's Biblisches Namen Buch (1567), which surveyed biblical history and archaeology then known. The increase in biblical scholarship since World War II has seen both a proliferation of linguistic materials and changes in dictionaries to include doctrinal concepts as well as people and places. Many denominations have published Bible dictionaries each reflecting a unique theological stance.

Cambridge University Press granted the Church permission to use its Bible dictionary as a base, to be amended as needed. It was changed in three major ways: 1. Entries considered to be in error or of insufficient value were omitted. 2. Entries that were incomplete, because they were based on the Bible alone, were complemented by information from the BOOK OF MORMON, the DOCTRINE AND COVENANTS, the PEARL OF GREAT PRICE, and the teachings of the Prophet Joseph SMITH. This affected such entries as the FALL, ZION, URIM AND THUMMIM, ADAM, SACRIFICE, CIRCUMCISION, and TEMPLE. 3. New entries were added, including discussions on such matters as DISPENSATION OF THE FULNESS OF TIMES, AARONIC PRIESTHOOD, MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOOD, writing, and the family.

The dictionary provides new information in the light of such discoveries as the Dead Sea Scrolls, and explains language and cultural items, including several English words used in the Bible whose meanings have changed. Another major help is a harmony of the events in the life of Christ that includes not only the four Gospels but also 3 Nephi in the Book of Mormon and other references to latter-day REVELATION. The dictionary also contains an eleven-page world history chart of the major events that pertain to the Old and New Testaments and a chart of the main New Testament quotations that have Old Testament origins. The work totals 196 pages with 1,285 entries. It is not a declaration of the official position of the Church, but represents LDS perspectives as related to the products of ongoing scholarship that may be modified by further discovery and by future revelation.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Brewster, Hoyt W., Jr. "Discovering the LDS Editions of Scripture." Ensign 13 (Oct. 1983):55-58.
- Matthews, Robert J. "The New Publications of the Standard Works—1979, 1981." BYU Studies 22 (Fall 1982):387-424.

GARY P. GILLUM

---

BIBLE SCHOLARSHIP

Latter-day Saints recognize Bible scholarship and intellectual study of the biblical text. Joseph Smith and his associates studied Greek and Hebrew and taught that religious knowledge is to be obtained by study as well as by faith (D&C 88:118). However, Latter-day Saints prefer to use Bible scholarship rather than be driven or controlled by it.

The Prophet Joseph Smith suggested certain broad parameters for any LDS critical study of the Bible: "We believe the Bible to be the word of God as far as it is translated correctly; we also believe the Book of Mormon to be the word of God" (A of F 8). Because Latter-day Saints prefer PROPHETS to scholars as spiritual guides, and the inspiration of SCRIPTURE and the Holy Ghost to the reasoning of secondary texts, Bible scholarship plays a smaller role in LDS spirituality than it does in some denominations.

A fundamental operating principle of "revealed" religions is that all truth cannot be completely discovered through human reason alone. Without God's aid, no one can obtain the vital data, proper perspectives, and interpretive keys for knowing him (see REASON AND REVELATION). Because Latter-day Saints believe that their religion is revealed through living prophets of God, they subordinate human reason to revealed truth.

In this latter connection, Latter-day Saints show some affinities with contemporary conservative Roman Catholic and evangelical Bible scholarship. They accept and use most objective results of Bible scholarship, such as linguistics, history, and archaeology, while rejecting many of the discipline's naturalistic assumptions and its more subjective methods and theories. In those instances where Bible scholarship and revealed religion conflict, Latter-day Saints hold to interpretations of the Bible that appear in the other LDS scriptures and in the teachings of latter-day prophets.

These observations suggest three basic operating principles for Bible scholarship among Latter-day Saints:

- I. Approaches to the Bible must accept divine inspiration and revelation in the original biblical text: it presents the word of God and is not a merely human production. Therefore, any critical methodology that implicitly or explicitly ignores or denies the significant involvement of God in the biblical text is rejected. With minor exceptions, such as the Song of Solomon, which Joseph Smith judged not to be inspired (cf. IE 18 [Mar. 1915]:389), the text is not to be treated in an ultimately naturalistic manner. God's participation is seen to be significant both in the events them-places. Many denominations have published Bible dictionaries each reflecting a unique theological stance.

Cambridge University Press granted the Church permission to use its Bible dictionary as a base, to be amended as needed. It was changed in three major ways: 1. Entries considered to be in error or of insufficient value were omitted. 2. Entries that were incomplete, because they were based on the Bible alone, were complemented by information from the BOOK OF MORMON, the DOCTRINE AND COVENANTS, the PEARL OF GREAT PRICE, and the teachings of the Prophet Joseph SMITH. This affected such entries as the FALL, ZION, URIM AND THUMMIM, ADAM, SACRIFICE, CIRCUMCISION, and TEMPLE. 3. New entries were added, including discussions on such matters as DISPENSATION OF THE FULNESS OF TIMES, AARONIC PRIESTHOOD, MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOOD, writing, and the family.

The dictionary provides new information in the light of such discoveries as the Dead Sea Scrolls, and explains language and cultural items, including several English words used in the Bible whose meanings have changed. Another major help is a harmony of the events in the life of Christ that includes not only the four Gospels but also 3 Nephi in the Book of Mormon and other references to latter-day REVELATION. The dictionary also contains an eleven-page world history chart of the major events that pertain to the Old and New Testaments and a chart of the main New Testament quotations that have Old Testament origins. The work totals 196 pages with 1,285 entries. It is not a declaration of the official position of the Church, but represents LDS perspectives as related to the products of ongoing scholarship that may be modified by further discovery and by future revelation.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Brewster, Hoyt W., Jr. "Discovering the LDS Editions of Scripture." Ensign 13 (Oct. 1983):55-58.
- Matthews, Robert J. "The New Publications of the Standard Works—1979, 1981." BYU Studies 22 (Fall 1982):387-424.

GARY P. GILLUM

---

BIBLE SCHOLARSHIP

Latter-day Saints recognize Bible scholarship and intellectual study of the biblical text. Joseph Smith and his associates studied Greek and Hebrew and taught that religious knowledge is to be obtained by study as well as by faith (D&C 88:118). However, Latter-day Saints prefer to use Bible scholarship rather than be driven or controlled by it.

The Prophet Joseph Smith suggested certain broad parameters for any LDS critical study of the Bible: "We believe the Bible to be the word of God as far as it is translated correctly; we also believe the Book of Mormon to be the word of God" (A of F 8). Because Latter-day Saints prefer PROPHETS to scholars as spiritual guides, and the inspiration of SCRIPTURE and the Holy Ghost to the reasoning of secondary texts, Bible scholarship plays a smaller role in LDS spirituality than it does in some denominations.

A fundamental operating principle of "revealed" religions is that all truth cannot be completely discovered through human reason alone. Without God's aid, no one can obtain the vital data, proper perspectives, and interpretive keys for knowing him (see REASON AND REVELATION). Because Latter-day Saints believe that their religion is revealed through living prophets of God, they subordinate human reason to revealed truth.

In this latter connection, Latter-day Saints show some affinities with contemporary conservative Roman Catholic and evangelical Bible scholarship. They accept and use most objective results of Bible scholarship, such as linguistics, history, and archaeology, while rejecting many of the discipline's naturalistic assumptions and its more subjective methods and theories. In those instances where Bible scholarship and revealed religion conflict, Latter-day Saints hold to interpretations of the Bible that appear in the other LDS scriptures and in the teachings of latter-day prophets.

These observations suggest three basic operating principles for Bible scholarship among Latter-day Saints:

- I. Approaches to the Bible must accept divine inspiration and revelation in the original biblical text: it presents the word of God and is not a merely human production. Therefore, any critical methodology that implicitly or explicitly ignores or denies the significant involvement of God in the biblical text is rejected. With minor exceptions, such as the Song of Solomon, which Joseph Smith judged not to be inspired (cf. IE 18 [Mar. 1915]:389), the text is not to be treated in an ultimately naturalistic manner. God's participation is seen to be significant both in the events themselves and in the process of their being recorded. His activity is thus one of the effects to be reckoned with in interpreting the events and in understanding the texts that record them.

2. Despite divine inspiration, the biblical text is not uninfluenced by human language and not immune to negative influences from its human environment, and there is no guarantee that the revelations given to ancient prophets have been perfectly preserved (cf. 1 Ne. 13:20–27). Thus, critical study of the Bible is warranted to help allow for, and suggest corrections of, human errors of formulation, transmission, translation, and interpretation of the ancient records.

3. Such critical scholarship, in addition to recognizing the divine origins of the Bible, must in its conclusions take account of the teachings of the BOOK OF MORMON and the other revelations to modern prophets included in the DOCTRINE AND COVENANTS and the PEARL OF GREAT PRICE, since for Latter-day Saints such sources not only have priority over revelations recorded in antiquity (cf. D&C 5:10) but also aid in interpreting the biblical text.

Latter-day Saints insist on objective hermeneutics, that is, they maintain that the biblical text has a specific, objective meaning and that the intent of the original author is both important and largely recoverable. For this reason, LDS scholars, like other conservatives, have tended toward the more objective tools of Bible scholarship, such as linguistics, history, and archaeology—recognizing that these tools themselves have to be evaluated critically—and have generally avoided the more subjective methods of literary criticism.

The most influential LDS Bible commentators include James E. Talmage, Bruce R. McConkie, Sidney B. Sperry, and Hugh W. Nibley, though Talmage's work was completed prior to many important discoveries, and McConkie's work is concerned less with critical exegesis than with understanding the New Testament within the overall body of LDS doctrine.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Anderson, Richard L. Understanding Paul. Salt Lake City, 1983.
- McConkie, Bruce R. Doctrinal New Testament Commentary, 3 vols. Salt Lake City, 1965–1973.
- Nibley, Hugh W. Collected Works of Hugh Nibley. Salt Lake City, 1986–.
- Sperry, Sidney B. Paul's Life and Letters. Salt Lake City, 1955.

———. The Voice of Israel's Prophets. Salt Lake City, 1961.

———. The Spirit of the Old Testament. Salt Lake City, 1970.

Talmage, James E. Jesus the Christ. Salt Lake City, 1915.

STEPHEN E. ROBINSON

BIOGRAPHY AND AUTOBIOGRAPHY

From the earliest decades members of the Church have adhered to the Puritan tradition of writing spiritual autobiographies, often for reasons similar to those of their forebears, namely, to express their faith and to justify their actions in the light of that faith. New models and counsel also influenced the Latter-day Saints in this regard: the Book of Mormon, one of the first documents of the Church, begins autobiographically—"I, Nephi, having been born of goodly parents . . ." (1 Ne. 1:1)—and it contains long sections of both biography and autobiography. A version of Joseph SMITH's autobiography is canonized in the PEARL OF GREAT PRICE (see JOSEPH SMITH—HISTORY), and the Doctrine and Covenants injunction that "a record [be] kept among you" (D&C 21:1) has been interpreted in practice to apply to Latter-day Saints individually as well as institutionally.

In 1977 the annotated Guide to Mormon Diaries and Autobiographies listed nearly 3,000 such documents published or available in various libraries and archives. About half are retrospective autobiographies, as distinguished from journals of daily entries. As a result of the general LDS interest in FAMILY HISTORY, encouraged especially by President Spencer W. KIMBALL, that number multiplied in the 1980s. In addition, countless personal accounts and family histories remain in family possession throughout the Church.

The variety of Mormon autobiographies is vast, ranging "from conscious virtuosity to self-conscious artifice, from unconscious brilliance to dull-minded monotony" (Lambert, p. 69). In the classic Autobiography of Parley Parker Pratt (1874), Pratt artistically portrays himself variously as mystic, recluse, proselyte, jokester, preacher, acolyte, and apostle, each presented in form and language suited to the posture. In contrast, the equally well-known A Mormon Mother: An Autobiography, by Annie Clark Tanner, is less artful but more introspective, revealing a complexity of unresolved questions in its author. Mary Goble Pay's short autobiography (in Cracroft and Lambert, pp. 145–53) well represents the life-writing selves and in the process of their being recorded. His activity is thus one of the effects to be reckoned with in interpreting the events and in understanding the texts that record them.

2. Despite divine inspiration, the biblical text is not uninfluenced by human language and not immune to negative influences from its human environment, and there is no guarantee that the revelations given to ancient prophets have been perfectly preserved (cf. 1 Ne. 13:20–27). Thus, critical study of the Bible is warranted to help allow for, and suggest corrections of, human errors of formulation, transmission, translation, and interpretation of the ancient records.

3. Such critical scholarship, in addition to recognizing the divine origins of the Bible, must in its conclusions take account of the teachings of the BOOK OF MORMON and the other revelations to modern prophets included in the DOCTRINE AND COVENANTS and the PEARL OF GREAT PRICE, since for Latter-day Saints such sources not only have priority over revelations recorded in antiquity (cf. D&C 5:10) but also aid in interpreting the biblical text.

Latter-day Saints insist on objective hermeneutics, that is, they maintain that the biblical text has a specific, objective meaning and that the intent of the original author is both important and largely recoverable. For this reason, LDS scholars, like other conservatives, have tended toward the more objective tools of Bible scholarship, such as linguistics, history, and archaeology—recognizing that these tools themselves have to be evaluated critically—and have generally avoided the more subjective methods of literary criticism.

The most influential LDS Bible commentators include James E. Talmage, Bruce R. McConkie, Sidney B. Sperry, and Hugh W. Nibley, though Talmage's work was completed prior to many important discoveries, and McConkie's work is concerned less with critical exegesis than with understanding the New Testament within the overall body of LDS doctrine.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Anderson, Richard L. Understanding Paul. Salt Lake City, 1983.
- McConkie, Bruce R. Doctrinal New Testament Commentary, 3 vols. Salt Lake City, 1965–1973.
- Nibley, Hugh W. Collected Works of Hugh Nibley. Salt Lake City, 1986–.
- Sperry, Sidney B. Paul's Life and Letters. Salt Lake City, 1955.

———. The Voice of Israel's Prophets. Salt Lake City, 1961.

———. The Spirit of the Old Testament. Salt Lake City, 1970.

Talmage, James E. Jesus the Christ. Salt Lake City, 1915.

STEPHEN E. ROBINSON

BIOGRAPHY AND AUTOBIOGRAPHY

From the earliest decades members of the Church have adhered to the Puritan tradition of writing spiritual autobiographies, often for reasons similar to those of their forebears, namely, to express their faith and to justify their actions in the light of that faith. New models and counsel also influenced the Latter-day Saints in this regard: the Book of Mormon, one of the first documents of the Church, begins autobiographically—"I, Nephi, having been born of goodly parents . . ." (1 Ne. 1:1)—and it contains long sections of both biography and autobiography. A version of Joseph SMITH's autobiography is canonized in the PEARL OF GREAT PRICE (see JOSEPH SMITH—HISTORY), and the Doctrine and Covenants injunction that "a record [be] kept among you" (D&C 21:1) has been interpreted in practice to apply to Latter-day Saints individually as well as institutionally.

In 1977 the annotated Guide to Mormon Diaries and Autobiographies listed nearly 3,000 such documents published or available in various libraries and archives. About half are retrospective autobiographies, as distinguished from journals of daily entries. As a result of the general LDS interest in FAMILY HISTORY, encouraged especially by President Spencer W. KIMBALL, that number multiplied in the 1980s. In addition, countless personal accounts and family histories remain in family possession throughout the Church.

The variety of Mormon autobiographies is vast, ranging "from conscious virtuosity to self-conscious artifice, from unconscious brilliance to dull-minded monotony" (Lambert, p. 69). In the classic Autobiography of Parley Parker Pratt (1874), Pratt artistically portrays himself variously as mystic, recluse, proselyte, jokester, preacher, acolyte, and apostle, each presented in form and language suited to the posture. In contrast, the equally well-known A Mormon Mother: An Autobiography, by Annie Clark Tanner, is less artful but more introspective, revealing a complexity of unresolved questions in its author. Mary Goble Pay's short autobiography (in Cracroft and Lambert, pp. 145–53) well represents the life-writing of a comparatively unlettered Latter-day Saint. In stark simplicity and with convincing sincerity, it tells her story as if to a child.

Biography is likewise a frequent LDS literary form (see LITERATURE, MORMON WRITERS OF: PERSONAL ESSAYS). Drawing on the literary tradition of the previous three centuries, early LDS biographers took as models the "life and times" forms, depicting the public achievements of Church leaders. Usually the works reflected the double value placed on Latter-day Saint individuality and community by merging the life of the individual with the history of the movement. Often didactic, these works were defensive in tone, tending to conceal as much as they revealed about the character and experience of the subject. Sensitive facts were either omitted or passed over lightly: a man's excommunication, his plural wives, an altercation with a fellow churchman, or an unsuccessful venture. Sometimes, of course, such facts were already known; in that case, the biographer's role often became one of explaining them away.

A half-century after Lytton Strachey, the eminent Victorian biography writer, altered the fashion of biography by insisting on telling the whole truth about his subjects, Latter-day Saint writers began to include more in their accounts about the private lives of Church leaders. Marion G. Romney's much-quoted directive, printed in the foreword of a jointly authored biography of J. Reuben Clark, Jr. (Fox, 1980; Quinn, 1983), states that "any biographer of President Clark must write the truth about him; to tell more than or less than the truth would violate a governing principle of his life." Romney, a counselor in the FIRST PRESIDENCY, advised the authors not to produce "a mere collection of uplifting experiences" or "a detailed defense of his beliefs." He required of them "a biography of the man himself, as he was, written with the same kind of courage, honesty, and frankness that J. Reuben Clark himself would have shown," including "his decisions and indecisions, sorrows and joys, regrets and aspirations, reverses and accomplishments" (Fox, p. xi). That statement, exemplified in the biography of Spencer W. KIMBALL (Kimball and Kimball, 1977), indicates a turn of tide in Mormon biography, wherein the bland, impeccably moral, and defensive biographies were replaced by studies reflecting flesh-and-blood reality.

Many have attempted to write the life of the Prophet Joseph Smith. His mother, Lucy Mack SMITH, dictated the first serious study, Biographi- cal Sketches of Joseph Smith the Prophet (1853), but it was as much her own autobiography as her son's biography. On both counts, the book has held up as accurate source material, though not as a finished prose study. Subsequent Joseph Smith biographies by George Q. Cannon (1888), John Henry Evans (1933), Preston Nibley (1944), Leon Hartshorn (1970), and Francis M. Gibbons (1977), while appropriate to LDS audiences of the time, do not satisfy the recent taste for a complete embodiment of the subject.

In a more scholarly mode, though less than thorough or accurate in its use of sources, was Fawn M. Brodie's No Man Knows My History (1945). Its appearance caused a furor among Latter-day Saints and issued a challenge to answering scholars, which contributed to historians paying increased attention to serious research in their writing of Church history. An alternative to Brodie is Donna Hill's Joseph Smith, the First Mormon (1977), and her brother Marvin's review "Secular or Sectarian History? A Critique of No Man Knows My History" (1974) in Church History.

None, however, has totally succeeded in vivifying Mormonism's founder. Richard L. Bushman's Joseph Smith and the Beginnings of Mormonism comes close, but it deals only with the first years of the Prophet's life. Nevertheless, it is a promising re-creation, striving to see people and events as the participants would have understood them. With the commencement of Dean Jessee's publication of the Papers of Joseph Smith in 1989, it became possible for biographers to be even more rigorous and complete in their presentation of the full man in all his complexity.

With the growing interest in social history has come an increase in biographies of members of the Church other than General Authorities. People such as those covered in Leonard Arrington and Davis Bitton's Saints Without Halos: The Human Side of Mormon History and Donald Q. Cannon and David J. Whittaker's Supporting Saints: Life Stories of Nineteenth-Century Mormons are being featured in separate biographical volumes. Juanita Brooks's John D. Lee (rev. ed., 1972), for many years the exemplar of Mormon biography, and Leonard Arrington's From Quaker to Latter-day Saint: Bishop Edwin D. Woolley (1976) demonstrate how universally interesting the drama of life can be when it is well written.

Latter-day Saint women have seldom been subjects of full-length biographies. The 1984 Newell-Avery study of Emma Hale SMITH stands alone as a full-length treatment of a woman leader, but biographies of Eliza R. SNOW and Emmeline B. WELLS are in progress. Of a lay Mormon woman, one biography of significance has been published, that of historian Juanita Brooks by Levi Peterson (1988).

A few autobiographical accounts of Latter-day Saint women are already available. Besides A Mormon Mother, there are the self-told lives of such people as Ellis R. Shipp, Mary Jane Mount Tanner, Sarah Studevant Leavitt, and Aurelia Spencer ROGERS, though it must be recognized that few of these accounts were written for distribution beyond the author's family. Another nineteenth-century woman, Fanny Stenhouse, used the autobiographical mode to produce her Exposé of Polygamy in Utah (1872), later revised and widely published as Tell It All (1874).

Modern female novelists such as Virginia Sorenson, author of Where Nothing Is Long Ago (1963), and Rodello Hunter, author of Daughter of Zion (1972), have published autobiographical material combined with some of the trappings of fiction. Several handwritten lives, such as that of Martha Cragun Cox, and others published to limited audiences, such as that of Louisa Barnes Pratt and Mary Ann Weston Maughan, remain largely untapped in obscure archives.

To encourage the writing of Latter-day Saint biographies, the David Woolley and Beatrice Cannon Evans family endowed a prize that has been awarded annually since 1983. It is now administered by the Mountain West Center for Regional Studies at Utah State University. Winners of that award are marked with an asterisk in the following selected main LDS biographies: Allen, James B. Trials of Discipleship: The Story of William Clayton, A Mormon. Urbana, Ill., 1987*; Arrington, Leonard J. Brigham Young: American Moses. New York, 1985*; Brodie, Fawn M. No Man Knows My History: The Life of Joseph Smith, the Mormon Prophet, 2nd rev. ed. New York, 1971; Brooks, Juanita. John D. Lee: Zealot, Pioneer Builder, Scapegoat, rev. ed. Glendale, Calif., 1985; Bushman, Richard. Joseph Smith and the Beginnings of Mormonism. Urbana, Ill., 1984*; Fox, Frank W. J. Reuben Clark: The Public Years. Provo, Utah, 1980; Hill, Donna. Joseph Smith: The First Mormon. New York, 1977; Hoopes, David S., and Roy H. Hoopes. The Making of a Mormon Apostle: The Story of Rudger Clawson. Lanham, Maryland, 1990; Kimball, Edward L., and Andrew E. Kimball, Jr. Spencer W. Kimball: Twelfth President of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Salt Lake City, 1977; Kimball, Stanley B. Heber C. Kimball: Mormon Patriarch and Pioneer. Urbana, Ill., 1981; Larson, Andrew Karl. Erastus Snow: The Life of a Missionary and Pioneer for the Early Mormon Church. Salt Lake City, 1971; Laumius, Roger D. Joseph Smith III: Pragmatic Prophet. Urbana, Ill., 1988*; Lyon, T. Edgar, Jr. John Lyon: The Life of a Pioneer Poet. Provo, Utah, 1989; Madsen, Truman G. Defender of the Faith: The B. H. Roberts Story. Salt Lake City, 1980; Merrill, Milton R. Reed Smoot: Apostle in Politics. Logan, Utah, 1989; Newell, Linda King, and Valcen Tippetts Avery. Mormon Enigma: Emma Hale Smith. New York, 1984*; Peterson, Levi S. Juanita Brooks: Mormon Woman Historian. Salt Lake City, 1988*; Quinn, D. Michael. J. Reuben Clark: The Church Years. Provo, Utah, 1983; Schindler, Harold. Orrin Porter Rockwell: Man of God, Son of Thunder, 2nd ed. Salt Lake City, 1966; Yarn, David H. Young Reuben. Provo, Utah, 1973.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Allen, James B. "Writing Mormon Biographies." In World Conference on Records: Preserving Our Heritage, ser. 116, pp. 1-15. Salt Lake City, 1980.
- Bitton, Davis. Guide to Mormon Diaries and Autobiographies. Provo, Utah, 1977.
- . "Mormon Biography." Biography: An Interdisciplinary Quarterly 4 (Winter 1981):1-16.
- Craeft, Richard, and Neal Lambert, eds. A Believing People, pp. 145-53. Provo, Utah, 1974.
- Lambert, Neal. "The Representation of Reality in Nineteenth-Century Mormon Autobiography." Dialogue 11 (Summer 1978):63-74.
- Sondrup, Steven P. "Literary Dimensions of Mormon Autobiography." Dialogue 11 (Summer 1978):75-80.
- Walker, Ronald W. "The Challenge and Craft of Mormon Biography." BYU Studies 22 (Spring 1982):179-92.
- Whittaker, David J. "The Heritage and Tasks of Mormon Biography." In Supporting Saints, ed. D. Cannon and D. Whittaker, pp. 1-16. Salt Lake City, 1985.

MAUREEN URSENBACH BEECHER

---

BIRTH

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints teaches that every person experiences a series of "births." All were born as spirit children of God in a PREMORTAL LIFE. Second, these individual spirit children received a mortal, physical body when alone as a full-length treatment of a woman leader, but biographies of Eliza R. SNOW and Emmeline B. WELLS are in progress. Of a lay Mormon woman, one biography of significance has been published, that of historian Juanita Brooks by Levi Peterson (1988).

A few autobiographical accounts of Latter-day Saint women are already available. Besides A Mormon Mother, there are the self-told lives of such people as Ellis R. Shipp, Mary Jane Mount Tanner, Sarah Studevant Leavitt, and Aurelia Spencer ROGERS, though it must be recognized that few of these accounts were written for distribution beyond the author's family. Another nineteenth-century woman, Fanny Stenhouse, used the autobiographical mode to produce her Exposé of Polygamy in Utah (1872), later revised and widely published as Tell It All (1874).

Modern female novelists such as Virginia Sorenson, author of Where Nothing Is Long Ago (1963), and Rodello Hunter, author of Daughter of Zion (1972), have published autobiographical material combined with some of the trappings of fiction. Several handwritten lives, such as that of Martha Cragun Cox, and others published to limited audiences, such as that of Louisa Barnes Pratt and Mary Ann Weston Maughan, remain largely untapped in obscure archives.

To encourage the writing of Latter-day Saint biographies, the David Woolley and Beatrice Cannon Evans family endowed a prize that has been awarded annually since 1983. It is now administered by the Mountain West Center for Regional Studies at Utah State University. Winners of that award are marked with an asterisk in the following selected main LDS biographies: Allen, James B. Trials of Discipleship: The Story of William Clayton, A Mormon. Urbana, Ill., 1987*; Arrington, Leonard J. Brigham Young: American Moses. New York, 1985*; Brodie, Fawn M. No Man Knows My History: The Life of Joseph Smith, the Mormon Prophet, 2nd rev. ed. New York, 1971; Brooks, Juanita. John D. Lee: Zealot, Pioneer Builder, Scapegoat, rev. ed. Glendale, Calif., 1985; Bushman, Richard. Joseph Smith and the Beginnings of Mormonism. Urbana, Ill., 1984*; Fox, Frank W. J. Reuben Clark: The Public Years. Provo, Utah, 1980; Hill, Donna. Joseph Smith: The First Mormon. New York, 1977; Hoopes, David S., and Roy H. Hoopes. The Making of a Mormon Apostle: The Story of Rudger Clawson. Lanham, Maryland, 1990; Kimball, Edward L., and Andrew E. Kimball, Jr. Spencer W. Kimball: Twelfth President of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Salt Lake City, 1977; Kimball, Stanley B. Heber C. Kimball: Mormon Patriarch and Pioneer. Urbana, Ill., 1981; Larson, Andrew Karl. Erastus Snow: The Life of a Missionary and Pioneer for the Early Mormon Church. Salt Lake City, 1971; Laumius, Roger D. Joseph Smith III: Pragmatic Prophet. Urbana, Ill., 1988*; Lyon, T. Edgar, Jr. John Lyon: The Life of a Pioneer Poet. Provo, Utah, 1989; Madsen, Truman G. Defender of the Faith: The B. H. Roberts Story. Salt Lake City, 1980; Merrill, Milton R. Reed Smoot: Apostle in Politics. Logan, Utah, 1989; Newell, Linda King, and Valcen Tippetts Avery. Mormon Enigma: Emma Hale Smith. New York, 1984*; Peterson, Levi S. Juanita Brooks: Mormon Woman Historian. Salt Lake City, 1988*; Quinn, D. Michael. J. Reuben Clark: The Church Years. Provo, Utah, 1983; Schindler, Harold. Orrin Porter Rockwell: Man of God, Son of Thunder, 2nd ed. Salt Lake City, 1966; Yarn, David H. Young Reuben. Provo, Utah, 1973.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Allen, James B. "Writing Mormon Biographies." In World Conference on Records: Preserving Our Heritage, ser. 116, pp. 1-15. Salt Lake City, 1980.
- Bitton, Davis. Guide to Mormon Diaries and Autobiographies. Provo, Utah, 1977.
- . "Mormon Biography." Biography: An Interdisciplinary Quarterly 4 (Winter 1981):1-16.
- Craeft, Richard, and Neal Lambert, eds. A Believing People, pp. 145-53. Provo, Utah, 1974.
- Lambert, Neal. "The Representation of Reality in Nineteenth-Century Mormon Autobiography." Dialogue 11 (Summer 1978):63-74.
- Sondrup, Steven P. "Literary Dimensions of Mormon Autobiography." Dialogue 11 (Summer 1978):75-80.
- Walker, Ronald W. "The Challenge and Craft of Mormon Biography." BYU Studies 22 (Spring 1982):179-92.
- Whittaker, David J. "The Heritage and Tasks of Mormon Biography." In Supporting Saints, ed. D. Cannon and D. Whittaker, pp. 1-16. Salt Lake City, 1985.

MAUREEN URSENBACH BEECHER

BIRTH

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints teaches that every person experiences a series of "births." All were born as spirit children of God in a PREMORTAL LIFE. Second, these individual spirit children received a mortal, physical body when they were born on earth. Third, those who accept and live the GOSPEL OF JESUS CHRIST go through a process of being born again in a spiritual sense (see BORN OF GOD). Although these births are real, they do not in any way constitute any type of REINCARNATION.

Men and women become conscious of their divine origin and birthright when they recognize their relationship with the Supreme Being, address him as Father, and become aware that in scripture God addresses mankind as his children (1 Jn. 3:1–2; Matt. 6:9).

In the COUNCIL IN HEAVEN, God the Father offered his spirit children the opportunity to progress toward becoming like he is by leaving his presence and being born on earth in a mortal, physical body and learning to live by faith (Abr. 3:22–28). Mortal birth is the event by which one's SPIRIT BODY is temporarily joined with a mortal tabernacle begotten by earthly parents. The exact time when the premortal spirit enters the unborn physical tabernacle is not specified in divine revelation. Through the FALL OF ADAM, and birth into mortality, mankind becomes subject to two deaths: the physical or temporal death, which is a death of the body, and the spiritual death, which is being shut out of God's presence (see LIFE AND DEATH; PLAN OF SALVATION).

Through the ATONEMENT of Jesus Christ all people are given opportunity to be born again in a spiritual sense as his sons and daughters so as to return to God's presence as his spiritually begotten children (Mosiah 5:7–9; Alma 5:14). The process of being born of the spirit begins when one is baptized and receives the GIFT OF THE HOLY GHOST. Since the HOLY GHOST is a member of the GODHEAD, the effects of the spiritual death, or separation between man and God, is lessened individually when one is truly born of the Spirit.

Birth as spirit beings and birth as mortals have already occurred to all of mankind on the earth. The spiritual rebirth necessary for salvation in the presence of God requires considerable additional individual effort through obedience to the gospel of Jesus Christ.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Clark, J. Reuben, Jr. Man—God's Greatest Miracle. Salt Lake City, 1956.
- Smith, Joseph Fielding. Man, His Origin and Destiny, p. 354. Salt Lake City, 1954.

HELEN LANCE CHRISTIANSON

---

BIRTH, SPIRITUAL

See: Born of God; Premortal Life

---

BIRTH CONTROL

The GENERAL HANDBOOK OF INSTRUCTIONS for Church leaders has the following instructions concerning birth control: "Husbands must be considerate of their wives, who have a great responsibility not only for bearing children but also for caring for them through childhood. . . . Married couples should seek inspiration from the Lord in meeting their marital challenges and rearing their children according to the teachings of the gospel" (General Handbook, 11-4).

Interpretation of these general instructions is left to the AGENCY of Church members. One of the basic teachings of the Church, however, is that spirit children of God come to earth to obtain a physical body, to grow, and to be tested. In that process, adults should marry and provide temporal bodies for those spirit children. For Latter-day Saints, it is a blessing, a joy, and also an obligation to bear children and to raise a family.

One of the cornerstones of the gospel is agency or choice. Latter-day Saints believe that everyone will be held responsible for the choices they make. Many decisions involve the application of principles where precise instructions are not given in the General Handbook of Instructions or in the scriptures. The exercise of individual agency is therefore required, and Latter-day Saints believe that personal growth results from weighing the alternatives, studying matters carefully, counseling with appropriate Church leaders, and then seeking inspiration from the Lord before making a decision.

Church members are taught to study the question of family planning, including such important aspects as the physical and mental health of the mother and father and their capacity to provide the basic necessities of life. If, for personal reasons, a couple prayerfully decides that having another child immediately is unwise, birth control may be appropriate. Abstinence, of course, is a form of contraception. Like any other method, however, it has its side effects, some of which may be harmful to the marriage relationship.

Prophets past and present have never stipulated that bearing children was the sole function of the marriage relationship. They have taught that they were born on earth. Third, those who accept and live the GOSPEL OF JESUS CHRIST go through a process of being born again in a spiritual sense (see BORN OF GOD). Although these births are real, they do not in any way constitute any type of REINCARNATION.

Men and women become conscious of their divine origin and birthright when they recognize their relationship with the Supreme Being, address him as Father, and become aware that in scripture God addresses mankind as his children (1 Jn. 3:1–2; Matt. 6:9).

In the COUNCIL IN HEAVEN, God the Father offered his spirit children the opportunity to progress toward becoming like he is by leaving his presence and being born on earth in a mortal, physical body and learning to live by faith (Abr. 3:22–28). Mortal birth is the event by which one's SPIRIT BODY is temporarily joined with a mortal tabernacle begotten by earthly parents. The exact time when the premortal spirit enters the unborn physical tabernacle is not specified in divine revelation. Through the FALL OF ADAM, and birth into mortality, mankind becomes subject to two deaths: the physical or temporal death, which is a death of the body, and the spiritual death, which is being shut out of God's presence (see LIFE AND DEATH; PLAN OF SALVATION).

Through the ATONEMENT of Jesus Christ all people are given opportunity to be born again in a spiritual sense as his sons and daughters so as to return to God's presence as his spiritually begotten children (Mosiah 5:7–9; Alma 5:14). The process of being born of the spirit begins when one is baptized and receives the GIFT OF THE HOLY GHOST. Since the HOLY GHOST is a member of the GODHEAD, the effects of the spiritual death, or separation between man and God, is lessened individually when one is truly born of the Spirit.

Birth as spirit beings and birth as mortals have already occurred to all of mankind on the earth. The spiritual rebirth necessary for salvation in the presence of God requires considerable additional individual effort through obedience to the gospel of Jesus Christ.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Clark, J. Reuben, Jr. Man—God's Greatest Miracle. Salt Lake City, 1956.
- Smith, Joseph Fielding. Man, His Origin and Destiny, p. 354. Salt Lake City, 1954.

HELEN LANCE CHRISTIANSON

---

BIRTH, SPIRITUAL

See: Born of God; Premortal Life

---

BIRTH CONTROL

The GENERAL HANDBOOK OF INSTRUCTIONS for Church leaders has the following instructions concerning birth control: "Husbands must be considerate of their wives, who have a great responsibility not only for bearing children but also for caring for them through childhood. . . . Married couples should seek inspiration from the Lord in meeting their marital challenges and rearing their children according to the teachings of the gospel" (General Handbook, 11-4).

Interpretation of these general instructions is left to the AGENCY of Church members. One of the basic teachings of the Church, however, is that spirit children of God come to earth to obtain a physical body, to grow, and to be tested. In that process, adults should marry and provide temporal bodies for those spirit children. For Latter-day Saints, it is a blessing, a joy, and also an obligation to bear children and to raise a family.

One of the cornerstones of the gospel is agency or choice. Latter-day Saints believe that everyone will be held responsible for the choices they make. Many decisions involve the application of principles where precise instructions are not given in the General Handbook of Instructions or in the scriptures. The exercise of individual agency is therefore required, and Latter-day Saints believe that personal growth results from weighing the alternatives, studying matters carefully, counseling with appropriate Church leaders, and then seeking inspiration from the Lord before making a decision.

Church members are taught to study the question of family planning, including such important aspects as the physical and mental health of the mother and father and their capacity to provide the basic necessities of life. If, for personal reasons, a couple prayerfully decides that having another child immediately is unwise, birth control may be appropriate. Abstinence, of course, is a form of contraception. Like any other method, however, it has its side effects, some of which may be harmful to the marriage relationship.

Prophets past and present have never stipulated that bearing children was the sole function of the marriage relationship. They have taught that physical intimacy is a strong force in expressing and strengthening the love bond in marriage, enhancing and reinforcing marital unity.

Decisions regarding the number and spacing of children are to be made by husband and wife together, in righteousness, and through empathetic communication, and with prayer for the Lord's inspiration. Latter-day Saints believe that persons are accountable not only for what they do but for why they do it. Thus, regarding family size and attendant questions, members should desire to multiply and replenish the earth as the Lord has commanded. In that process, God intends that his children use the agency that he has given them in charting a wise course for themselves and their families.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. General Handbook of Instructions, 11-4. Salt Lake City, 1989.

"I Have a Question." Ensign 9 (Aug. 1979):23-24.

HOMER S. ELLSWORTH

---

BIRTH RATES

See: Vital Statistics

---

BISHOP

A bishop is the ecclesiastical leader of a Latter-day Saint congregation or WARD, and has comprehensive pastoral and administrative responsibility at that level. This differs from other Christian churches in which bishops administer large geographical areas involving a number of congregations.

The word "bishop" comes from the Greek word episkopos, meaning "overseer." He is the pastor or shepherd, and is charged with the care of his flock. In the apostolic period, PAUL wrote to the bishops in Philippi (Phil. 1:1), and other letters speak of the bishop's duties and of his sacred role in caring for the Church of God (1 Tim. 3:1-7; Titus 1:7-9).

The bishop's office is a complex priesthood calling. The bishop is president of the ward's AARONIC PRIESTHOOD holders and is responsible for all their activities. He is also an ordained HIGH PRIEST in the MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOOD and is the presiding high priest in the ward, responsible for all ward activities and functions (D&C 107:15-17). As the common judge and the presiding high priest, he determines the worthiness of all members of his ward and directs the performance of sacred ordinances (D&C 107:68-76). He is assisted by two counselors, usually high priests, who with the bishop constitute the BISHOPRIC and share responsibility for all ward organizations. The bishop and his counselors extend calls to ward members as needed to fill the numerous assignments in the many programs of the ward, encompassing activities for ward members at all ages.

A bishop holds his official position for an indefinite time period. A new bishop is called when an existing bishop is replaced or when a new ward is organized. After prayerful deliberation, the STAKE PRESIDENCY proposes a new bishop to the FIRST PRESIDENCY and QUORUM OF THE TWELVE APOSTLES. The individual nominated must be a member of the priesthood body of the ward. He does not seek nor apply for this position and no theological degree is necessary. A bishop is a lay minister and receives no monetary compensation for his services. Like other local Church officers, he must maintain himself and his family through normal employment. In selecting a bishop, a stake presidency ordinarily considers testimony, judgment, commitment, and charity toward ward members, as well as the virtues of sobriety and integrity and the administrative and teaching skills identified in the New Testament description of bishops:

A bishop then must be blameless, the husband of one wife, vigilant, sober, of good behavior, given to hospitality, apt to teach. Not given to wine, no striker, not greedy of filthy lucre; but patient, not a brawler, not covetous. One that ruleth well his own house, having his children in subjection with all gravity; (for if a man know not how to rule his own house, how shall he take care of the church of God?) Not a novice, lest being lifted up with pride he fall into the condemnation of the devil [1 Tim. 3:2-6].

Receiving a call to be a bishop is often a powerfully spiritual experience for a man as he realizes the awesome responsibility and feels the spirit confirm the importance of the call.

The bishop is sustained by a vote of the congregation, after which he is ordained and set apart to this holy office by the laying-on of hands generally by the stake president under assignment from the First Presidency. After a bishop is released from active duty, he will often be called "bishop" physical intimacy is a strong force in expressing and strengthening the love bond in marriage, enhancing and reinforcing marital unity.

Decisions regarding the number and spacing of children are to be made by husband and wife together, in righteousness, and through empathetic communication, and with prayer for the Lord's inspiration. Latter-day Saints believe that persons are accountable not only for what they do but for why they do it. Thus, regarding family size and attendant questions, members should desire to multiply and replenish the earth as the Lord has commanded. In that process, God intends that his children use the agency that he has given them in charting a wise course for themselves and their families.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. General Handbook of Instructions, 11-4. Salt Lake City, 1989.

"I Have a Question." Ensign 9 (Aug. 1979):23-24.

HOMER S. ELLSWORTH

---

BIRTH RATES

See: Vital Statistics

---

BISHOP

A bishop is the ecclesiastical leader of a Latter-day Saint congregation or WARD, and has comprehensive pastoral and administrative responsibility at that level. This differs from other Christian churches in which bishops administer large geographical areas involving a number of congregations.

The word "bishop" comes from the Greek word episkopos, meaning "overseer." He is the pastor or shepherd, and is charged with the care of his flock. In the apostolic period, PAUL wrote to the bishops in Philippi (Phil. 1:1), and other letters speak of the bishop's duties and of his sacred role in caring for the Church of God (1 Tim. 3:1-7; Titus 1:7-9).

The bishop's office is a complex priesthood calling. The bishop is president of the ward's AARONIC PRIESTHOOD holders and is responsible for all their activities. He is also an ordained HIGH PRIEST in the MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOOD and is the presiding high priest in the ward, responsible for all ward activities and functions (D&C 107:15-17). As the common judge and the presiding high priest, he determines the worthiness of all members of his ward and directs the performance of sacred ordinances (D&C 107:68-76). He is assisted by two counselors, usually high priests, who with the bishop constitute the BISHOPRIC and share responsibility for all ward organizations. The bishop and his counselors extend calls to ward members as needed to fill the numerous assignments in the many programs of the ward, encompassing activities for ward members at all ages.

A bishop holds his official position for an indefinite time period. A new bishop is called when an existing bishop is replaced or when a new ward is organized. After prayerful deliberation, the STAKE PRESIDENCY proposes a new bishop to the FIRST PRESIDENCY and QUORUM OF THE TWELVE APOSTLES. The individual nominated must be a member of the priesthood body of the ward. He does not seek nor apply for this position and no theological degree is necessary. A bishop is a lay minister and receives no monetary compensation for his services. Like other local Church officers, he must maintain himself and his family through normal employment. In selecting a bishop, a stake presidency ordinarily considers testimony, judgment, commitment, and charity toward ward members, as well as the virtues of sobriety and integrity and the administrative and teaching skills identified in the New Testament description of bishops:

A bishop then must be blameless, the husband of one wife, vigilant, sober, of good behavior, given to hospitality, apt to teach. Not given to wine, no striker, not greedy of filthy lucre; but patient, not a brawler, not covetous. One that ruleth well his own house, having his children in subjection with all gravity; (for if a man know not how to rule his own house, how shall he take care of the church of God?) Not a novice, lest being lifted up with pride he fall into the condemnation of the devil [1 Tim. 3:2-6].

Receiving a call to be a bishop is often a powerfully spiritual experience for a man as he realizes the awesome responsibility and feels the spirit confirm the importance of the call.

The bishop is sustained by a vote of the congregation, after which he is ordained and set apart to this holy office by the laying-on of hands generally by the stake president under assignment from the First Presidency. After a bishop is released from active duty, he will often be called "bishop" throughout his life because of the love and respect that ward members have for him.

The bishop has overall responsibility for all functions of the ward, which are designed to lead each individual member to Christ and eternal life. He is to “watch over the Church” (D&C 46:27). With other ward leaders, he is concerned for the daily physical needs of each ward member, especially the sick, elderly, and handicapped. He is like a father to the ward.

As the PRESIDING HIGH PRIEST of the ward, the bishop presides at sacrament, priesthood, and ward council meetings, and at all other ward services or activities. By these and other means he watches over both the spiritual and temporal affairs of the ward and its individual members and organizes the activities for preaching the gospel, serving in the temple, and helping ward members become more Christlike.

The bishop is the common judge of his ward. He spends much time visiting with or interviewing ward members. He determines their worthiness to participate in sacred ordinances, to receive the priesthood, to receive calls to serve in the ward and on missions, and to do temple work. He spends many hours interviewing and counseling youth as they become prospective missionaries.

Besides determining worthiness, the bishop must see that all Church ordinances are performed and recorded correctly. His direction or approval is necessary for baptism, confirmation, administration of the sacrament, blessing and naming of babies, priesthood ordinations, and all temple ordinances for members of his ward.

Where there is need, the bishop may be involved in counseling on a regular basis. He may help ward members establish goals for improvement, or he may impose appropriate discipline. In cases of serious transgression, he may initiate formal DISCIPLINARY PROCEDURES, which can affect membership, and may be necessary to bring some back to full fellowship.

As the president of the Aaronic Priesthood, a bishop has a specific responsibility to the YOUNG MEN and YOUNG WOMEN of the ward, ages twelve to eighteen. He is to see that all youth are instructed not only in scriptures and doctrine but also in the principles of charity and honesty, with special training of the young men in the duties of the priesthood, including administration of the sacrament, HOME TEACHING, baptizing, and missionary work. The bishop is automatically president of the quorum of priests in his ward, which generally consists of young men ages sixteen through eighteen. Bishops have similar responsibility for the young women of the ward. He meets monthly with a Bishop's Youth Committee, composed of adult and youth leaders for the young men and women.

Other duties of the bishop include receiving and accounting for the FINANCIAL CONTRIBUTIONS of ward members and caring of the needy through the BISHOP'S STOREHOUSE and the FAST OFFERING fund. He sees that all necessary supplies are at hand for ward functions. He arranges for and conducts funeral services. When it is appropriate and civil laws permit, he may perform marriages.

The bishop, as a father in his own home, as a family provider with a normal occupation, and as a member of the community in which he lives, has many time demands beyond his ecclesiastical calling. He must organize well and delegate and supervise effectively to accomplish all his duties.

The bishop's Sunday schedule usually involves a twelve or more hour day, including attending and conducting organizational meetings, worship services, training sessions; counseling and interviewing ward members; extending invitations or calls to participate in Church service in the ward; visiting the sick in hospitals; and visiting ward members in their homes as needed. He spends many additional hours during the week in meeting ward needs. His counselors and priesthood and auxiliary leaders also spend many hours helping him with these ward responsibilities. However, the overall responsibility for ward members and certain specific duties, such as annual interviewing of individuals for temple recommends and tithing settlement, are not in ordinary circumstances delegated.

Ward members believe that a man called of God, as the bishop is, will be endowed with wisdom, understanding, and spiritual discernment (D&C 46:27). Thus they frequently seek and greatly appreciate his advice and assistance.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Beecher, Dale. “The Office of Bishop.” Dialogue 15 (Winter 1982):103–115.
- Brandt, Edward J. “The Office of Bishop in The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints—A Sesquicentennial Review.” In A Sesquicentennial Look at Church History, pp. 57–70. Provo, Utah, 1980.

DON M. PEARSON

BISHOP, HISTORY OF THE OFFICE

The work of the office of bishop in The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints has evolved over 160 years to accommodate changing Church needs. When the Church was small, bishops were concerned primarily with the temporal needs of the Church, and spiritual needs were left to the Prophet. At the 1846 exodus from NAUVOO, three kinds of bishops functioned: general bishops, WARD bishops, and traveling or regional bishops. In 1847 the first presiding bishop was called, and was assigned Church-wide temporal and administrative duties. Ward bishops worked under the supervision of the presiding bishop, traveling or regional bishops, and STAKE PRESIDENTS. In the late 1800s ward bishops were assigned greater responsibility for ward members, seeing to their spiritual as well as temporal needs. Thus the need for traveling or regional bishops gradually diminished and the office soon ceased altogether. Contemporary Church organization includes ward bishops and a presiding bishop who is a General Authority (see PRESIDING BISHOPRIC).

BEFORE NAUVOO, 1830–1839. Revelation to Joseph Smith restored the office of bishop in February 1831 (D&C 41:9; cf. 1 Tim. 3:1–7). Edward Partridge was called as the Church's first bishop, and was made responsible for operating a storehouse to help the poor (D&C 42:30–39) and for administering property transactions connected with the LAW OF CONSECRATION (D&C 42:58:17). In December 1831 Newel K. Whitney was also called as a bishop (D&C 72). The two served as regional or traveling bishops (D&C 20:66), Whitney for Ohio and the eastern states and Partridge for MISSOURI (Latter-day Saint Biographical Encyclopedia 1:219–20, 224). The First Presidency ordained them and called two counselors to assist each one. In November 1831, the Lord had revealed the AARONIC PRIESTHOOD organization, designating bishops as the presidents of the Aaronic Priesthood to preside over quorums of up to forty-eight PRIESTS (D&C 107:87–88). Bishops Partridge and Whitney helped organize these priesthood quorums and selected and set apart quorum presidents. After the organization of the first STAKES in 1834, bishops functioned much like stake officers.

In response to additional revelations (D&C 42:30–39; 51:1–20; 84:103–104), bishops Partridge and Whitney managed such Church temporal matters as paying bills, buying and selling lands and goods, helping with construction projects, printing, and assisting the poor. In Missouri, where members consecrated and pooled belongings, Bishop Partridge signed the consecration deeds, received donations into a BISHOP'S STOREHOUSE, and decided back donated and purchased properties based on members' needs. He was remunerated for his full-time service.

NAUVOO PERIOD, 1839–1846. In 1841, when the law of TITHING replaced deeding all of one's property to the Church, bishops helped receive and disburse tithes. However, the Prophet Joseph Smith as Church President and trustee-in-trust held title to Church properties and established Church financial policies.

The office of ward bishops began with the establishment of the first wards in Nauvoo. There, bishops Newel K. Whitney and George Miller, who replaced Bishop Partridge (who had died in 1840), had general jurisdictions and also served in an assigned municipal ward. By 1842 Nauvoo's thirteen wards each had a bishop with two counselors. Their main tasks were to process tithes and to assist newcomers and aid the poor, which they accomplished with donated FAST OFFERINGS. Bishops also carried a major responsibility for dealing with ward members in cases of wrongdoing. However, bishops rarely conducted Sunday WORSHIP meetings; such services were held outdoors on a citywide or stake basis or in individual homes. Nauvoo bishops collectively organized and directed the work of deacons, teachers, and priests quorums in the city.

By the time of the exodus from Nauvoo, the Church had three types of bishops: general bishops, who in 1845 became trustees for the Church; ward bishops; and traveling bishops sent beyond Nauvoo to receive Church funds.

EXODUS AND EARLY UTAH, 1846–1900. During the exodus, ordained and acting bishops cared for the needy through tithes, offerings, and labor. WINTER QUARTERS was divided into twenty-two wards, each with a bishop. By 1848 bishops in KANESVILLE, IOWA, exercised civil as well as ecclesiastical authority. On April 6, 1847, Bishop Newel K. Whitney became the first presiding bishop for the entire Church.

When Latter-day Saints first settled in Utah, the norm was for each settlement to have a president and at least one bishop (the nucleus of an embryonic stake). Salt Lake City, the largest settlement, was divided into nineteen wards in 1849, each with a bishop and two counselors. When Presiding Bishop Whitney died in 1850, he was replaced by Bishop Edward Hunter, who was given two counselors, thereby creating the first PRESIDING BISHOPRIC. They were responsible for Church temporal affairs, for local bishops, and for stake Aaronic Priesthood quorums. Bishop Hunter met every two weeks with northern Utah bishops to coordinate efforts regarding public works, tithes, resources, immigration and immigrants, and the needy. However, the First Presidency, not the Presiding Bishopric, made finance and resource policy and called and released bishops.

In each stake, bishops called men, and later, boys, to fill stake-level deacons' quorums, teachers' quorums, and priests' quorums, and gave them responsibilities in their wards. The basic ward officers for the pioneer Utah period were the BISHOPRIC and the teachers' quorum, then called block teachers or ward teachers (see HOME TEACHING). Under direction of the bishop, teachers visited members in their homes, settled disputes, and helped the needy. Teachers and bishoprics heard charges of wrongdoing and decided guilt or innocence. Bishops, as Church judges, conducted inquiries regarding sin and held bishops' courts, if necessary, to excommunicate, disfellowship, or exonerate (see DISCIPLINARY PROCEDURES). During the REFORMATION (LDS) OF 1856–1857, bishops and teachers saw to the catechizations interviews, and rebaptism of members.

Bishops spent much of their time managing tithing. Most tithes were "in kind," necessitating the creation of bishop's storehouses, which included corrals for animals and bins for farm products. Tithing houses sometimes became commerce centers, serving as trading posts, banks issuing and receiving tithing scrip, wayside inns, and transportation and mail hubs. The Presiding Bishopric issued price valuations for donated and traded products, creating uniform prices for the territory. In the largely cashless PIONEER ECONOMY, bishops used two-thirds of the local tithes to help the poor and to pay for public improvements. They forwarded one-third of the tithing commodities to Salt Lake City to pay laborers on the Salt Lake Temple and various public works projects. Bishops received a small percentage of the tithes to cover personal expenses incurred while managing the donations. By the mid-1850s, ward bishops had taken over the Presiding Bishopric's task of conducting annual tithing settlements with members.

During the consecration movement in the 1850s and the UNITED ORDER efforts in the 1870s, bishops received, recorded, and dispersed donated properties. Ward bishops recruited resources for use elsewhere, such as products in short supply, special funds, supplies for the militia, and teamsters and wagons to take immigrants west from staging points and supply depots in Nebraska, Iowa, and, later, Wyoming (see IMMIGRATION AND EMIGRATION).

The First Presidency and the Presiding Bishopric supervised local bishops through visits to wards, two annual general conferences requiring the attendance of bishops, distribution of circular letters, and the reports of traveling and regional bishops. Stake presidents served as the bishops' ecclesiastical superior line officers. In the Salt Lake, Cache, and Utah valleys, stake presidents held regular bishops' quorum meetings.

During this period, bishops had both temporal and spiritual responsibility for their wards and communities. They called ward officers, conducted meetings and presided over funerals, supervised ORDINANCES, and gave BLESSINGS. They assisted the needy through the use of tithes, fast offerings, and volunteer labor. During the 1856 famine, bishops requisitioned foodstuffs to distribute within a ward and to share with other wards. In the mid-1850s some wards created RELIEF SOCIETIES to aid needy Indians. Ward Relief Societies became widespread in the 1870s, and the bishops relied on them to seek out and help the needy.

Elders, seventies, and high priests met in stake quorums and were not directly subject to the bishops. In the 1860s and 1870s bishops helped organize and supervise Relief Societies for women, and other ward AUXILIARY ORGANIZATIONS, such as Mutual Improvement Associations for youth and adults, Sunday Schools, and Primaries for children.

In 1877 bishops presided over wards varying in size from 171 members in Morgan Stake wards (northern Utah) to 808 members in Utah Stake wards (central Utah). Each stake contained an average of twelve wards. An average ward had 432 members, 81 families, 13 high priests, 19 seventies, 38 elders, 6 priests, 6 teachers, and 10 deacons. During a thorough reorganization of the priesthood in 1877, President Brigham Young added 140 wards to the existing 101, retaining 56 bishops and ordaining 185 new ones. Most bishopric counselors were newly called, too, and were required to be high priests. Thus in 1877 new personnel comprised about 80 percent of the Church's bishoprics.

New instructions directed bishops to account for their ward members; keep Aaronic Priesthood units staffed; attend weekly Aaronic Priesthood meetings and monthly stake priesthood meetings; operate an effective ward teaching program; conduct the sacrament during Sunday School; turn in monthly and quarterly reports of membership, finances, and ward activities; keep accurate records of disciplinary proceedings; support temple laborers; and hold proper Sabbath meetings, thus setting basic patterns for ward organization and procedures today. Bishops' agents replaced regional presiding bishops. In response to instructions to involve boys eleven to nineteen years old in an Aaronic Priesthood office, bishops called them to be deacons in their wards, beginning the shift of Aaronic Priesthood work to the youth. Bishops continued to call elders and high priests as acting priests and acting teachers to do the ward teaching.

Nineteenth-century Utah bishops were the civic leaders in their communities. They encouraged immigrants to become citizens and to vote. They discussed political matters at Church meetings; backed the development of the telegraph, railroad, mines, canals, and cooperative stores; and established and superintended local schools. The average length of service for all nineteenth-century Utah bishops was eleven years, but 15 percent served for more than twenty years. Bishops had above-average incomes. They entered into plural marriage more than other male members; at least 60 percent of bishops had one or more plural wives.

Because of federal antipolygamy efforts during the 1880s, many bishops were prosecuted or were forced into hiding, thus virtually halting their political involvement. Their wards were incorporated so that they, rather than the general Church, owned meetinghouses, saving them from confiscation by the federal government. The tithing system was disrupted and tithe paying declined. In 1889, stake tithing clerks replaced the bishops' agents.

1900–1930. Beginning about 1900, after Utah had gained statehood (1896), the economic practices of the Church were modified. By the early 1900s tithing had changed from donations of commodities primarily to cash; tithing houses gradually disappeared and the collection task became simpler. Fast offerings also were most often donated in cash rather than food.

A priesthood reform movement from 1908 to 1922 designated the Aaronic Priesthood for boys, with ordination ages of twelve for deacons, fifteen for teachers, and seventeen for priests. Each age group received new duties and standardized lesson manuals. Bishops supervised the ward-level quorums and became presidents of the wards' Aaronic Priesthood.

Another change in 1908 required that all ward priesthood quorums cease meeting at separate times and instead meet together weekly in a ward priesthood meeting on Monday nights. For the first time bishops regularly met with and presided over all ward priesthood groups at once. In the 1930s ward priesthood meetings shifted from Monday nights to Sunday mornings.

1930–1960. Stakes and wards continued to spread beyond the Rocky Mountain region. Bishops in outlying areas with LDS minorities faced new problems not found in the predominantly LDS state of Utah. Away from the Intermountain West, Church meetinghouses were few in number, and members often lived long distances from one another.

Changes during this period include the creation by the Presiding Bishopric of a central membership file so bishops could receive or send membership records more efficiently, a uniform WARD BUDGET system, achievement award programs for the youth, the regular publication of a bulletin from the Presiding Bishopric to be disseminated to all bishops, arrangement of funds for bishops to attend general conferences, and the improvement of the handbook for bishops. Since ward teachers were ward officers and personal representatives of the bishop, the bishopric personally selected and interviewed the ward teachers, and conducted monthly report meetings with them.

With the introduction of the welfare services program in the late 1930s, bishops established and operated ward welfare projects and mobilized ward support for stake projects. They introduced more efficient methods of collecting and utilizing fast offerings and allocated food and clothing from the new bishop's storehouses to the needy.

DEVELOPMENTS SINCE 1960. The postwar “baby boom” and rapid increases in convert baptisms produced sudden and steep growth in Church membership during the 1960s, which required more wards, bishops, and meetinghouses. The Church established stakes and wards internationally, producing a growing number of non-English-speaking bishops.

To help new bishops, the Church published a wide array of instruction manuals for the various organizations and activities of the Church. By the 1980s new bishops in the United States received several such manuals, a GENERAL HANDBOOK OF INSTRUCTIONS, and various priesthood guidebooks. Because the bishop’s tasks became so numerous that many bishops in the 1950s and 1960s were spending most weeknights as well as all day Sunday attending to Church duties, the Church moved to ease and simplify the nature of the bishop’s assignment.

In 1964, as part of a new Church emphasis on CORRELATION, “ward teaching,” now known as home teaching, became a responsibility of Melchizedek Priesthood quorum leaders, thus removing a major supervisory assignment from the bishops, though bishops continued to visit members in their homes and conduct funerals, visit the sick, and bestow blessings. In the 1970s and 1980s the bishop’s service tenure was generally shortened, although length of service was not set; and ward sizes were reduced. Computerization of membership and financial records simplified bishops’ record-keeping tasks. LDS SOCIAL SERVICES became a counseling resource to which bishops could refer members with difficult problems. Monday nights were reserved for FAMILY HOME EVENINGS, when no ward activities were to be held, thus giving both bishops and members more time for their families. By the 1980s the Church had consolidated all ward meetings, previously spread throughout the week, into one three-hour block on Sunday, saving bishops and members much travel and meeting time, particularly in wards that covered large areas. In 1990 Church headquarters began a quarterly allotment from the general tithing fund to cover ward expenses for wards in North America. This eliminated the bishop’s need to solicit ward budget money through donations and fund-raising activities. The Church also simplified its disciplinary procedures.

[See also Bishop; Bishopric.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Arrington, Leonard J. Great Basin Kingdom. Lincoln, Neb., 1966.
- Beecher, Dale F. “The Office of Bishop.” Dialogue 15 (Winter 1982):103–15.
- Hartley, William G. “The Priesthood Reform Movement, 1908–1922.” BYU Studies 13 (Winter 1973):137–56.
- Pace, Donald G. “Community Leadership on the Mormon Frontier: Mormon Bishops and the Political, Economic, and Social Development of Utah Before Statehood.” Ph.D. diss., Ohio State University, 1983.
- Widtsoe, John A. Priesthood and Church Government. Salt Lake City, 1939.

WILLIAM C. HARTLEY

---

BISHOPRIC

The bishopric, consisting of the BISHOP and two counselors, is the presiding or governing council in a WARD (congregation). These three men oversee all Church programs in the ward. They are assisted in the clerical, financial, and other administrative work by an executive secretary, a ward CLERK, and assistant clerks as needed. (See also PRESIDING BISHOPRIC.)

A bishop is called by the Lord to this office through the STAKE PRESIDENT, who presents the prospective bishop’s name to the GENERAL AUTHORITIES for clearance and approval. The bishop selects two adult men to serve as his counselors and submits their names to the stake president for approval. Upon approval, the STAKE PRESIDENCY presents the names of the complete bishopric in a meeting of ward members for their sustaining vote. The stake president or a visiting General Authority ordains the bishop by the LAYING ON OF HANDS and sets him and his counselors apart in their positions.

The bishopric selects other men to serve as ward executive secretary, ward clerk, and assistant clerks; they are likewise approved by the stake president and priesthood executive committee, sustained by the members of the ward, and set apart by the stake president or his representative. The bishop and his counselors are ordained high priests (except in student wards, where elders may be called as counselors in the bishopric). All give voluntary, unpaid service.

The bishopric is charged to (1) promote the spiritual and temporal welfare of the members of the ward, with a primary focus on youth; (2) super-

DEVELOPMENTS SINCE 1960. The postwar “baby boom” and rapid increases in convert baptisms produced sudden and steep growth in Church membership during the 1960s, which required more wards, bishops, and meetinghouses. The Church established stakes and wards internationally, producing a growing number of non-English-speaking bishops.

To help new bishops, the Church published a wide array of instruction manuals for the various organizations and activities of the Church. By the 1980s new bishops in the United States received several such manuals, a GENERAL HANDBOOK OF INSTRUCTIONS, and various priesthood guidebooks. Because the bishop’s tasks became so numerous that many bishops in the 1950s and 1960s were spending most weeknights as well as all day Sunday attending to Church duties, the Church moved to ease and simplify the nature of the bishop’s assignment.

In 1964, as part of a new Church emphasis on CORRELATION, “ward teaching,” now known as home teaching, became a responsibility of Melchizedek Priesthood quorum leaders, thus removing a major supervisory assignment from the bishops, though bishops continued to visit members in their homes and conduct funerals, visit the sick, and bestow blessings. In the 1970s and 1980s the bishop’s service tenure was generally shortened, although length of service was not set; and ward sizes were reduced. Computerization of membership and financial records simplified bishops’ record-keeping tasks. LDS SOCIAL SERVICES became a counseling resource to which bishops could refer members with difficult problems. Monday nights were reserved for FAMILY HOME EVENINGS, when no ward activities were to be held, thus giving both bishops and members more time for their families. By the 1980s the Church had consolidated all ward meetings, previously spread throughout the week, into one three-hour block on Sunday, saving bishops and members much travel and meeting time, particularly in wards that covered large areas. In 1990 Church headquarters began a quarterly allotment from the general tithing fund to cover ward expenses for wards in North America. This eliminated the bishop’s need to solicit ward budget money through donations and fund-raising activities. The Church also simplified its disciplinary procedures.

[See also Bishop; Bishopric.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Arrington, Leonard J. Great Basin Kingdom. Lincoln, Neb., 1966.
- Beecher, Dale F. “The Office of Bishop.” Dialogue 15 (Winter 1982):103–15.
- Hartley, William G. “The Priesthood Reform Movement, 1908–1922.” BYU Studies 13 (Winter 1973):137–56.
- Pace, Donald G. “Community Leadership on the Mormon Frontier: Mormon Bishops and the Political, Economic, and Social Development of Utah Before Statehood.” Ph.D. diss., Ohio State University, 1983.
- Widtsoe, John A. Priesthood and Church Government. Salt Lake City, 1939.

WILLIAM G. HARTLEY

---

BISHOPRIC

The bishopric, consisting of the BISHOP and two counselors, is the presiding or governing council in a WARD (congregation). These three men oversee all Church programs in the ward. They are assisted in the clerical, financial, and other administrative work by an executive secretary, a ward CLERK, and assistant clerks as needed. (See also PRESIDING BISHOPRIC.)

A bishop is called by the Lord to this office through the STAKE PRESIDENT, who presents the prospective bishop’s name to the GENERAL AUTHORITIES for clearance and approval. The bishop selects two adult men to serve as his counselors and submits their names to the stake president for approval. Upon approval, the STAKE PRESIDENCY presents the names of the complete bishopric in a meeting of ward members for their sustaining vote. The stake president or a visiting General Authority ordains the bishop by the LAYING ON OF HANDS and sets him and his counselors apart in their positions.

The bishopric selects other men to serve as ward executive secretary, ward clerk, and assistant clerks; they are likewise approved by the stake president and priesthood executive committee, sustained by the members of the ward, and set apart by the stake president or his representative. The bishop and his counselors are ordained high priests (except in student wards, where elders may be called as counselors in the bishopric). All give voluntary, unpaid service.

The bishopric is charged to (1) promote the spiritual and temporal welfare of the members of the ward, with a primary focus on youth; (2) supervise the performance of priesthood ordinances and sacraments; (3) extend CALLINGS to members to staff ward organizations; (4) administer the programs of the Church in the ward, conduct meetings and maintain order in the Church organization and structure; (5) manage the financial affairs of the ward (including receiving local donations to the Church and transferring funds to Church headquarters, and supervising all expenditures of Church funds); (6) oversee the care and protection of the ward meetinghouse and other ward physical facilities that the Church owns or leases; (7) carry out Church DISCIPLINARY PROCEDURES for serious violations of moral law and Church standards; (8) foster a sense of community among ward members, with a special emphasis on fellowshiping new members; and (9) encourage members to perform their religious responsibilities. Bishopries are requested to do whatever is needed to encourage Church participation and religious activity among all ward members.

The bishopric is responsible for calling and conducting all of the executive meetings of the ward, including a weekly bishopric meeting, a weekly priesthood executive committee meeting, and various meetings to plan and coordinate youth activities and train youth leaders. Bishopric members also divide responsibility and attend the leadership and training meetings of each AUXILIARY ORGANIZATION they supervise (see PRIMARY; RELIEF SOCIETY; SUNDAY SCHOOL; YOUNG MEN; YOUNG WOMEN).

After prayerfully considering recommendations from ward organization leaders who request members to serve in teaching, leadership, and other service callings, the bishopric decides whom to call, and issues the invitation to serve. The bishop delegates supervisory responsibility for the various auxiliary organizations, maintenance of membership records, receipting of financial contributions to the Church, and certain matters pertaining to Church education. The bishop cannot delegate such duties as counseling members involved in serious transgressions, convening disciplinary councils, presiding over the PRIEST quorum in the ward, performing civil marriages for members of the ward, and conducting TITHING settlement (an annual, personal report by ward members concerning the donations they have made).

The bishopric has the primary responsibility for developmental programs involving the youth in the ward. This entails promoting and attending activities for the youth, interviewing young men and women regularly, and overseeing the work of adults called to assist in teaching or planning activities. Activities are designed to provide youth with opportunities for recreation, service, and the application of religious principles to everyday life. The bishop focuses his efforts on the young men and women aged sixteen through eighteen, and assigns his counselors to work with youth aged twelve through thirteen and fourteen through fifteen. The bishop is to interview all young persons in the ward individually at least once each year (usually near their birthdays), and the counselors are to interview those twelve through sixteen years old at least annually. The bishop is the only member of the bishopric who discusses individual matters of personal worthiness with the youth.

Those who serve in a bishopric are expected to live with honesty, integrity, and devotion to their spiritual commitment. Their example of Christian service is essential to the quality of their influence among all ward members.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Hinckley, Gordon B. "To the Bishops of the Church." Ensign 18 (Nov. 1988):48-51.
- . "In . . . Counsellors There Is Safety." Ensign 20 (Nov. 1990):48-51.

DAVID C. BRADFORD

---

BISHOP'S STOREHOUSE

The bishop's storehouse system is a network of Church-owned and -operated commodity resource centers that function much like retail stores, with the major difference that goods cannot be purchased but are given to needy individuals whom local LDS bishops judge to be worthy and deserving of Church assistance. Recipients are invited to work or render service in various ways in exchange for goods to avoid allowing the goods given to be a form of dole.

The storehouse stocks basic food and essential household items, produced largely from Church agricultural properties, canneries, and light manufacturing operations. The entire system, where practical, is vertically integrated, from farming and harvesting through processing and distributing. All work is performed by Church volunteers and revise the performance of priesthood ordinances and sacraments; (3) extend CALLINGS to members to staff ward organizations; (4) administer the programs of the Church in the ward, conduct meetings and maintain order in the Church organization and structure; (5) manage the financial affairs of the ward (including receiving local donations to the Church and transferring funds to Church headquarters, and supervising all expenditures of Church funds); (6) oversee the care and protection of the ward meetinghouse and other ward physical facilities that the Church owns or leases; (7) carry out Church DISCIPLINARY PROCEDURES for serious violations of moral law and Church standards; (8) foster a sense of community among ward members, with a special emphasis on fellowshiping new members; and (9) encourage members to perform their religious responsibilities. Bishopries are requested to do whatever is needed to encourage Church participation and religious activity among all ward members.

The bishopric is responsible for calling and conducting all of the executive meetings of the ward, including a weekly bishopric meeting, a weekly priesthood executive committee meeting, and various meetings to plan and coordinate youth activities and train youth leaders. Bishopric members also divide responsibility and attend the leadership and training meetings of each AUXILIARY ORGANIZATION they supervise (see PRIMARY; RELIEF SOCIETY; SUNDAY SCHOOL; YOUNG MEN; YOUNG WOMEN).

After prayerfully considering recommendations from ward organization leaders who request members to serve in teaching, leadership, and other service callings, the bishopric decides whom to call, and issues the invitation to serve. The bishop delegates supervisory responsibility for the various auxiliary organizations, maintenance of membership records, receipting of financial contributions to the Church, and certain matters pertaining to Church education. The bishop cannot delegate such duties as counseling members involved in serious transgressions, convening disciplinary councils, presiding over the PRIEST quorum in the ward, performing civil marriages for members of the ward, and conducting TITHING settlement (an annual, personal report by ward members concerning the donations they have made).

The bishopric has the primary responsibility for developmental programs involving the youth in the ward. This entails promoting and attending activities for the youth, interviewing young men and women regularly, and overseeing the work of adults called to assist in teaching or planning activities. Activities are designed to provide youth with opportunities for recreation, service, and the application of religious principles to everyday life. The bishop focuses his efforts on the young men and women aged sixteen through eighteen, and assigns his counselors to work with youth aged twelve through thirteen and fourteen through fifteen. The bishop is to interview all young persons in the ward individually at least once each year (usually near their birthdays), and the counselors are to interview those twelve through sixteen years old at least annually. The bishop is the only member of the bishopric who discusses individual matters of personal worthiness with the youth.

Those who serve in a bishopric are expected to live with honesty, integrity, and devotion to their spiritual commitment. Their example of Christian service is essential to the quality of their influence among all ward members.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Hinckley, Gordon B. "To the Bishops of the Church." Ensign 18 (Nov. 1988):48-51.
- . "In . . . Counsellors There Is Safety." Ensign 20 (Nov. 1990):48-51.

DAVID C. BRADFORD

---

BISHOP'S STOREHOUSE

The bishop's storehouse system is a network of Church-owned and -operated commodity resource centers that function much like retail stores, with the major difference that goods cannot be purchased but are given to needy individuals whom local LDS bishops judge to be worthy and deserving of Church assistance. Recipients are invited to work or render service in various ways in exchange for goods to avoid allowing the goods given to be a form of dole.

The storehouse stocks basic food and essential household items, produced largely from Church agricultural properties, canneries, and light manufacturing operations. The entire system, where practical, is vertically integrated, from farming and harvesting through processing and distributing. All work is performed by Church volunteers and recipients and is largely independent of the commercial economy. The contribution of time, talents, and resources of the membership of the Church in various areas sustains the storehouse.

Between 1889 and 1898, little United States money was available in Utah. Many tithing storehouses of the Church paid workers and aided the poor by issuing notes payable in local goods and merchandise. This five-cent note, printed black on light pink in St. Louis, was issued by the Cache Stake, in Logan, Utah. Reprinted by permission from Alvin Rust, Mormon and Utah Coin and Currency (Salt Lake City, 1984).

The concept of the storehouse and the Church WELFARE SERVICES emerged from scriptural principles, elucidated by a series of revelations given to the Prophet Joseph SMITH beginning in 1831, a year after the Church was organized. In one revelation, Church members were directed to “remember the poor, and consecrate [their] properties for [the poor’s] support” (D&C 42:30). The goods and money thus contributed were to be “kept in [the Lord’s] storehouse, to administer to the poor and the needy” under the direction of the local presiding leader, the bishop (verse 34). Bishops were charged to seek donations as well (D&C 104:15–16; Welfare Services Resource Handbook, p. 9).

As defined by Church doctrine, the concept of the bishop’s storehouse is founded on the belief that members of the Church should care for themselves and for each other. This is done, first, in families and, second, through the Church. Members are discouraged from seeking assistance from governmental or other social agencies.

The implementation of the mutual help program has varied considerably according to the economic conditions of the members and the organizational structure of the Church. At various times, distribution of goods has occurred through bishops, tithing offices, or bishop’s storehouses. Utilization of the storehouse concept received intense emphasis during the UNITED ORDER effort of the 1870s. From that time forward, most WARDS maintained their own storehouse until the introduction of regional storehouses (1934–1936). Storehouses figured prominently in the Church’s effort to care for its people during the economic depression of the 1930s and formed the basis for a more systematic approach to shared assistance.

After World War II, the Church welfare system, centered in the storehouse, evolved into an integrated and complex Church-wide production and distribution system. A higher level of coordination between welfare farms, dairies, and canneries was established, and a wider range of goods became available. The Church established central storehouses to supply regional storehouses. In the 1970s, with the maturing of the storehouse system, the Church selectively introduced local production and storehouses in areas outside the United States where need and resources warranted. The storehouse system is also available for assistance in cases of disaster (see CALAMITIES AND DISASTERS; EMERGENCY PREPAREDNESS).

Food and many other necessities are given to needy members, upon recommendation of a local bishop, from over 110 Bishop’s Storehouse facilities.

Presently, the entire Bishop's Storehouse Resource System operates with efficiency and quality equal to commercial commodity activities, but maintains its spirit of volunteer service and local administration. While the bishop's storehouse system effectively assists thousands of people every year with material necessities, its additional value lies in the character development and spiritual growth of both givers and receivers.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Arrington, Leonard J. Great Basin Kingdom. Cambridge, Mass., 1958.
- ; Feramorz Y. Fox; and Dean L. May. Building the City of God, pp. 337–58. Salt Lake City, 1976.
- Cook, Lyndon W. Joseph Smith and the Law of Consecration. Provo, Utah, 1985.
- Stewart, George; Dilworth Walker; and E. Cecil McGavin. Priesthood and Church Welfare, 2nd ed. pp. 49–61. Salt Lake City, 1939.
- Welfare Services Resource Handbook*. Salt Lake City, 1980.

R. QUINN GARDNER

BLACKS

The history of black membership in The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints can be divided between the era from 1830 to June 1978 and the period since then.

HISTORY. Though few in number, blacks have been attracted to the Church since its organization. Early converts (such as Elijah Abel) joined during the 1830s; others (such as Jane Manning James) joined after the Saints moved to Illinois. Among those who came to Utah as pioneers were Green Flake, who drove Brigham Young's wagon into the Salt Lake Valley; and Samuel Chambers, who joined in Virginia as a slave and went west after being freed. Throughout the twentieth century, small numbers of blacks continued to join the Church, such as the Sargent family of Carolina County, Virginia, who joined in 1906; Len and Mary Hope, who joined in Alabama during the 1920s; Ruffin Bridgeforth, a railroad worker in Utah, converted in 1953; and Helvécio Martins, a black Brazilian businessman, baptized in 1972 (he became a GENERAL AUTHORITY in 1990). These members remained committed to their testimonies and Church activities even though during this period prior to 1978 black members could not hold the PRIESTHOOD or participate in TEMPLE ORDINANCES.

The reasons for these restrictions have not been revealed. Church leaders and members have explained them in different ways over time. Although several blacks were ordained to the priesthood in the 1830s, there is no evidence that Joseph Smith authorized new ordinations in the 1840s, and between 1847 and 1852 Church leaders maintained that blacks should be denied the priesthood

Samuel D. Chambers (1831–1929) and his wife Amanda Leggroan (c. 1908). Chambers was converted in Mississippi in 1844 and came to Utah in 1870 after the Civil War. For eighty-five years he was faithful and loyal to the Church. He served joyfully and was deeply respected.

nation between welfare farms, dairies, and canneries was established, and a wider range of goods became available. The Church established central storehouses to supply regional storehouses. In the 1970s, with the maturing of the storehouse system, the Church selectively introduced local production and storehouses in areas outside the United States where need and resources warranted. The storehouse system is also available for assistance in cases of disaster (see CALAMITIES AND DISASTERS; EMERGENCY PREPAREDNESS).

Presently, the entire Bishop's Storehouse Resource System operates with efficiency and quality equal to commercial commodity activities, but maintains its spirit of volunteer service and local administration. While the bishop's storehouse system effectively assists thousands of people every year with material necessities, its additional value lies in the character development and spiritual growth of both givers and receivers.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Arrington, Leonard J. Great Basin Kingdom. Cambridge, Mass., 1958.
- ; Feramorz Y. Fox; and Dean L. May. Building the City of God, pp. 337–58. Salt Lake City, 1976.
- Cook, Lyndon W. Joseph Smith and the Law of Consecration. Provo, Utah, 1985.
- Stewart, George; Dilworth Walker; and E. Cecil McGavin. Priesthood and Church Welfare, 2nd ed. pp. 49–61. Salt Lake City, 1939.
- Welfare Services Resource Handbook*. Salt Lake City, 1980.

R. QUINN GARDNER

BLACKS

The history of black membership in The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints can be divided between the era from 1830 to June 1978 and the period since then.

HISTORY. Though few in number, blacks have been attracted to the Church since its organization. Early converts (such as Elijah Abel) joined during the 1830s; others (such as Jane Manning James) joined after the Saints moved to Illinois. Among those who came to Utah as pioneers were Green Flake, who drove Brigham Young's wagon into the Salt Lake Valley; and Samuel Chambers, who joined in Virginia as a slave and went west after being freed. Throughout the twentieth century, small numbers of blacks continued to join the Church, such as the Sargent family of Carolina County, Virginia, who joined in 1906; Len and Mary Hope, who joined in Alabama during the 1920s; Ruffin Bridgeforth, a railroad worker in Utah, converted in 1953; and Helvécio Martins, a black Brazilian businessman, baptized in 1972 (he became a GENERAL AUTHORITY in 1990). These members remained committed to their testimonies and Church activities even though during this period prior to 1978 black members could not hold the PRIESTHOOD or participate in TEMPLE ORDINANCES.

The reasons for these restrictions have not been revealed. Church leaders and members have explained them in different ways over time. Although several blacks were ordained to the priesthood in the 1830s, there is no evidence that Joseph Smith authorized new ordinations in the 1840s, and between 1847 and 1852 Church leaders maintained that blacks should be denied the priesthood

Samuel D. Chambers (1831–1929) and his wife Amanda Leggroan (c. 1908). Chambers was converted in Mississippi in 1844 and came to Utah in 1870 after the Civil War. For eighty-five years he was faithful and loyal to the Church. He served joyfully and was deeply respected.

because of their lineage. According to the BOOK OF ABRAHAM (now part of the PEARL OF GREAT PRICE), the descendants of Cain were to be denied the priesthood of God (Abr. 1:23–26). Some Latter-day Saints theorized that blacks would be restricted throughout mortality. As early as 1852, however, Brigham Young said that the “time will come when they will have the privilege of all we have the privilege of and more” (Brigham Young Papers, Church Archives, Feb. 5, 1852), and increasingly in the 1960s, Presidents of the Church taught that denial of entry to the priesthood was a current commandment of God, but would not prevent blacks from eventually possessing all eternal blessings.

Missionaries avoided proselytizing blacks, and General Authorities decided not to send missionaries to Africa, much of the Caribbean, or other regions inhabited by large populations of blacks. Before World War II, only German-speaking missionaries were sent to Brazil, where they sought out German immigrants. When government war regulations curtailed proselytizing among Germans, missionary work was expanded to include Portuguese-speaking Brazilians. Determining genealogically who was to be granted and who denied the priesthood became increasingly a sensitive and complex issue.

During the civil rights era in the United States, denial of the priesthood to blacks drew increasing criticism, culminating in athletic boycotts of Brigham Young University, threatened lawsuits, and public condemnation of the Church in the late 1960s. When questioned about the Church and blacks, Church officials stated that removal of the priesthood restriction would require revelation from God—not policy changes by men.

RECENT DEVELOPMENTS. On June 9, 1978, President Spencer W. KIMBALL announced the revelation that all worthy males could hold the priesthood (see DOCTRINE AND COVENANTS: DECLARATION 2). Following this official revelation, proselytizing was expanded worldwide to include people of African descent. Between 1977 and 1987, Church membership grew from 3,969,000 to 6,440,000, an increase of 62 percent. Because LDS membership records do not identify race, it is impossible to measure accurately the growth of black membership, except in areas where people are largely or exclusively of African descent. In the Caribbean, excepting Puerto Rico, membership grew from 836 to 18,614 and in Brazil from 51,000 to 250,000 during that decade.

In other areas of Latin America, such as Colombia and Venezuela, increasing numbers of blacks also joined the Church. In Europe, blacks, including African immigrants to Portugal, joined the Church. Moreover, in Ghana, Nigeria, and throughout west and central Africa, missionary work expanded at a phenomenal rate. Excluding South Africa, where the membership was predominantly white, membership grew from 136 in 1977 to 14,347 in 1988, almost all in west Africa (see AFRICA, THE CHURCH IN).

The LDS Afro-American Oral History Project, conducted by the Charles Redd Center for Western Studies at Brigham Young University, demonstrated the increasing number of black members in the United States. Through interviews with black Latter-day Saints throughout the country, a symposium on LDS Afro-Americans held at Brigham Young University, and responses to a mailed survey, a more reliable flow of data was generated about the thoughts, feelings, convictions, and experiences of LDS Afro-Americans. The study found that within the Church Afro-Americans experience both high acceptance and, paradoxically, cultural miscommunications. For example, in response to the survey, 81 percent felt their future as blacks in the Church was hopeful. They explained that they experienced more social interactions and more meaningful relationships with Church members of all races, especially whites. At the same time, however, 46 percent said white members were not aware of the “needs and problems of black members.” Some felt a lack of fellowship as well as economic and racial prejudice from white members.

Black Latter-day Saints are a nonhomogeneous mix of various “kindreds, tongues, and peoples” emerging from thousands of years of unprecedented religious and cultural exclusions. As with LDS Afro-Americans, many black members outside the United States encounter contrasting circumstances of full ecclesiastical involvement, on the one hand, and general Church ignorance of their respective cultures, on the other hand. Local leaders and members (primarily white Latter-day Saints) often lack a good working knowledge of black members’ needs, concerns, and circumstances. Despite the 1978 priesthood revelation and expanded missionary work among blacks, unexplored challenges to their growth and retention remain in counterpoint to their happiness with priesthood inclusion.

Helvécio Martins, from Brazil, sustained as a General Authority on March 31, 1990.

Despite the cultural miscommunications that remain, black Latter-day Saints enjoy opportunities in all phases of Church activity, including missionary work, quorum leadership, BISHOPRICS, and STAKE PRESIDENCIES, along with other members. The first entirely black African stake was organized in 1988. Indeed, black Latter-day Saints may be an LDS historical enigma that has emerged as a prime example of success in LDS brotherhood and sisterhood.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Brigham, Newell G. Saints, Slaves, and Blacks. Westport, Conn., 1981.
- Carter, Kate B. "The Negro Pioneer." In Our Pioneer Heritage, Vol. 8, pp. 497–580. Salt Lake City, 1965.

Embry, Jessie L. "Separate but Equal? Black Branches, Genesis Groups, or Integrated Wards?" Dialogue 23 (Spring 1990):11–37.

LDS Afro-American Oral History Project. Brigham Young University, Provo, Utah, 1985–1988.

ALAN CHERRY
JESSIE L. EMBRY

BLASPHEMY

Blasphemy denotes sacrilegious actions, speech, or thoughts that mock or revile God. A person blasphemes who, understanding the gravity of this behavior, willfully belittles or maligns God, the Godhead, or that which is of them, such as the commandments, covenants, ordinances, revelation, scriptures, and prophets.

Under the LAW OF MOSES, blasphemy—understood anciently to be mainly the unauthorized uttering of the ineffable name of Jehovah (YHWH)—was a heinous offense punishable by stoning (Ex. 20:7; Lev. 24:10–16). Charges of blasphemy figure twice in the Book of Mormon—in Sherem's false accusations against Jacob (Jacob 7:7) and in Korihor's insolent speech before the chief judge (Alma 30:30). In these cases, and generally, blasphemy embraced many forms of impiety, whether directed against God, against his servants (Acts 13:45), against the king (1 Kgs. 21:10), or in some cases against holy places or things, including the law (Acts 6:13). However, when blasphemies were spoken in relative ignorance, the gift of mercy could mitigate the requirements of justice (1 Tim. 1:13).

If a person with spiritual knowledge intentionally blasphemes God or the divine, the sin is most serious. For those who have entered into the NEW AND EVERLASTING COVENANT, blasphemy in extreme form is a sin against the HOLY GHOST wherein one assents anew unto the death of Christ and the shedding of his innocent blood. This is called the UNPARDONABLE SIN against the Holy Ghost (Matt. 12:31–32; D&C 132:27).

Emphasizing the gravity of the sin of blasphemy for those who claim to be his followers, Christ revealed that when he comes to purge the world he will commence with those "who have professed to know my name and have not known me, and have blasphemed against me in the midst of my house" (D&C 112:26).

Helvécio Martins, from Brazil, sustained as a General Authority on March 31, 1990.

and expanded missionary work among blacks, unexplored challenges to their growth and retention remain in counterpoint to their happiness with priesthood inclusion.

Despite the cultural miscommunications that remain, black Latter-day Saints enjoy opportunities in all phases of Church activity, including missionary work, quorum leadership, BISHOPRICS, and STAKE PRESIDENCIES, along with other members. The first entirely black African stake was organized in 1988. Indeed, black Latter-day Saints may be an LDS historical enigma that has emerged as a prime example of success in LDS brotherhood and sisterhood.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Brigham, Newell G. Saints, Slaves, and Blacks. Westport, Conn., 1981.
- Carter, Kate B. "The Negro Pioneer." In Our Pioneer Heritage, Vol. 8, pp. 497–580. Salt Lake City, 1965.

Embry, Jessie L. "Separate but Equal? Black Branches, Genesis Groups, or Integrated Wards?" Dialogue 23 (Spring 1990):11–37.

LDS Afro-American Oral History Project. Brigham Young University, Provo, Utah, 1985–1988.

ALAN CHERRY
JESSIE L. EMBRY

BLASPHEMY

Blasphemy denotes sacrilegious actions, speech, or thoughts that mock or revile God. A person blasphemes who, understanding the gravity of this behavior, willfully belittles or maligns God, the Godhead, or that which is of them, such as the commandments, covenants, ordinances, revelation, scriptures, and prophets.

Under the LAW OF MOSES, blasphemy—understood anciently to be mainly the unauthorized uttering of the ineffable name of Jehovah (YHWH)—was a heinous offense punishable by stoning (Ex. 20:7; Lev. 24:10–16). Charges of blasphemy figure twice in the Book of Mormon—in Sherem's false accusations against Jacob (Jacob 7:7) and in Korihor's insolent speech before the chief judge (Alma 30:30). In these cases, and generally, blasphemy embraced many forms of impiety, whether directed against God, against his servants (Acts 13:45), against the king (1 Kgs. 21:10), or in some cases against holy places or things, including the law (Acts 6:13). However, when blasphemies were spoken in relative ignorance, the gift of mercy could mitigate the requirements of justice (1 Tim. 1:13).

If a person with spiritual knowledge intentionally blasphemes God or the divine, the sin is most serious. For those who have entered into the NEW AND EVERLASTING COVENANT, blasphemy in extreme form is a sin against the HOLY GHOST wherein one assents anew unto the death of Christ and the shedding of his innocent blood. This is called the UNPARDONABLE SIN against the Holy Ghost (Matt. 12:31–32; D&C 132:27).

Emphasizing the gravity of the sin of blasphemy for those who claim to be his followers, Christ revealed that when he comes to purge the world he will commence with those "who have professed to know my name and have not known me, and have blasphemed against me in the midst of my house" (D&C 112:26).

Latter-day Saints are to refrain from blasphemy and the taking of the name of God in vain. Profanity and acrimony diminish spirituality and must be avoided: "But now ye also put off all these; anger, wrath, malice, blasphemy, filthy communication out of your mouth" (Col. 3:8). People are not defiled, Jesus emphasized, by what goes into the mouth, but by what comes from the heart: "For out of the heart proceed evil thoughts, murders, adulteries, fornications, thefts, false witness, blasphemies" (Matt. 15:19). Accordingly, Latter-day Saints are enjoined to avoid all forms of evil speaking of God, of the Lord's anointed, and, by implication, of all that is his, for "in nothing doth man offend God, or against none is his wrath kindled, save those who confess not his hand in all things, and obey not his commandments" (D&C 59:21).

[See also Profanity.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Hinckley, Gordon B. "Take Not the Name of God in Vain." Ensign 17 (Nov. 1987):44–48.

GARY L. BROWNING

---

BLESSING ON FOOD

Blessings on food are prayers to thank God for providing sustenance and to ask his blessings both on the food and on those who share it. In Mormon homes such blessings precede each meal and may be given by any member of a dining party, adult or child. In private these prayers are spoken orally, but may be spoken silently by individuals dining in public. All blessings on the food are addressed to God in the name of Jesus Christ. They are spoken from the heart as there is no prescribed prayer.

Latter-day Saints follow the patterns established by Christ and his disciples in blessings on food. When feeding the multitudes, Christ gave thanks for sustenance (Matt. 15:35–36) and blessed it (Matt. 14:19). Paul taught that food was to be received with prayer and thanksgiving (1 Tim. 4:3–5).

Biblical examples of praying over food are the basis for the Jewish, Catholic, and Protestant traditions of blessings on food or saying grace. Converts to Mormonism tended to continue these traditions from their prior faiths, and to be bolstered by the Latter-day Saint instruction on prayer: All things are to be done "with prayer and thanksgiving." Food and all "good things which come of the earth . . . are made for the benefit and the use of man, both to please the eye and to gladden the heart, . . . to strengthen the body and enliven the soul . . . . And in nothing doth man offend God, or against none is his wrath kindled, save those who confess not his hand in all things" (D&C 59:7, 17–19, 21).

Petitioning God for blessings on the food to be eaten is typical of Mormon table blessings. This may include requests for nourishment and good health, for strength to do one's work and God's will and to be of service. Other blessings on the diners or on those who prepared the meal are also deemed appropriate.

In many cultures, breaking bread or sharing a meal with others is an act of hospitality. According to Latter-day scripture such sharing may also be a foretaste of the future Messianic banquet (D&C 58:8). Because family meals provide opportunities for sharing the deepest spiritual concerns and rejoicings, it is especially appropriate to begin such occasions with prayer and the invocation of the Spirit. In LDS families this prayer is customarily spoken at the beginning of the meal only, and not also following the meal, as is the custom among some people of other religions. Because there is no prescribed form for Latter-day Saint blessings on food, such blessings enable families daily to express their own feelings, thoughts, and words in intimate prayer and fellowship two or three times a day.

CHRISTINE QUINN CHRISTENSEN

---

BLESSINGS

The term "blessings" is used in two different ways in The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. In a broad traditional sense as used in many cultures, the word applies to all good things that come in a person's life—the wonders of nature, the joys of family, the benefits of liberty and education—anything and everything that enriches life. Such blessings are often pointed to as a manifestation of God's love for his children. Latter-day Saint writings are interspersed with this usage. In more specific terminology, blessings refer to ORDINANCES performed under PRIESTHOOD AUTHORITY.

A PRIESTHOOD BLESSING may be given only

Latter-day Saints are to refrain from blasphemy and the taking of the name of God in vain. Profanity and acrimony diminish spirituality and must be avoided: “But now ye also put off all these; anger, wrath, malice, blasphemy, filthy communication out of your mouth” (Col. 3:8). People are not defiled, Jesus emphasized, by what goes into the mouth, but by what comes from the heart: “For out of the heart proceed evil thoughts, murders, adulteries, fornications, thefts, false witness, blasphemies” (Matt. 15:19). Accordingly, Latter-day Saints are enjoined to avoid all forms of evil speaking of God, of the Lord’s anointed, and, by implication, of all that is his, for “in nothing doth man offend God, or against none is his wrath kindled, save those who confess not his hand in all things, and obey not his commandments” (D&C 59:21).

[See also Profanity.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Hinckley, Gordon B. “Take Not the Name of God in Vain.” Ensign 17 (Nov. 1987):44–48.

GARY L. BROWNING

---

BLESSING ON FOOD

Blessings on food are prayers to thank God for providing sustenance and to ask his blessings both on the food and on those who share it. In Mormon homes such blessings precede each meal and may be given by any member of a dining party, adult or child. In private these prayers are spoken orally, but may be spoken silently by individuals dining in public. All blessings on the food are addressed to God in the name of Jesus Christ. They are spoken from the heart as there is no prescribed prayer.

Latter-day Saints follow the patterns established by Christ and his disciples in blessings on food. When feeding the multitudes, Christ gave thanks for sustenance (Matt. 15:35–36) and blessed it (Matt. 14:19). Paul taught that food was to be received with prayer and thanksgiving (1 Tim. 4:3–5).

Biblical examples of praying over food are the basis for the Jewish, Catholic, and Protestant traditions of blessings on food or saying grace. Converts to Mormonism tended to continue these traditions from their prior faiths, and to be bolstered by the Latter-day Saint instruction on prayer: All things are to be done “with prayer and thanksgiving.” Food and all “good things which come of the earth . . . are made for the benefit and the use of man, both to please the eye and to gladden the heart, . . . to strengthen the body and enliven the soul . . . . And in nothing doth man offend God, or against none is his wrath kindled, save those who confess not his hand in all things” (D&C 59:7, 17–19, 21).

Petitioning God for blessings on the food to be eaten is typical of Mormon table blessings. This may include requests for nourishment and good health, for strength to do one’s work and God’s will and to be of service. Other blessings on the diners or on those who prepared the meal are also deemed appropriate.

In many cultures, breaking bread or sharing a meal with others is an act of hospitality. According to Latter-day scripture such sharing may also be a foretaste of the future Messianic banquet (D&C 58:8). Because family meals provide opportunities for sharing the deepest spiritual concerns and rejoicings, it is especially appropriate to begin such occasions with prayer and the invocation of the Spirit. In LDS families this prayer is customarily spoken at the beginning of the meal only, and not also following the meal, as is the custom among some people of other religions. Because there is no prescribed form for Latter-day Saint blessings on food, such blessings enable families daily to express their own feelings, thoughts, and words in intimate prayer and fellowship two or three times a day.

CHRISTINE QUINN CHRISTENSEN

---

BLESSINGS

The term “blessings” is used in two different ways in The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. In a broad traditional sense as used in many cultures, the word applies to all good things that come in a person’s life—the wonders of nature, the joys of family, the benefits of liberty and education—anything and everything that enriches life. Such blessings are often pointed to as a manifestation of God’s love for his children. Latter-day Saint writings are interspersed with this usage. In more specific terminology, blessings refer to ORDINANCES performed under PRIESTHOOD AUTHORITY.

A PRIESTHOOD BLESSING may be given only

Latter-day Saints are to refrain from blasphemy and the taking of the name of God in vain. Profanity and acrimony diminish spirituality and must be avoided: “But now ye also put off all these; anger, wrath, malice, blasphemy, filthy communication out of your mouth” (Col. 3:8). People are not defiled, Jesus emphasized, by what goes into the mouth, but by what comes from the heart: “For out of the heart proceed evil thoughts, murders, adulteries, fornications, thefts, false witness, blasphemies” (Matt. 15:19). Accordingly, Latter-day Saints are enjoined to avoid all forms of evil speaking of God, of the Lord’s anointed, and, by implication, of all that is his, for “in nothing doth man offend God, or against none is his wrath kindled, save those who confess not his hand in all things, and obey not his commandments” (D&C 59:21).

[See also Profanity.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Hinckley, Gordon B. “Take Not the Name of God in Vain.” Ensign 17 (Nov. 1987):44–48.

GARY L. BROWNING

---

BLESSING ON FOOD

Blessings on food are prayers to thank God for providing sustenance and to ask his blessings both on the food and on those who share it. In Mormon homes such blessings precede each meal and may be given by any member of a dining party, adult or child. In private these prayers are spoken orally, but may be spoken silently by individuals dining in public. All blessings on the food are addressed to God in the name of Jesus Christ. They are spoken from the heart as there is no prescribed prayer.

Latter-day Saints follow the patterns established by Christ and his disciples in blessings on food. When feeding the multitudes, Christ gave thanks for sustenance (Matt. 15:35–36) and blessed it (Matt. 14:19). Paul taught that food was to be received with prayer and thanksgiving (1 Tim. 4:3–5).

Biblical examples of praying over food are the basis for the Jewish, Catholic, and Protestant traditions of blessings on food or saying grace. Converts to Mormonism tended to continue these traditions from their prior faiths, and to be bolstered by the Latter-day Saint instruction on prayer: All things are to be done “with prayer and thanksgiving.” Food and all “good things which come of the earth . . . are made for the benefit and the use of man, both to please the eye and to gladden the heart, . . . to strengthen the body and enliven the soul . . . . And in nothing doth man offend God, or against none is his wrath kindled, save those who confess not his hand in all things” (D&C 59:7, 17–19, 21).

Petitioning God for blessings on the food to be eaten is typical of Mormon table blessings. This may include requests for nourishment and good health, for strength to do one’s work and God’s will and to be of service. Other blessings on the diners or on those who prepared the meal are also deemed appropriate.

In many cultures, breaking bread or sharing a meal with others is an act of hospitality. According to Latter-day scripture such sharing may also be a foretaste of the future Messianic banquet (D&C 58:8). Because family meals provide opportunities for sharing the deepest spiritual concerns and rejoicings, it is especially appropriate to begin such occasions with prayer and the invocation of the Spirit. In LDS families this prayer is customarily spoken at the beginning of the meal only, and not also following the meal, as is the custom among some people of other religions. Because there is no prescribed form for Latter-day Saint blessings on food, such blessings enable families daily to express their own feelings, thoughts, and words in intimate prayer and fellowship two or three times a day.

CHRISTINE QUINN CHRISTENSEN

---

BLESSINGS

The term “blessings” is used in two different ways in The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. In a broad traditional sense as used in many cultures, the word applies to all good things that come in a person’s life—the wonders of nature, the joys of family, the benefits of liberty and education—anything and everything that enriches life. Such blessings are often pointed to as a manifestation of God’s love for his children. Latter-day Saint writings are interspersed with this usage. In more specific terminology, blessings refer to ORDINANCES performed under PRIESTHOOD AUTHORITY.

A PRIESTHOOD BLESSING may be given only by those who have been ordained to the MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOOD. In the Church, most boys at the age of twelve have the AARONIC PRIESTHOOD conferred upon them and are ordained to the office of DEACON. At age fourteen, they are usually ordained TEACHERS, and at age sixteen, PRIESTS. If the priesthood bearer continues to show faithfulness and worthiness, then at age eighteen, or anytime thereafter, he may receive the Melchizedek Priesthood with ordination to the priesthood office of ELDER. An elder in the Melchizedek Priesthood has authority to perform most priesthood functions in the Church, including giving priesthood blessings.

Each priesthood ordination, from deacon to apostle, is a type of priesthood blessing and is characterized, as are all priesthood blessings, by (1) the LAYING-ON OF HANDS by those in authority, (2) an invocation of the authority of the priesthood and the name of Jesus Christ, and (3) such words of blessing as follow the impressions of the Spirit.

This third element, that of spiritual impressions, is vital for any priesthood blessing. A fundamental doctrine of the Church is a belief that a worthy priesthood bearer, when giving a priesthood blessing, will receive promptings from the HOLY SPIRIT regarding what is to be spoken—not necessarily the exact words, but ideas or thoughts that he will then express as clearly as he can in his own words. This is the essence of a priesthood blessing, and distinguishes it from a PRAYER. A prayer seeks to communicate with God, either vocally or silently, and is rooted in the faith that God will hear the words or the thoughts and feelings and then, in his infinite wisdom and power, will respond. A priesthood blessing is based on trust that the priesthood holder, while speaking the blessing, will receive spiritual promptings regarding what is to be spoken and thus his words represent the will of God.

In the Church, formal priesthood blessings include the following:

BLESSING OF CHILDREN. When babies are just a few weeks old, they are usually given a priesthood blessing for the special purpose of conferring a name by which the baby will be known and bestowing promises based on spiritual impressions regarding the baby's future life. A quality of prophecy attends this process. If a baby's father is a worthy holder of the Melchizedek Priesthood, he will usually pronounce the blessing, but it may be given by a grandfather, a family friend, or any other qualified priesthood holder chosen by the baby's parents. Babies are usually blessed in the presence of the congregation at a FAST AND TESTIMONY MEETING. However, the blessing may be given at other times and places, such as in a hospital or home, if there is a special need.

CONFIRMATION FOLLOWING BAPTISM. Two ordinances are required for admission to Church MEMBERSHIP. The first is BAPTISM. The second, CONFIRMATION, is performed shortly following baptism and is a type of priesthood blessing. Two or more men who hold the Melchizedek Priesthood place their hands on the head of the person who has been baptized and, with one of the men serving as voice, the baptized person is confirmed a member of the Church and given the GIFT OF THE HOLY GHOST. Additional words of counsel or admonition are then expressed according to spiritual promptings.

SETTING APART TO CHURCH ASSIGNMENTS. Customarily, whenever any person is called to serve as a teacher or officer in any of the Church organizations, and always when a person is called to be a MISSIONARY or TEMPLE worker, persons holding proper priesthood authority place their hands on the person's head and the individual is set apart to the assignment. One of the priesthood bearers pronounces the blessing and expresses whatever counsel or thoughts he is impressed to say.

ADMINISTERING TO THE SICK. Blessings of health or comfort are given to one who is sick or injured. Two Melchizedek Priesthood men normally give this blessing in accord with James 5:14. The head of the sick person is anointed with a few drops of olive oil consecrated for this purpose. The two priesthood bearers then gently place their hands on the head of the afflicted person and the one sealing the anointing expresses promises of healing or comfort as he is impressed. Many incidents of dramatic and even miraculous healings have been recorded in Church history. Any worthy Melchizedek Priesthood bearer, when requested, may give such a blessing.

PATRIARCHAL BLESSINGS. Each organized STAKE in the Church has one or more PATRIARCHS called to give patriarchal blessings to stake members. Normally this blessing is given just once in a person's life, usually when a person is young, most often in the teenage years. However, the blessing may be given at any age from childhood to advanced years. The patriarchal blessing is a lifetime blessing of guidance, warning, encouragement, and reassurance. Men serving as patriarchs are spiritually mature high priests in the Melchizedek Priesthood who have been ordained especially for the sacred CALLING of giving patriarchal blessings.

FATHER'S AND HUSBAND'S BLESSINGS. Every Melchizedek Priesthood bearer who is a husband or father has the authority, through worthiness, to give a priesthood blessing on special occasions or in times of special need to members of his family—a husband's blessing to his wife or a father's blessing to a son or daughter. Such blessings may be suggested by the husband or father or requested by the one desiring the blessing. They are blessings of love, counsel, and encouragement. Like all priesthood blessings, these are given by the laying on of hands on the head of the one receiving the blessing.

SPECIAL BLESSINGS OF COUNSEL AND COMFORT. All priesthood officers in the Church, from GENERAL AUTHORITIES through STAKE PRESIDENCIES and WARD BISHOPRICS to home teachers, have authority to give blessings of counsel or comfort to Church members within their jurisdiction. These are official priesthood blessings given in the same manner and with similar spiritual promptings as other priesthood blessings. Persons desiring such a blessing usually request it of one of the local priesthood officers in the area where they reside.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Brockbank, Bernard P. Commandments and Promises of God. Salt Lake City, 1983.
 Kimball, Spencer W. Faith Precedes the Miracle. Salt Lake City, 1972.
 McKay, David O. Gospel Ideals. Salt Lake City, 1976.
 Monson, Thomas A. Pathways to Perfection. Salt Lake City, 1973.

BRUCE B. CLARK

BLIND, MATERIALS FOR THE

During his earthly ministry, Jesus was always sensitive to individuals and their personal needs. He paid particular attention to those with handicaps

In 1941, Helen Keller was given a Braille copy of the Book of Mormon by President Heber J. Grant in the president's office. The Church produces a wide variety of materials for the blind. Courtesy University of Utah.

and healed many of their infirmities (e.g., Matt. 11:5). Today, The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints teaches similar sensitivity to people with special needs.

Since 1904, the Church has produced gospel materials for the blind and the visually impaired, and now all such people may obtain these materials in a wide variety of helpful formats.

Access to printed material is often inadequate for the visually impaired. To help overcome this lack, the Church produces materials on audiocassettes, in Braille, and in large-print versions. Audiocassettes are available at both standard and half-speed. Half-speed cassettes require the type of slow-speed cassette player that the Library of Congress lends to visually impaired persons in the United States.

The Church provides the scriptures on audiocassettes, in large type, and in Braille. It also produces courses of study and selected Church books in Braille and on audiocassettes. The words to Church hymns are available in Braille and on recordings.

often in the teenage years. However, the blessing may be given at any age from childhood to advanced years. The patriarchal blessing is a lifetime blessing of guidance, warning, encouragement, and reassurance. Men serving as patriarchs are spiritually mature high priests in the Melchizedek Priesthood who have been ordained especially for the sacred CALLING of giving patriarchal blessings.

FATHER'S AND HUSBAND'S BLESSINGS. Every Melchizedek Priesthood bearer who is a husband or father has the authority, through worthiness, to give a priesthood blessing on special occasions or in times of special need to members of his family—a husband's blessing to his wife or a father's blessing to a son or daughter. Such blessings may be suggested by the husband or father or requested by the one desiring the blessing. They are blessings of love, counsel, and encouragement. Like all priesthood blessings, these are given by the laying on of hands on the head of the one receiving the blessing.

SPECIAL BLESSINGS OF COUNSEL AND COMFORT. All priesthood officers in the Church, from GENERAL AUTHORITIES through STAKE PRESIDENCIES and WARD BISHOPRICS to home teachers, have authority to give blessings of counsel or comfort to Church members within their jurisdiction. These are official priesthood blessings given in the same manner and with similar spiritual promptings as other priesthood blessings. Persons desiring such a blessing usually request it of one of the local priesthood officers in the area where they reside.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Brockbank, Bernard P. Commandments and Promises of God. Salt Lake City, 1983.
 Kimball, Spencer W. Faith Precedes the Miracle. Salt Lake City, 1972.
 McKay, David O. Gospel Ideals. Salt Lake City, 1976.
 Monson, Thomas A. Pathways to Perfection. Salt Lake City, 1973.

BRUCE B. CLARK

BLIND, MATERIALS FOR THE

During his earthly ministry, Jesus was always sensitive to individuals and their personal needs. He paid particular attention to those with handicaps

In 1941, Helen Keller was given a Braille copy of the Book of Mormon by President Heber J. Grant in the president's office. The Church produces a wide variety of materials for the blind. Courtesy University of Utah.

and healed many of their infirmities (e.g., Matt. 11:5). Today, The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints teaches similar sensitivity to people with special needs.

Since 1904, the Church has produced gospel materials for the blind and the visually impaired, and now all such people may obtain these materials in a wide variety of helpful formats.

Access to printed material is often inadequate for the visually impaired. To help overcome this lack, the Church produces materials on audiocassettes, in Braille, and in large-print versions. Audiocassettes are available at both standard and half-speed. Half-speed cassettes require the type of slow-speed cassette player that the Library of Congress lends to visually impaired persons in the United States.

The Church provides the scriptures on audiocassettes, in large type, and in Braille. It also produces courses of study and selected Church books in Braille and on audiocassettes. The words to Church hymns are available in Braille and on recordings.

The Ensign magazine and selections from the New Era and Friend magazines are recorded on half-speed, four-track audiocassettes each month and mailed as the Ensign Talking Book to several thousand subscribers worldwide. The FIRST PRESIDENCY Message and the Friend are also produced in Braille each month.

JOSIAH W. DOUGLAS

---

BLOOD ATONEMENT

The doctrines of the Church affirm that the ATONEMENT wrought by the shedding of the blood of Jesus Christ, the Son of God, is efficacious for the sins of all who believe, repent, are baptized by one having authority, and receive the Holy Ghost by the laying on of hands. However, if a person thereafter commits a grievous sin such as the shedding of innocent blood, the Savior's sacrifice alone will not absolve the person of the consequences of the sin. Only by voluntarily submitting to whatever penalty the Lord may require can that person benefit from the atonement of Christ.

Several early Church leaders, most notably Brigham YOUNG, taught that in a complete theocracy the Lord could require the voluntary shedding of a murderer's blood—presumably by CAPITAL PUNISHMENT—as part of the process of atonement for such grievous sin. This was referred to as “blood atonement.” Since such a theocracy has not been operative in modern times, the practical effect of the idea was its use as a rhetorical device to heighten the awareness of Latter-day Saints of the seriousness of murder and other major sins. This view is not a doctrine of the Church and has never been practiced by the Church at any time.

Early anti-Mormon writers charged that under Brigham Young the Church practiced “blood atonement,” by which they meant Church-instigated violence directed at dissenters, enemies, and strangers. This claim distorted the whole idea of blood atonement—which was based on voluntary submission by an offender—into a supposed justification of involuntary punishment. Occasional isolated acts of violence that occurred in areas where Latter-day Saints lived were typical of that period in the history of the American West, but they were not instances of Church-sanctioned blood atonement.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- McConkie, Bruce R. “Blood Atonement Doctrine.” In Mormon Doctrine, 2nd ed. Salt Lake City, 1966.
- Penrose, Charles W. Blood Atonement, As Taught by Leading Elders of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Salt Lake City, 1884.
- Peterson, Paul H. “The Mormon Reformation,” pp. 176–99. Ph.D. diss., Brigham Young University, 1981.
- Smith, Joseph Fielding. “The Doctrine of Blood Atonement.” In Answers to Gospel Questions, Vol. 1, pp. 180–91. Salt Lake City, 1957.

LOWELL M. SNOW

---

BLOOD TRANSFUSIONS

Although there are references in scripture to the sacredness of blood, the Church does not hold that any scripture or revelation prohibits giving or receiving blood or blood products, such as gamma globulin, the antihemophilic factor, and antibodies through transfusion or injection, and it is therefore not opposed to its members engaging in such practices. In fact, individual wards sometimes have blood drives to increase a supply on hand when a ward member might need a transfusion. The Church, however, leaves the decision of whether to be a donor or a recipient of a blood transfusion or blood products to the individual member or family concerned.

The Church recognizes that the use of blood transfusions and blood products often saves lives by replacing blood serum volume, red and white cells, platelets, and other substances that may have been lost or damaged by disease, accident, or surgical operation. It is also aware that many operative procedures, such as open-heart surgery and organ transplantation, could not be as safely performed and that many diseases, such as leukemia, aplastic anemia, and certain types of cancers, could not be adequately treated without blood and blood-product transfusions.

Blood transfusions can carry very harmful and life-threatening diseases, such as acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (AIDS), hepatitis, and other infectious diseases, and therefore may be a hazard. However, these hazards may be completely eliminated in nonemergency operations by the process of autotransfusion, whereby a patient's own blood is donated, stored, and given back when needed. This practice is feasible because blood can be stored for a number of months. However, the

The Ensign magazine and selections from the New Era and Friend magazines are recorded on half-speed, four-track audiocassettes each month and mailed as the Ensign Talking Book to several thousand subscribers worldwide. The FIRST PRESIDENCY Message and the Friend are also produced in Braille each month.

JOSIAH W. DOUGLAS

---

BLOOD ATONEMENT

The doctrines of the Church affirm that the ATONEMENT wrought by the shedding of the blood of Jesus Christ, the Son of God, is efficacious for the sins of all who believe, repent, are baptized by one having authority, and receive the Holy Ghost by the laying on of hands. However, if a person thereafter commits a grievous sin such as the shedding of innocent blood, the Savior's sacrifice alone will not absolve the person of the consequences of the sin. Only by voluntarily submitting to whatever penalty the Lord may require can that person benefit from the atonement of Christ.

Several early Church leaders, most notably Brigham YOUNG, taught that in a complete theocracy the Lord could require the voluntary shedding of a murderer's blood—presumably by CAPITAL PUNISHMENT—as part of the process of atonement for such grievous sin. This was referred to as “blood atonement.” Since such a theocracy has not been operative in modern times, the practical effect of the idea was its use as a rhetorical device to heighten the awareness of Latter-day Saints of the seriousness of murder and other major sins. This view is not a doctrine of the Church and has never been practiced by the Church at any time.

Early anti-Mormon writers charged that under Brigham Young the Church practiced “blood atonement,” by which they meant Church-instigated violence directed at dissenters, enemies, and strangers. This claim distorted the whole idea of blood atonement—which was based on voluntary submission by an offender—into a supposed justification of involuntary punishment. Occasional isolated acts of violence that occurred in areas where Latter-day Saints lived were typical of that period in the history of the American West, but they were not instances of Church-sanctioned blood atonement.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- McConkie, Bruce R. “Blood Atonement Doctrine.” In Mormon Doctrine, 2nd ed. Salt Lake City, 1966.
- Penrose, Charles W. Blood Atonement, As Taught by Leading Elders of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Salt Lake City, 1884.
- Peterson, Paul H. “The Mormon Reformation,” pp. 176–99. Ph.D. diss., Brigham Young University, 1981.
- Smith, Joseph Fielding. “The Doctrine of Blood Atonement.” In Answers to Gospel Questions, Vol. 1, pp. 180–91. Salt Lake City, 1957.

LOWELL M. SNOW

---

BLOOD TRANSFUSIONS

Although there are references in scripture to the sacredness of blood, the Church does not hold that any scripture or revelation prohibits giving or receiving blood or blood products, such as gamma globulin, the antihemophilic factor, and antibodies through transfusion or injection, and it is therefore not opposed to its members engaging in such practices. In fact, individual wards sometimes have blood drives to increase a supply on hand when a ward member might need a transfusion. The Church, however, leaves the decision of whether to be a donor or a recipient of a blood transfusion or blood products to the individual member or family concerned.

The Church recognizes that the use of blood transfusions and blood products often saves lives by replacing blood serum volume, red and white cells, platelets, and other substances that may have been lost or damaged by disease, accident, or surgical operation. It is also aware that many operative procedures, such as open-heart surgery and organ transplantation, could not be as safely performed and that many diseases, such as leukemia, aplastic anemia, and certain types of cancers, could not be adequately treated without blood and blood-product transfusions.

Blood transfusions can carry very harmful and life-threatening diseases, such as acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (AIDS), hepatitis, and other infectious diseases, and therefore may be a hazard. However, these hazards may be completely eliminated in nonemergency operations by the process of autotransfusion, whereby a patient's own blood is donated, stored, and given back when needed. This practice is feasible because blood can be stored for a number of months. However, the

The Ensign magazine and selections from the New Era and Friend magazines are recorded on half-speed, four-track audiocassettes each month and mailed as the Ensign Talking Book to several thousand subscribers worldwide. The FIRST PRESIDENCY Message and the Friend are also produced in Braille each month.

JOSIAH W. DOUGLAS

---

BLOOD ATONEMENT

The doctrines of the Church affirm that the ATONEMENT wrought by the shedding of the blood of Jesus Christ, the Son of God, is efficacious for the sins of all who believe, repent, are baptized by one having authority, and receive the Holy Ghost by the laying on of hands. However, if a person thereafter commits a grievous sin such as the shedding of innocent blood, the Savior's sacrifice alone will not absolve the person of the consequences of the sin. Only by voluntarily submitting to whatever penalty the Lord may require can that person benefit from the atonement of Christ.

Several early Church leaders, most notably Brigham YOUNG, taught that in a complete theocracy the Lord could require the voluntary shedding of a murderer's blood—presumably by CAPITAL PUNISHMENT—as part of the process of atonement for such grievous sin. This was referred to as “blood atonement.” Since such a theocracy has not been operative in modern times, the practical effect of the idea was its use as a rhetorical device to heighten the awareness of Latter-day Saints of the seriousness of murder and other major sins. This view is not a doctrine of the Church and has never been practiced by the Church at any time.

Early anti-Mormon writers charged that under Brigham Young the Church practiced “blood atonement,” by which they meant Church-instigated violence directed at dissenters, enemies, and strangers. This claim distorted the whole idea of blood atonement—which was based on voluntary submission by an offender—into a supposed justification of involuntary punishment. Occasional isolated acts of violence that occurred in areas where Latter-day Saints lived were typical of that period in the history of the American West, but they were not instances of Church-sanctioned blood atonement.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- McConkie, Bruce R. “Blood Atonement Doctrine.” In Mormon Doctrine, 2nd ed. Salt Lake City, 1966.
- Penrose, Charles W. Blood Atonement, As Taught by Leading Elders of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Salt Lake City, 1884.
- Peterson, Paul H. “The Mormon Reformation,” pp. 176–99. Ph.D. diss., Brigham Young University, 1981.
- Smith, Joseph Fielding. “The Doctrine of Blood Atonement.” In Answers to Gospel Questions, Vol. 1, pp. 180–91. Salt Lake City, 1957.

LOWELL M. SNOW

---

BLOOD TRANSFUSIONS

Although there are references in scripture to the sacredness of blood, the Church does not hold that any scripture or revelation prohibits giving or receiving blood or blood products, such as gamma globulin, the antihemophilic factor, and antibodies through transfusion or injection, and it is therefore not opposed to its members engaging in such practices. In fact, individual wards sometimes have blood drives to increase a supply on hand when a ward member might need a transfusion. The Church, however, leaves the decision of whether to be a donor or a recipient of a blood transfusion or blood products to the individual member or family concerned.

The Church recognizes that the use of blood transfusions and blood products often saves lives by replacing blood serum volume, red and white cells, platelets, and other substances that may have been lost or damaged by disease, accident, or surgical operation. It is also aware that many operative procedures, such as open-heart surgery and organ transplantation, could not be as safely performed and that many diseases, such as leukemia, aplastic anemia, and certain types of cancers, could not be adequately treated without blood and blood-product transfusions.

Blood transfusions can carry very harmful and life-threatening diseases, such as acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (AIDS), hepatitis, and other infectious diseases, and therefore may be a hazard. However, these hazards may be completely eliminated in nonemergency operations by the process of autotransfusion, whereby a patient's own blood is donated, stored, and given back when needed. This practice is feasible because blood can be stored for a number of months. However, the Church leaves all decisions about the use or non-use of blood to the member or family concerned in consultation with their physician.

RICHARD A. NIMER

---

BONNEVILLE INTERNATIONAL CORPORATION

In 1964 KSL and other Church-owned commercial broadcasting stations and operations were consolidated into Bonneville International Corporation (BIC), headquartered in Salt Lake City. The founding president of BIC was Arch L. Madsen. He was succeeded by Rodney H. Brady in 1985. Historically, its board of directors has included a member of the FIRST PRESIDENCY.

In addition to KSL Radio and Television, Bonneville has acquired and founded several other units: (1) a television station in Seattle, (2) radio stations in Seattle, New York City, Kansas City, Los Angeles, Chicago, San Francisco, Dallas, and Phoenix; (3) Bonneville Media Communications, a full-service production and advertising company located in Salt Lake City; (4) Bonneville Washington News Bureau, in the nation's capital; (5) Bonneville Broadcasting System (BBS), a music programming service in Northbrook, Illinois, that provides "easy listening" and "soft adult contemporary" music programming to radio stations throughout the United States and abroad; (6) Bonneville Satellite Corporation, which was formed in Salt Lake City in 1980 and much of which was sold in 1987, with BIC retaining interest as a limited partner; and (7) Bonneville Entertainment Company, incorporated in 1981.

Bonneville programming reaches an international audience through placement of programs, public service messages, and other services on stations throughout the world, with emphasis on values-oriented programming. Bonneville stations do not proselytize for the Church, and religious programming (generally confined to Sunday morning) includes representation from all major religions. Neither BIC nor its divisions use their facilities to solicit funds for the Church. Bonneville and its divisions are taxpaying, commercial enterprises.

The philosophy of BIC is summarized in this excerpt from the company's statement of "Mission and Commitments": "We are a values-driven company composed of values-driven people. We are committed to serving and improving individuals, communities, and society through providing quality broadcast entertainment, information, news, and values-oriented programming."

BIBLIOGRAPHY

"Bonneville International Corporation." Brochure, Salt Lake City, 1989.

Wolsey, Heber G. "The History of Radio Station KSL from 1922 to Television." Ph.D. diss., Michigan State University, 1967.

RODNEY H. BRADY

---

BOOK OF ABRAHAM

[This entry includes five articles:

- Origin of the Book of Abraham
- Translation and Publication of the Book of Abraham
- Contents of the Book of Abraham
- Facsimiles from the Book of Abraham
- Studies About the Book of Abraham

The Book of Abraham autobiographically recounts Abraham's early years and is one of the texts in the LDS scriptural collection titled Pearl of Great Price. The article Origin of the Book of Abraham recounts the discovery and purchase of the Joseph Smith Papyri and events leading up to the publication of the Book of Abraham itself. The article Translation and Publication of the Book of Abraham details briefly both the process by which Joseph Smith produced the text of the Book of Abraham and the history of its appearance in print. The article Contents of the Book of Abraham surveys generally the events narrated in the book, including Abraham's miraculous rescue from death and God's covenant with him before he departed his homeland. Facsimiles from the Book of Abraham introduces the ancient Egyptian illustrations that are currently published with the work and assesses their relationship to the text. A review of studies published to date on the Book of Abraham appears in Studies about the Book of Abraham.]

ORIGIN OF THE BOOK OF ABRAHAM

In July 1835, while living in Kirtland, Ohio, the Prophet Joseph SMITH purchased, on behalf of the Church, four Egyptian mummies and accompanying papyri from Michael H. Chandler, a traveling entrepreneur from Pennsylvania. The price was $2,400. Chandler had acquired eleven mummies in early 1833 and had sold the other seven in the Church leaves all decisions about the use or non-use of blood to the member or family concerned in consultation with their physician.

RICHARD A. NIMER

---

BONNEVILLE INTERNATIONAL CORPORATION

In 1964 KSL and other Church-owned commercial broadcasting stations and operations were consolidated into Bonneville International Corporation (BIC), headquartered in Salt Lake City. The founding president of BIC was Arch L. Madsen. He was succeeded by Rodney H. Brady in 1985. Historically, its board of directors has included a member of the FIRST PRESIDENCY.

In addition to KSL Radio and Television, Bonneville has acquired and founded several other units: (1) a television station in Seattle, (2) radio stations in Seattle, New York City, Kansas City, Los Angeles, Chicago, San Francisco, Dallas, and Phoenix; (3) Bonneville Media Communications, a full-service production and advertising company located in Salt Lake City; (4) Bonneville Washington News Bureau, in the nation's capital; (5) Bonneville Broadcasting System (BBS), a music programming service in Northbrook, Illinois, that provides "easy listening" and "soft adult contemporary" music programming to radio stations throughout the United States and abroad; (6) Bonneville Satellite Corporation, which was formed in Salt Lake City in 1980 and much of which was sold in 1987, with BIC retaining interest as a limited partner; and (7) Bonneville Entertainment Company, incorporated in 1981.

Bonneville programming reaches an international audience through placement of programs, public service messages, and other services on stations throughout the world, with emphasis on values-oriented programming. Bonneville stations do not proselytize for the Church, and religious programming (generally confined to Sunday morning) includes representation from all major religions. Neither BIC nor its divisions use their facilities to solicit funds for the Church. Bonneville and its divisions are taxpaying, commercial enterprises.

The philosophy of BIC is summarized in this excerpt from the company's statement of "Mission and Commitments": "We are a values-driven company composed of values-driven people. We are committed to serving and improving individuals, communities, and society through providing quality broadcast entertainment, information, news, and values-oriented programming."

BIBLIOGRAPHY

"Bonneville International Corporation." Brochure, Salt Lake City, 1989.

Wolsey, Heber G. "The History of Radio Station KSL from 1922 to Television." Ph.D. diss., Michigan State University, 1967.

RODNEY H. BRADY

---

BOOK OF ABRAHAM

[This entry includes five articles:

- Origin of the Book of Abraham
- Translation and Publication of the Book of Abraham
- Contents of the Book of Abraham
- Facsimiles from the Book of Abraham
- Studies About the Book of Abraham

The Book of Abraham autobiographically recounts Abraham's early years and is one of the texts in the LDS scriptural collection titled Pearl of Great Price. The article Origin of the Book of Abraham recounts the discovery and purchase of the Joseph Smith Papyri and events leading up to the publication of the Book of Abraham itself. The article Translation and Publication of the Book of Abraham details briefly both the process by which Joseph Smith produced the text of the Book of Abraham and the history of its appearance in print. The article Contents of the Book of Abraham surveys generally the events narrated in the book, including Abraham's miraculous rescue from death and God's covenant with him before he departed his homeland. Facsimiles from the Book of Abraham introduces the ancient Egyptian illustrations that are currently published with the work and assesses their relationship to the text. A review of studies published to date on the Book of Abraham appears in Studies about the Book of Abraham.]

ORIGIN OF THE BOOK OF ABRAHAM

In July 1835, while living in Kirtland, Ohio, the Prophet Joseph SMITH purchased, on behalf of the Church, four Egyptian mummies and accompanying papyri from Michael H. Chandler, a traveling entrepreneur from Pennsylvania. The price was $2,400. Chandler had acquired eleven mummies in early 1833 and had sold the other seven in the Church leaves all decisions about the use or non-use of blood to the member or family concerned in consultation with their physician.

RICHARD A. NIMER

---

BONNEVILLE INTERNATIONAL CORPORATION

In 1964 KSL and other Church-owned commercial broadcasting stations and operations were consolidated into Bonneville International Corporation (BIC), headquartered in Salt Lake City. The founding president of BIC was Arch L. Madsen. He was succeeded by Rodney H. Brady in 1985. Historically, its board of directors has included a member of the FIRST PRESIDENCY.

In addition to KSL Radio and Television, Bonneville has acquired and founded several other units: (1) a television station in Seattle, (2) radio stations in Seattle, New York City, Kansas City, Los Angeles, Chicago, San Francisco, Dallas, and Phoenix; (3) Bonneville Media Communications, a full-service production and advertising company located in Salt Lake City; (4) Bonneville Washington News Bureau, in the nation's capital; (5) Bonneville Broadcasting System (BBS), a music programming service in Northbrook, Illinois, that provides "easy listening" and "soft adult contemporary" music programming to radio stations throughout the United States and abroad; (6) Bonneville Satellite Corporation, which was formed in Salt Lake City in 1980 and much of which was sold in 1987, with BIC retaining interest as a limited partner; and (7) Bonneville Entertainment Company, incorporated in 1981.

Bonneville programming reaches an international audience through placement of programs, public service messages, and other services on stations throughout the world, with emphasis on values-oriented programming. Bonneville stations do not proselytize for the Church, and religious programming (generally confined to Sunday morning) includes representation from all major religions. Neither BIC nor its divisions use their facilities to solicit funds for the Church. Bonneville and its divisions are taxpaying, commercial enterprises.

The philosophy of BIC is summarized in this excerpt from the company's statement of "Mission and Commitments": "We are a values-driven company composed of values-driven people. We are committed to serving and improving individuals, communities, and society through providing quality broadcast entertainment, information, news, and values-oriented programming."

BIBLIOGRAPHY

"Bonneville International Corporation." Brochure, Salt Lake City, 1989.

Wolsey, Heber G. "The History of Radio Station KSL from 1922 to Television." Ph.D. diss., Michigan State University, 1967.

RODNEY H. BRADY

---

BOOK OF ABRAHAM

[This entry includes five articles:

- Origin of the Book of Abraham
- Translation and Publication of the Book of Abraham
- Contents of the Book of Abraham
- Facsimiles from the Book of Abraham
- Studies About the Book of Abraham

The Book of Abraham autobiographically recounts Abraham's early years and is one of the texts in the LDS scriptural collection titled Pearl of Great Price. The article Origin of the Book of Abraham recounts the discovery and purchase of the Joseph Smith Papyri and events leading up to the publication of the Book of Abraham itself. The article Translation and Publication of the Book of Abraham details briefly both the process by which Joseph Smith produced the text of the Book of Abraham and the history of its appearance in print. The article Contents of the Book of Abraham surveys generally the events narrated in the book, including Abraham's miraculous rescue from death and God's covenant with him before he departed his homeland. Facsimiles from the Book of Abraham introduces the ancient Egyptian illustrations that are currently published with the work and assesses their relationship to the text. A review of studies published to date on the Book of Abraham appears in Studies about the Book of Abraham.]

ORIGIN OF THE BOOK OF ABRAHAM

In July 1835, while living in Kirtland, Ohio, the Prophet Joseph SMITH purchased, on behalf of the Church, four Egyptian mummies and accompanying papyri from Michael H. Chandler, a traveling entrepreneur from Pennsylvania. The price was $2,400. Chandler had acquired eleven mummies in early 1833 and had sold the other seven in the eastern United States prior to meeting Joseph Smith. Shortly after obtaining the antiquities, Joseph Smith announced that the papyri contained some writings of the patriarchs ABRAHAM and JOSEPH, both of whom had lived in Egypt (Gen. 12:37, 39–50).

These antiquities had been exhumed by Antonio Lebolo on the west bank of the Nile River opposite the ancient city of Thebes (present-day Luxor), probably between 1817 and 1821. Lebolo, born in Castellamonte, Piedmont (northern Italy), had been a gendarme during Napoleon's occupation of the Italian peninsula. When Napoleon was defeated, Lebolo chose voluntary exile rather than face imprisonment under the reemerging Sardinian monarchy. He moved to Egypt, where he was employed by Bernardino Drovetti, former consul general of France in Egypt, to oversee his excavations in Upper Egypt. Drovetti also allowed Lebolo to excavate on his own. Lebolo discovered eleven well-preserved mummies in a large tomb. Because Lebolo directed several hundred men excavating at different sites, the exact location has not been identified. The mummies were shipped to Trieste, where Lebolo authorized Albano Oblasser, a shipping magnate, to sell them on his behalf. Lebolo died February 19, 1830, in Castellamonte. Oblasser forwarded the eleven mummies to two shipping companies in New York City—McLeod and Gillespie, and Maitland and Kennedy—to sell them to anybody who would pay an appropriate sum. The proceeds were to be sent to Lebolo's heirs. Chandler acquired them in the winter or early spring of 1833. He claimed that Lebolo was his uncle, but that relationship has not been confirmed.

It has become clear that some Abrahamic literature exhibits links with Egypt. For example, Faecsimile 2 from the Book of Abraham, first published in Times and Seasons in 1842. This hypocephalus (a round papyrus placed under the head of a mummy by the Egyptians) is a richly symbolic expression of the deceased person's desire for resurrection, eternal life, procreation, dominion, and stability. Over 100 such hypocephali are known, first appearing during the Saite Dynasty (663–525 B.C.). Courtesy Rare Books and Manuscripts, Brigham Young University.

the Testament of Abraham—likely first written in Greek—almost certainly derives from Egypt. Substituting a biblical figure such as Abraham in Egyptian hieroglyphic scenes is a Jewish technique known from the Hellenistic period (Gobel, pp. 373–82). Thus, it is not surprising that Egyptian texts are somehow linked to the appearance of the Book of Abraham.

According to some Egyptologists, the writings of Abraham acquired by Joseph Smith are to be dated to the early Christian era. Such dating is not without precedent. The Testament of Abraham, edited initially by M. R. James in 1892, was described by him as “a second century Jewish-Christian writing composed in Egypt” (Nibley, pp. 20–21).

The identity of the mummies is not known, since there are no primary sources that identify them.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Gobel, K. “. . . Whose Name Was Neveš.” New Testament Studies 10 (1963–1964):373–82.
 Nibley, Hugh W. Abraham in Egypt. Salt Lake City, 1981.
 Peterson, H. Donl. The Pearl of Great Price: A History and Commentary. Salt Lake City, 1987.

H. DONL PETERSON

TRANSLATION AND PUBLICATION OF THE BOOK OF ABRAHAM

On October 10, 1880, in a general conference, members of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints voted to accept the book of Abraham as a scriptural work. Several views have been advanced concerning the process whereby the Prophet Joseph SMITH produced the work. Although he and his associates began an “Egyptian Alphabet and Grammar” while they studied the papyri, the purpose of that work is obscure. It was not completed, explained, or published by Joseph Smith or any of his successors. However, it is certain that he began working in KIRTLAND, OHIO, on the relevant Egyptian papyri soon after purchasing them from Michael H. Chandler in 1835.

Probably no one in the United States in 1835 could interpret Egyptian hieroglyphics through ordinary translation techniques. When he translated the gold plates of the Book of Mormon from the “reformed Egyptian” text (1827–1829), the Prophet stated that he did it “by the gift and power of God.” Likewise, it was principally divine inspiration rather than his knowledge of languages that produced the English text of the book of Abraham. His precise methodology remains unknown.

On July 5, 1835, the Prophet recorded, “I commenced the translation of some of the characters or hieroglyphics, and much to our joy found that one of the rolls contained the writings of Abraham. . . . Truly we can say, the Lord is beginning to reveal the abundance of peace and truth” (HC 2:236). After delays, Joseph Smith appointed two men on November 2, 1837, to raise funds to help translate and print the book of Abraham. But because of further difficulties, he was unable to begin publishing for four more years. The book of Abraham was first printed in three issues of the Times and Seasons on March 1, March 15, and May 16, 1842. These installments contained the entire current book of Abraham, including the three facsimiles. In February 1843, Joseph Smith promised that more of the book of Abraham would be published. However, continued harassment by enemies kept the Prophet from ever publishing more of the record. It did receive considerable notoriety when several prominent eastern newspapers in the United States reprinted Facsimile 1 and part of the text from the Times and Seasons publication.

In 1851 the writings of Abraham were published in England as a part of the Pearl of Great Price, a small compilation by Franklin D. Richards containing some of Joseph Smith’s translations and revelations. It was this compilation that was canonized in 1880, in SALT LAKE CITY, thereby placing it alongside three other sacred collections or standard works: the Bible, the Book of Mormon, and the Doctrine and Covenants.

In 1856 the papyri were sold by Joseph’s widow to Abel Combs. With the exception of a few fragments returned to the Church in 1967, the present location of the papyri is unknown.

[See also PAPYRI, JOSEPH SMITH.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Nibley, Hugh. “The Meaning of the Kirtland Egyptian Papers.” BYU Studies 11, no. 4 (Summer 1971):350–99.
 Peterson, H. Donl. The Pearl of Great Price: A History and Commentary. Salt Lake City, 1987.

H. DONL PETERSON

CONTENTS OF THE BOOK OF ABRAHAM

The book of Abraham in the Pearl of Great Price consists of an account of Abraham's experiences with the Lord in four lands: Chaldea, Haran, Canaan, and Egypt. This observation is consistent with the work's opening phrase, "In the land of." Except for events chronicled in the first chapter, Sarai (Sarah) shared fully the vicissitudes and triumphs of her husband.

As the work opens, Abraham is living among an idolatrous people in Chaldea (Abr. 1:1, 5–7). But because of severe persecution (1:12, 15) after having preached against their wickedness, he decides to emigrate. Resulting official opposition almost costs Abraham his life, as a human sacrifice (1:12–15). When he prays for divine help, an angel rescues him, promising that he will be led to a new land and receive the priesthood (1:15–19).

When the famine prophesied by the angel comes to Chaldea (1:29–30), Abraham departs with Sarai, his nephew Lot, and his family, with his father, Terah, following the company (2:4). After they settle in Haran, the Lord commands Abraham to continue on to Canaan and reveals to him the founding elements of the ABRAHAMIC COVENANT (2:6–11). Because of famine, Abraham goes to Egypt, where the Lord commands him—a feature absent from Genesis 12:11–13—to introduce Sarai as his sister so that the Egyptians will not kill him (2:21–25).

In the third chapter, Abraham describes a vision that he received through a URIM AND THUMMIM concerning the worlds created by God, the premortal spirits of people, and the COUNCIL IN HEAVEN wherein the gods (cf. John 1:1–4, 14; Heb. 1:1–3) planned the creation of the earth and humankind. The fourth and fifth chapters recount the completion of these plans and the placing of Adam and Eve in the GARDEN OF EDEN.

By the book's account, Chaldea was under Egyptian hegemony during Abraham's lifetime. Local religion included Egyptian solar worship, the worship of Pharaoh, and human sacrifice. The discovery of the land of Egypt is attributed to Egyptus, daughter of Ham and Egyptus; her eldest son, whose name was Pharaoh, established its first government.

Doctrinal contributions of the book include a fuller explanation of Abraham's covenant and its relationship to the gospel (2:6–11), and a better understanding of premortal life (3:22–28). Concerning ASTRONOMY, it names the celestial body nearest God's abode, Kolob (3:2–4), and details the creation of the earth by a council of Gods in the fourth chapter. Abraham 1:26–27 has been interpreted by some as the scriptural basis for previously withholding the priesthood from BLACKS.

Concerning biblical connections, the idolatry of Terah (cf. Josh. 24:2) and the Lord's rescue of Abraham (cf. Isa. 29:22) are spelled out in the book of Abraham and in other ancient Abraham texts.

Many themes of the book appear in other ancient literatures, including Abraham's struggle against idolatry (Jubilees 12; Charlesworth, Vol. 2, pp. 79–80), the attempted sacrifice of Abraham (Pseudo-Philo 6; Charlesworth, Vol. 2, pp. 310–12), and Abraham's vision of God's dwelling place, events in the Garden of Eden, and premortal spirits (Apocalypse of Abraham 22–23; Charlesworth, Vol. 1, p. 700). God's instruction to Abraham to introduce Sarai as his sister is echoed in the Genesis Apocryphon (column 19) as having come through a dream. Abraham's teaching astronomy to Egyptians (Book of Abraham Facsimile 3) is described in Pseudo-Eupolemus 9.17.8 and 9.18.2 (Charlesworth, Vol. 2, pp. 881–82) and in Josephus (Antiquities 1.8.2).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Charlesworth, James H., ed. The Old Testament Pseudepigrapha, 2 vols. Garden City, N.Y., 1983, 1985.
- Millet, Robert L., and Kent P. Jackson, eds. Studies in Scripture, Vol. 2. Salt Lake City, 1985.
- Peterson, H. Donl, and Charles D. Tate, eds. The Pearl of Great Price: Revelations from God. Provo, Utah, 1989.

STEPHEN E. THOMPSON

FACSIMILES FROM THE BOOK OF ABRAHAM

Three facsimiles are published with the text of the book of Abraham in the Pearl of Great Price. All are similar to Egyptian illustrations known from other sources.

FACSIMILE NUMBER 1. Representations similar to Facsimile 1 abound in Egyptian religious texts. A typical example appears in the 151st chapter of the Book of the Dead, showing the god Anubis embalming Osiris, who is lying on a lion couch. In some details, such as the posture of the reclining figure, Facsimile 1 differs from other Egyptian texts.

Only for Facsimile 1 is the original document known to be extant. Comparisons of the papyrus fragments as well as the hieroglyphic text accompanying this drawing demonstrate that it formed a part of an Egyptian religious text known as the Book of Breathings. Based on paleographic and historical evidence, this text can be reliably dated to about the first century A.D. Since reference is made to this illustration in the book of Abraham (Abr. 1:12), many have concluded that the Book of Breathings must be the text that the Prophet Joseph SMITH used in his translation. Because the Book of Breathings is clearly not the book of Abraham, critics claim this is conclusive evidence that Joseph Smith was unable to translate the ancient documents.

In the historical documents currently possessed by the Church, Joseph Smith never described fully the actual process he used in translating ancient documents. In reference to the Book of Mormon, he said that it was “not expedient” for him to relate all the particulars of its coming forth (HC 1:220; see BOOK OF MORMON: TRANSLATION BY JOSEPH SMITH). He did, in several instances, refer to the book of Abraham as a translation (HC 4:543, 548); and when the installments of the book of Abraham were published in the Millennial Star, it was described as being “translated by Joseph Smith” (July 1842, p. 34). Both Wilford WOODRUFF (in his journal) and Parley P. Pratt (in the July 1842 Millennial Star) maintained that the translation was done by means of the URIM AND THUMMIM, although Joseph Smith himself does not mention using this instrument anywhere in the translation.

One must consider, however, what Joseph Smith meant by translation. Section 7 of the DOCTRINE AND COVENANTS offers one standard measure. Here, the Prophet, using the Urim and Thummim, translated a “record made on parchment by John the Revelator.” Although it is not known whether Joseph Smith actually had this document, he provided a translation of it. Since it is not known just how Joseph Smith translated, it is reasonable to postulate that, when studying the Egyptian papyri purchased from Michael Chandler, Joseph Smith sought revelation from the Lord concerning them and received in that process the book of Abraham. He might then have searched through the papyri in his possession to find illustrations similar to those he had learned by revelation. This forms one possible explanation of how drawings done about the first century A.D. were used to illustrate the book of Abraham.

FACSIMILE NUMBER 2. Egyptologists call Facsimile 2 a hypocephalus (Greek for “under the head”), and numerous examples are preserved in museums around the world. Their stated purpose was to keep the body warm (i.e., ready for resurrection) and to transform the deceased into a god in the hereafter. Joseph Smith explained that Facsimile 2 contained representations of God, the earth, the Holy Ghost, etc. His explanations are, in general, reasonable in light of modern Egyptological knowledge. For example, the four standing figures in the lower portion of the facsimile are said by Joseph Smith to represent “earth in its four quarters.” The Egyptians called these the four sons of Horus and, among other things, they were gods of the four quarters of the earth.

FACSIMILE NUMBER 3. Facsimile 3 presents a constantly recurring scene in Egyptian literature, best known from the 125th chapter of the Book of the Dead. It represents the judgment of the dead before the throne of Osiris. It is likely that it came at the end of the Book of Breathings text, of which Facsimile 1 formed the beginning, since other examples contain vignettes similar to this. Moreover, the name of Hor, owner of the papyrus, appears in the hieroglyphs at the bottom of this facsimile.

Joseph Smith explained that Facsimile 3 represents Abraham sitting on the pharaoh’s throne teaching principles of astronomy to the Egyptian court. Critics have pointed out that the second figure, which Joseph Smith says is the king, is the goddess Hathor (or Isis). There are, however, examples in other papyri, not in the possession of Joseph Smith, in which the pharaoh is portrayed as Hathor. In fact, the whole scene is typical of Egyptian ritual drama in which costumed actors played the parts of various gods and goddesses.

In summary, Facsimile 1 formed the beginning, and Facsimile 3 the end of a document known as the Book of Breathings, an Egyptian religious text dated paleographically to the time of Jesus. Facsimile 2, the hypocephalus, is also a late Egyptian religious text. The association of these facsimiles with the book of Abraham might be explained as Joseph Smith’s attempt to find illustrations from the papyri he owned that most closely matched what he had received in revelation when translating the Book of Abraham. Moreover, the Prophet’s explanations of each of the facsimiles accord with present understanding of Egyptian religious practices.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Harris, James R. "The Book of Abraham Facsimiles." In Studies in Scripture, Vol. 2, ed. R. Millet and K. Jackson. Salt Lake City, 1985.
- Nibley, Hugh. Abraham in Egypt. Salt Lake City, 1981.
- Rhodes, Michael D. "A Translation and Commentary of the Joseph Smith Hypoccephalus." BYU Studies 17 (Spring 1977):259-74.

MICHAEL D. RHODES

STUDIES ABOUT THE BOOK OF ABRAHAM

DOCTRINAL COMMENTARIES. Doctrinal studies of the book of Abraham have usually been components of general commentaries on the Pearl of Great Price without focusing on the book of Abraham in particular. George Reynolds and Janne Sjodahl's Commentary on the Pearl of Great Price (Salt Lake City, 1965) is a typical example. The most comprehensive study of this sort is Doctrinal Commentary on the Pearl of Great Price (Salt Lake City, 1969) by Hyrum Andrus.

HISTORICAL STUDIES. In 1912 the pamphlet Joseph Smith, Jr., as a Translator by F. S. Spaulding, Episcopal bishop of Utah, attempted the first formal non-LDS study of the book of Abraham. It contained letters from eight leading Egyptologists concerning the three book of Abraham facsimiles and commenting on the "accuracy" of their interpretation by the Prophet Joseph SMITH. The scholars unanimously agreed that the Prophet was wrong. At the time, no Latter-day Saint scholar was capable of refuting their claims. It was not until 1936 that J. E. Homans, a non-Latter-day Saint writing under the pseudonym R. C. Webb, published Joseph Smith as a Translator, defending the Prophet's abilities as a translator, but not directly addressing the points that were made by the Egyptologists.

In 1967 eleven fragments of the Egyptian papyri once owned by Joseph Smith were rediscovered by Aziz S. Atiya and were then presented to the Church by the New York Metropolitan Museum of Art. Several pieces were determined to be from an Egyptian religious text known as the Book of Breathings. Three noted Egyptologists soon made translations of and commentaries on the fragments, which resulted in new attacks on Joseph Smith's "inabilities" as a translator. The critics argued that the Book of Breathings bore no relationship to the book of Abraham, which Joseph Smith apparently claimed to have translated from these very papyri. Indeed, the Book of Breathings is a late text, originating about the first century A.D., some 2000 years after the time of Abraham. Against criticisms such as these, Hugh Nibley has consistently and ably defended Joseph Smith, maintaining that the book of Abraham should be evaluated on the basis of what it claims to be—Abraham's own account of his life. Nibley's research has shown that a significant number of links exist between the book of Abraham and ancient texts related to Abraham. These similarities seem too numerous and subtle to be attributed to mere coincidence.

In his explanation of Facsimile 2 in the book of Abraham, Joseph Smith maintained that certain information contained therein was not to be revealed to the world, "but is to be had in the Holy Temple of God." Studies of Egyptian temple ritual since the time of Joseph Smith have revealed parallels with Latter-day Saint temple celebrations and doctrine, including a portrayal of the creation and fall of mankind, WASHINGS AND ANOINTINGS, and the ultimate return of individuals to God's presence. Moreover, husband, wife, and children are sealed together for eternity, GENEALOGY is taken seriously; people will be judged according to their deeds in this life, and the reward for a just life is to live in the presence of God forever with one's family. It seems unreasonable to suggest that all such parallels occurred by mere chance.

A number of pseudepigraphic texts purporting to be accounts from the life of Abraham have come to light since Joseph Smith's day, such as the Apocalypse of Abraham and the Testament of Abraham, documents that exhibit notable similarities with the book of Abraham. For example, in chapter 12 of the Testament of Abraham there is a description of the judgment of the dead that matches in minute detail the scene depicted in Facsimile 3 of the book of Abraham and, incidentally, chapter 125 of the Egyptian Book of the Dead. In fact, parallels to almost every verse in the book of Abraham can be found in the pseudepigraphical writings about Abraham.

In summary, the numerous similarities that the book of Abraham and associated Latter-day Saint doctrines share with both Egyptian religious texts and recently discovered pseudepigraphical writings may confirm further the authenticity of the Joseph Smith translation known as the book of Abraham. A major question about its authenticity continues to revolve around whether Joseph Smith translated the work from the papyrus fragments the Church now has in its possession or whether he used the URIM AND THUMMIM to receive the text of the book of Abraham by revelation, as is the case with the translation of the scroll of John the Revelator, found in Doctrine and Covenants section 7, or the BOOK OF MOSES, which is excerpted from the JOSEPH SMITH TRANSLATION OF THE BIBLE and is also found in the Pearl of Great Price. From these examples, it is evident that for Joseph Smith it was not necessary to possess an original text in order to have its translation revealed to him. In his function as PROPHET, SEER, and REVELATOR, many channels were open to him to receive information by divine inspiration.

[See also Book of Abraham Facsimiles.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Ashment, Edward H. "The Facsimiles of the Book of Abraham: A Reappraisal." Sunstone 4, nos. 5–6 (Dec. 1979):33–48.
- Baer, Klaus. "The Breathing Permit of Hor." Dialogue 3, no. 3 (1968):109–134.
- Homans, J. E. Joseph Smith as a Translator. Salt Lake City, 1936.
- Nibley, Hugh. The Message of the Joseph Smith Papyri. Salt Lake City, 1975.
- . Abraham in Egypt. Salt Lake City, 1981.
- Parker, Richard. "The Joseph Smith Papyri: A Preliminary Report." Dialogue 3, no. 2 (1968):86–92, 98–99.
- Rhodes, Michael D. "A Translation and Commentary on the Joseph Smith Hypocephalus." BYU Studies 17 (Spring 1977): 259–74.
- Spaulding, F. S. Joseph Smith, Jr., as a Translator. Pamphlet. Salt Lake City, 1912.
- Wilson, John. "A Summary Report." Dialogue 3, no. 2 (1968):67–85.

MICHAEL D. RHODES

---

BOOK OF COMMANDMENTS

The Prophet Joseph SMITH and a council of HIGH PRIESTS collected the Prophet's early revelations in November 1831, into the Book of Commandments. They originally decided to print 10,000 copies of the book at Independence, Missouri, but later reduced this number to 3,000. As editor of the Church's newspaper called The Evening and

The Morning Star and of the Book of Commandments, William W. Phelps also printed some of the major revelations in that paper during 1832–1833.

Publication plans were frustrated when a mob destroyed the printing establishment on July 20, 1833, when Phelps had printed only five 32-page signatures. These 160 pages contained sixty-five revelations, the last of which was not completely typeset. Although fire destroyed most of these uncut pages, Church members salvaged enough to put together about a hundred copies, only a few of which survive today. The revelations in the Book of Commandments became part of a larger collection titled the Doctrine and Covenants, first printed in 1835.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Petersen, Melvin J. "A Study of the Nature of and the Significance of the Changes in the Revelations as Found in a Comparison of the Book of Commandments and Subsequent Editions of the Doctrine and Covenants." Master's thesis, Brigham Young University, 1955.
- Woodford, Robert J. "The Historical Development of the Doctrine and Covenants, Volume 1." Ph.D. diss., Brigham Young University, 1974.

ROBERT J. WOODFORD

---

BOOK OF JOSEPH OF EGYPT

See: Joseph of Egypt: Writings of Joseph

---

BOOK OF LIFE

In a figurative sense, the book of life is the complete record of one's life, the sum total of thoughts, words, and deeds written in the soul, of which the Lord will take account in the day of judgment (Rev. 20:12; Alma 12:14).

The scriptures also speak of a book of life, or "the Lamb's book of life," as "the record . . . kept in heaven" (D&C 128:7) in which are written both the names and deeds of the faithful. It is also the heavenly register of those who inherit eternal life (Heb. 12:23; Alma 5:58; D&C 76:68), "the book of the names of the sanctified, even them of the celestial world" (D&C 88:2; cf. Mal. 3:16–17).

In the Bible, the phrase "book of the living" appears first in Psalm 69:28, and the notion of a heavenly ledger is alluded to often (Ex. 32:32–33;

writings may confirm further the authenticity of the Joseph Smith translation known as the book of Abraham. A major question about its authenticity continues to revolve around whether Joseph Smith translated the work from the papyrus fragments the Church now has in its possession or whether he used the URIM AND THUMMIM to receive the text of the book of Abraham by revelation, as is the case with the translation of the scroll of John the Revelator, found in Doctrine and Covenants section 7, or the BOOK OF MOSES, which is excerpted from the JOSEPH SMITH TRANSLATION OF THE BIBLE and is also found in the Pearl of Great Price. From these examples, it is evident that for Joseph Smith it was not necessary to possess an original text in order to have its translation revealed to him. In his function as PROPHET, SEER, and REVELATOR, many channels were open to him to receive information by divine inspiration.

[See also Book of Abraham Facsimiles.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Ashment, Edward H. "The Facsimiles of the Book of Abraham: A Reappraisal." Sunstone 4, nos. 5–6 (Dec. 1979):33–48.
- Baer, Klaus. "The Breathing Permit of Hor." Dialogue 3, no. 3 (1968):109–134.
- Homans, J. E. Joseph Smith as a Translator. Salt Lake City, 1936.
- Nibley, Hugh. The Message of the Joseph Smith Papyri. Salt Lake City, 1975.
- . Abraham in Egypt. Salt Lake City, 1981.
- Parker, Richard. "The Joseph Smith Papyri: A Preliminary Report." Dialogue 3, no. 2 (1968):86–92, 98–99.
- Rhodes, Michael D. "A Translation and Commentary on the Joseph Smith Hypocephalus." BYU Studies 17 (Spring 1977): 259–74.
- Spaulding, F. S. Joseph Smith, Jr., as a Translator. Pamphlet. Salt Lake City, 1912.
- Wilson, John. "A Summary Report." Dialogue 3, no. 2 (1968):67–85.

MICHAEL D. RHODES

---

BOOK OF COMMANDMENTS

The Prophet Joseph SMITH and a council of HIGH PRIESTS collected the Prophet's early revelations in November 1831, into the Book of Commandments. They originally decided to print 10,000 copies of the book at Independence, Missouri, but later reduced this number to 3,000. As editor of the Church's newspaper called The Evening and

The Morning Star and of the Book of Commandments, William W. Phelps also printed some of the major revelations in that paper during 1832–1833.

Publication plans were frustrated when a mob destroyed the printing establishment on July 20, 1833, when Phelps had printed only five 32-page signatures. These 160 pages contained sixty-five revelations, the last of which was not completely typeset. Although fire destroyed most of these uncut pages, Church members salvaged enough to put together about a hundred copies, only a few of which survive today. The revelations in the Book of Commandments became part of a larger collection titled the Doctrine and Covenants, first printed in 1835.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Petersen, Melvin J. "A Study of the Nature of and the Significance of the Changes in the Revelations as Found in a Comparison of the Book of Commandments and Subsequent Editions of the Doctrine and Covenants." Master's thesis, Brigham Young University, 1955.
- Woodford, Robert J. "The Historical Development of the Doctrine and Covenants, Volume 1." Ph.D. diss., Brigham Young University, 1974.

ROBERT J. WOODFORD

---

BOOK OF JOSEPH OF EGYPT

See: Joseph of Egypt: Writings of Joseph

---

BOOK OF LIFE

In a figurative sense, the book of life is the complete record of one's life, the sum total of thoughts, words, and deeds written in the soul, of which the Lord will take account in the day of judgment (Rev. 20:12; Alma 12:14).

The scriptures also speak of a book of life, or "the Lamb's book of life," as "the record . . . kept in heaven" (D&C 128:7) in which are written both the names and deeds of the faithful. It is also the heavenly register of those who inherit eternal life (Heb. 12:23; Alma 5:58; D&C 76:68), "the book of the names of the sanctified, even them of the celestial world" (D&C 88:2; cf. Mal. 3:16–17).

In the Bible, the phrase "book of the living" appears first in Psalm 69:28, and the notion of a heavenly ledger is alluded to often (Ex. 32:32–33;

writings may confirm further the authenticity of the Joseph Smith translation known as the book of Abraham. A major question about its authenticity continues to revolve around whether Joseph Smith translated the work from the papyrus fragments the Church now has in its possession or whether he used the URIM AND THUMMIM to receive the text of the book of Abraham by revelation, as is the case with the translation of the scroll of John the Revelator, found in Doctrine and Covenants section 7, or the BOOK OF MOSES, which is excerpted from the JOSEPH SMITH TRANSLATION OF THE BIBLE and is also found in the Pearl of Great Price. From these examples, it is evident that for Joseph Smith it was not necessary to possess an original text in order to have its translation revealed to him. In his function as PROPHET, SEER, and REVELATOR, many channels were open to him to receive information by divine inspiration.

[See also Book of Abraham Facsimiles.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Ashment, Edward H. "The Facsimiles of the Book of Abraham: A Reappraisal." Sunstone 4, nos. 5–6 (Dec. 1979):33–48.
- Baer, Klaus. "The Breathing Permit of Hor." Dialogue 3, no. 3 (1968):109–134.
- Homans, J. E. Joseph Smith as a Translator. Salt Lake City, 1936.
- Nibley, Hugh. The Message of the Joseph Smith Papyri. Salt Lake City, 1975.
- . Abraham in Egypt. Salt Lake City, 1981.
- Parker, Richard. "The Joseph Smith Papyri: A Preliminary Report." Dialogue 3, no. 2 (1968):86–92, 98–99.
- Rhodes, Michael D. "A Translation and Commentary on the Joseph Smith Hypocephalus." BYU Studies 17 (Spring 1977): 259–74.
- Spaulding, F. S. Joseph Smith, Jr., as a Translator. Pamphlet. Salt Lake City, 1912.
- Wilson, John. "A Summary Report." Dialogue 3, no. 2 (1968):67–85.

MICHAEL D. RHODES

---

BOOK OF COMMANDMENTS

The Prophet Joseph SMITH and a council of HIGH PRIESTS collected the Prophet's early revelations in November 1831, into the Book of Commandments. They originally decided to print 10,000 copies of the book at Independence, Missouri, but later reduced this number to 3,000. As editor of the Church's newspaper called The Evening and

The Morning Star and of the Book of Commandments, William W. Phelps also printed some of the major revelations in that paper during 1832–1833.

Publication plans were frustrated when a mob destroyed the printing establishment on July 20, 1833, when Phelps had printed only five 32-page signatures. These 160 pages contained sixty-five revelations, the last of which was not completely typeset. Although fire destroyed most of these uncut pages, Church members salvaged enough to put together about a hundred copies, only a few of which survive today. The revelations in the Book of Commandments became part of a larger collection titled the Doctrine and Covenants, first printed in 1835.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Petersen, Melvin J. "A Study of the Nature of and the Significance of the Changes in the Revelations as Found in a Comparison of the Book of Commandments and Subsequent Editions of the Doctrine and Covenants." Master's thesis, Brigham Young University, 1955.
- Woodford, Robert J. "The Historical Development of the Doctrine and Covenants, Volume 1." Ph.D. diss., Brigham Young University, 1974.

ROBERT J. WOODFORD

---

BOOK OF JOSEPH OF EGYPT

See: Joseph of Egypt: Writings of Joseph

---

BOOK OF LIFE

In a figurative sense, the book of life is the complete record of one's life, the sum total of thoughts, words, and deeds written in the soul, of which the Lord will take account in the day of judgment (Rev. 20:12; Alma 12:14).

The scriptures also speak of a book of life, or "the Lamb's book of life," as "the record . . . kept in heaven" (D&C 128:7) in which are written both the names and deeds of the faithful. It is also the heavenly register of those who inherit eternal life (Heb. 12:23; Alma 5:58; D&C 76:68), "the book of the names of the sanctified, even them of the celestial world" (D&C 88:2; cf. Mal. 3:16–17).

In the Bible, the phrase "book of the living" appears first in Psalm 69:28, and the notion of a heavenly ledger is alluded to often (Ex. 32:32–33;

Dan. 7:10; 12:1; Isa. 4:3; 65:6; see also Phil. 4:3; Rev. 3:5; 13:8; 21:27). Names of faithful Saints may be recorded in the book of life conditionally while they are in mortality (Luke 10:20) or “from the foundation of the world” (Rev. 17:8), but may be “blotted out” because of unrepented transgression (Rev. 3:5; 22:19; Alma 5:57; D&C 85:5, 11). Ultimately, only the names of those who qualify for eternal life remain written or “sealed” (TPJS, p. 9) in the Lamb’s book of life.

Latter-day Saints believe that essential items written in the “books yet to be opened” are linked to proper Church records, including those of essential gospel ordinances performed by priesthood authority for individuals and attested by authorized witnesses. In ancient covenant ceremonies, the names of the righteous were solemnly recorded, thus numbering them among “the living” (e.g., Num. 1:1–46; Mosiah 6:1–2). What is properly recorded on earth is recorded in heaven (D&C 128:7–8). Final sealing in the Lamb’s book requires, further, the approval of the Holy Spirit of Promise (D&C 132:19).

J. LEWIS TAYLOR

BOOK OF MORMON

[This entry introduces the Book of Mormon, with the Overview describing its basic nature, contents, and purposes; a brief article follows on the Title Page from the Book of Mormon; and the remaining articles are devoted to a brief explanation of each book in the Book of Mormon.]

Overview

Title Page from Book of Mormon

First Book of Nephi

Second Book of Nephi

Book of Jacob

Book of Enos

Book of Jarom

Book of Omni

The Words of Mormon

Book of Mosiah

Book of Alma

Book of Helaman

Third Nephi

Fourth Nephi

Book of Mormon

Book of Ether

Book of Moroni

The teachings of the Book of Mormon are discussed in doctrinal articles throughout the Encyclopedia; see Doctrine; Gospel of Jesus Christ. See also Book of Mormon Religious Teachings and Practices; Jesus Christ in the Scriptures: the Book of Mormon; Prophecy: Prophecy in the Book of Mormon.

Concerning its essential relationship with the Bible and other scripture, see Bible; Book of Mormon, Biblical Prophecies about; Book of Mormon in a Biblical Culture; Isaiah; Scripture; Standard Works.

On the writing and composition of the Book of Mormon, see Book of Mormon Authorship; Book of Mormon Language; Book of Mormon Literature; Book of Mormon Plates and Records.

For information about its origin and publication, see Book of Mormon Editions; Book of Mormon Manuscripts; Book of Mormon Translation by Joseph Smith; Book of Mormon Translations; Book of Mormon Witnesses; Manuscript, Lost 116 Pages; Moroni, Visitations of. See, generally, Book of Mormon Studies.

Separate articles can be found on Book of Mormon Peoples; Jaredites; Lamanites; Nephites; Women in the Book of Mormon; articles on the main individuals in this scripture are listed under Book of Mormon Personalities.

Internal aspects of Book of Mormon culture and civilization are discussed in such entries as Book of Mormon Chronology; Book of Mormon Economy and Technology; Book of Mormon Geography; Book of Mormon, Government and Legal History in; Book of Mormon, History of Warfare in; Jesus Christ: Forty-Day Ministry and Other Post-Resurrection Appearances of Jesus Christ; Liahona; Secret Combinations; Sword of Laban; Three Nephites; Tree of Life.]

OVERVIEW

The Prophet Joseph SMITH called the Book of Mormon “the most correct of any book on earth, and the keystone of our religion” and said that a person “would get nearer to God by abiding by its precepts, than by any other book” (TPJS, p. 194), for it contains the fulness of the GOSPEL OF JESUS CHRIST (D&C 20:8–9). To members of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, the Book of Mormon forms the doctrinal foundation of the Church and speaks the word of God to all the world.

The Book of Mormon both confirms and supplements the Bible: “Behold, this [the Book of Mormon] is written for the intent that ye may believe that [the Bible]; and if ye believe [the Bible] ye will believe [the Book of Mormon] also” (Morm.

Dan. 7:10; 12:1; Isa. 4:3; 65:6; see also Phil. 4:3; Rev. 3:5; 13:8; 21:27). Names of faithful Saints may be recorded in the book of life conditionally while they are in mortality (Luke 10:20) or “from the foundation of the world” (Rev. 17:8), but may be “blotted out” because of unrepented transgression (Rev. 3:5; 22:19; Alma 5:57; D&C 85:5, 11). Ultimately, only the names of those who qualify for eternal life remain written or “sealed” (TPJS, p. 9) in the Lamb’s book of life.

Latter-day Saints believe that essential items written in the “books yet to be opened” are linked to proper Church records, including those of essential gospel ordinances performed by priesthood authority for individuals and attested by authorized witnesses. In ancient covenant ceremonies, the names of the righteous were solemnly recorded, thus numbering them among “the living” (e.g., Num. 1:1–46; Mosiah 6:1–2). What is properly recorded on earth is recorded in heaven (D&C 128:7–8). Final sealing in the Lamb’s book requires, further, the approval of the Holy Spirit of Promise (D&C 132:19).

J. LEWIS TAYLOR

BOOK OF MORMON

[This entry introduces the Book of Mormon, with the Overview describing its basic nature, contents, and purposes; a brief article follows on the Title Page from the Book of Mormon; and the remaining articles are devoted to a brief explanation of each book in the Book of Mormon.]

Overview

Title Page from Book of Mormon

First Book of Nephi

Second Book of Nephi

Book of Jacob

Book of Enos

Book of Jarom

Book of Omni

The Words of Mormon

Book of Mosiah

Book of Alma

Book of Helaman

Third Nephi

Fourth Nephi

Book of Mormon

Book of Ether

Book of Moroni

The teachings of the Book of Mormon are discussed in doctrinal articles throughout the Encyclopedia; see Doctrine; Gospel of Jesus Christ. See also Book of Mormon Religious Teachings and Practices; Jesus Christ in the Scriptures: the Book of Mormon; Prophecy: Prophecy in the Book of Mormon.

Concerning its essential relationship with the Bible and other scripture, see Bible; Book of Mormon, Biblical Prophecies about; Book of Mormon in a Biblical Culture; Isaiah; Scripture; Standard Works.

On the writing and composition of the Book of Mormon, see Book of Mormon Authorship; Book of Mormon Language; Book of Mormon Literature; Book of Mormon Plates and Records.

For information about its origin and publication, see Book of Mormon Editions; Book of Mormon Manuscripts; Book of Mormon Translation by Joseph Smith; Book of Mormon Translations; Book of Mormon Witnesses; Manuscript, Lost 116 Pages; Moroni, Visitations of. See, generally, Book of Mormon Studies.

Separate articles can be found on Book of Mormon Peoples; Jaredites; Lamanites; Nephites; Women in the Book of Mormon; articles on the main individuals in this scripture are listed under Book of Mormon Personalities.

Internal aspects of Book of Mormon culture and civilization are discussed in such entries as Book of Mormon Chronology; Book of Mormon Economy and Technology; Book of Mormon Geography; Book of Mormon, Government and Legal History in; Book of Mormon, History of Warfare in; Jesus Christ: Forty-Day Ministry and Other Post-Resurrection Appearances of Jesus Christ; Liahona; Secret Combinations; Sword of Laban; Three Nephites; Tree of Life.]

OVERVIEW

The Prophet Joseph SMITH called the Book of Mormon “the most correct of any book on earth, and the keystone of our religion” and said that a person “would get nearer to God by abiding by its precepts, than by any other book” (TPJS, p. 194), for it contains the fulness of the GOSPEL OF JESUS CHRIST (D&C 20:8–9). To members of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, the Book of Mormon forms the doctrinal foundation of the Church and speaks the word of God to all the world.

The Book of Mormon both confirms and supplements the Bible: “Behold, this [the Book of Mormon] is written for the intent that ye may believe that [the Bible]; and if ye believe [the Bible] ye will believe [the Book of Mormon] also” (Morm.

Jesus Christ Is the God of That Land, by Minerva K. Teichert (1949, oil on board, 36" × 48"). Superimposed on the western hemisphere and flanked by Quetzal birds, native American symbols of liberty and freedom, this painting conveys the central message of the Book of Mormon "that Jesus is the Christ, the Eternal God, manifesting himself unto all nations." Courtesy Springville Museum of Art.

7:9). The Bible is primarily a record of God's dealings with the forebears and descendants of Jacob or Israel in the ancient Near East. Latter-day Saints believe the Book of Mormon to be a record of God's dealings principally with another group of Israelites he brought to the Western Hemisphere from Jerusalem about 600 B.C. (see LEHI). They anticipated the birth and coming of Jesus Christ and believed in his ATONEMENT and gospel. Their complex, lengthy records were abridged by a prophet named MORMON, inscribed on plates of gold, and buried by his son, MORONI<sub>2</sub>, after internecine wars destroyed all of the believers in Christ in the New World except Moroni (A.D. 385).

JOSEPH SMITH AND THE BOOK OF MORMON. In his short lifetime, Joseph Smith brought forth many scriptures (see DOCTRINE AND COVENANTS; PEARL OF GREAT PRICE). His first prophetic calling was to bring forth the Book of Mormon. In 1823, at age seventeen, he was shown the hidden record by Moroni, then a resurrected angelic messenger from God (JS—H 1:27–54). After several visitations during the next four years, Joseph was allowed to remove the sacred record from its resting place in the hill CUMORAH, near Palmyra, New York. Despite many interruptions and persistent persecutions (JS—H 1:57–60), Joseph Smith translated the lengthy record in about sixty working days. Latter-day Saints bear testimony that he did this "through the mercy of God, by the power of God" (D&C 1:29), "by the inspiration of heaven" (Messenger and Advocate [Oct. 1834]:14–16; JS—H 1:71, n.). He had the assistance of several scribes, chiefly Oliver COWDERY, who wrote what Joseph Smith dictated. The book was published in Palmyra in 1830. At least eleven witnesses, in addition to Joseph Smith, saw and/or hefted the Book of Mormon plates before he returned them to Moroni (see BOOK OF MORMON WITNESSES).

PURPOSES AND CONTENTS. The Book of Mormon, as its modern subtitle states, stands with the Bible as "Another Testament of Jesus Christ." Its main purposes are summarized on its title page: to show the remnants of the Book of Mormon people what great things God did for their forefathers, to make known the covenants of the Lord, and to convince "Jew and Gentile that Jesus is the Christ, the Eternal God, manifesting himself unto all nations." The central event in the Book of Mormon is the appearance of the resurrected Christ to righteous inhabitants of the Western Hemisphere after his ascension into heaven at Jerusalem. During his visit, Christ delivered a sermon that is similar to the SERMON ON THE MOUNT recorded in the New Testament, but with certain vital clarifications and additions. He declared his doctrine, the fulness of his gospel necessary to enter the kingdom of God; and he established his Church with its essential ordinances, and ordained disciples to preside over the Church. At this time, Christ also explained the promises of God to Israel, healed the sick and disabled; blessed the children and their parents; and expressed his great love, allowing each individual to come forward and touch the wounds he had received during his crucifixion (see 3 Ne. 11–26). The record of Jesus' visit and many other passages in the Book of Mormon verify the divine sonship, ministry, atonement, resurrection, and eternal status of the Lord Jesus Christ and show that the fulness of his gospel is the same for all people, whenever and wherever they have lived.

The ancestors of these people to whom Jesus appeared had been in the Western Hemisphere for about 600 years. The Book of Mormon opens with the family of Lehi in Jerusalem at the time of the biblical prophet Jeremiah. Lehi was warned by God about 600 B.C. to take his family and flee Jerusalem before it was destroyed by Babylon (1 Ne. 1:1–2). The account, written by Lehi's son NEPHI<sub>1</sub>,

In this wooden box, Joseph Smith kept the Book of Mormon plates. The inside of the box measures 14" × 16". The depth is 6 1/4" sloping to 4". The lid and bottom are walnut, and the sides are made from boxwood. The box was also used as a lap desk. In the possession of emeritus Church Patriarch Eldred G. Smith.

first tells of his family's departure from Jerusalem and of his dangerous return to the city with his brothers to obtain sacred records that contained their lineage, the five books of Moses, and a history of the Jews and writings of prophets down to Jeremiah's time (1 Ne. 3–5).

The group traveled in the wilderness until they reached a pleasant land by the sea where Nephi, with God's instruction, built a ship that took them to the New World (1 Ne. 17–18). Nephi's older brothers, LAMAN and LEMUEL, expressed resentment at Nephi's closeness to the Lord and did not want him to rule over them (1 Ne. 16:37–39; 18:10). When the family reached the New World, this antagonism led to a schism between the NEPHITES and LAMANITES that pervades the Book of Mormon.

As the Nephite sermons, prophecies, and historical records were compiled and handed down, the writers emphasized that those who keep God's commandments prosper. Unfortunately, many who prospered became proud and persecuted others, with war as the eventual result. The desolation of war humbled the people, who began again to call upon God.

Ancient American prophets, like biblical prophets such as Moses, Isaiah, and Daniel, were shown visions of the future of various nations. For example, Nephi foresaw Christopher COLUMBUS' discovery of America, the influx of Gentiles into the New World, and the American Revolution

(1 Ne. 13:12–15, 18–19), as well as the birth and earthly ministry of Jesus Christ. Christ's birth, ministry, and death were prophesied by Lehi, Nephi, BENJAMIN, SAMUEL THE LAMANITE, and other prophets. When MOSIAH<sup>1</sup> discovered a people who had left Jerusalem with MULEK, a son of Zedekiah (see Jer. 52:10; Omni 1:12–15; Hel. 8:21), and King Limhi's messengers found a record of the extinct JAREDITES, the Nephites learned that they were not the only people God had brought to the Western Hemisphere.

After the appearance of Jesus Christ, the Nephites and Lamanites enjoyed peace for more than 160 years (4 Ne. 1:18–24). Then, many who had been righteous broke their covenants with God, and the Church and their civilization began to collapse. At last, in A.D. 385, the few remaining Nephites were hunted and killed by Lamanites. The book ends with Moroni, the last Nephite, writing to the people of modern times, admonishing them to "come unto Christ, and be perfected in him" (Moro. 10:32).

MODERN APPLICATIONS. Latter-day Saints embrace the Book of Mormon as a record for all people. In addition to instructing their contemporaries and descendants, the prophets who wrote these ancient records foresaw modern conditions and selected lessons needed to meet the challenges of this world (Morm. 8:34–35). Their book is a record of a fallen people, urging all people to live righteously and prevent a similar fall today.

The Book of Mormon has had a profound effect on the Church and its members. It is so fundamental that Joseph Smith said, "Take away the Book of Mormon and the revelations and where is our religion? We have none" (TPJS, p. 71).

The Book of Mormon teaches that the living God has spoken to several peoples throughout the earth who have written sacred records as he has commanded (2 Ne. 29:11–12). The Book of Mormon is one such record.

It also stands as evidence to Latter-day Saints that God restored his true and living Church through Joseph Smith. The importance of this belief for Latter-day Saints cannot be overestimated, for they are confident that God watches over the people of the earth and loves them, and that he continues to speak to them through contemporary prophets who apply unchanging gospel principles to today's challenges.

The Book of Mormon also is important to Latter-day Saints as an aid in understanding the Bible and the will of God. Nephi prophesied that many “plain and precious” truths and covenants would be taken from the gospel and the Bible after the deaths of the apostles (1 Ne. 13:26–27). Many questions that have arisen from the Bible are answered for Latter-day Saints by the Book of Mormon, such as the mode of and reasons for baptism (2 Ne. 31; 3 Ne. 11:23–26); the proper way to administer the sacrament of the Lord’s Supper (Moro. 4–5); the nature of the Resurrection (Alma 40); the effects of the FALL OF ADAM, and the reasons for evil and suffering in the world (2 Ne. 2). The Book of Mormon reinforces the LDS doctrine that the gospel of Jesus Christ existed before the Creation and has been revealed to prophets and believers throughout time.

Also sacred to Latter-day Saints is the Book of Mormon as a tutor in discerning the promptings of the Holy Ghost. Many Latter-day Saints, including those born into LDS families, trace their conversion to Jesus Christ and their commitment toward the Church to prayerful study of the Book of Mormon, and through it they learn to recognize the Holy Spirit. Thus, the book becomes a continuing symbol of personal revelation and of God’s love for and attention to the needs of each person. It also declares that all mankind will be judged by its precepts and commandments (Mosiah 3:24; Moro. 10:27; see JUDGMENT). It is evidence that God remembers every creature he has created (Mosiah 27:30) and every covenant he has made (1 Ne. 19:15; 3 Ne. 16:11). The Book of Mormon is the base from which millions have begun a personal journey of spiritual growth and of service to others.

For LDS children, the Book of Mormon is a source of stories and heroes to equal those of the Bible—Joseph in Egypt, Daniel in the lions’ den, the faithful Ruth, and brave Queen Esther. They tell and sing with enthusiasm about the army of faithful young men led by HELAMAN<sub>1</sub> (Alma 56:41–50); of the prophet ABINADI’s courage before wicked King Noah (Mosiah 11–17); of Nephi and his unwavering faithfulness (1 Ne. 3–18); of Abish, a Lamanite woman who for many years appears to be the lone believer in Christ in King Lamoni’s court until the missionary Ammon taught the gospel to the king and queen (Alma 19); and of Jesus’ appearances to the Nephites (3 Ne. 11–28). There are many favorites. The book is used to teach children doctrines, provide examples of the Christlike life, and remind them of God’s great love and hope for all his children.

The book is central to missionary work. It is the Church’s most important missionary tool and is destined to go to every nation, kindred, tongue, and people (Rev. 14:6–7). All LDS missionaries encourage those they contact to read and pray about the book as a means of receiving their own testimony from God about the truthfulness of the Book of Mormon, a witness of Jesus Christ.

Latter-day Saints are regularly admonished to make fuller use of the Book of Mormon. In 1832, two and one-half years after the book was published, the word of the Lord warned the Saints that they had treated the revelations too lightly and had neglected to “remember the new covenant, even the Book of Mormon” (D&C 84:57). Church leaders repeatedly encourage members to make the Book of Mormon a greater part of their lives. President Ezra Taft BENSON has counseled Latter-day Saints to read the book daily and to share it and the gospel message with all the world.

READING THE BOOK OF MORMON. This sacred record asks the reader to approach its words with faith and prayer. One of its teachings is that readers will “receive no witness until after the trial of [their] faith” (Ether 12:6). Therefore, although aspects of the book may seem unusual or improbable at first, it invites its readers to entertain them as possibilities until the whole picture becomes clear and other feelings are experienced and thoughts considered. Moreover, the final inscription of Moroni<sub>2</sub> on the title page asks readers to look beyond human weaknesses in the book: “If there are faults they are the mistakes of men; wherefore, condemn not the things of God.” He closed his own book within the Book of Mormon by exhorting all who receive these things to ask God, with a sincere heart and with real intent, having faith in Christ, if they are not true, and promises that God will manifest the truth of it (Moro. 10:4).

Latter-day Saints of all ages and interests find rewards in reading the Book of Mormon. At first, people tend to focus attention on its main messages and story lines. With further reading and pondering, they discover numerous themes, meaningful nuances, interesting details, and profound spiritual expressions.

The first-time reader may find the Book of Mormon difficult at times. Its style, as translated into English, is somewhat similar to that of the King James Version of the Bible, and the reader who is not familiar with the Bible will encounter some unfamiliar word usages. The 1981 edition of the Book of Mormon is annotated with many Bible references and aids to facilitate a more detailed comparison.

Book of Mormon prophets Nephi, JACOB, and Abinadi quote extensively from Isaiah (see, e.g., 2 Ne. 6–8 [Isa. 49–51]; 2 Ne. 12–24 [Isa. 2–14]; Mosiah 14 [Isa. 53]), an Old Testament prophet whose poetic style and allusions have challenged readers of the Bible and also have proved difficult to many who study the Book of Mormon. Initially, some Church leaders encourage first-time readers to move through these chapters, understanding what is accessible and saving the rest for later study. In Isaiah's writings, Latter-day Saints find an important testimony of Christ and of the fulfillment of God's covenants with the house of Israel. Christ admonished his followers to "search these things diligently, for great are the words of Isaiah" (3 Ne. 23:11).

Another possible hurdle for readers is the book's nonchronological insertions. Nephi and Jacob and Jacob's descendants wrote first-person accounts from about 590 B.C. until about 150 B.C., and then Mormon (about A.D. 385) inserted a shorter chapter to explain his role as abridger of another record. Then the reader is returned via Mormon's abridgment to the history of Nephi's successors and of the descendants of ALMA<sup>1</sup>. As groups of people break away from and return to the main body, parts of their records are incorporated into the book, causing the reader to jump back to earlier events. Likewise, Moroni's abridgment of the very ancient book of Ether appears out of chronological order near the end. In addition, the Book of Mormon, like the Old Testament, describes events from widely separated intervals. As an abridgment, it contains only a small part of the proceedings of these ancient peoples.

APPROACHING THE TEXT. The arrangement of the Book of Mormon lends itself to many approaches. Three mutually supportive avenues are most often followed. First, the book serves as a source of guidance and doctrine, yielding lessons and wisdom applicable to contemporary life. This approach is recommended in the writings of Nephi, who wrote that he "did liken the scriptures unto [his people], that it might be for [their] profit and learning" (1 Ne. 19:23). Latter-day Saints find its pages rich with ennobling narratives, clear doctrines, eternal truths, memorable sayings, and principles. Knowing the conditions of the latter days, the ancient prophets periodically address the individual reader directly. Latter-day Saints emphasize the need to read the Book of Mormon prayerfully, with faith in God, to benefit personally from its teachings and to come unto Christ.

A second approach to the Book of Mormon, adding historical dimension to the first approach, is to study the book as an ancient text. The reader who accepts the Book of Mormon as an ancient Hebrew lineage history written by prophets in the New World will find the book consistent with that description and setting. The book is a repository of ancient cultures that are as far removed from modern readers as are those of the Old and New Testaments. Continuing research has found Hebrew poetic forms, rhetorical patterns, and idioms, together with many Mesoamerican symbols, traditions, and artifacts, to be implicit in the book or consistent with it.

Finally, one may enjoy the Book of Mormon as a work of literature. Although the style may seem tedious or repetitive at times, there are order, purpose, and clarity in its language. Its words are often as beautiful and as memorable as passages in the Psalms, the Gospel of John, and other notable religious works of prose and poetry.

Most faithful readers of the Book of Mormon, however, do not define or limit themselves to any single approach or methodology, for these approaches are all transcended by the overriding implications of the book's divine origins and eternal purposes. Study and faith, reflection and application, all help a person know and comprehend the messages of the Book of Mormon. But for millions of Latter-day Saints, their most important experience with the Book of Mormon has been the spiritual knowledge that they have received of its truth. It has changed and enriched their lives and has brought Jesus Christ and his teachings closer to them.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Benson, Ezra Taft. A Witness and a Warning. Salt Lake City, 1988.
- Downs, Robert B. Books That Changed America. London, 1970.
- Faust, James E. "The Keystone of Our Religion." Ensign 13 (Nov. 1983):9.
- Nibley, Hugh W. "The Mormon View of the Book of Mormon." Concilium 10 (Dec. 1967):82–83; reprinted, CWILN 8:259–64.

MONTE S. NYMAN
LISA BOLIN HAWKINS

TITLE PAGE FROM THE BOOK OF MORMON

Joseph SMITH once wrote, "I wish to mention here that the title-page of the Book of Mormon is a literal translation, taken from the very last leaf, on the left hand side of the collection or book of plates, which contained the record which has been translated; . . . and that said title-page is not . . . a modern composition, either of mine or of any other man who has lived or does live in this generation" (HC 1:71.).

The title page is therefore the translation of an ancient document, at least partially written by MORONI<sub>2</sub>, son of Mormon, in the fifth century A.D. It describes the volume as an "abridgment of the record of the people of Nephi, and also of the Lamanites" and "an abridgment taken from the Book of Ether also, which is a record of the people of Jared" (see BOOK OF MORMON PLATES AND RECORDS).

According to the title page, the Book of Mormon is addressed to LAMANITES, Jews, and GENTILES and is designed to inform Lamanites of promises made to their forebears and to convince "Jew and Gentile that Jesus is the Christ, the Eternal God, manifesting himself unto all nations."

The title page was used as the description of the Book of Mormon on the federal copyright application filed June 11, 1829, with R. R. Lansing, Clerk of the District Court of the United States for the Northern District of New York, at Albany.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Ludlow, Daniel H. "The title page." In The Book of Mormon: First Nephi, The Doctrinal Foundation, ed. Monte S. Nyman and Charles D. Tate, pp. 19–33. Provo, Utah, 1988.

ELDIN RICKS

FIRST BOOK OF NEPHI

Written by NEPHI<sub>1</sub>, an ancient prophet who fled Jerusalem with his father, LEHI, and Lehi's family shortly after 600 B.C., this book tells of their travels

BYU Geography Department

Possible route of Lehi in the Old World, from Jerusalem to the ocean, e. 600–587 B.C.

under divine guidance to the Western Hemisphere. With its detailed testimony of the mission of Jesus Christ and its panoramic view of sacred history, 1 Nephi is the doctrinal and historical foundation for all of the Book of Mormon. Its stated intent is to testify that the God of Israel can save all who repent and exercise faith in him (1 Ne. 1:20; 6:4).

Composed several years after Nephi arrived in the “promised land,” the record, of which the First Book of Nephi was a part, contained prophesying and sacred preaching “for Christ’s sake, and for the sake of [his] people” (Jacob 1:4). Its fundamental message is that the God of Israel is merciful and has the power to save those who obey him (1 Ne. 1:20; 6:4; 22:30–31). Nephi supports this thesis with historical and prophetic evidence. He cites Israel’s exodus from Egypt twice as evidence of God’s redeeming power, and saw the same power at work in his family’s exodus from a doomed Jerusalem. A seer of remarkable spiritual stature, Nephi testified that greater acts of redemption lay in the future: God himself would come to earth to ransom man from death and sin (1 Ne. 11:33; 19:10), and before the end of the world, Israel would be redeemed.

The narrative of 1 Nephi is vivid and dramatic; acts of divine intervention dominate this account. It begins in the first year of the Judean King Zedekiah (1 Ne. 1:4; cf. 2 Kgs. 24:8–18; dated by Babylonian documents at 597 B.C.). Jerusalem had just capitulated after a brief Babylonian siege, and King Jehoiachin, together with many of Judah’s prominent citizens, had been deported. When Jerusalem persisted in its arrogance, a host of prophets, including Jeremiah and Lehi, warned of destruction. As people conspired to kill Lehi, he was warned by the Lord and escaped south into the desert. Twice his four sons returned to the region, once to obtain a copy of the scriptures written on plates of brass and again to convince Ishmael and his family to flee with them (chaps. 3–7). Guided by a miraculous brass compass (see LIAHONA), Lehi’s group then completed a grueling odyssey that covered eight years in the wilderness, arriving at a verdant spot on the southern coast of the Arabian Peninsula. There, Nephi was summoned by the Lord to a mountain where he was instructed to build a ship to carry the group to a land of promise. Through God’s frequent inspiration and protection, the ship was finished and the treacherous voyage completed (chaps. 16–18).

Through all these events, Lehi and Nephi were opposed by the oldest sons in the family, Wadi Sayq, near the border between Yemen and Oman on the Gulf of Aden (1989). Areas with vegetation such as this along the southern coast of the Arabian peninsula match the description of the place where Lehi and his group built their ship (1 Nephi 17:5), but they were unknown to Westerners until after the Book of Mormon was published. Courtesy Warren Aston.

LAMAN and Lemuel, who were not only skeptical but sometimes violent in their opposition. The record vindicates Nephi in many ways. An angel once intervened to protect Nephi from his brothers; twice he escaped from them, being filled with the power of God. Several times, by his faith, he succeeded where they failed.

Records of powerful visions are interspersed throughout the narrative. Lehi received his prophetic commission in a vision as he prayed on Jerusalem’s behalf: He saw a pillar of fire dwelling upon a rock and God seated upon his throne and was given a book to read that decreed judgment upon the city (chap. 1). Soon after, Nephi heard the voice of the Lord, saying that Nephi would teach and rule over his elder brothers (chap. 2); and Lehi had a dream that centered around a magnificent tree, a river, an iron rod, and a great and spacious building (chap. 8; see also TREE OF LIFE). The family’s escape from a proud and materialistic Jerusalem and their subsequent quest for salvation in the wilderness are vividly reflected in the imagery of this dream. Lehi also prophesied about the Babylonian captivity of the Jews, their eventual return to Palestine, and the coming of a Messiah who would redeem mankind from its lost and fallen state (chap. 10).

Inspired by Lehi's spiritual experiences and wanting to know the meaning of his father's dream, Nephi sought and received the same vision, together with its interpretation. This revelation puts the experiences of Lehi and his posterity into the context of God's redemptive plan and provides much of the historical and doctrinal framework for subsequent Book of Mormon prophecy: (1) Nephi saw the birth, ministry, and atoning sacrifice of the Son of God, and the rejection of his apostles by Israel; (2) he witnessed the division of Lehi's family, followed by the rise, decline, and destruction of his own posterity by the descendants of his brothers, and saw that the Lamb of God would visit various branches of Israel, including Nephi's posterity; (3) he saw a GREAT AND ABOMINABLE CHURCH among the Gentiles, as well as a dispensation of the gospel to the Gentiles and their crucial role in gathering Israel and a remnant of Nephi's seed; and (4) he was shown the final victory of God over the powers of evil at the end of the world (chaps. 11–14).

Citing other corroborating prophecies, 1 Nephi 19–22 reinforces those four themes, the mainstays of the Nephite outlook on world history. Nephi first gives a detailed testimony of the atoning sacrifice of the God of Israel, his rejection, and the scattering of God's covenant people, quoting ZENOS, ZENOCK, and NEUM (chap. 19); he then quoted ISAIAH to show that God will defer his anger and will eventually gather his people through the assistance of gentile kings and queens (chaps. 20–21); and, finally, he exhorts all to obey God's commandments and be saved, for in the last days the wicked shall burn and the Holy One of Israel shall reign (chap. 22).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Axelgard, Frederick W. "1 and 2 Nephi: An Inspiring Whole." BYU Studies 26 (Fall 1986):53–65.
- Nibley, Hugh. Lehi in the Desert. In CWII 5.
- Nyman, Monte S., and Charles D. Tate, Jr., eds. The Book of Mormon: First Nephi, the Doctrinal Foundation. Provo, Utah, 1988.

RULON D. EAMES

SECOND BOOK OF NEPHI

The Second Book of Nephi (2 Nephi) is a work written about 550 B.C. by the same author who wrote 1 Nephi and included it on his small PLATES. The second book contains four prophetic discourses and treatises from three Book of Mormon prophets, LEHI, JACOB, and Nephi<sub>1</sub>, as well as substantial excerpts of the prophecies of Isaiah from the brass plates. Additionally, 2 Nephi briefly records the difficult transition from the founding generation of Lehi's colony to the succeeding generation in their new homeland.

The first segment of the book consists of Lehi's admonitions and testament to his posterity before his death (1:1–4:11). He directed his opening words to his older sons, Laman, Lemuel, and Sam, as well as to the sons of Ishmael. He reminded them of God's mercy in leading them to a promised land, taught them concerning the COVENANT of righteousness that belongs to the land, warned of the loss of liberty and prosperity that will follow disobedience to God, and urged them to become reconciled to their brother Nephi as their leader (1:1–27).

Following this admonition, Lehi pronounced specific blessings on all of his descendants, either as individuals or as family groups. His blessings contain prophecies and promises concerning the future of each individual or group in the covenant land and are followed by counsel "according to the workings of the Spirit" (1:6). His instructions to his youngest sons, Jacob and Joseph, are doctrinally significant. He spoke to Jacob concerning God's plan of salvation for his children, teaching principles that are fundamental to understanding the gospel of Jesus Christ, including the doctrine of redemption through the Messiah, the necessity of opposition and agency, the role of Satan, and the importance of the fall of Adam and Eve (2:1–30). Lehi taught his son Joseph concerning the prophecies of his ancestor Joseph of Egypt, who foretold the latter-day mission of another Joseph (the Prophet Joseph SMITH) and of the coming forth of the Book of Mormon (3:1–25).

Nephi<sub>1</sub>, son of Lehi, is author of the next section, the only historical segment in the record (4:12–5:34). After recounting the death of Lehi and the subsequent rebellion of Laman, Lemuel, and the sons of Ishmael (4:12–13), Nephi noted that he was keeping two records: the large plates on which he wrote his people's secular history and the small plates on which he recorded "that which is pleasing unto God,” including many excerpts from the plates of brass (4:14–15; 5:29–33).

As Nephi wrote of his delight in pondering the scriptures and “the things of the Lord,” he was moved to compose a beautiful psalm (4:16–35). In these verses, much like the biblical psalmist, Nephi used inspiring imagery and poetic parallelism to praise God for his goodness, to lament his own weaknesses, and to declare his devotion to the Lord.

Nephi closed this segment by telling of the partitioning of Lehi’s posterity into two distinct peoples, the NEPHITES (the believers) and the LAMANITES (the unbelievers). He described the theological, cultural, and geographical divisions that developed between the brother nations, lamenting that within forty years of separating they were at war one with another (5:1–34).

A sermon by Jacob constitutes the third entry in 2 Nephi (chaps. 6–10), followed by the fourth and final part, a long written discourse from Nephi (chaps. 11–33). Quoting substantial portions of Isaiah, both Nephi and Jacob emphasized two major themes: the history and future of God’s covenant people, and the mission of the Messiah. For his discourse on these topics, Nephi first quoted the text of Isaiah 2–14 in 2 Nephi 12–24 and then commented on them in chapters 25–30, incorporating portions of Isaiah 29 in his discussion. Jacob quoted Isaiah 50:1–52:2 in chapters 7–8. Apparently, Joseph Smith put these quotations from Isaiah in King James English, but with many variant readings reflecting the Nephite source.

Citing and reflecting on Isaiah, Jacob, and Nephi focused on such events as the Babylonian captivity and return (6:8–9; 25:10–11); the apostasy, scattering, and oppression of the house of Israel; and the latter-day gathering of their descendants, their restoration by conversion to the gospel of Christ, and the establishment of Zion—themes that concerned them because of their own Israelite ancestry (6:6–18; 8:1–25; 10:1–25; 25:14–17; 26:14–30:18). They further prophesied the destruction of the wicked before the second coming of the Savior followed by the subsequent era of peace (12:1–22; 21:1–24:3).

In their discourses, Jacob and Nephi taught of the Messiah’s earthly ministry, rejection, and crucifixion (6:9; 7:1–11; 9:1–54; 10:3–5; 17–19) and his gospel fundamentals of faith, repentance, baptism, and obedience (9:23–24; 31:1–21; see GOSPEL OF JESUS CHRIST); they then prophesied his baptism, atoning sacrifice, and resurrection, followed by his ministry among the Nephites, his ultimate second coming, and the final judgment (9:5–27; 26:1–9; 31:4–12).

In chapter 29, Nephi made special mention of the Lord’s desire that the Book of Mormon be used as “a standard” by his people, along with the Bible (29:2), noting that other books will come forth. In closing the record, Nephi testified that the words therein are the words of Christ, the words by which readers shall be judged (33:10–15).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Jackson, Kent P., ed. Studies in Scripture, Vol. 7, pp. 86–174. Salt Lake City, 1987.
- McConkie, Joseph Fielding, and Robert L. Millet. Doctrinal Commentary on the Book of Mormon, Vol. 1, pp. 182–376. Salt Lake City, 1987.
- Nyman, Monte S., and Charles D. Tate, eds. The Book of Mormon: Second Nephi, The Doctrinal Structure. Provo, Utah, 1989.

TERRY B. BALL

BOOK OF JACOB

Written by JACOB, fifth son of LEHI, sometime after 545 B.C., the work follows the pattern outlined by NEPHI, for making entries on the small PLATES by including sacred sermons, significant revelations, prophecies, and some historical information. Jacob, a Nephite prophet, wrote to persuade all men to “come unto Christ” (Jacob 1:7).

The book appears to have been written in three stages. The first constitutes an important discourse by Jacob at the temple, in which he called his people to repent from immorality, materialism, and pride (chaps. 2–3). He counseled men and women to be generous with their possessions, promising that, if they sought the KINGDOM OF GOD before seeking riches, they would be blessed with sufficient wealth to assist others (2:17–19). Jacob strongly warned his people against sins of immorality because many had transgressed the law of CHASTITY, including practicing polygamy not authorized by the Lord (2:30). He reminded his hearers that the Lord “delight[s] in the chastity of women” and that the sins of the men had broken the hearts of their wives and children (2:22–35).

The second part contains prophecies concerning the ATONEMENT of Christ, the rejection of Jesus of Nazareth by many Jews, and the scattering and gathering of ISRAEL (chaps. 4–6). Jacob desired that later generations would “know that we knew of Christ, and we had a hope of his glory many hundred years before his coming” (4:4). The major component of this section is Jacob’s quoting of the allegory of the tame and wild olive trees (chap. 5). Written by ZENOS, an Israelite prophet whose writings were preserved on the brass plates, this allegory outlines in symbolic narrative the prophetic story of the scattering and gathering of Israel, including Lehi’s descendants, from the establishment of Israel to the end of the earth.

The third segment recounts Jacob’s experience with an ANTI-CHRIST named Sherem, who with skill and power of language endeavored to flatter and deceive people away from belief in Christ (7:1–4). Sherem had accused Jacob of blasphemy and false prophecy and had tried to convince people that there would be no Christ. In the end, Sherem was confounded by Jacob and, after seeking for a sign, was smitten by God and died shortly thereafter (7:7–8, 13–20). Recovering from Sherem’s divisive teachings through searching the scriptures, Jacob’s people were able to experience anew the peace and love of God (7:23).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Matthews, Robert J. “Jacob: Prophet, Theologian, Historian.” In The Book of Mormon: Jacob Through Words of Mormon, ed. M. Nyman and C. Tate, Provo, Utah, 1990.

CLYDE J. WILLIAMS

BOOK OF ENOS

Following the pattern set by his father and predecessors (Jacob 1:2–4; cf. Enos 1:13–16), Enos, son of JACOB, personally recorded the TESTIMONY and prophetic promises granted to him. Enos (c. 515–417 B.C.) is a figure who touches the heart. He typifies conversion, compassion, and confidence before the Lord. While he was hunting beasts, the words of his father “concerning eternal life, and the joy of the saints, sunk deep into [his] heart,” and his “soul hungered” (1:3–4). All day and into the night he “wrestle[d] . . . before God” in “mighty prayer” until he received a remission of his sins. He successively prayed for his own welfare, for the welfare of his brethren the NEPHITES, who strayed too easily from righteousness, and then for his brethren the LAMANITES, who had become increasingly ferocious and wild. Enos received a COVENANT declaration from the Lord that the Nephite records would be brought forth to the Lamanites. He knew with a surety that he would see his Redeemer’s face with pleasure and would receive a place in the mansions of the Father (1:27).

MARILYN ARNOLD

BOOK OF JAROM

Jarom, son of ENOS, recorded a brief summary of the fortunes of the NEPHITES during his lifetime (c. 440–355 B.C.). Twice he justified the brevity of his account, pleading limited space and little new doctrine to add to the words of his predecessors. Reflecting an era of strict conservatism in the flourishing colony, Jarom recounted great Nephite efforts to observe the LAW OF MOSES and to anticipate the coming MESSIAH. Despite their larger numbers, the LAMANITES were unsuccessful in their frequent attacks on the prospering Nephites, and Jarom attributed the Nephite successes to the prophets, priests, and teachers who stirred them continually to repentance.

MARILYN ARNOLD

BOOK OF OMNI

This book concluded and filled the small PLATES of Nephi. It contains brief statements by a succession of record keepers who were descendants of JACOB but apparently not spiritual leaders: Omni, Amaron, Chemish, Abinadom, and Amaleki (fourth–second centuries B.C.). Amaleki, whose account is the longest of the five, described the important transition that occurred in Book of Mormon history when MOSIAH<sub>1</sub> led the escape of a band of faithful NEPHITES from the land of Nephi to Zarahemla (c. 200 B.C.). Here they discovered descendants of a group that had left Jerusalem with MULEK but had lost their religion and language. Amaleki connected the corruption of their language with the absence of written records, establishing the importance of record preservation. Mosiah brought with him the plates of brass containing “the record of the Jews” (Omni 1:14), including the laws that kings were required to have under the LAW OF MOSES (see Deut. 17:18–19). He was accepted as king over both these peoples and ruled for a generation. Amaleki survived Mosiah but had no heirs, so he transmitted his records to Mosiah’s son, King BENJAMIN.

MARILYN ARNOLD

THE WORDS OF MORMON

MORMON was at work on his abridgment of the large PLATES of NEPHI<sub>1</sub> when he discovered the small plates of Nephi, a prophetic record from early NEPHITE history (W of M 1:3). Because he was deeply impressed with the messianic PROPHECIES that he read on the small plates, and in response to “the workings of the Spirit,” Mormon included that set of plates with his digest (W of M 1:4–7). But because that record ended a few years before the book of Mosiah began (c. A.D. 130), Mormon assumed the prerogative of an editor and appended this historical postscript to the small plates to bring its conclusion into correlation with the opening of the book of Mosiah. This appendage, called the Words of Mormon, was composed about A.D. 385.

ELDIN RICKS

BOOK OF MOSIAH

The book of Mosiah is religiously rich, symbolically meaningful, chronologically complex, and politically significant. Although its disparate events range from 200 to 91 B.C., they are unified particularly by the theme of deliverance and by the reign of the Nephite king MOSIAH<sub>2</sub>.

Several groups figure prominently in this history: (1) the main body of Nephites under King BENJAMIN and his son Mosiah<sub>2</sub>, together with the people of Zarahemla (Mulekites), who outnumbered their Nephite rulers and neighbors; (2) the people of Zeniff, who failed in their attempt to reoccupy the Nephites' homeland, the land of Nephi; and (3) the people of ALMA<sub>1</sub>, who broke away from the people of Zeniff and became the people of Alma, followers of the martyred prophet ABINADI. The last two groups returned to Zarahemla shortly after Mosiah became king.

The book of Mosiah is drawn from several underlying textual sources: Benjamin's speech (124 B.C.); the record of Zeniff (c. 200–120 B.C.), including Alma's record of Abinadi's trial (c. 150 B.C.) and of his people (c. 150–118 B.C.); and the annals of Mosiah (124–91 B.C.).

BENJAMIN'S SPEECH (CHAPS. 1–6). The coronation of Mosiah occurred in a setting similar to the traditional Israelite assembly at the temple, together with sacrifices, covenant renewal, confessions, pronouncements regarding Christ's atoning blood, and admonitions to serve God and help the poor. Benjamin died, and Mosiah reigned. He sponsored Ammon's expedition to find the people of Zeniff (7:1–8:21).

RECORD OF ZENIFF (CHAPS. 9–22). About seventy-five years earlier, Zeniff had established his colony; he fought two wars, and his wicked son Noah succeeded him. Twice, the prophet Abinadi delivered a condemnation of Noah; Abinadi rehearsed the Ten Commandments, quoted Isaiah 53, and discoursed on the atonement of Jesus Christ and the resurrection. As he was suffering death by fire, Abinadi prophesied that his death would prefigure Noah's. One of Noah's priests, Alma<sub>1</sub>, believed Abinadi's preaching, fled into the wilderness, and assembled a group of converts who escaped together from Noah's soldiers. Meanwhile, a military officer named Gideon opposed Noah, the Lamanites attacked, and Noah fled and was subsequently executed by his own people in the manner that Abinadi had predicted. Noah's son, Limhi, was left to reign for many years as a vassal king in servitude to the Lamanites. At length, Limhi and his people were delivered and escaped to Zarahemla.

ALMA'S RECORD (CHAPS. 23–24). The followers of Alma<sub>1</sub> practiced baptism and placed strong emphasis on unity, loving one another, and avoiding contention. In a speech that presaged Mosiah's final words establishing the reign of the judges, Alma<sub>1</sub> refused to become a king, wanting his people to be in bondage to no person. Nevertheless, they came under cruel bondage to the Lamanites, now led by some of Alma's former associates, the evil priests of Noah. Several years later, the people of Alma were miraculously delivered.

THE ANNALS OF MOSIAH (CHAPS. 25–29). The Nephites, the people of Zarahemla (Mulekites), the people of Limhi, and the people of Alma<sub>1</sub> were unified under Mosiah as king, with Alma as high priest. Alma was given authority to organize and regulate churches, but many members apostasized and persecuted the righteous. Among the wicked were his son ALMA<sub>2</sub> and the four sons of Mosiah. When they were confronted by an angel of the Lord, they repented and were converted. Mosiah translated the Jaredite record, passed the Nephite records and sacred artifacts to Alma<sub>2</sub>, and installed Alma<sub>2</sub> as the first chief judge according to the voice of the people.

The narratives in the book of Mosiah emphasize the theme of deliverance from bondage, whether physical or spiritual. In his address, Benjamin speaks of spiritual deliverance through the atoning blood of Christ, emphasizing mankind's dependence on God and its responsibility to the poor (both themes or typologies are similarly shaped in the Bible by the Exodus tradition). The account of the conversion of Alma<sub>2</sub> is a notable case of deliverance from spiritual bondage by calling upon the name of Jesus Christ (Mosiah 27; Alma 36). Two groups are delivered from physical bondage and oppression: Limhi's people and the converts of Alma after their enslavement by the Lamanites. As in the Exodus pattern, they "cried" to the Lord, who heard and delivered them from bondage. An emissary named Ammon expressly compared the deliverance of the people of Zeniff to the exodus of Israel from Egypt and of Lehi from Jerusalem (Mosiah 7:19–22, 33).

The book of Mosiah establishes several pairs of comparisons in a manner similar to a literary technique often used in the Bible: Alma<sub>1</sub> and Amulon are examples of good and bad priests; Benjamin and Noah are contrasting exemplars of noble and corrupt kingship. The extreme contrast between these kings is cited by Mosiah at the end of his reign to explain the wisdom in shifting the government of the Nephites from kingship to a reign of judges (Mosiah 29).

The Jaredite record is mentioned three times (Mosiah 8:9; 21:27; 28:11–19). In an attempt to get help from Mosiah's settlement, Limhi dispatched a search party; it did not find Mosiah, but found human remains, weapons of war, and twenty-four gold plates. The party returned this record to Limhi, who gave it to Mosiah, who translated it using two stones called "interpreters" (see URIM AND THUMMIM). The record told of the rise and fall of the Jaredites (see BOOK OF MORMON: BOOK OF ETHER).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Tate, George S. "The Typology of the Exodus Pattern in the Book of Mormon." In Literature of Belief, ed. N. Lambert, pp. 245–66. Provo, Utah, 1981.
- Thomasson, Gordon C. "Mosiah: The Complex Symbolism and the Symbolic Complex of Kingship in the Book of Mormon." F.A.R.M.S. Paper. Provo, Utah, 1982.
- Tvedtnes, John A. "King Benjamin and the Feast of Tabernacles." In By Study and Also by Faith, ed. J. Lundquist and S. Ricks, Vol. 2, pp. 197–237. Salt Lake City, 1990.

ALAN GOFF

BOOK OF ALMA

The book of Alma is the longest book in the Book of Mormon. It was abridged by MORMON, principally from the records of three men, ALMA<sub>2</sub> (chaps. 1–16, 27–44), Ammon (chaps. 17–26), and Alma's son HELAMAN<sub>1</sub> (chaps. 45–62), and concludes with remarks by Mormon (chap. 63). Its broad theme is that the preaching of the word of God in pure testimony is mightier than politics or the sword in establishing peace, justice, equality, and goodness (Alma 4:19; 31:5). The book demonstrates this theme through repeated examples of individuals who were converted to faith in the anticipated Savior, Jesus Christ, and examples of people who were given victory by God over their wicked and ambitious enemies.

The book of Alma covers thirty-nine years (91–52 B.C.). The first fourteen years are covered by two concurrent accounts—one encompassing the teachings and activities of Alma<sub>2</sub>, who resigned his judgeship in order to engage in missionary work in the land of Zarahemla (chaps. 1–16), and the other containing the words and deeds of the sons of King MOSIAH<sub>2</sub> and their companions as they made considerable personal sacrifice in their efforts to preach the gospel among the LAMANITES (chaps. 17–26).

The first section begins with the trial of Nehor before the chief judge Alma; Nehor was convicted and executed for the crime of enforcing PRIESTCRAFT with the sword (chap. 1). Alma then fought a civil war against Nehor's followers and prevailed (chaps. 2–4), but he soon relinquished the judgeship to devote full time to the ministry. He preached powerful sermons at the cities of Zarahemla (chaps. 5–6), Gideon (chap. 7), and Melek (chap. 8), and went to the wicked city of Ammonihah, where he was cast out, but ordered by an angel to return. In Ammonihah the second time, he met and was assisted by Amulek, who was instructed by an angel to find Alma (chap. 8). Although they were opposed by a skilled lawyer named Zeezrom, eventually they converted many, including Zeezrom. However, their male converts were expelled from the city, and Alma and Amulek were imprisoned and forced to watch the wives and children of their converts being burned to death. Eventually, Alma and Amulek were delivered when an earthquake destroyed the prison and killed their captors (chaps. 9–14). Shortly thereafter, this apostate city was annihilated by invading Lamanites (chap. 16).

During the same fourteen years, the sons of Mosiah and their companions were in the land southward. Ammon went to the land of Ishmael, and through his service to, and love of, King Lamoni, he converted the king and many of his people (chaps. 17–19), whom he taught to live the LAW OF MOSES in anticipation of the coming of Christ (Alma 25:15). Ammon and Lamoni then went to the land of Middoni to free his fellow missionaries from prison. En route they were confronted by Lamoni's father, the king of all the Lamanites, who took to the sword. Ammon withstood his blows, gained control over the king, and made him promise freedom for his brothers and autonomy for Lamoni and his people (chap. 20). Once Ammon's brother, Aaron, and his companions were free, they went to Lamoni's father, and taught and converted him, his household, and many of his people. These converted Lamanites, concerned about the return of prior blood guilt, made an oath never to shed blood again (chap. 23). Other Lamanites and dissident Nephites attacked these converts and killed 1,005, who would not defend themselves because of that oath. Many of the attacking Lamanites (but not the Nephite dissenters) felt remorse for their actions and laid down their arms and also became converted (chaps. 24–25). Eventually, Ammon led these converts, called Anti-Nephi-Lehies, to Nephite territory, where they settled in the land of Jershon (chap. 27). The Lamanites who were left behind became angry at the Nephites and then attacked and destroyed Ammonihah (Alma 25:1–2; described more fully in Alma 16:1–11).

After these developments, Korihor, an ANTI-CHRIST and advocate of blasphemous doctrines, confronted Alma as high priest in the court of the chief judge, where he asked for a sign from God, was struck dumb, and died shortly thereafter (chap. 30). Next, Alma led a delegation to preach to the Zoramites, a group that had defected from the Nephites. Many poverty-stricken Zoramites were reconverted and cast out by the other Zoramites. The unconverted promptly allied with the Lamanites, attacked the Nephites, and were defeated (chaps. 31–35, 43–44).

The chapters focusing on Alma also contain his blessings and instructions to his three sons (chaps. 36–42) and an account of his disappearance (being taken to heaven; chap. 45). The book of Alma ends with the detailed accounts by HELAMAN<sub>1</sub> of further wars between the Nephites and Lamanites (chaps.

43–62; see BOOK OF MORMON, HISTORY OF WARFARE IN). The final chapter (chap. 63) notes the deaths of Pahoran, Moroni, Helaman, and his brother Shiblon, marking the end of this era of righteous Nephite control of Zarahemla. It also tells of Hagoth, a shipbuilder who transported people to the north, but he was never heard from again after a second departure.

The book of Alma covers a critical period in Nephite history, the opening years of the Nephite judgeship (see BOOK OF MORMON, GOVERNMENT AND LEGAL HISTORY IN). The survival of this popularly based form of government was threatened several times in the course of the book, starting when Nehor's follower Amlici sought to become king. It was threatened again when the Zoramites (described above) defected. Further trouble arose when Amalickiah, a Zoramite, persuaded many of the lower judges to support him as king. A general named Moroni rallied the Nephite troops by raising a banner that he called the Title of Liberty; it proclaimed the need to remember and defend their God, their religion, their freedom, their peace, their wives, and their children. Amalickiah and a few of his men fled to the Lamanites, where he, through treachery and murder, established himself as king and led the Lamanites in a prolonged war against the Nephites. Amalickiah was killed after seven years of war, but the wars continued under his brother Ammoron for six more years. Those years became particularly perilous for the Nephites when "kingmen" arose in Zarahemla and expelled the Nephite government from the capital (discussed in CWILN 8:328–79). Moroni was forced to leave the battlefield to regain control of the capital before he could turn his full attention to defeating the Lamanites. In each case, the Nephites ultimately prevailed and gave thanks and praise to God.

In the book of Alma, the delineation of the Nephite and Lamanite nations along ancestral lines becomes blurred. Several groups of Nephites—Amlicites (chaps. 2–3), Zoramites (chaps. 31–35, 43), Amalickiahites (chaps. 46–62), and kingmen (chaps. 51, 61)—rejected Nephite religious principles and joined the Lamanites in an attempt to overthrow the Nephite government. Several groups of Lamanites—Anti-Nephi-Lehies (chaps. 17–27), converts from the army that marched against the Anti-Nephi-Lehies (chap. 25), and some Lamanite soldiers captured by Moroni (chap. 62)—embraced the gospel and Nephite way of life and went to live among the Nephites. By the end of the book, these populations are distinguished more by ideology than by lineage. Those who desired government by the “voice of the people” and embraced the teachings of the gospel are numbered among the Nephites, while those who opposed them are called Lamanites.

Many important religious teachings are found in the book of Alma. Alma 5 is a speech given by Alma calling the people of the city of Zarahemla to repent and teaching all followers of Christ to judge the state of their former spiritual rebirth and present well-being. Alma 7, delivered to the righteous city of Gidcon, teaches believers to make the ATONEMENT of Christ a reality in their lives. Chapters 12 and 13 elucidate the mysteries of redemption, RESURRECTION, and the PRIESTHOOD after the order of the Son of God. Alma 32 and 33 are a sermon given by Alma to the Zoramite poor, explaining the correct manner of prayer, the relationship between humility and faith in Jesus Christ, and the process of increasing faith. Alma 34 is Amulek’s talk on the need for the “infinite and eternal sacrifice” made by the Son of God. In it Amulek also teaches the people how to pray and tells them how to live so that their prayers will not be vain.

Alma teaches his sons trust in God by telling of his personal CONVERSION (chap. 36). He also gives instructions about the keeping of sacred records and explains how God’s purposes are accomplished through small means (chap. 37). He teaches the evil of sexual sin (chap. 39), the nature of resurrection and restoration (chaps. 40–41), the purpose and consequences of the FALL OF ADAM, including spiritual and temporal death, and the relationship between JUSTICE AND MERCY (see chap. 42).

The war chapters include instances of, and statements about, justifiable reasons for war (chap. 48), along with the example of the protective power of faith exercised by the young warriors who fought under Helaman, none of whom died in battle, for they believed their mothers’ teachings that “God would deliver them” (Alma 56:47–48).

Overall, the book of Alma teaches through vivid, detailed narratives how personal ambition can lead to APOSTASY and war, and shows how the Lord gathers his people through the preaching of the gospel of Christ and delivers them in righteousness against aggression.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

For essays on Alma the Younger, Ammon, King Lamoni, Ammonihah, Korihor’s sophistry, Amlici, several dissenters, Captain Moroni, the Nephite chief judges, and other figures in the book of Alma, see Jeffrey R. Holland, The Book of Mormon: It Begins with a Family, pp. 79–170. Salt Lake City, 1983.

CHERYL BROWN

BOOK OF HELAMAN

The book of Helaman chronicles one of the most tumultuous periods in the history of the NEPHITES and LAMANITES (52–1 B.C.). The narrative focuses on the unexpected difficulties (e.g., the Lamanites’ invasion and unprecedented occupation of the land of Zarahemla narrated in chaps. 4 and 5) and unexpected resolutions that came from God (e.g., the withdrawal of the Lamanite occupation forces as the direct result of the missionary work of two sons of Helaman, NEPHI<sub>2</sub> and Lehi, in 5:49–52).

This book takes its name from its first author, HELAMAN<sub>2</sub>, son of HELAMAN<sub>1</sub>. Other contributors to the record were Nephi and Lehi, sons of Helaman<sub>2</sub> (16:25), and MORMON, the principal editor of the Book of Mormon, who added political and religious commentary.

The account opens after Helaman had received custody of the Nephite records from his uncle Shiblon (Alma 63:11) in the fortieth year of the reign of the judges (c. 52 B.C.; Hel. 1:1). The narrative falls into six major segments: the record of Helaman (chaps. 1–3); the record of Nephi (chaps. 4–6); the prophecy of Nephi (chaps. 7–11); Mormon’s editorial observations on God’s power (chap. 12); the prophecy of SAMUEL THE LAMANITE (chaps. 13–15); and a brief statement about the five-year period before Jesus’ birth (chap. 16). Several religious discourses are woven into the narrative, including Helaman’s admonition to his sons (5:6–12), Nephi’s psalm (7:7–9), Nephi’s sermon from the tower in his garden (7:13–29; 8:11–28), Nephi’s prayer (11:10–16), and Samuel’s long speech atop the walls of Zarahemla (13:5–39; 14:2–15:17).

Perhaps the most prominent person mentioned in the book is Nephi<sub>2</sub>. After Nephi resigned from the office of chief judge, he and his brother Lehi devoted themselves fully to preaching the message of the gospel (5:1–4). His defense of God’s providence affirmed the power of prophecy (8:11–

28) and, on a practical level, led to the conviction of the murderer of the chief judge (9:21–38). The Lord entrusted him with the power to seal the heavens so that no rain would fall (10:4–11), a power that Nephi used to bring about the cessation of civil strife and wickedness (11:1–18).

The rise of the GADIANTON ROBBERS (1:9–12; 2:3–11), a hostile and secret society within the Nephite and Lamanite polities, was perhaps the most disheartening and ominous occurrence during those fifty-one years. Mormon informs readers of both the organization's character (6:17–30) and its debilitating impact on society (2:13–14; 6:38–39; 11:24–34).

In contrast to these despairing observations is one of the book's central themes: the surprising ascendancy of the Lamanites in spiritual matters. After the Nephites were overrun by a Lamanite army led by Nephite dissidents in 35 B.C. and failed to regain lost territories (4:5–10), Nephi and Lehi went among the Lamanites to preach the gospel (5:16–20). Their remarkable success in converting listeners to Christ led to their imprisonment (5:21). But in an extraordinary outpouring of the Spirit of God, all in the prison were converted, an event that led to a spiritual reversal among the Lamanites and the eventual withdrawal of Lamanite military forces from Nephite lands (5:22–52). Thereafter, Lamanites carried out the work of the Church, preaching to both their own people and the Nephites (6:1–8, 34–36).

Almost thirty years later (c. 6 B.C.), a Lamanite prophet named Samuel prophesied at Zarahemla. He condemned the decadence of Nephite society, warning of destruction of both individuals and society (13:5–39, esp. 38; 14:20–15:3). He also prophesied that signs to be seen in the Western Hemisphere would accompany both the birth and death of Jesus (14:2–25). He declared the power of the Atonement in redeeming mankind from the fall of Adam and in bringing about the Resurrection. Finally, he spoke of the Lamanites' righteousness and the promises of God to them in the latter days (15:4–16).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Jackson, Kent P., ed. Studies in Scripture, Vol. 8, pp 92–124. Salt Lake City, 1988.

PAUL R. CHEESMAN

THIRD NEPHI

The book of 3 Nephi is the dramatic and spiritual climax of the Book of Mormon. It focuses on three advents of Jesus: first, as the child born in Bethlehem; second, as the resurrected Lord visiting the Nephites; and third, at his SECOND COMING as the final judge at the end of the world. Within a year of the devastating destructions at the time of his crucifixion, the resurrected Jesus descended among a group of righteous people in the Nephite city of Bountiful. He revealed himself unmistakably as the Lord and Savior of the world, expounded his gospel, and established his Church.

The book's author, NEPHI<sub>3</sub>, was the religious leader of an ethnically mixed group of Nephites and Lamanites at the time of Christ's birth. His book covers events from that time to A.D. 34. It appears Mormon copied much of Nephi's text verbatim into his abridgment.

Nephi's record begins at the time when the fulfillment of the messianic prophecies of SAMUEL THE LAMANITE miraculously saved believers from a threatened antimessianic persecution. The signs of Jesus' birth appeared—a night of daylight and a new star—vindicating the faith of those who believed the prophecies that Jesus would be born into the world (chap. 1).

After these signs, many were converted to the Church led by Nephi. On the other hand, greed, pleasure-seeking, and pride increased drastically, and the government was soon infiltrated with organized corruption that caused complete anarchy and a breakdown of the people into family tribes and robber bands. Prolonged attacks by these bands plagued the Nephites, who finally abandoned their own properties and formed a single body with enough provisions to subsist for seven years. The Nephites eventually prevailed, but these disruptions and wickedness brought on the collapse of the central government. Although most rejected Nephi<sub>3</sub>'s warnings and miracles, he baptized and ordained those who would believe and follow (chaps. 2–7).

The believers began looking for the calamitous signs of Christ's death, also prophesied by Samuel. A violent storm arose and massive earthquakes occurred demolishing many cities, killing thousands of the wicked, and leaving the more righteous survivors in a thick vapor of darkness for three days of mourning. After the tumult settled, the voice of Jesus Christ spoke out of the darkness, expressing his sadness over the unrepentant dead and his hope that those who were spared would receive him and his redemption. He announced that his sacrifice had ended the need for blood sacrifice as practiced under the law of Moses (chaps. 8–10).

Jesus Christ Visits the Americas, by John Scott (1969, oil on canvas, 47" × 121"). The resurrected Jesus Christ appeared to 2,500 men, women, and children who had gathered at their temple in Bountiful. He instructed them for three days (see 3 Ne. 11–28).

Later, in radiant white, the resurrected Christ descended to show his wounds, to heal, to teach, and to ordain leaders for his Church. On the first day of several such visits, Jesus appeared to a group of 2,500 men, women, and children assembled at the temple in Bountiful. He ordained twelve disciples and gave them the power to baptize and bestow the gift of the Holy Ghost; he instructed the people in the principles, ordinances, and commandments of his gospel (see SERMON ON THE MOUNT); he explained that he had fulfilled the law of Moses; he healed the sick and blessed their families. He announced his plan to show himself to still other people not then known by the Jews or the Nephites. Finally, he entered into a covenant with them. The people promised to keep the commandments he had given them, and he administered to them the sacrament of bread and wine, in remembrance of his resurrected body that he had shown to them and of the blood through which he had wrought the Atonement (chaps. 11–18).

On the morning of the second day, the disciples baptized the faithful and gave them the gift of the Holy Ghost, and they were encircled by angels and fire from heaven. Jesus appeared again and offered three marvelous prayers, explained God's covenant with Israel and its promised fulfillment, reviewed and corrected some items in the Nephite scriptures, and foretold events of the future world, quoting prophecies from Isaiah, Micah, and Malachi. He inspired even babes to reveal "marvelous things" (3 Ne. 26:16). Then he explained the past and future history of the world, emphasizing that salvation will extend to all who follow him (chaps. 19–26).

A third time, Jesus appeared to the twelve Nephite disciples alone. He named his Church and explained the principles of the final judgment. Three of the disciples were transfigured and beheld heavenly visions. Jesus granted these three disciples their wish to remain on earth as special servants until the end of the world (chaps. 27–28; see also THREE NEPHITES; TRANSLATED BEINGS).

Christ revisited the Nephites over an extended period, and told them that he would also visit the lost tribes of Israel.

His Church grew having all things common, with neither rich nor poor. This peaceful condition lasted nearly 180 years, and "surely there could not be a happier people" (4 Ne. 1:16).

Mormon wrote his abridgment of 3 Nephi more than three hundred years after the actual events. By then, the descendants of the Nephites who had been so blessed had degenerated into terminal warfare. Mormon's final, sober testimony to his future readers speaks of the Lord's coming in the last days, which, like his coming to the land Bountiful, would be disastrous for the ungodly but glorious for the righteous (ehaps. 29–30).

The text of 3 Nephi fits several categories. First, it is a Christian testament, a Christian gospel. It contains many direct quotations from Jesus and establishes his new covenant. Recorded in a touching personal tone by a participating eyewitness of awesomely tragic and beautiful events, the account convincingly invites the reader to believe the gospel of Jesus Christ and to feel the love he has for all people.

The text also has been compared to the pseudographic forty-day literature that describes Christ's ministry to the faithful in the Holy Land after his resurrection (see JESUS CHRIST: FORTY-DAY MINISTRY AND OTHER POST-RESURRECTION APPEARANCES OF JESUS CHRIST; CWHN 8:407–34). Others have seen in chapters 11–18 a covenant ritual that profoundly expands the meaning of the Sermon on the Mount in the Gospel of Matthew (Welch, pp. 34–83). The account also resembles the apocalyptic message of the books of Enoch: From the type and purpose of the initial cataclysm, to the sublimity of its revelations to the faithful, to the creation of a righteous society, 3 Nephi is a story of theodicy, theophany, and theocracy.

The text yields practical instructions for sainthood. It is not a wishful utopian piece but a practical handbook of commandments to be accepted in covenantal ordinances and obeyed strictly, with devotion and pure dedication to God. This is not the genre of wisdom literature, not merely a book of moral suggestions for the good life. It explains Christ's gospel plainly, and makes the lofty ideals of the Sermon on the Mount livable by all who receive the Holy Ghost. Empowered by true Christian ordinances and the gifts of the Holy Spirit, the Nephites established a paradise surpassed in righteousness only by Enoch's Zion.

This Zion welcomes everyone, from every place and every time. It promises blessings to "all the pure in heart" who come unto Christ (3 Ne. 12:3–9, emphasis added). Thus, 3 Nephi urges all to accept and live Christ's gospel to perfect earthly society, and to join with the Zion of all the former and future righteous peoples so that, as Malachi states, the earth will not be "utterly wasted" at Christ's second coming (JS—H 1:39). This was Enoch's ancient achievement and Joseph Smith's modern hope. The text does not discuss God's millennial kingdom; nor does Christ here pray, "Thy kingdom come." For among those happy Nephites, it had come already.

[See also Jesus Christ in the Scriptures: the Book of Mormon.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Anderson, Richard L. "Religious Validity: The Sacrament Covenant in Third Nephi." In By Study and Also by Faith, ed. J. Lunquist and S. Ricks, Vol. 2, pp. 1–51. Salt Lake City, 1990.
- Ludlow, Victor L. Jesus' "Covenant People Discourse" in 3 Nephi. Religious Education Lecture Series. Provo, Utah, 1988.
- Stendahl, Krister. "The Sermon on the Mount and Third Nephi." In Reflections on Mormonism, ed. T. Madsen. Provo, Utah, 1978.
- Welch, John W. The Sermon at the Temple and the Sermon on the Mount. Salt Lake City, 1990.

CHARLES RANDALL PAUL

FOURTH NEPHI

Abridged by MORMON, this brief work contains the writings of four Nephite prophets (A.D. 34–320): NEPHI<sub>4</sub>, son of NEPHI<sub>3</sub>, who was a disciple of the risen Jesus; Amos, son of Nephi<sub>4</sub>; and Amos and Ammaron, two sons of Amos. The first section of 4 Nephi briefly summarizes four generations of peace, righteousness, and equality that resulted from the conversion of the people to the GOSPEL OF JESUS CHRIST after the visit of the resurrected Savior. In contrast, the last section foreshadows the later destruction of the Nephite nation that followed a gradual and conscious rejection of the gospel message.

Fourth Nephi narrates an unparalleled epoch in human society when all the people followed the teachings of Christ for nearly two centuries. The book is best known for its account of the social and religious power of the love of God that overcame contention and other social and political ills (4 Ne. 1:15–16). The people experienced urban renewal, stable family life, unity in the Church, and social and economic equality, as well as divine miracles (1:3–13, 15–17). "Surely there could not [have been] a happier people . . . created by the hand of God" (1:16).

The book also previews the ensuing APOSTASY of most of the population from the teachings of Christ, introducing a state of wickedness and chaos that eventually led to total destruction. According to the account the individual and collective decline was gradual and sequential, with the loss of social and religious order manifested in contention, PRIDE in prosperity, class distinctions with widening social divisions, rejection of Christ and his gospel, and persecution of the Church (1:24–46).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Skinner, Andrew C. "The Course of Peace and Apostasy." In Studies in Scripture, ed. K. Jackson, Vol. 8. Salt Lake City, 1988.

REX C. REEVE, JR.

BOOK OF MORMON

The short book of Mormon (A.D. 320–400/421), within the Book of Mormon, documents the extraordinary collapse of Nephite civilization, as had been foretold (1 Ne. 12:19–20; Alma 45:10–14). It consists of MORMON's abridgment of his larger and more complete history (Morm. 1–6), his final admonition both to future LAMANITES and to other remnants of the house of ISRAEL (chap. 7), and the prophetic warnings of Mormon's son MORONI<sub>2</sub> to future readers of the record (chaps. 8–9). Because Nephites of Mormon's day had rejected JESUS CHRIST and his gospel, superstition and magic replaced divine REVELATION (Morm. 1:13–19). A border skirmish (1:10) escalated into a major war, driving the Nephites from their traditional lands (2:3–7, 16, 20–21). Following a ten-year negotiated peace, they repulsed a Lamanite attack, which Mormon, former commander of the Nephite army, refused to lead. As conditions worsened, Mormon reluctantly agreed to command the Nephite army at CUMORAH, where they were destroyed (chaps. 3–6). With poignant anguish, Mormon lamented over his slain people: "O ye fair ones, how could ye have rejected that Jesus, who stood with open arms to receive you!" (6:17–22).

Mormon concluded his record by inviting Lamanites and other remnants of the house of Israel to learn of their forefathers, to lay down their weapons of war, and to repent of their SINS and believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God. His final words are, "If it so be that ye believe in Christ, and are baptized, first with water, then with fire and with the Holy Ghost, . . . it shall be well with you in the day of judgment. Amen" (7:10).

After the final battle (A.D. 385), Moroni<sub>2</sub>—alone and unsure of his own survival—noted his father's death and concluded his father's record

(8:1–5). Fifteen years later (A.D. 400), Moroni recorded that survivors of his people had been hunted from place to place until they were no more except for himself. He also observed that the Lamanites were at war with one another and that the whole country witnessed continual bloodshed. For a second time he closed the work, promising that those who would receive this record in the future and not condemn it would learn of greater spiritual matters (8:6–13).

Moroni apparently returned to the record a third time (between A.D. 400 and 421). Having seen a vision of the future (8:35), he testified that the PLATES of the Book of Mormon would come forth by the power of God in a day when people would not believe in miracles. SECRET COMBINATIONS would abound, churches be defiled, and wars, rumors of wars, earthquakes, and pollutions be upon the earth. Moroni also spoke warnings to those in the latter days who do not believe in Christ and who deny the revelations of God, thus standing against the works of the Lord (8:14–9:27). He mentioned the difficulty of keeping records, written as they were in "reformed Egyptian" (9:31–33; cf. Ether 12:23–25). Moroni closed his father's volume with a testimony of the truth of his words (9:35–37).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Mackay, Thomas W. "Mormon and the Destruction of Nephite Civilization." In Studies in Scripture, ed. K. Jackson, Vol. 8. Salt Lake City, 1988.

REX C. REEVE, JR.

BOOK OF ETHER

The book of Ether is MORONI<sub>2</sub>'s abbreviated account of the history of the JAREDITES, who came to the Western Hemisphere at the time of the "great tower" of Babel and lived in the area later known as the Nephite "land northward," much earlier than Lehi's colony. Moroni retold their account, recorded on twenty-four plates of gold found by the people of Limhi and translated by MOSIAH<sub>2</sub> (Mosiah 28:11–19). Ether, the last prophet of the Jaredites and a survivor of their annihilation, inscribed those plates soon after the final destruction of his people. It is not known whether Moroni relied on Mosiah's translation or retranslated the Jaredite record in whole or in part. Moroni humbly claims not to have written "the hundredth part" of the record by Ether (Ether 15:33).

The structure of the book of Ether is much like the rest of the Book of Mormon. It tells of the emigration of people by land and sea from the Near East, the Lord's prophetic guidance of these people, and their rise, prosperity, and fall, all in direct relation to their obedience to the Lord's commandments in their promised land. Moroni included the book of Ether because his father MORMON had planned to do so (Mosiah 28:19) but for some reason did not complete the project. Both knew the value of this record and could see that the Jaredite history closely paralleled certain Nephite events.

Moroni appended this history to the Nephite account as a second witness against the evils and SECRET COMBINATIONS that led to the annihilation of both the Jaredites and the Nephites. Several of its themes reinforce the messages in the Nephite section of the Book of Mormon: the necessity to follow the prophets away from persistent and pernicious wickedness, the power of faith in the Lord demonstrated by Jared and the BROTHER OF JARED, the testimony that Jesus Christ is the eternal saving God, and the collapse of a nation when its people determinedly choose wickedness. Nevertheless, there are notable cultural differences between the Jaredite and the Nephite civilizations; for example, the Jaredites were ruled solely by kings, and they lacked Israelite law and customs, since they were pre-Mosaic.

Although condensed, the book reflects an epic style (see CWIM 5:153–449; 6:329–58). It begins with the emigration of the Jaredites from “the great tower” (Ether 1:33, cf. Gen. 11:9) and the valley of “Nimrod” (Ether 2:1; cf. Gen. 10:8) to a new land of promise in the Western Hemisphere. It then abridges a history of the Jaredite kings and wars, and concludes with the destruction of the Jaredite civilization. A brief outline of the book follows: Ether's royal lineage is given (chap. 1); the premortal Jesus appears to the brother of Jared in response to his prayers and touches sixteen small stones, causing them to shine to provide light as the Jaredite barges cross the sea (chaps. 2–6); the generations of Jaredite kings live, hunt, quarrel, enter into secret combinations, and Jaredite prophets warn of impending destruction (chaps. 7–11); Moroni attests that Ether was a prophet of great faith and knowledge (chaps. 12–13); Ether witnesses and records the annihilation of the Jaredite armies (chaps. 14–15).

The main figures and doctrinal statements appear mostly at the beginning and end of the book of Ether. Moroni's editing is of key importance, for he infuses the story with major insights, admonitions, and comparisons. Jared is mentioned at the outset as the founder of the Jaredite people. The revelations and faith of the brother of Jared are given special significance at the beginning and end of the book. Shiz and Coriantumr are crucial historical and symbolic figures because they become the instruments of annihilation. Ether, the author of the underlying text, was an eyewitness to the final battles, and Moroni esteemed his prophecies as “great and marvelous” (Ether 13:13). The middle of the book recounts the more mundane events associated with the reigns of the Jaredite kings.

Several doctrines taught within the book of Ether are greatly valued among Latter-day Saints, namely, that prosperity in the promised land (the Americas) is conditioned on serving “the God of the land who is Jesus Christ” (Ether 2:12), that the premortal Christ had a SPIRIT BODY “like unto flesh and blood” (3:6), that God is a God of power and truth (3:4, 12), that three witnesses would verify the truth of the Book of Mormon (5:3), that the corruption and downfall of society can come because of secret combinations (8:22), that the Lord will show mankind its weakness so that through humility weak things may become strengths (12:27), and that a NEW JERUSALEM will eventually be built in the Western Hemisphere (13:3–12).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Sperry, Sidney B. Book of Mormon Compendium, pp. 460–81. Salt Lake City, 1968.
- Welch, John W. “Sources Behind the Book of Ether.” F.A.R.M.S. Paper. Provo, Utah, 1986.

MORGAN W. TANNER

BOOK OF MORONI

Between A.D. 400 and 421, MORONI<sub>2</sub>, the last custodian of the GOLD PLATES, compiled the final book in the Book of Mormon record. He wrote: “I had supposed not to have written any more; but I write a few more things, that perhaps they may be of worth unto my brethren” (Moro. 1:4). He then brought together loosely related but important items, including ORDINANCES performed both in the church of his day and in The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints today (chaps. 2–6), one of his father's sermons (chap. 7), and two of his father's letters (chap. 9). He concluded with his own testimony and exhortations to readers (chap. 10).

ORDINANCES (CHAPS. 2–6). Chapter 2 contains instructions given by the resurrected Jesus Christ to his twelve disciples in the Western Hemisphere at the time when he bestowed upon them the GIFT OF THE HOLY GHOST. This gift is conferred in the name of Jesus Christ and by the LAYING ON OF HANDS from one who has received authority. Chapter 3 explains that priests and teachers were ordained in the name of Jesus Christ by the laying-on of hands by one holding proper authority. The main function of priests and teachers was to teach repentance and faith in Jesus Christ. Chapters 4 and 5 contain the set prayers for blessing the SACRAMENT of the Lord's Supper, prayers currently used in the Church. Chapter 6 outlines the requirements for BAPTISM, which include a "broken heart," contrite spirit, and true repentance. Moroni then detailed how Church members recorded the names of all members, taught one another, met together in fasting and prayer, and partook of the sacrament often.

MORMON'S SERMON AND LETTERS (CHAPS. 7–9). Mormon's sermon (chap. 7) deals with faith, hope, and charity and includes teachings on how to distinguish between good and evil, the necessity of spiritual gifts, the nature of miracles, and instruction on how to obtain charity, "the pure love of Christ" (7:47).

The first letter (chap. 8) condemns INFANT BAPTISM. Mormon taught that children are made pure through the atonement of Christ and do not need the cleansing power of baptism until they are old enough to be accountable for their actions and can repent of their sins.

The second letter (chap. 9) recites the level of depravity to which the Nephites and LANANITES had fallen (before A.D. 385), offering reasons for their prophesied destruction ("they are without principle, and past feeling"—verse 20), along with Mormon's charge to his son to remain faithful to Christ in spite of their society's wickedness.

EXHORTATION AND FAREWELL (CHAP. 10). Moroni exhorts all who read the Book of Mormon to ponder and pray for a divine witness of its truthfulness (verses 3–5) and urges his readers not to deny the gifts of the Holy Ghost, which he enumerates (verses 8–19). He bears his personal

TESTIMONY of Jesus Christ and urges all to "come unto Christ, and be perfected in him, and deny yourselves of all ungodliness" (verse 32). He bids his readers farewell until he meets them on the final JUDGMENT DAY at "the pleasing bar of the great Jehovah" (verse 34).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Jackson, Kent P., ed. Studies in Scripture, Vol. 8, pp. 282–312. Salt Lake City, 1988.

S. MICHAEL WILCOX

---

BOOK OF MORMON, BIBLICAL PROPHECIES ABOUT

Latter-day Saints believe that the coming forth of the Book of Mormon as an instrument in God's hand for bringing his latter-day work to fruition was revealed to biblical prophets such as ISAIAH and EZEKIEL (cf. 1 Ne. 19:21; see FOREKNOWLEDGE OF GOD). Their prophecies about these matters, like those about the coming of Jesus Christ, are better understood when some of the historical events that surround them are known.

JOSEPH'S PROPHECY. Allusions are made to a branch that would be broken off in Jacob's blessing to Joseph, promising that he would become a fruitful bough whose "branches" would run "over the wall" and that his posterity would be heir to divine blessings (Gen. 49:22–26; 1 Ne. 19:24; cf. Deut. 33:13–17). A further prophecy in the Book of Mormon aids in interpreting Genesis 49.

According to a prophecy of Joseph in Egypt, preserved in the Book of Mormon (2 Ne. 3:4–21), two sets of records would be kept by two tribes of Israel—one (the Bible) written by the tribe of Judah and the other (Book of Mormon) kept by the tribe of Joseph (2 Ne. 3:12; cf. Ezek. 37:15–19). Those kept by the tribe of Joseph were written on PLATES of brass and largely parallel the biblical records (1 Ne. 5:10–16; 13:23). They were carried to a promised land in the Western Hemisphere by LEHI, a prophet and descendant of Joseph, who fled Jerusalem about 600 B.C. Lehi exclaimed, "Joseph truly saw our day. And he obtained a promise of the Lord, that out of the fruit of his loins the Lord God would raise up a righteous branch unto the house of Israel; not the Messiah, but a branch which was to be broken off" (2 Ne. 3:5).

father's letters (chap. 9). He concluded with his own testimony and exhortations to readers (chap. 10).

ORDINANCES (CHAPS. 2–6). Chapter 2 contains instructions given by the resurrected Jesus Christ to his twelve disciples in the Western Hemisphere at the time when he bestowed upon them the GIFT OF THE HOLY GHOST. This gift is conferred in the name of Jesus Christ and by the LAYING ON OF HANDS from one who has received authority. Chapter 3 explains that priests and teachers were ordained in the name of Jesus Christ by the laying-on of hands by one holding proper authority. The main function of priests and teachers was to teach repentance and faith in Jesus Christ. Chapters 4 and 5 contain the set prayers for blessing the SACRAMENT of the Lord's Supper, prayers currently used in the Church. Chapter 6 outlines the requirements for BAPTISM, which include a "broken heart," contrite spirit, and true repentance. Moroni then detailed how Church members recorded the names of all members, taught one another, met together in fasting and prayer, and partook of the sacrament often.

MORMON'S SERMON AND LETTERS (CHAPS. 7–9). Mormon's sermon (chap. 7) deals with faith, hope, and charity and includes teachings on how to distinguish between good and evil, the necessity of spiritual gifts, the nature of miracles, and instruction on how to obtain charity, "the pure love of Christ" (7:47).

The first letter (chap. 8) condemns INFANT BAPTISM. Mormon taught that children are made pure through the atonement of Christ and do not need the cleansing power of baptism until they are old enough to be accountable for their actions and can repent of their sins.

The second letter (chap. 9) recites the level of depravity to which the Nephites and LANANITES had fallen (before A.D. 385), offering reasons for their prophesied destruction ("they are without principle, and past feeling"—verse 20), along with Mormon's charge to his son to remain faithful to Christ in spite of their society's wickedness.

EXHORTATION AND FAREWELL (CHAP. 10). Moroni exhorts all who read the Book of Mormon to ponder and pray for a divine witness of its truthfulness (verses 3–5) and urges his readers not to deny the gifts of the Holy Ghost, which he enumerates (verses 8–19). He bears his personal

TESTIMONY of Jesus Christ and urges all to "come unto Christ, and be perfected in him, and deny yourselves of all ungodliness" (verse 32). He bids his readers farewell until he meets them on the final JUDGMENT DAY at "the pleasing bar of the great Jehovah" (verse 34).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Jackson, Kent P., ed. Studies in Scripture, Vol. 8, pp. 282–312. Salt Lake City, 1988.

S. MICHAEL WILCOX

---

BOOK OF MORMON, BIBLICAL PROPHECIES ABOUT

Latter-day Saints believe that the coming forth of the Book of Mormon as an instrument in God's hand for bringing his latter-day work to fruition was revealed to biblical prophets such as ISAIAH and EZEKIEL (cf. 1 Ne. 19:21; see FOREKNOWLEDGE OF GOD). Their prophecies about these matters, like those about the coming of Jesus Christ, are better understood when some of the historical events that surround them are known.

JOSEPH'S PROPHECY. Allusions are made to a branch that would be broken off in Jacob's blessing to Joseph, promising that he would become a fruitful bough whose "branches" would run "over the wall" and that his posterity would be heir to divine blessings (Gen. 49:22–26; 1 Ne. 19:24; cf. Deut. 33:13–17). A further prophecy in the Book of Mormon aids in interpreting Genesis 49.

According to a prophecy of Joseph in Egypt, preserved in the Book of Mormon (2 Ne. 3:4–21), two sets of records would be kept by two tribes of Israel—one (the Bible) written by the tribe of Judah and the other (Book of Mormon) kept by the tribe of Joseph (2 Ne. 3:12; cf. Ezek. 37:15–19). Those kept by the tribe of Joseph were written on PLATES of brass and largely parallel the biblical records (1 Ne. 5:10–16; 13:23). They were carried to a promised land in the Western Hemisphere by LEHI, a prophet and descendant of Joseph, who fled Jerusalem about 600 B.C. Lehi exclaimed, "Joseph truly saw our day. And he obtained a promise of the Lord, that out of the fruit of his loins the Lord God would raise up a righteous branch unto the house of Israel; not the Messiah, but a branch which was to be broken off" (2 Ne. 3:5).

VISIT OF RESURRECTED JESUS. A succession of prophets taught the gospel of Jesus Christ to Lehi's "branch" of Joseph's descendants and prophesied that after Jesus was resurrected, he would visit them (e.g., 2 Ne. 26:1). Regarding this circumstance, Jesus told his hearers in Palestine that he had "other sheep . . . which are not of this fold: them also I must bring, and they shall hear my voice; and there shall be one fold, and one shepherd" (John 10:16). When he appeared in the Western Hemisphere (c. A.D. 34), he allowed the multitude to touch the wounds in his hands and side and feet so that they would understand the reality of his resurrection (3 Ne. 11:10–15). Later, he specifically referred to his words recorded in John's gospel (3 Ne. 15:16–24; John 10:16), saying, "Ye are they of whom I said: Other sheep I have which are not of this fold" (3 Ne. 15:21). Further, he taught them his gospel, called twelve disciples (see APOSTLE), announced the fulfillment of the LAW OF MOSES, instituted the SACRAMENT, and organized his church—causing them to become of one fold with his disciples in Palestine, having him as their common shepherd (3 Ne. 11–29).

RECORD FROM THE GROUND. Latter-day Saints teach that Isaiah foresaw that part of this branch of Joseph's family would eventually be destroyed. He likened it to David's city Ariel, that would also be destroyed when hostile forces "camped against" or laid siege to it (Isa. 29:3). But despite the fact that many of the people of this branch would be slain, both Isaiah and Nephi explained that the voice of Joseph's descendants would be heard again as a voice "out of the ground"; their speech would "whisper out of the dust" (Isa. 29:4; 2 Ne. 26:16). For "the words of the faithful should speak as if it were from the dead" (2 Ne. 27:13; cf. 26:15–16; see "VOICE FROM THE DUST").

Perceiving how this would take place, NEPHI<sub>1</sub>, the first writer in the Book of Mormon, wrote about 570 B.C. to unborn generations: "My beloved brethren, all those who are of the house of Israel, and all ye ends of the earth, I speak unto you as the voice of one crying from the dust" (2 Ne. 33:13). Similarly, the last writer in the Book of Mormon, MORONI<sub>2</sub>, wrote about A.D. 400: "I speak unto you as though I spake from the dead; for I know that ye shall have my words" (Morm. 9:30; cf. Moro. 10:27). As he was about to bury the records, he wrote: "No one need say [the records] shall not come, for they surely shall, for the Lord hath spoken it; for out of the earth shall they come, by the hand of the Lord, and none can stay it" (Morm. 8:26; cf. TPJS, p. 98).

The phrase "out of the ground" is thus a metaphor for the voice of those who have died, but it also refers to records being buried in the earth until they come forth. The overall connection between Isaiah, chapter 29, and the Book of Mormon people is discussed in 2 Nephi, chapters 26–29 (cf. Morm. 8:23–26).

THE RECORD APPEARS. Parts of the GOLD PLATES were sealed when Joseph Smith received them. Isaiah spoke of "the words of a book that is sealed" that would be delivered to a "learned" person (Isa. 29:11). Latter-day Saints see the role of the "learned" person fulfilled by Professor Charles Anthon of Columbia College (New York), and these "words of a book" constitute the ANTHON TRANSCRIPT. The book itself, however, would be delivered to another (Joseph Smith) who would simply acknowledge, "I am not learned" (Isa. 29:12), but would be divinely empowered to translate it.

Isaiah foresaw that when the book would appear, people would be contending over God's word (Isa. 29:13). This circumstance would provide the context wherein God could perform his "marvelous work and a wonder," causing the "wisdom of their wise men" to perish and the "understanding of their prudent men [to] be hid" while the meek would "increase their joy in the Lord" and the "poor among men shall rejoice in the Holy One of Israel" (Isa. 29:14, 19). Meanwhile, those who had "erred in spirit shall come to understanding, and they that murmured shall learn doctrine" (Isa. 29:22–24; cf. 2 Ne. 27:6–26).

TWO RECORDS. Ezekiel also prophesied concerning the two records—that of Joseph or Ephraim (i.e., the Book of Mormon) and that of Judah (i.e., the Bible)—that would be joined in the last days as an instrument provided by the Lord to gather his people back to himself (Ezek. 37:15–22; cf. 2 Ne. 3:11–12; see EZEKIEL, PROPHECIES OF; ISRAEL: GATHERING OF ISRAEL).

For Latter-day Saints, when Ezekiel spoke of "sticks" (probably waxed writing boards), he was illustrating the instruments by which God would bring peoples together in the latter days, just as he used the concept of the Resurrection to illustrate the gathering of God's people, which is the theme of chapters 34–37. Just as bodies are reconstituted in the Resurrection, so will Israel be reconstituted in the gathering; and the formerly divided nations will become one (Ezek. 37:1–14). Thus, the publication of the Book of Mormon in 1830 was a sign that the divided tribes of Israel were to become one under God and that God's latter-day work was beginning to be implemented (Ezek. 37:21–28; cf. 1 Ne. 13:34–41; 3 Ne. 20:46–21:11).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- McConkie, Bruce R. A New Witness for the Articles of Faith, pp. 422–58. Salt Lake City, 1985.
- Meservy, Keith H. "Ezekiel's Sticks and the Gathering of Israel." Ensign 17 (Feb. 1987):4–13.
- Robison, Parley Parker, comp. Orson Pratt's Works on the Doctrines of the Gospel, pp. 269–84. Salt Lake City, 1945.

KEITH H. MESERVY

---

BOOK OF MORMON, GOVERNMENT AND LEGAL HISTORY IN THE

Because the Book of Mormon focuses on religious themes, information about political and legal institutions appears only as background for the religious account. Even so, it is apparent that several different political institutions characterized NEPHITE, LAMANITE, and JAREDITE society.

The Nephites were ruled by hereditary kings from c. 550 to 91 B.C., when the rule changed to a reign of judges. After the coming of Christ, two centuries of peace under the government of his Church were followed by a breakdown of society into tribal units and finally by the destruction of the Nephites.

From the beginning, the Nephite legal system was based on the LAW OF MOSES as it was written in the scriptures, as it was possibly practiced by Israel in the seventh century B.C., and as it was modified (slightly) over the years until the coming of Jesus Christ. As the Nephite prophets had long predicted (2 Ne. 25:24), Jesus fulfilled the law of Moses. After his coming, Nephite law consisted of the commandments of Christ.

GOVERNMENT. After leading his family and a few others out of Jerusalem, Lehi established his colony in the Western Hemisphere as a branch of Israel in a new promised land, but its organization was inherently unstable, for it seems to have given no clear principle for resolving political disputes. The seven lineage groups established at Lehi's death and mentioned consistently in the Book of Mormon were Nephites, Jacobites, Josephites, Zoramites, Lamanites, Lemuelites, and Ishmaelites (Jacob 1:13; 4 Ne. 1:36–38; Morm. 1:8; Welch, 1989, p. 69). When this system proved unable to keep the peace, NEPHI<sub>1</sub> led away the first four of these family groups, who believed the revelations of God; established a new city; and accepted the position of Nephite king by popular acclamation. The other three groups eventually developed a monarchical system, with a Lamanite king receiving tribute from other Ishmaelite, Lamanite, and Lemuelite vassal kings.

This original split provides the basic political theme for much of Nephite and Lamanite history. Laman and Lemuel were Lehi's oldest sons, and they naturally claimed a right to rule. But a younger brother, Nephi, was chosen by the Lord to be their ruler and teacher (1 Ne. 2:22), and Nephi's account of this early history was written in part to document his calling as ruler (Reynolds). The conflict over the right to rule continued, providing much of the rhetorical base for the recurring wars between Lamanites and Nephites hundreds of years later.

Possibly because of the controversial circumstances in which Nephite kingship was established, its ideology was clear from earliest times. Nephite kings were popularly acclaimed (2 Ne. 5:18). They had a temple as their religious center (2 Ne. 5:16) and were careful to maintain venerable symbols of divinely appointed kingship in the sword of Laban, the Liahona, and ancient records (2 Ne. 5:12–14; cf. Ricks).

Only the first Nephite king (Nephi<sub>1</sub>) and the last three kings (MOSIAH<sub>1</sub>, BENJAMIN, and MOSIAH<sub>2</sub>) are named in the Book of Mormon. These four kings served as military leaders and prophets, and worked closely with other prophets in reminding people of their obligations to God and to one another. For example, in his final address to his people, King Benjamin reported to the people a revelation from God and put them under covenant to take the name of Christ upon them and to keep God's and the king's commandments.

Some Nephite kings were unrighteous. Noah, a king of one Nephite subgroup (the people of Zeniff), exploited the weaknesses of the Nephite system, sustaining himself and his council of corrupt priests in riotous living from the labors of the in the Resurrection, so will Israel be reconstituted in the gathering; and the formerly divided nations will become one (Ezek. 37:1–14). Thus, the publication of the Book of Mormon in 1830 was a sign that the divided tribes of Israel were to become one under God and that God's latter-day work was beginning to be implemented (Ezek. 37:21–28; cf. 1 Ne. 13:34–41; 3 Ne. 20:46–21:11).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- McConkie, Bruce R. A New Witness for the Articles of Faith, pp. 422–58. Salt Lake City, 1985.
- Meservy, Keith H. "Ezekiel's Sticks and the Gathering of Israel." Ensign 17 (Feb. 1987):4–13.
- Robison, Parley Parker, comp. Orson Pratt's Works on the Doctrines of the Gospel, pp. 269–84. Salt Lake City, 1945.

KEITH H. MESERVY

---

BOOK OF MORMON, GOVERNMENT AND LEGAL HISTORY IN THE

Because the Book of Mormon focuses on religious themes, information about political and legal institutions appears only as background for the religious account. Even so, it is apparent that several different political institutions characterized NEPHITE, LAMANITE, and JAREDITE society.

The Nephites were ruled by hereditary kings from c. 550 to 91 B.C., when the rule changed to a reign of judges. After the coming of Christ, two centuries of peace under the government of his Church were followed by a breakdown of society into tribal units and finally by the destruction of the Nephites.

From the beginning, the Nephite legal system was based on the LAW OF MOSES as it was written in the scriptures, as it was possibly practiced by Israel in the seventh century B.C., and as it was modified (slightly) over the years until the coming of Jesus Christ. As the Nephite prophets had long predicted (2 Ne. 25:24), Jesus fulfilled the law of Moses. After his coming, Nephite law consisted of the commandments of Christ.

GOVERNMENT. After leading his family and a few others out of Jerusalem, Lehi established his colony in the Western Hemisphere as a branch of Israel in a new promised land, but its organization was inherently unstable, for it seems to have given no clear principle for resolving political disputes. The seven lineage groups established at Lehi's death and mentioned consistently in the Book of Mormon were Nephites, Jacobites, Josephites, Zoramites, Lamanites, Lemuelites, and Ishmaelites (Jacob 1:13; 4 Ne. 1:36–38; Morm. 1:8; Welch, 1989, p. 69). When this system proved unable to keep the peace, NEPHI<sub>1</sub> led away the first four of these family groups, who believed the revelations of God; established a new city; and accepted the position of Nephite king by popular acclamation. The other three groups eventually developed a monarchical system, with a Lamanite king receiving tribute from other Ishmaelite, Lamanite, and Lemuelite vassal kings.

This original split provides the basic political theme for much of Nephite and Lamanite history. Laman and Lemuel were Lehi's oldest sons, and they naturally claimed a right to rule. But a younger brother, Nephi, was chosen by the Lord to be their ruler and teacher (1 Ne. 2:22), and Nephi's account of this early history was written in part to document his calling as ruler (Reynolds). The conflict over the right to rule continued, providing much of the rhetorical base for the recurring wars between Lamanites and Nephites hundreds of years later.

Possibly because of the controversial circumstances in which Nephite kingship was established, its ideology was clear from earliest times. Nephite kings were popularly acclaimed (2 Ne. 5:18). They had a temple as their religious center (2 Ne. 5:16) and were careful to maintain venerable symbols of divinely appointed kingship in the sword of Laban, the Liahona, and ancient records (2 Ne. 5:12–14; cf. Ricks).

Only the first Nephite king (Nephi<sub>1</sub>) and the last three kings (MOSIAH<sub>1</sub>, BENJAMIN, and MOSIAH<sub>2</sub>) are named in the Book of Mormon. These four kings served as military leaders and prophets, and worked closely with other prophets in reminding people of their obligations to God and to one another. For example, in his final address to his people, King Benjamin reported to the people a revelation from God and put them under covenant to take the name of Christ upon them and to keep God's and the king's commandments.

Some Nephite kings were unrighteous. Noah, a king of one Nephite subgroup (the people of Zeniff), exploited the weaknesses of the Nephite system, sustaining himself and his council of corrupt priests in riotous living from the labors of the people. Doubts about the institution of kingship became acute when the oppressions of Noah were reported to the main body of Nephites. King Mosiah<sub>2</sub>, when his sons declined the monarchy, resolved the succession crisis by proposing to change the kingship into a system of lower and higher judges. This form of government was accepted by the people in 91 B.C. (Mosiah 29) and lasted, in spite of several crises and corruptions, for approximately a hundred years. Though the position of chief judge continued to have military and religious preeminence and was frequently passed from father to son, it differed from the kingship pattern in that the higher judges could be judged by lower judges if they broke the law or oppressed the people (Mosiah 29:29).

ALMA<sub>2</sub> became the first chief judge and served simultaneously as high priest, governor, and military chief captain. Because these offices required the approval of the people, who had rejected monarchy, critics have tended to confuse the Nephite system with the democracy of the United States. However, there was no representative legislature, the essential institution in American republican ideology. Also, the major offices were typically passed from father to son, without elections (Bushman, pp. 14–17); “the voice of the people” is reported many times as authorizing or confirming leadership appointments and other civic or political actions.

It appears that during the first two centuries after the coming of Christ, the Nephites operated under an ecclesiastical system without judges or kings, with courts constituted only of the church elders (4 Ne. 1:1–23; Moro. 6:7). With the eventual apostasy and collapse of the Nephite church, no civil institutions were in place to preserve law and order. Attempts to organize and conduct public affairs by reversion to a tribal system and, later, to military rule did not prevent the final destruction of the civilization.

The Book of Mormon also gives a brief account of the Jaredites, a much earlier civilization that began at the time of the great tower and was monarchical from beginning to end. Jaredite kings seem to have been autocrats, and succession was more often determined through political and military adventurism than through legal procedures.

LAW. Until the coming of Christ, the Nephites and converted Lamanites strictly observed the law of Moses as they knew and understood it (2 Ne.

5:10; 25:24–26; Jarom 1:5; Jacob 4:4–5; Alma 25:15; 30:3; Hel. 13:1; 3 Ne. 1:24–25). Preserved on the brass plates, the law of Moses was the basis of their criminal and civil law, as well as of the rules of purity, temple sacrifice, and festival observances of the Nephites; they knew, however, that the law of Moses would be superseded in the future messianic age (2 Ne. 25:24–27).

Recent publications (Welch, 1984, 1987, 1988, 1989, 1990) have identified a rich array of legal information in the text of the Book of Mormon. Procedural and administrative aspects of Nephite law developed from one century to another, while the substance of the customary law changed very little. Nephite leaders seem to have viewed new legislation as presumptuous and generally evil (Mosiah 29:23) and any change of God’s law without authority as blasphemous (Jacob 7:7). Their religious laws included many humanitarian provisions and protections for persons and their religious freedom and property. These rules were grounded in a strong principle of legal equality (Alma 1:32; 16:18; Hel. 4:12).

In two early incidents, Jacob, the brother of Nephi<sub>1</sub>, was involved in controversies concerning the law. The first involved the claimed right of some Nephites to have concubines (Jacob 2:23–3:11), and the second arose when Sherem accused Jacob of desecrating the law of Moses (Jacob 7:7).

The trial of ABINADI (Mosiah 11–17) indicates that, at least in the case of Noah, the king had jurisdiction over political issues but took counsel on religious matters from a body of priests: Causes of action were brought against Abinadi for cursing the ruler, testifying falsely, giving a false prophecy, and committing blasphemy (Mosiah 12:9–10, 14; 17:7–8, 12). Legal punishments in the Book of Mormon were often fashioned so as to match the nature of the crime; thus, Abinadi was burned for reviling the king, whose life he had said would be valued as a garment in a furnace (Mosiah 12:3; 17:3).

At the time the Nephites abandoned monarchy, Mosiah<sub>2</sub> instituted a major reform of Nephite procedural law. A system of judges and other officers was instituted; lower judges were judged by a higher judge (Mosiah 29:28); judges were paid for the time spent in public service (Alma 11:3); a standardized system of weights and measures was instituted (Alma 11:4–19); slavery was formally prohibited (Alma 27:9); and defaulting debtors faced banishment (Alma 11:2). There were officers (Alma 11:2) and lawyers who assisted, but their official functions are not clear. It appears that ordinary citizens had sole power to initiate lawsuits (otherwise, the judges would have brought the action against Nephi<sub>2</sub> in Helaman 8:1).

The trial of Nehor was an important precedent, establishing the plenary and original jurisdiction of the chief judge (Alma 1:1–15). It appears that under the terms of Mosiah 29, the higher judges were intended only to judge if the lower judges judged falsely. But in the trial of Nehor, Alma<sub>2</sub> took the case directly, enhancing the power of the chief judge.

The reform also protected freedom of belief, but certain overt conduct was punished (Alma 1:17–18; 30:9–11). The case of Korihor established the rule that certain forms of speech (blasphemy, inciting people to sin) were punishable under the Nephite law even after the reform of Mosiah.

All this time, the underlying Nephite law remained the law of Moses as interpreted in light of a knowledge of the gospel. Public decrees regularly prohibited murder, plunder, theft, adultery, and all iniquity (Mosiah 2:13; Alma 23:3). Murder was defined as “deliberately killing” (2 Ne. 9:35), which excluded cases where one did not lie in wait (on Nephi’s slaying of Laban, cf. Ex. 21:13–14 and 1 Ne. 4:6–18). Theft was typically a minor offense, but robbery was a capital crime (Hel. 11:28), usually committed by organized outsiders and violent and politically motivated brigands, who were dealt with by military force (as they were typically in the ancient Near East).

Evidently, technical principles of the law of Moses were consistently observed in Nephite civilization. For example, the legal resolution of an unobserved murder in the case of Seantum in Helaman 9 shows that a technical exception to the rule against self-incrimination was recognized by the Nephites in the same way that it was by later Jewish jurists, as when divination detected a corpus delicti (Welch, Feb. 1990). The execution of Zemnarilah by the Nephites adumbrated an obscure point attested in later Jewish law that required the tree from which a criminal was hanged to be chopped down (3 Ne. 4:28; Welch, 1984). The case of the Ammonite exemption from military duty suggests that the rabbinic understanding of Deuteronomy 20 in this regard was probably the same as the Nephites’ (Welch, 1990, pp. 63–65).

One may also infer from circumstantial evidence that the Nephites observed the traditional ritual laws of Israelite festivals. One example might be the assembly of Benjamin’s people in tents around the temple and tower from which he spoke. There are things in the account that are similar to the New Year festivals surrounding the Feast of Tabernacles and the Day of Atonement (Tvedtnes, in Lundquist and Ricks, By Study and Also by Faith, Salt Lake City, 1990, 2:197–237).

With the coming of the resurrected Christ, recorded in 3 Nephi, the law of Moses was fulfilled and was given new meaning. The Ten Commandments still applied in a new form (3 Ne. 12); the “performances and ordinances” of the law became obsolete (4 Ne. 1:12), but not the “law” or the “commandments” as Jesus had reformulated them in 3 Nephi 12–14.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Bushman, Richard L. “The Book of Mormon and the American Revolution.” BYU Studies 17 (Autumn 1976):3–20.
- Reynolds, Noel B. “The Political Dimension in Nephi’s Small Plates.” BYU Studies 27 (Fall 1987):15–37.
- Ricks, Stephen D. “The Ideology of Kingship in Mosiah 1–6.” F.A.R.M.S. Update, Aug. 1987.
- Welch, John W. “The Execution of Zemnarilah.” F.A.R.M.S. Update, Nov. 1984.
- . “The Law of Mosiah.” F.A.R.M.S. Update, Mar. 1987.
- . “Statutes, Judgments, Ordinances and Commandments.” F.A.R.M.S. Update, June 1988.
- . “Lehi’s Last Will and Testament: A Legal Approach.” In The Book of Mormon: Second Nephi, the Doctrinal Structure, ed. M. Nyman and C. Tate, pp. 61–82. Provo, Utah, 1989.
- . “The Case of an Unobserved Murder.” F.A.R.M.S. Update, Feb. 1990.
- . “Law and War in the Book of Mormon.” In Warfare in the Book of Mormon, ed. S. Ricks and W. Hamblin, pp. 46–102. Salt Lake City, 1990.

NOEL B. REYNOLDS

---

BOOK OF MORMON, HISTORY OF WARFARE IN

Much of the Book of Mormon deals with military conflict. In diverse, informative, and morally instructive accounts, the Book of Mormon reports a wide variety of military customs, technologies, and tactics similar to those found in many premodern societies (before A.D. 1600–1700), especially some distinctive Israelite beliefs and conventions as adapted to the region of Mesoamerica.

officers (Alma 11:2) and lawyers who assisted, but their official functions are not clear. It appears that ordinary citizens had sole power to initiate lawsuits (otherwise, the judges would have brought the action against Nephi<sub>2</sub> in Helaman 8:1).

The trial of Nehor was an important precedent, establishing the plenary and original jurisdiction of the chief judge (Alma 1:1–15). It appears that under the terms of Mosiah 29, the higher judges were intended only to judge if the lower judges judged falsely. But in the trial of Nehor, Alma<sub>2</sub> took the case directly, enhancing the power of the chief judge.

The reform also protected freedom of belief, but certain overt conduct was punished (Alma 1:17–18; 30:9–11). The case of Korihor established the rule that certain forms of speech (blasphemy, inciting people to sin) were punishable under the Nephite law even after the reform of Mosiah.

All this time, the underlying Nephite law remained the law of Moses as interpreted in light of a knowledge of the gospel. Public decrees regularly prohibited murder, plunder, theft, adultery, and all iniquity (Mosiah 2:13; Alma 23:3). Murder was defined as “deliberately killing” (2 Ne. 9:35), which excluded cases where one did not lie in wait (on Nephi’s slaying of Laban, cf. Ex. 21:13–14 and 1 Ne. 4:6–18). Theft was typically a minor offense, but robbery was a capital crime (Hel. 11:28), usually committed by organized outsiders and violent and politically motivated brigands, who were dealt with by military force (as they were typically in the ancient Near East).

Evidently, technical principles of the law of Moses were consistently observed in Nephite civilization. For example, the legal resolution of an unobserved murder in the case of Seantum in Helaman 9 shows that a technical exception to the rule against self-incrimination was recognized by the Nephites in the same way that it was by later Jewish jurists, as when divination detected a corpus delicti (Welch, Feb. 1990). The execution of Zemnarilah by the Nephites adumbrated an obscure point attested in later Jewish law that required the tree from which a criminal was hanged to be chopped down (3 Ne. 4:28; Welch, 1984). The case of the Ammonite exemption from military duty suggests that the rabbinic understanding of Deuteronomy 20 in this regard was probably the same as the Nephites’ (Welch, 1990, pp. 63–65).

One may also infer from circumstantial evidence that the Nephites observed the traditional ritual laws of Israelite festivals. One example might be the assembly of Benjamin’s people in tents around the temple and tower from which he spoke. There are things in the account that are similar to the New Year festivals surrounding the Feast of Tabernacles and the Day of Atonement (Tvedtnes, in Lundquist and Ricks, By Study and Also by Faith, Salt Lake City, 1990, 2:197–237).

With the coming of the resurrected Christ, recorded in 3 Nephi, the law of Moses was fulfilled and was given new meaning. The Ten Commandments still applied in a new form (3 Ne. 12); the “performances and ordinances” of the law became obsolete (4 Ne. 1:12), but not the “law” or the “commandments” as Jesus had reformulated them in 3 Nephi 12–14.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Bushman, Richard L. “The Book of Mormon and the American Revolution.” BYU Studies 17 (Autumn 1976):3–20.
- Reynolds, Noel B. “The Political Dimension in Nephi’s Small Plates.” BYU Studies 27 (Fall 1987):15–37.
- Ricks, Stephen D. “The Ideology of Kingship in Mosiah 1–6.” F.A.R.M.S. Update, Aug. 1987.
- Welch, John W. “The Execution of Zemnarilah.” F.A.R.M.S. Update, Nov. 1984.
- . “The Law of Mosiah.” F.A.R.M.S. Update, Mar. 1987.
- . “Statutes, Judgments, Ordinances and Commandments.” F.A.R.M.S. Update, June 1988.
- . “Lehi’s Last Will and Testament: A Legal Approach.” In The Book of Mormon: Second Nephi, the Doctrinal Structure, ed. M. Nyman and C. Tate, pp. 61–82. Provo, Utah, 1989.
- . “The Case of an Unobserved Murder.” F.A.R.M.S. Update, Feb. 1990.
- . “Law and War in the Book of Mormon.” In Warfare in the Book of Mormon, ed. S. Ricks and W. Hamblin, pp. 46–102. Salt Lake City, 1990.

NOEL B. REYNOLDS

---

BOOK OF MORMON, HISTORY OF WARFARE IN

Much of the Book of Mormon deals with military conflict. In diverse, informative, and morally instructive accounts, the Book of Mormon reports a wide variety of military customs, technologies, and tactics similar to those found in many premodern societies (before A.D. 1600–1700), especially some distinctive Israelite beliefs and conventions as adapted to the region of Mesoamerica.

The Book of Mormon teaches that war is a result of iniquity. Wars and destructions were brought upon the Nephites because of the contentions, murderings, idolatry, whoredoms, and abominations “which were among themselves,” while those who were “faithful in keeping the commandments of the Lord were delivered at all times” from captivity, death, or unbelief (Alma 50:21–22).

The Book of Mormon implicitly condemns wars of aggression. Until their final calamity, all Nephite military objectives were strictly defensive. It was a mandatory, sacred obligation of all able-bodied Nephite men to defend their families, country, and religious freedoms (Alma 43:47; 46:12), but only as God commanded them (see WAR AND PEACE).

WARFARE. In the Book of Mormon, aside from the Ammonite converts who swore an oath against bloodshed and a remarkable period of peace following the visitation of Christ, armed conflict at different levels of intensity was a nearly constant phenomenon. Several prophets and heroes of the Book of Mormon were military men who fought in defense of their people, reflecting the grim realities of warfare in ancient history.

Religion and warfare were closely connected in the Book of Mormon. Certain elements of the Israelite patterns of “holy war” were continued in the Book of Mormon, such as the important ancient idea that success in war was due fundamentally to the will of God and the righteousness of the people (Alma 2:28; 44:4–5; 50:21; 56:47; 57:36; 58:33; Morm. 2:26). Nephite armies consulted prophets before going to battle (Alma 16:5; 43:23–24; 3 Ne. 3:19) and entered into covenants with God before battle. On one occasion, the Nephite soldiers swore a solemn oath, covenanting to obey God’s commandments and to fight valiantly for the cause of righteousness; casting their garments on the ground at the feet of their leader and inviting God to cast themselves likewise at the feet of their enemies if they should violate their oath (Alma 46:22; cf. 53:17). A purity code for warriors may be seen in the account of the stripling warriors of Helaman (Alma 56–58).

As was the case in all premodern situations, warfare in the Book of Mormon was closely bound to the natural environment and ecology: weather, altitude, terrain, food supply, seasonality, and agricultural cycles. Geography determined some of the strategy and tactics in Book of Mormon warfare (Sorenson, 1985, pp. 239–76). The favorable times for campaigns in the Book of Mormon appear to have been between the eleventh and the fourth months, which has been compared with the fact that military action often took place during the cool and dry post-harvest months from November through April in Mesoamerica (see Alma 16:1; 49:1; 52:1; 56:27; Ricks and Hamblin, pp. 445–77).

Animals, either used as beasts of burden or ridden into battle, evidently were not widely available or practical in the Nephite world: No animal is ever mentioned as being used for military purposes in the Book of Mormon.

Technologically, Nephite soldiers fought, in one way or other, with missile or melee weapons in face-to-face, hand-to-hand encounters, frequently wearing armor. They used metallurgy for making weapons and armor, and engineering for building fortifications. In the Book of Mormon, Nephi taught his people to make swords modeled after the sword of Laban (2 Ne. 5:14–15). Innovations described include a proliferation of fortifications (once thought absent in ancient America) and Nephite armor in the first century B.C. (Alma 43:19; 48), soon copied by the Lamanites (Alma 49:24). It has been pointed out that the weapons (swords, scimitars, bows, and arrows) and armor (breastplates, shields, armshields, bucklers, and headplates) mentioned in the Book of Mormon are comparable to those found in Mesoamerica; coats of mail, helmets, battle chariots, cavalry, and sophisticated siege engines are absent from the Book of Mormon and Mesoamerica, despite their importance in biblical descriptions (Ricks and Hamblin, pp. 329–424).

The ability to recruit, equip, train, supply, and move large groups of soldiers represented a major undertaking for these societies, often pressing them beyond their limits and thereby ultimately contributing to their collapse. As the story of MORONI<sub>1</sub> and Pahoran illustrates, warfare exerted terrible social and economic pressure on Nephite society (Alma 58–61). Nephite army sizes coincided with general demographic growth: Armies numbered in the thousands in the first century B.C. and in the tens of thousands in the fourth century A.D.

It appears that Book of Mormon military organization was aristocratic and dominated by a highly trained hereditary elite. Thus, for example, military leaders such as Moroni<sub>1</sub>, his son Moronihah, and MORMON each became the chief captain at a young age (Alma 43:17; 62:39; Morm. 2:1).

Book of Mormon armies were organized on a decimal system of hundreds, thousands, and ten thousands, as they typically were in ancient Israel and many other ancient military organizations.

The book of Alma chronicles the grim realities, strain, and pain of war, vividly and realistically (CWHN 7:291–333). Preparations for war were complex; provisioning, marching, and counter-marching are frequently mentioned. Manpower was recruited from the ordinary ranks of the citizenry; soldiers had to be equipped and organized into units for marching and tactics and mobilized at central locations.

Some battles were fought at prearranged times and places, as when Mormon met the Lamanites at Cumorah (Morm. 6:2; cf. 3 Ne. 3:8). But much was typified by guerrilla warfare or surprise attacks: The Gadianton robbers typically raided towns, avoided open conflict, made terrorizing demands, and secretly assassinated government officials.

Actual battlefield operations usually represented only a small portion of a campaign. Scouts and spies reconnoitered for food, trails, and the location of enemy troops. Battle plans were generally made shortly before the enemy was encountered and frequently took the form of a council, as Moroni held in Alma 52:19.

When actual fighting began, controlling the army undoubtedly proved difficult. Soldiers generally fought in units distinguished by banners held by an officer. Moroni's banner, or "title of liberty," apparently served such functions (Alma 43:26, 30; 46:19–21, 36).

As far as one can determine, attacks typically began with an exchange of missiles to wound and demoralize the enemy; then hand-to-hand combat ensued. The battle described in Alma 49 offers a good description of archery duels preceding hand-to-hand melees. When panic began to spread in the ranks, complete collapse could be sudden and devastating. The death of the king or commander typically led to immediate defeat or surrender, as happened in Alma 49:25. The death of one Lamanite king during the night before the New Year proved particularly demoralizing (Alma 52:1–2). Most casualties occurred during the flight and pursuit after the disintegration of the main units; there are several examples in the Book of Mormon of the rout, flight, and destruction of an army (e.g., Alma 52:28; 62:31).

Laws and customary behavior also regulated military relations and diplomacy. Military oaths were taken very seriously. Oaths of loyalty from troops and oaths of surrender from prisoners are mentioned frequently in the Book of Mormon, and treaties were concluded principally with oaths of nonaggression (Alma 44:6–10, 20; 50:36; 62:16; 3 Ne. 5:4–5). Legally, robbers or brigands were considered to be military targets, not common offenders (Hel. 11:28). Further elements of martial law in the Book of Mormon included the suspension of normal judicial processes and transferral of legal authority to commanding military officers (Alma 46:34), restrictions on travel, warnings before the commencement of hostilities (3 Ne. 3; cf. Deut. 20:10–13), the extraordinary granting of military exemption on condition that those exempted supply provisions and support (Alma 27:24; cf. Deut. 20:8; Babylonian Talmud, Sotah 43a–44a), and requirements of humanitarian treatment for captives and women.

WARS. Eighty-five instances of armed conflict can be identified in the Book of Mormon (Ricks and Hamblin, pp. 463–74). Some were brief skirmishes; others, prolonged campaigns. Some were civil wars; others, intersectional. Causes of war varied, and alliances shifted accordingly. The main wars include the following:

In the early tribal conflicts (c. 550–200 B.C.), social, religious, and cultural conflicts led to repeated Lamanite aggression after the Nephites separated from the Lamanites. The Nephites did not flourish under these circumstances, and to escape further attacks they eventually left the land of Nephi, moving northward to Zarahemla.

King Laman's son (c. 160–150 B.C.), envious of Nephite prosperity and angry at them for taking the records (especially the plates of brass, Mosiah 10:16), attacked both the people of Zeniff (Nephites who had returned to the land of Nephi) and the people of BENJAMIN (Nephites and Mulekites in the land of Zarahemla). As a result of these campaigns, Zeniff became a tributary to the Lamanites; Benjamin's victory more firmly united the land of Zarahemla under his rule (W of M; Mosiah 9–10).

The war of Amlici (87 B.C.) was a civil war in Zarahemla, sparked by the shift of government from a kingship to judgeship and by the execution of Nehor. Amlici, a follower of Nehor, militated in favor of returning to a kingship. This civil war was the first recorded time Nephite dissenters allied themselves with Lamanites; it resulted in an unstable peace (Alma 2–3).

The sudden destruction of Ammonihah (81 B.C.), a center of the recalcitrant followers of Nehor, was triggered by Lamanite anger toward certain Nephites who had caused some Lamanites to kill other Lamanites (Alma 16; 24–25).

The Ammonite move (77 B.C.) from Lamanite territory to the land of Jershon to join the Nephites led to a major Lamanite invasion of Nephite lands (Alma 28).

Three years later, many Zoramite poor were converted by the Nephites and moved from Antionum (the Zoramite capital) to Jershon (the land given to the Ammonites with guarantees of protection by the Nephites). The loss of these workers ignited the Zoramite attack allied with Lamanites and others against the Nephites (Alma 43–44). New forms of armor introduced by the Nephites figured prominently in this war.

During this turbulent decade, a politically ambitious man named Amalickiah, with Lamanite allies, sought to reestablish a kingship in Zarahemla after the disappearance of ALMA<sub>2</sub>. Amalickiah was defeated (72 B.C.), but he swore to return and kill Moroni<sub>1</sub> (Alma 46–50). A seven-year campaign ensued (67–61 B.C.), fought in two arenas, one southwest of Zarahemla and the other in the seaboard north of Zarahemla. Outlying towns fell, and the capital city was plagued with civil strife. At length, a costly victory was won by the Nephites (Alma 51–62).

In the short war of Tubaloth (51 B.C.), Ammoron's son Tubaloth and Coriantumr (a descendant of King Zarahemla) captured but could not hold the land of Zarahemla during the political chaos that followed the rebellion of Paanchi after the death of the chief judge Pahoran (Hel. 1). In the aftermath, the Gadianton robbers rose to power, and some Nephites began migrating to the north.

The war of Moronihah (38, 35–30 B.C.) followed the appointment of NEPHI<sub>2</sub> as chief judge (Hel. 4). Nephite dissenters, together with Lamanites, occupied half of the Nephite lands, and Nephi<sub>2</sub> resigned the judgment seat.

The wars of Gadianton and Kishkumen (26–19

B.C.) began with the assassinations of two consecutive chief judges, Cezoram and his son; greed and struggles for power brought on conflicts with the Gadianton robbers around Zarahemla. Lamanites joined with Nephites against these robbers until a famine, called down from heaven by the prophet Nephi<sub>2</sub>, brought a temporary Nephite victory (Hel. 6–11).

Giddianhi and Zemnarihah (A.D. 13–22) led menacing campaigns against the few righteous Nephites and Lamanites who remained and joined forces at this time (3 Ne. 2–4). Low on supplies, the Gadianton robbers became more open and aggressive; they claimed rights to Nephite lands and government. The coalition of Nephites and Lamanites eventually defeated the robbers.

The final Nephite wars (A.D. 322, 327–328, 346–350) began after heavy population growth and infestation of robbers led to a border dispute, and the Nephites were driven to a narrow neck of land. The Nephites fortified the city of Shem and managed to win a ten-year peace treaty (Morm. 1–2), but the Nephites eventually counterattacked in the south. Gross wickedness existed on both sides (Morm 6; Moro. 9), until at a prearranged battleground the Nephites met the Lamanites and were annihilated (c. A.D. 385).

Many chapters in the Book of Mormon deal with war, and for several reasons.

1. The inevitability of war was a fundamental concern in virtually all ancient civilizations. Disposable economic resources were often largely devoted to maintaining a military force; conquest was a major factor in the transformation and development of Book of Mormon societies, as it was in the growth of most world civilizations.
2. The Book of Mormon is a religious record, and for the people of the Book of Mormon, as in nearly all ancient cultures, warfare was fundamentally sacred. It was carried out in a complex mixture of religious ritual and ideology.
3. Mormon, the compiler and abridger of the Book of Mormon, was himself a military commander. Many political and religious rulers in the Book of Mormon were closely associated with, if not the same as, their military commanders or elites.
4. Important religious messages are conveyed through these accounts. Wars in Nephite history verify the words of their prophets such as ABINADI and SAMUEL THE LAMANITE (Morm. 1:19). Wars were instruments of God's judgment (Morm. 4:5) and of God's deliverance (Alma 56:46–56). Ultimately they stand as a compelling witness to warn people today against falling victim to the same fate that the Nephites and Jaredites finally brought upon themselves (Morm. 9:31; Ether 2:11–12).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- de Vaux, Roland. Ancient Israel. New York, 1965.
- Hillam, Ray. "The Gadianon Robbers and Protracted War." BYU Studies 15 (1975):215–24.
- Ricks, Stephen D., and William J. Hamblin, eds. Warfare in the Book of Mormon. Salt Lake City, 1990. (Further bibliography is listed on pp. 22–24.)
- Sorenson, John L. An Ancient American Setting for the Book of Mormon, pp. 239–76. Salt Lake City, 1985.

WILLIAM J. HAMBLIN

---

BOOK OF MORMON AUTHORSHIP

Many studies have investigated Book of Mormon authorship because the book presents itself as a composite work of many ancient authors. Those who reject Joseph SMITH's claim that he translated the book through divine power assume that he or one of his contemporaries wrote the book. Various claims or arguments have been advanced to support or discount these competing positions.

Disputes about the book's authorship arose as soon as its existence became public knowledge. The first general reaction was ridicule. Modern minds do not easily accept the idea that an angel can deliver ancient records to be translated by an untrained young man. Moreover, most Christians in 1830 viewed the CANON of scripture as complete with the Bible; hence, the possibility of additional scripture violated a basic assumption of their faith. Opponents of Joseph Smith, such as Alexander Campbell, also argued that the Book of Mormon was heavily plagiarized from the Bible and that it reflected themes and phraseology current in New York in the 1820s. Many critics have speculated that Sidney RIGDON or Solomon Spaulding played a role in writing the book (see SPAULDING MANUSCRIPT). It has also been suggested that Joseph Smith borrowed ideas from another book (see VIEW OF THE HEBREWS). Though these varieties of objections and theories are still defended in many quarters, they are not supported by modern authorship studies and continue to raise as many questions as they try to answer (e.g., CWHN 8:54–206).

Some have suggested that Joseph Smith admitted that he was the author of the Book of Mormon because the title page of the first edition lists him as "Author and Proprietor." This language, however, comes from the federal copyright statutes and legal forms in use in 1829 (1 Stat. 125 [1790], amended 2 Stat. 171 [1802]). In the preface to the same 1830 edition, Joseph Smith stated that he translated Mormon's handwriting "by the gift and power of God" (see BOOK OF MORMON TRANSLATION). The position of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints has invariably been that the truth of Joseph Smith's testimony can be validated through the witness of the HOLY GHOST.

Scholarly work has produced a variety of evidence in support of the claim that the texts of the Book of Mormon were written by multiple ancient authors. These studies significantly increase the plausibility of Joseph Smith's account of the origin of the book.

The internal complexity of the Book of Mormon is often cited as a strong indication of multiple authorship. The many writings reportedly abridged by MORMON are intricately interwoven and often expressly identified (see BOOK OF MORMON PLATES AND RECORDS). The various books within the Book of Mormon differ from each other in historical background, style, and distinctive characteristics, yet are accurate and consistent in numerous minute details.

Historical studies have demonstrated that many things either not known or not readily knowable in 1829 about the ancient Near East are accurately reflected in the Book of Mormon. This body of historical research was expanded by the work of Hugh W. Nibley (see BOOK OF MORMON STUDIES), who has recently discovered that ancient communities, such as Qumran, have many characteristics parallel to those of Book of Mormon peoples (CWHN 5–8). The Jews at Qumran were "sectaries," purists who left Jerusalem to avoid corruption of their covenants; they practiced ablutions (a type of baptism) before the time of Christ and wrote one of their records on a copper scroll that they sealed and hid up to come forth at a future time. One of Nibley's analyses demonstrates that King BENJAMIN's farewell speech to his people verify the words of their prophets such as ABINADI and SAMUEL THE LAMANITE (Morm. 1:19). Wars were instruments of God's judgment (Morm. 4:5) and of God's deliverance (Alma 56:46–56). Ultimately they stand as a compelling witness to warn people today against falling victim to the same fate that the Nephites and Jaredites finally brought upon themselves (Morm. 9:31; Ether 2:11–12).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- de Vaux, Roland. Ancient Israel. New York, 1965.
- Hillam, Ray. "The Gadianon Robbers and Protracted War." BYU Studies 15 (1975):215–24.
- Ricks, Stephen D., and William J. Hamblin, eds. Warfare in the Book of Mormon. Salt Lake City, 1990. (Further bibliography is listed on pp. 22–24.)
- Sorenson, John L. An Ancient American Setting for the Book of Mormon, pp. 239–76. Salt Lake City, 1985.

WILLIAM J. HAMBLIN

---

BOOK OF MORMON AUTHORSHIP

Many studies have investigated Book of Mormon authorship because the book presents itself as a composite work of many ancient authors. Those who reject Joseph SMITH's claim that he translated the book through divine power assume that he or one of his contemporaries wrote the book. Various claims or arguments have been advanced to support or discount these competing positions.

Disputes about the book's authorship arose as soon as its existence became public knowledge. The first general reaction was ridicule. Modern minds do not easily accept the idea that an angel can deliver ancient records to be translated by an untrained young man. Moreover, most Christians in 1830 viewed the CANON of scripture as complete with the Bible; hence, the possibility of additional scripture violated a basic assumption of their faith. Opponents of Joseph Smith, such as Alexander Campbell, also argued that the Book of Mormon was heavily plagiarized from the Bible and that it reflected themes and phraseology current in New York in the 1820s. Many critics have speculated that Sidney RIGDON or Solomon Spaulding played a role in writing the book (see SPAULDING MANUSCRIPT). It has also been suggested that Joseph Smith borrowed ideas from another book (see VIEW OF THE HEBREWS). Though these varieties of objections and theories are still defended in many quarters, they are not supported by modern authorship studies and continue to raise as many questions as they try to answer (e.g., CWHN 8:54–206).

Some have suggested that Joseph Smith admitted that he was the author of the Book of Mormon because the title page of the first edition lists him as "Author and Proprietor." This language, however, comes from the federal copyright statutes and legal forms in use in 1829 (1 Stat. 125 [1790], amended 2 Stat. 171 [1802]). In the preface to the same 1830 edition, Joseph Smith stated that he translated Mormon's handwriting "by the gift and power of God" (see BOOK OF MORMON TRANSLATION). The position of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints has invariably been that the truth of Joseph Smith's testimony can be validated through the witness of the HOLY GHOST.

Scholarly work has produced a variety of evidence in support of the claim that the texts of the Book of Mormon were written by multiple ancient authors. These studies significantly increase the plausibility of Joseph Smith's account of the origin of the book.

The internal complexity of the Book of Mormon is often cited as a strong indication of multiple authorship. The many writings reportedly abridged by MORMON are intricately interwoven and often expressly identified (see BOOK OF MORMON PLATES AND RECORDS). The various books within the Book of Mormon differ from each other in historical background, style, and distinctive characteristics, yet are accurate and consistent in numerous minute details.

Historical studies have demonstrated that many things either not known or not readily knowable in 1829 about the ancient Near East are accurately reflected in the Book of Mormon. This body of historical research was expanded by the work of Hugh W. Nibley (see BOOK OF MORMON STUDIES), who has recently discovered that ancient communities, such as Qumran, have many characteristics parallel to those of Book of Mormon peoples (CWHN 5–8). The Jews at Qumran were "sectaries," purists who left Jerusalem to avoid corruption of their covenants; they practiced ablutions (a type of baptism) before the time of Christ and wrote one of their records on a copper scroll that they sealed and hid up to come forth at a future time. One of Nibley's analyses demonstrates that King BENJAMIN's farewell speech to his people (Mosiah 2–5) is a good example of the ancient year-rite festival (CWHN 6:295–310). Subsequent studies have suggested that King Benjamin's people might have been celebrating the Israelite festival of Sukkoth and doing things required by Jewish laws not translated into English until after the Book of Mormon was published (Tvedtnes, 1990).

Structural studies have identified an artistic literary form, chiasmus, that appears in rich diversity in both the Bible and the Book of Mormon (see BOOK OF MORMON LITERATURE). The most significant structural studies of the Book of Mormon derive from John W. Welch's analysis (Reynolds, pp. 33–52). Little known in 1829, this literary form creates inverted parallelism such as is found in this biblical passage in Leviticus 24:17–21:

He that killeth any man . . .
 He that killeth a beast . . .
 If a man cause a blemish . . .
     Breach for breach,
     Eye for eye
     Tooth for tooth.
 As he hath caused a blemish . . .
 He that killeth a beast . . .
 He that killeth a man . . .

And from the Book of Mormon, in Alma 41:13–14 (cf. Welch, pp. 5–22):

Good for that which is good
 Righteous for that which is righteous
 Just for that which is just Merciful for that which is merciful
     Therefore my son
     See that you are merciful
     Deal justly
     Judge righteously
 And do good continually.

Although chiasmus can appear in almost any language or literature, it was prevalent in the biblical period around the early seventh century B.C., the time of the Book of Mormon prophets LEHI and NEPHI<sub>1</sub>. The especially precise and beautiful crafting of several Book of Mormon texts further supports the idea that their authors deliberately and painstakingly followed ancient literary conventions, which is inconsistent with seeing the New England born Joseph Smith as the author of these passages.

Other stylistic studies have examined the frequency of Hebrew root words, idioms, and syntax in the Book of Mormon (Tvedtnes, 1970). Some Book of Mormon names that have no English equivalents have Hebrew cognates (Hoskisson; CWHN 6:281–94). There are also discernible differences between the vocabularies and abridging techniques of Mormon and his son Moroni (see Keller).

Extensive statistical studies, including stylometry (or wordprinting), have been conducted on the Book of Mormon (Reynolds, pp. 157–88; cf. Hilton). Blocks of writing were analyzed to identify the writers' near-subconscious tendencies to use nonecontextual word patterns in peculiar ratios and combinations. Wordprinting has been used to ascertain the authorship of such works as twelve disputed Federalist Papers and a posthumously published novel by Jane Austen. When applied to the Book of Mormon, wordprinting reveals that the word patterns of the Book of Mormon differ significantly from the personal writings of Joseph Smith, Solomon Spaulding, Sidney Rigdon, and Oliver COWDERY, who served as Joseph Smith's scribe. Furthermore, patterns of Nephi<sub>1</sub> are consistent among themselves but different from those of ALMA<sub>2</sub>. The results of objectively measuring these phenomena indicate an extremely low statistical probability that the Book of Mormon could have been written by one author. The introduction of new vocabulary into the text is at a low rate, which is consistent with the uniform role of Joseph Smith as translator.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Hilton, John L. "On Verifying Wordprint Studies: Book of Mormon Authorship." BYU Studies 30 (Summer 1990):89–108.
- Hoskisson, Paul. "An Introduction to the Relevance of and a Methodology for a Study of the Proper Names of the Book of Mormon." In By Study and Also by Faith, ed. J. Lundquist and S. Ricks, Vol. 2, pp. 126–35. Salt Lake City, 1990.
- Keller, Roger R. "Mormon and Moroni as Authors and Abridgers." F.A.R.M.S. Update, Apr. 1988.
- Reynolds, Noel B., ed. Book of Mormon Authorship: New Light on Ancient Origins. Provo, Utah, 1982.
- Tvedtnes, John. "Hebraisms in the Book of Mormon: A Preliminary Survey." BYU Studies 2 (Autumn 1970):50–60.
- . "King Benjamin and the Feast of Tabernacles." In By Study and Also by Faith, ed. J. Lundquist and S. Ricks, Vol. 2, pp. 197–237. Salt Lake City, 1990.
- Welch, John W. "Chiasmus in Biblical Law." In Jewish Law Association Studies IV, ed. B. Jackson, pp. 5–22. Atlanta, 1990.
- Wirth, Diane E. A Challenge to the Critics: Scholarly Evidences of the Book of Mormon. Bountiful, Utah, 1986.

D. BRENT ANDERSON
 DIANE E. WIRTH

BOOK OF MORMON IN A BIBLICAL CULTURE

One does not need to look beyond the prevailing revivalist sects in America to discover why the earliest Mormon elders won an immediate hearing for their sacred book. Firm calls for personal righteousness and obedience to the moral requirements of the Judeo-Christian scriptures were by 1830 the dominant motifs in all Protestant communions. Moreover, each of the American sects shared speculations about the ancient and future history of Indians and Jews.

These interests and beliefs were also predominant among Methodist, Congregational, and Baptist ministers serving congregations in and around Cheshire, in northern England. Heber C. Kimball's Journal, giving an account of his mission to Great Britain, shows how the flowering of biblical study and of millennial speculation prepared the soil for early Mormon evangelization there. He reported that even clergymen in the Church of England told their congregations that the teachings of the Latter-day Saints reveal the same principles taught by the apostles of old.

The Book of Mormon also gives clear direction on several matters that the Christian scriptures seem to have left unclear, including baptism by immersion and the promises that all believers, and not just the apostles, might be "filled with the Holy Ghost"; that Christian believers can be made pure in heart (as John Wesley had insisted in the previous century); that the experience of salvation received by a free response to free grace is available to all persons, and not simply to the "elect"; and that obedience and works of righteousness are the fruit of that experience. The book also affirms the veracity of the biblical accounts of the scattering of Israel by affirming that Native Americans originated from descendants of Joseph and Judah.

The persuasive power of the new scriptures and of the missionaries who expounded them, therefore, lay in their testimony to beliefs that were central to evangelical Protestant sects in both Jacksonian America and early Victorian England. An early LDS missionary, Parley P. Pratt, told his English hearers that two errors in interpretation of the Bible had produced widespread uncertainty. One was the belief that direct inspiration by the Holy Ghost was not intended for all ages of the Church; and the other was that the Jewish and Christian scriptures contained all truth necessary to salvation and comprised a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

Some nineteenth-century deacons and elders and a few evangelical pastors struggled with grave temptations to doubt the truth and relevance of large portions of the book upon which they had been taught to stake their eternal destiny. True, the details of the histories recounted in the two sacred books were radically different. But they fit together wondrously. And their moral structure, the story they told of Jesus, their promise of salvation, and their description of humankind's last days were remarkably similar. Though the new scriptures had similarities with evangelical Arminianism, at the expense of the Calvinist views long dominant in colonial America, the same was true of the early nineteenth-century teachings of many Protestants, even Presbyterians, to say nothing of Methodists and Disciples of Christ. In the voice of two witnesses, the Bible and the Book of Mormon, Latter-day Saints declared the truth confirmed, just as the prophet NEPHI<sup>1</sup> had predicted (cf. 2 Ne. 29:8).

In five important ways, the Book of Mormon seems to some who are not members of the Church to strengthen the authority of Holy Scripture. First in importance is the volume's affirmation that the Christian religion is grounded upon both the Old and New Testaments. The book affirms what recent biblical scholarship is now making plain: the continuity of the theology, ethics, and spirituality that the two Testaments proclaimed. In the Book of Mormon, Jesus is the Lord who gave the law to Moses, and the risen Christ is identical to the prophet Isaiah's MESSIAH. He delivers exactly the same message of redemption, faith, and a new life of righteousness through the Holy Spirit that the New Testament attributes to him.

Second, the Book of Mormon reinforces the unifying vision of biblical religion, grounding it in the conviction of a common humanity that the stories of creation declared, God's promise to Abraham implied, and Jesus affirmed. Puritan MILLENARIANISM may have inspired an ethnocentric view of Anglo-Saxon destiny, but the image of the future in the Book of Mormon is a wholly opposite one. It envisions a worldwide conversion of believers and their final gathering into the kingdom of God. This begins where John Wesley's "world parish" leaves off.

Third, the biblical bond linking holiness to hope for salvation, both individual and social, also finds confirmation in the Book of Mormon. Certainly, Methodists had no corner on that linkage, for Baptist preachers, Charles G. Finney's Congregationalists, Alexander Campbell's Disciples of Christ, and Unitarians like William E. Channing affirmed it. Ancient Nephites heeded the word of their prophets and looked forward to the second coming of Jesus Christ, the Son of Righteousness. When he appeared to their descendants in the New World, Jesus repeated even more understandably the words of the SERMON ON THE MOUNT that he had proclaimed in the Old.

Fourth, Joseph Smith's translation of an ancient sacred book helped bring to fruition another movement, long growing among Puritans, Pietists, Quakers, and Methodists, to restore to Christian doctrine the idea of the presence of the Holy Spirit in the lives of believers. Charles G. Finney came eventually to believe, for example, that the baptism of the Holy Spirit, or the experience of entire SANCTIFICATION, would remedy the inadequacies of righteousness and love that he saw in his converts. So, of course, did almost all Methodists. Observers from both inside and outside the restored Church testified that in the early years something akin to modern pentecostal phenomena took place among at least the inner circle of the Saints. By the 1830s, evangelicals in several traditions were greatly expanding their use of the example of the Day of Pentecost to declare that God's power is at work in the world.

Fifth, the Book of Mormon shared in the restoration of some Christian expectations that in the LAST DAYS biblical prophecies will be literally fulfilled. Those who by faith and baptism become Saints will be included among God's people, chosen in "the eleventh hour." They, too, should gather in ZION, a NEW JERUSALEM for the New World, and a restored Jerusalem in the Old; and Christ will indeed return.

Whatever LDS interpretations of the King James Version of the Holy Scriptures developed later, the mutually supportive role of the Bible and the Book of Mormon was central to the thinking of Joseph Smith, the early missionaries, and their converts.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Kimball, Heber C. Journal. Nauvoo, Ill., 1840.
 Smith, Timothy L. "The Book of Mormon in a Biblical Culture." Journal of Mormon History 7 (1980):3-21.

TIMOTHY L. SMITH

BOOK OF MORMON CHRONOLOGY

The Book of Mormon contains a chronology that is internally consistent over the thousand-year NEPHITE history, with precise Nephite dates for several events, including the crucifixion of Jesus Christ. However, its chronology has not been unequivocally tied to other calendars because of uncertainties in biblical dates and lack of details about the Nephite calendars. Even less information exists about JAREDITE chronology (Sorenson, 1969).

INTERNAL NEPHITE CHRONOLOGY. Nephites kept careful track of time from at least three reference points:

1. Years were counted from the time LEHI left Jerusalem (Enos 1:25; Mosiah 6:4); not only was this an important date of origin, but also an angel had said that the Savior would come "in 600 years" from that time (1 Ne. 19:8).
2. Time was also measured from the commencement of the reign of the judges (c. 91 B.C.; cf. 3 Ne. 1:1), which marked a major political reform ending five centuries of Nephite kingship (Jacob 1:9-11; Alma 1:1), during which the years of each king's reign were probably counted according to typical ancient practices (1 Ne. 1:4; Mosiah 29:46).
3. The Nephites later reckoned time from the sign of the birth of Christ (3 Ne. 2:8).

The Book of Mormon links all three systems in several passages that are apparently consistent. Table 1 lists several events using the Nephite systems.

Most of the Nephite record pertains to three historical periods: the time of Lehi and his sons (c. 600-500 B.C.), the events preceding and following the coming of Christ (c. 150 B.C.-A.D. 34), and the destruction of the Nephites (c. A.D. 300-420). Thus, the relatively large book of Alma covers only thirty-nine years, while the much smaller books of Omni and 4 Nephi each cover more than two hundred years.

LDS editions of the Book of Mormon show dates in Nephite years, deduced from the text, at the bottom of the pages. The exact nature of the Nephite year, however, is not described. The Nephite year began with the "first day" of the "first month" (Alma 51:37-52:1; 56:1), and it probably had twelve months because the eleventh month was at "the latter end" of the year (Alma 48:2, 21;

finds confirmation in the Book of Mormon. Certainly, Methodists had no corner on that linkage, for Baptist preachers, Charles G. Finney's Congregationalists, Alexander Campbell's Disciples of Christ, and Unitarians like William E. Channing affirmed it. Ancient Nephites heeded the word of their prophets and looked forward to the second coming of Jesus Christ, the Son of Righteousness. When he appeared to their descendants in the New World, Jesus repeated even more understandably the words of the SERMON ON THE MOUNT that he had proclaimed in the Old.

Fourth, Joseph Smith's translation of an ancient sacred book helped bring to fruition another movement, long growing among Puritans, Pietists, Quakers, and Methodists, to restore to Christian doctrine the idea of the presence of the Holy Spirit in the lives of believers. Charles G. Finney came eventually to believe, for example, that the baptism of the Holy Spirit, or the experience of entire SANCTIFICATION, would remedy the inadequacies of righteousness and love that he saw in his converts. So, of course, did almost all Methodists. Observers from both inside and outside the restored Church testified that in the early years something akin to modern pentecostal phenomena took place among at least the inner circle of the Saints. By the 1830s, evangelicals in several traditions were greatly expanding their use of the example of the Day of Pentecost to declare that God's power is at work in the world.

Fifth, the Book of Mormon shared in the restoration of some Christian expectations that in the LAST DAYS biblical prophecies will be literally fulfilled. Those who by faith and baptism become Saints will be included among God's people, chosen in "the eleventh hour." They, too, should gather in ZION, a NEW JERUSALEM for the New World, and a restored Jerusalem in the Old; and Christ will indeed return.

Whatever LDS interpretations of the King James Version of the Holy Scriptures developed later, the mutually supportive role of the Bible and the Book of Mormon was central to the thinking of Joseph Smith, the early missionaries, and their converts.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Kimball, Heber C. Journal. Nauvoo, Ill., 1840.
 Smith, Timothy L. "The Book of Mormon in a Biblical Culture." Journal of Mormon History 7 (1980):3-21.

TIMOTHY L. SMITH

BOOK OF MORMON CHRONOLOGY

The Book of Mormon contains a chronology that is internally consistent over the thousand-year NEPHITE history, with precise Nephite dates for several events, including the crucifixion of Jesus Christ. However, its chronology has not been unequivocally tied to other calendars because of uncertainties in biblical dates and lack of details about the Nephite calendars. Even less information exists about JAREDITE chronology (Sorenson, 1969).

INTERNAL NEPHITE CHRONOLOGY. Nephites kept careful track of time from at least three reference points:

1. Years were counted from the time LEHI left Jerusalem (Enos 1:25; Mosiah 6:4); not only was this an important date of origin, but also an angel had said that the Savior would come "in 600 years" from that time (1 Ne. 19:8).
2. Time was also measured from the commencement of the reign of the judges (c. 91 B.C.; cf. 3 Ne. 1:1), which marked a major political reform ending five centuries of Nephite kingship (Jacob 1:9-11; Alma 1:1), during which the years of each king's reign were probably counted according to typical ancient practices (1 Ne. 1:4; Mosiah 29:46).
3. The Nephites later reckoned time from the sign of the birth of Christ (3 Ne. 2:8).

The Book of Mormon links all three systems in several passages that are apparently consistent. Table 1 lists several events using the Nephite systems.

Most of the Nephite record pertains to three historical periods: the time of Lehi and his sons (c. 600-500 B.C.), the events preceding and following the coming of Christ (c. 150 B.C.-A.D. 34), and the destruction of the Nephites (c. A.D. 300-420). Thus, the relatively large book of Alma covers only thirty-nine years, while the much smaller books of Omni and 4 Nephi each cover more than two hundred years.

LDS editions of the Book of Mormon show dates in Nephite years, deduced from the text, at the bottom of the pages. The exact nature of the Nephite year, however, is not described. The Nephite year began with the "first day" of the "first month" (Alma 51:37-52:1; 56:1), and it probably had twelve months because the eleventh month was at "the latter end" of the year (Alma 48:2, 21;

TABLE 1 SELECTED EVENTS IN NEPHITE HISTORY

Lehi	Nephtie Years Judges	Christ	Event	Reference
1		(-600)	Lehi departs from Jerusalem	1 Ne. 10:4; 19:8
9		(-592)	Lehi's group arrives in Bountiful	1 Ne. 17:4-5
56		(-545)	Jacob receives plates from Nephi	Jacob 1:1
200		(-401)	Law of Moses strictly observed	Jarom 1:5
477		(-124)	King Benjamin's speech	Mosiah 6:3-4
510	1	(-91)	Alma <sub>1</sub> , Mosiah die; Alma <sub>2</sub> first judge	Mosiah 29:44-46
	9	(-83)	Nephihah becomes judge	Alma 4:20-8:2
	15	(-77)	The return of the sons of Mosiah	Alma 17:1-6
	18	(-74)	Korihor refuted	Alma 30
			Alma's Mission to the Zoramites	Alma 31:6-35:12
	18	(-74)	War because of Zoramites	Alma 35:13; 43:3-4
			Moroni leads army	Alma 43:17
	37	(-55)	Nephites begin migrating northward	Alma 63:4-6
	42	(-50)	Helaman <sub>2</sub> becomes judge; Gadianon	Hel. 2:1-5
	53	(-39)	Helaman <sub>2</sub> dies; Nephi <sub>2</sub> chief judge	Hel. 3:37
	58	(-34)	Zarahemla captured	Hel. 4:5
	67	(-25)	Most Nephites join Gadianon	Hel. 6:16, 21
	73	(-19)	Nephi invokes a famine	Hel. 11:2-5
	75	(-17)	Gadianon robbers expelled	Hel. 11:6-17
	77	(-15)	Most Nephites reconverted	Hel. 11:21
	80	(-12)	Robbers return	Hel. 11:24-29
	86	(-6)	Samuel the Lamanite prophesies	Hel. 13:1-16:9
601	92	(1)	Sign of the birth of Christ	3 Ne. 1:1,4,19
609	100	9	Begin to reckon time from Christ	3 Ne. 2:5-8
		13	Severe war with robbers begins	3 Ne. 2:11-13
		19	Major Nephite victory	3 Ne. 4:5, 11-15
		26	Nephites prosper	3 Ne. 6:1-4
		30	Nephite society disintegrates	3 Ne. 6:14-7:13
		34	Destruction; Christ appears	3 Ne. 8:2-28:12
		36	All converted; property held in common	4 Ne. 1:2-3
		201	Private ownership reinstituted	4 Ne. 1:24-25
		231	Tribalization reemerges	4 Ne. 1:35-38
		245	The wicked outnumber righteous	4 Ne. 1:40
		300	Nephites as wicked as Lamanites	4 Ne. 1:45
		326	Mormon leads army	Morm. 2:2
		350	Treaty with Lamanites and Robbers	Morm. 2:28
		362	Mormon refuses to lead Nephites	Morm. 3:8-11
		385	Nephites destroyed; Mormon dies	Morm. 6:5-8:3
		421	Moroni seals up the record	Moro. 10:1-2

NOTE: Years in parentheses are calculated, with the year -600 beginning just over 600 Nephtie years before the birth of Christ.

49:1), but the lengths of the months and of the year itself are not mentioned.

Until the coming of Christ, the Nephties observed the LAW OF MOSES (2 Ne. 25:24; Alma 25:15), which generally used lunar months (new moon to new moon). The Savior was crucified on the fourteenth day of the first lunar month of the Jewish calendar (John 19:14; Lev. 23:5), but on the fourth day of the first Nephtie month (3 Ne. 8:5). This may imply that Nephtie months at that time were not lunar and that their civil calendar may have differed from their religious calendar.

John L. Sorenson (1990) has observed that during the reign of the judges warfare was mostly limited to four consecutive Nephite months. These months can be approximately correlated with our calendar because even today warfare in Mesoamerica (the probable area of BOOK OF MORMON GEOGRAPHY for most of Nephite history) is conducted mostly during the dry season after the fall harvest. This correlation implies that the Nephite year at that time began in December (see BOOK OF MORMON, HISTORY OF WARFARE IN). This would mean that because the crucifixion of Christ (presumably in early April) occurred in the first Nephite month, the Nephites probably shifted their calendar to begin the first month in April at the same time they began reckoning time from the birth of Christ. This conclusion is consistent with the Nephite record that Christ was born some time after the end of the Nephite year (3 Ne. 1:1–9).

EXTERNAL CHRONOLOGY. Evidence supports two possible lengths for Nephite years: 365 days and 360 days. Each can be correlated to external history. The internal chronology is consistent, so that if the exact nature of the Nephite calendar were known, only one reference point in external history would be needed to fix the entire Nephite chronology. However, at least two such dates would be required to determine the length of the Nephite year. Three principal events are common to both Nephite and Old World sources: (1) the first year of the reign of Zedekiah, King of Judah; (2) the birth of Christ; and (3) the death of Christ. Because there are varying degrees of uncertainty about these three reference points, alternative correlation methods have been proposed, each using two of these dates.

First, Orson PRATT proposed that the Nephites used a 365-day year, as had the Egyptians previously and as did the Mesoamericans afterward (Millennial Star 28 [Dec. 22, 1866]:810). It has been noted (Lefgren) that such a year agrees, to the very day, with one choice for the birth and death dates of Christ—namely, Thursday, APRIL 6, 1 B.C., and Friday, April 1, A.D. 33, respectively (Gregorian calendar). Both of these dates are supported by other arguments (J. Pratt, 1985 and 1990). This theory assumes that the third system of Nephite reckoning began on the very day of the birth of Christ, which is not explicitly stated in the Book of Mormon but is consistent with Sorenson's conclusions above.

Second, most historians believe that the first year of King Zedekiah began in 598–96 B.C. Lehi left Jerusalem shortly afterward (1 Ne. 1:4; 2:4). The date of the birth of Christ is not known directly from historical sources, but it is believed that King Herod died in 5–4 B.C., implying that Christ was born shortly before (Matt. 2:1). Using these two events as reference points, Huber has proposed a 360-day Nephite year because 600 such years fit the interval from Lehi to Christ (3 Ne. 1:1); such a system has historical precedent, and apparently underlies certain prophecies in which the word “time” may equal 360 days (e.g., Rev. 12:6, 14).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Brown, S. Kent; C. Wilfred Criggs; and H. Kimball Hansen. “Review of April Sixth by John C. Lefgren.” BYU Studies 22 (Summer 1982):375–83. See rebuttal and response in BYU Studies 23 (Spring 1983):252–55.
- Huber, Jay H. “Lehi’s 600 Year Prophecy and the Birth of Christ.” F.A.R.M.S. Paper. Provo, Utah, 1982.
- Lefgren, John C. April Sixth. Salt Lake City, 1980.
- Pratt, John P. “The Restoration of Priesthood Keys on Easter 1836. Part 1: Dating the First Easter.” Ensign 15 (June 1985):59–68.
- . “Yet Another Eclipse for Herod.” The Planetarian 19 (Dec. 1990):8–14.
- Sorenson, John L. “The Years of the Jaredites.” F.A.R.M.S. Paper. Provo, Utah, 1969.
- . “Seasonality of Warfare in the Book of Mormon and in Mesoamerica.” In Warfare in the Book of Mormon, ed. S. Ricks and W. Hamblin, pp. 445–77. Salt Lake City, 1990.

JOHN P. PRATT

---

BOOK OF MORMON COMMENTARIES

Because the Book of Mormon is the best known and most widely circulated LDS book, many commentaries on and reference books about it have been written to assist readers. Inasmuch as its historical timeline spans from c. 2200 B.C. to A.D. 421 and its doctrinal content is extensive, it is difficult for a one-volume work to meet the many needs and interests. The references cited herein contain bibliographies that will provide readers with additional sources.

George Reynolds and Janne M. Sjodahl coauthored a Commentary on the Book of Mormon (1955–1961), a seven-volume work (published posthumously to both authors) that has been widely circulated. Hugh Nibley’s Lehi in the limited to four consecutive Nephite months. These months can be approximately correlated with our calendar because even today warfare in Mesoamerica (the probable area of BOOK OF MORMON GEOGRAPHY for most of Nephite history) is conducted mostly during the dry season after the fall harvest. This correlation implies that the Nephite year at that time began in December (see BOOK OF MORMON, HISTORY OF WARFARE IN). This would mean that because the crucifixion of Christ (presumably in early April) occurred in the first Nephite month, the Nephites probably shifted their calendar to begin the first month in April at the same time they began reckoning time from the birth of Christ. This conclusion is consistent with the Nephite record that Christ was born some time after the end of the Nephite year (3 Ne. 1:1–9).

EXTERNAL CHRONOLOGY. Evidence supports two possible lengths for Nephite years: 365 days and 360 days. Each can be correlated to external history. The internal chronology is consistent, so that if the exact nature of the Nephite calendar were known, only one reference point in external history would be needed to fix the entire Nephite chronology. However, at least two such dates would be required to determine the length of the Nephite year. Three principal events are common to both Nephite and Old World sources: (1) the first year of the reign of Zedekiah, King of Judah; (2) the birth of Christ; and (3) the death of Christ. Because there are varying degrees of uncertainty about these three reference points, alternative correlation methods have been proposed, each using two of these dates.

First, Orson PRATT proposed that the Nephites used a 365-day year, as had the Egyptians previously and as did the Mesoamericans afterward (Millennial Star 28 [Dec. 22, 1866]:810). It has been noted (Lefgren) that such a year agrees, to the very day, with one choice for the birth and death dates of Christ—namely, Thursday, APRIL 6, 1 B.C., and Friday, April 1, A.D. 33, respectively (Gregorian calendar). Both of these dates are supported by other arguments (J. Pratt, 1985 and 1990). This theory assumes that the third system of Nephite reckoning began on the very day of the birth of Christ, which is not explicitly stated in the Book of Mormon but is consistent with Sorenson's conclusions above.

Second, most historians believe that the first year of King Zedekiah began in 598–96 B.C. Lehi left Jerusalem shortly afterward (1 Ne. 1:4; 2:4). The date of the birth of Christ is not known directly from historical sources, but it is believed that King Herod died in 5–4 B.C., implying that Christ was born shortly before (Matt. 2:1). Using these two events as reference points, Huber has proposed a 360-day Nephite year because 600 such years fit the interval from Lehi to Christ (3 Ne. 1:1); such a system has historical precedent, and apparently underlies certain prophecies in which the word “time” may equal 360 days (e.g., Rev. 12:6, 14).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Brown, S. Kent; C. Wilfred Criggs; and H. Kimball Hansen. “Review of April Sixth by John C. Lefgren.” BYU Studies 22 (Summer 1982):375–83. See rebuttal and response in BYU Studies 23 (Spring 1983):252–55.
- Huber, Jay H. “Lehi’s 600 Year Prophecy and the Birth of Christ.” F.A.R.M.S. Paper. Provo, Utah, 1982.
- Lefgren, John C. April Sixth. Salt Lake City, 1980.
- Pratt, John P. “The Restoration of Priesthood Keys on Easter 1836. Part 1: Dating the First Easter.” Ensign 15 (June 1985):59–68.
- . “Yet Another Eclipse for Herod.” The Planetarian 19 (Dec. 1990):8–14.
- Sorenson, John L. “The Years of the Jaredites.” F.A.R.M.S. Paper. Provo, Utah, 1969.
- . “Seasonality of Warfare in the Book of Mormon and in Mesoamerica.” In Warfare in the Book of Mormon, ed. S. Ricks and W. Hamblin, pp. 445–77. Salt Lake City, 1990.

JOHN P. PRATT

---

BOOK OF MORMON COMMENTARIES

Because the Book of Mormon is the best known and most widely circulated LDS book, many commentaries on and reference books about it have been written to assist readers. Inasmuch as its historical timeline spans from c. 2200 B.C. to A.D. 421 and its doctrinal content is extensive, it is difficult for a one-volume work to meet the many needs and interests. The references cited herein contain bibliographies that will provide readers with additional sources.

George Reynolds and Janne M. Sjodahl coauthored a Commentary on the Book of Mormon (1955–1961), a seven-volume work (published posthumously to both authors) that has been widely circulated. Hugh Nibley’s Lehi in the Desert and the World of the Jaredites (1952; rev. 1988) provides insightful historical material on the travels of Lehi's party from Jerusalem, which occurred about c. 600 B.C., through the Arabian Peninsula, to the Western Hemisphere, and also on the journey of the Jaredite colony at about c. 2200 B.C. from the Near East to the Western Hemisphere. Francis W. Kirkham wrote a two-volume work entitled A New Witness for Christ in America (rev. ed. 1959–1960) that discusses the coming forth and the translation and printing of the Book of Mormon and non-LDS explanations of the same topics. B. H. Roberts authored a three-volume work titled New Witnesses for God (1909). Volumes 2 and 3 addressed four topics: the Book of Mormon as a witness of the Bible; the discovery, translation, and people of the Book of Mormon; evidence of its truth; and Roberts's responses to various objections to the book. Sidney B. Sperry authored Our Book of Mormon (1947); The Book of Mormon Testifies (1952); and Book of Mormon Compendium (1968). Daniel H. Ludlow wrote a popular one-volume work, A Companion to Your Study of the Book of Mormon (1976).

The Religious Studies Center at Brigham Young University sponsors an annual symposium on the Book of Mormon. Beginning in 1985, it has published a volume of selected lectures for each symposium. Both doctrinal and historical materials are included. Other volumes are planned as additional symposia are held. A volume entitled A Book of Mormon Treasury (1959), taken from the pages of the Improvement Era, contains thirty-six articles by General Authorities and other respected students of the Book of Mormon on historical, geographical, and doctrinal matters, as well as biblical relationships. Following a similar format, Kent P. Jackson compiled a two-volume work, Studies in Scripture Volume Seven—1st Nephi—Alma 29 (1987) and Studies in Scripture Volume Eight—Alma 30—Moroni (1988). Jackson also edited a special Book of Mormon issue of BYU Studies 30 (Summer 1990):1–140. Other scholarly materials related to Book of Mormon topics are available through F.A.R.M.S. (Foundation for Ancient Research and Mormon Studies).

Others who have contributed to the literature about the Book of Mormon are Paul R. Cheesman, whose works include The World of the Book of Mormon (1984), and Monte S. Nyman, whose publications include An Ensign to All People: The Sa- cred Message and Mission of the Book of Mormon (1987).

Church headquarters publishes materials for use in weekly priesthood quorum meetings, Relief Society meetings, Sunday School classes, and Institute and Seminary classes to assist members in better understanding the Book of Mormon.

Several authors have written on Book of Mormon archaeology and geology. Two popular books with an archaeological approach are Dewey and Edith Farnsworth, The Americas Before Columbus (1947), and Milton R. Hunter and Thomas Stuart Ferguson, Ancient America and the Book of Mormon (1950). More recent studies on Book of Mormon geography include John L. Sorenson, An Ancient American Setting for the Book of Mormon (1985); F. Richard Hauck, Deciphering the Geography of the Book of Mormon (1988); and Joseph L. Allen, Exploring the Lands of the Book of Mormon (1989). The Nephites, Lamanites, Mulekites, and Jaredites were historical cultures that occupied time and space; however, Church leaders have declared no official position as to where the Book of Mormon civilizations were situated other than that they were in the Western Hemisphere.

[See also other Book of Mormon entries.]

II. DONL PETERSON

---

BOOK OF MORMON ECONOMY AND TECHNOLOGY

The Book of Mormon reports information about three pre-Hispanic American peoples. Although its writers do not offer a detailed picture of the economic and material culture of their societies, numerous incidental details are preserved in the account. In many cases, though not in every instance, archaeology confirms the general details. The problems that remain in matching the Book of Mormon to its presumed ancient setting are no doubt due both to the scant information given in the book itself and to incompleteness in the archaeological record.

Testing what the Book of Mormon says about pre-Columbian material culture is more difficult than it might at first appear to be. For instance, it is a historically well-established fact that craft techniques can be lost; thus one cannot confidently assume that technologies mentioned for limited

Desert and the World of the Jaredites (1952; rev. 1988) provides insightful historical material on the travels of Lehi's party from Jerusalem, which occurred about c. 600 B.C., through the Arabian Peninsula, to the Western Hemisphere, and also on the journey of the Jaredite colony at about c. 2200 B.C. from the Near East to the Western Hemisphere. Francis W. Kirkham wrote a two-volume work entitled A New Witness for Christ in America (rev. ed. 1959–1960) that discusses the coming forth and the translation and printing of the Book of Mormon and non-LDS explanations of the same topics. B. H. Roberts authored a three-volume work titled New Witnesses for God (1909). Volumes 2 and 3 addressed four topics: the Book of Mormon as a witness of the Bible; the discovery, translation, and people of the Book of Mormon; evidence of its truth; and Roberts's responses to various objections to the book. Sidney B. Sperry authored Our Book of Mormon (1947); The Book of Mormon Testifies (1952); and Book of Mormon Compendium (1968). Daniel H. Ludlow wrote a popular one-volume work, A Companion to Your Study of the Book of Mormon (1976).

The Religious Studies Center at Brigham Young University sponsors an annual symposium on the Book of Mormon. Beginning in 1985, it has published a volume of selected lectures for each symposium. Both doctrinal and historical materials are included. Other volumes are planned as additional symposia are held. A volume entitled A Book of Mormon Treasury (1959), taken from the pages of the Improvement Era, contains thirty-six articles by General Authorities and other respected students of the Book of Mormon on historical, geographical, and doctrinal matters, as well as biblical relationships. Following a similar format, Kent P. Jackson compiled a two-volume work, Studies in Scripture Volume Seven—1st Nephi—Alma 29 (1987) and Studies in Scripture Volume Eight—Alma 30—Moroni (1988). Jackson also edited a special Book of Mormon issue of BYU Studies 30 (Summer 1990):1–140. Other scholarly materials related to Book of Mormon topics are available through F.A.R.M.S. (Foundation for Ancient Research and Mormon Studies).

Others who have contributed to the literature about the Book of Mormon are Paul R. Cheesman, whose works include The World of the Book of Mormon (1984), and Monte S. Nyman, whose publications include An Ensign to All People: The Sa- cred Message and Mission of the Book of Mormon (1987).

Church headquarters publishes materials for use in weekly priesthood quorum meetings, Relief Society meetings, Sunday School classes, and Institute and Seminary classes to assist members in better understanding the Book of Mormon.

Several authors have written on Book of Mormon archaeology and geology. Two popular books with an archaeological approach are Dewey and Edith Farnsworth, The Americas Before Columbus (1947), and Milton R. Hunter and Thomas Stuart Ferguson, Ancient America and the Book of Mormon (1950). More recent studies on Book of Mormon geography include John L. Sorenson, An Ancient American Setting for the Book of Mormon (1985); F. Richard Hauck, Deciphering the Geography of the Book of Mormon (1988); and Joseph L. Allen, Exploring the Lands of the Book of Mormon (1989). The Nephites, Lamanites, Mulekites, and Jaredites were historical cultures that occupied time and space; however, Church leaders have declared no official position as to where the Book of Mormon civilizations were situated other than that they were in the Western Hemisphere.

[See also other Book of Mormon entries.]

II. DONL PETERSON

---

BOOK OF MORMON ECONOMY AND TECHNOLOGY

The Book of Mormon reports information about three pre-Hispanic American peoples. Although its writers do not offer a detailed picture of the economic and material culture of their societies, numerous incidental details are preserved in the account. In many cases, though not in every instance, archaeology confirms the general details. The problems that remain in matching the Book of Mormon to its presumed ancient setting are no doubt due both to the scant information given in the book itself and to incompleteness in the archaeological record.

Testing what the Book of Mormon says about pre-Columbian material culture is more difficult than it might at first appear to be. For instance, it is a historically well-established fact that craft techniques can be lost; thus one cannot confidently assume that technologies mentioned for limited

Book of Mormon populations survived after the destruction of the Nephites. Nor can one assume what Old World technologies were successfully transferred to the New. Many crafts would not have been known to the small colonist parties, and even among the skills that were transported across the sea, many may not have proved useful or adaptable in the new environment. For that matter, items attested in early portions of the Book of Mormon may not safely be assumed to have survived into subsequent history within the record itself.

The economy of Book of Mormon peoples seems, on the whole, to have been relatively simple. Although many Nephites and Jaredites lived in cities of modest size (a point whose plausibility has been enhanced by recent research), their societies were agriculturally based. Trade was mentioned for some periods, but was constrained by frequent wars. In the infrequently mentioned times of free travel, trade barriers fell, and Lamanites and Nephites predictably prospered (e.g., Hel. 6:7–9).

Despite the economy's agrarian base, wealth was manifested in terms of movable flocks, herds, costly clothing, gold, silver, and "precious things" rather than land (Jacob 2:12–13; Enos 1:21; Jarom 1:8; Mosiah 9:12; Alma 1:6, 29; 17:25; 32:2; Ether 10:12). The ideology of the leading Book of Mormon peoples undoubtedly contributed to this phenomenon: They referred to themselves as a righteous remnant obliged to abandon their comfortable dwellings and depart into the wilderness because of their religious convictions. Since entire populations seem to have moved often, land may not have been a stable source of wealth (2 Ne. 5:5–11; Omni 12–13, 27–30; Mosiah 9; 18:34–35; 22; 24:16–25; Alma 27; 35:6–14; 63:4–10; Hel. 2:11; 3:3–12; 4:5–6, 19; 3 Ne. 3:21–4:1; 7:1–2). Ideally, wealth was to be shared with the poor and for the common good, but strong contrasts between rich and poor are evident more often than not.

Agriculture in the Book of Mormon involved livestock and sown crops. For example, in the fifth century B.C., the Nephites "did till the land, and raise all manner of grain, and of fruit, and flocks of herds, and flocks of all manner of cattle of every kind, and goats, and wild goats, and also many horses" (Enos 1:21). In the second century B.C., the people of Zeniff cultivated corn, wheat, barley,

"neas," and "sheum" (Mosiah 9:9; cf. Alma 11:7). Early nineteenth-century American language usage suggests that Book of Mormon "corn" may denote maize or "Indian corn," which was and is a staple in diets in most parts of native America. Some of the other listed items remain less certain. Only in 1982 was evidence published demonstrating the presence of cultivated pre-Columbian barley in the New World (Sorenson, 1985, p. 184). "Neas" is not identifiable; but the word "sheum" appears to be cognate with early Akkadian she-um, a grain probably of the barley type (see F.A.R.M.S. Staff, "Weights and Measures").

Book of Mormon mention of horses in pre-Columbian America has drawn much criticism, and no definitive answer to this question is at present available. Linguistic data suggest that Book of Mormon "horse" need not refer to equus, but could indicate some other quadruped suitable for human riding, as Mesoamerican art suggests (Sorenson, 1985, p. 295). Moreover, some little-noticed archaeological evidence indicates that in certain areas the American Pleistocene horse could have survived into Book of Mormon times (Update, June 1984).

Most transportation was evidently on human backs; in the two contexts that the Book of Mormon mentions "chariots," it appears that their use was quite limited (Alma 18:9–12; 20:6; 3 Ne. 3:22). Chariots are never mentioned in military settings. Wheels are nowhere mentioned in the Book of Mormon (except in a quote from Isaiah). Thus, it is unknown what Nephite "chariots" may have been. "Highways" and "roads" are mentioned as used by the Nephites (3 Ne. 6:8). Some Latter-day Saints consider these to be reflected in the extensively documented road systems of ancient Mexico. "Ships" of unknown form were used during the middle of the first century B.C. for travel on the "west sea" coast (Alma 63:6) and for shipping timber to the north (Hel. 3:10), and at times maritime travel was evidently extensive (Hel. 3:14). Fine pearls are also mentioned as costly items (4 Ne. 1:24).

"Silk and fine-twined linen" are mentioned (e.g., Alma 1:29; Ether 10:24) along with common (cotton?) cloth. The "silk" is unlikely to have been produced from silkworms as in China, but similar fabrics were known, at least in Mesoamerica. For example, in Guatemala fiber from the wild pineapple plant, and among the Aztecs rabbit hair, served

The use of cement appears extensively in Mesoamerican archaeology around the first century A.D., as, for example, in these cement buildings at Teotihuacan in the Valley of Mexico. The Book of Mormon states that some Nephite dissenters who moved into a land northward “became exceeding expert in the working of cement” and built “cities both of wood and of cement” beginning in 46 B.C. (Hel. 3:7, 11). Courtesy John W. Welch.

to make silklike fabrics. Although flax apparently was not known in America prior to the arrival of the Spaniards (linen was made from flax in the Old World), several vegetable-based fabrics with similar characteristics are well attested in ancient America (Update, Nov. 1988).

Care must be exercised when reading the Book of Mormon, or any other text originating in a foreign or ancient culture, to avoid misunderstanding unfamiliar things in light of what is familiar. For instance, the Nephites are said to have used “money,” but since the Israelites in Lehi’s day lacked minted coinage, Nephite “money” was probably noncoined.

A well-integrated system of dry measures and metal-weight units is outlined in Alma 11; some analysts have pointed out that the system sketched is strikingly simple, efficient, and rational (Smith). In its binary mathematical configuration and its use of barley and silver as basic media of exchange, the Nephite system recalls similar systems known in Egypt and in the Babylonian laws of Eshnunna (F.A.R.M.S. Staff, “Weights and Measures”; Update, March 1987).

Making weapons of “steel” and “iron” is mentioned by the Nephites only during their first few generations (2 Ne. 5:15; Jarom 1:8; iron is mentioned only as a “precious” ornamental metal during the time of Mosiah 11:8). Just what these terms originally meant may not be clear. Jaredite “steel” and “iron” and other metals are mentioned twice but are not described (Ether 7:9; 10:23). The weapons of the common soldier were distinctly simpler: stones, clubs, spears, and the bow and arrow (e.g., Alma 49:18–22).

The relative simplicity of Book of Mormon society does not imply lack of sophistication by ancient standards. For example, it would seem that literacy was not uncommon among either Nephites or Jaredites. The founding leaders of the migrations were definitely literate, and the Nephites in their middle era are said to have produced “many books and many records of every kind” (Hel. 3:15). The Lamanites and Mulekites, on the other hand, were less consistent record keepers (Omni 1:17–18; Mosiah 24:4–6; Hel. 3:15). The Jaredites and Nephites kept their most sacred records on almost imperishable metal PLATES, although some of their books were on flammable material (Alma 14:8). The plates that Joseph Smith had in his possession, and that he and other contemporary eyewitnesses described, seem well within the skill of pre-Hispanic metallurgists (Putnam; Sorenson, 1985, pp. 278–88), and the manner of their burial has rich precedent in the Eastern Hemisphere (Wright).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Cheesman, Paul R. Ancient Writing on Metal Plates. Bountiful, Utah, 1985.
- F.A.R.M.S. Updates (Provo, Utah), contain useful discussions, including bibliographies, of pre-Columbian horses (June 1984), metallurgy of golden plates (Oct. 1984), pre-Hispanic domesticated barley (Dec. 1984), the loss of technologies (July 1985), the legal implementation of the Nephite system of weights and measures (Mar. 1987), and possible silks and linens (Nov. 1988).

F.A.R.M.S. Staff. "Weights and Measures in the Time of Mosiah II." Provo, Utah, 1983.

Nibley, Hugh W. The Prophetie Book of Mormon, in CWHN 8:245–46, 385–86, and Since Cumorah, in CWHN 7:220–27. Discusses metallic plates, steel, cement, money, and fauna.

Putnam, Reed. "Were the Golden Plates Made of Tumbaga?" IE (Sept. 1966):788–89, 828–31.

Smith, R. P. "The Nephite Monetary System." IE 57 (May 1954):316–17.

Sorenson, John L. "A Reconsideration of Early Metal in Mesoamerica." Katunob 9 (Mar. 1976):1–18.

———. An Ancient American Setting for the Book of Mormon. Salt Lake City, 1985.

Wright, H. Curtis. "Ancient Burials of Metallic Foundation Documents in Stone Boxes." In Occasional Papers, University of Illinois Graduate School of Library and Information Science 157 (1982):1–42.

DANIEL C. PETERSON

BOOK OF MORMON EDITIONS (1830–1981)

Two major goals of each published edition of the Book of Mormon have been (1) to faithfully reproduce the text; and (2) to make the text accessible to the reader. The goal of textual accuracy has led later editors to earlier editions and, when available, to the original and printer's manuscripts (see BOOK OF MORMON MANUSCRIPTS). The goal of accessibility has led to some modernization and standardization of the text itself and the addition of reader's helps (introductory material, versification, footnotes, chapter summaries, dates, pronunciation guides, and indexes).

Four editions were published during Joseph SMITH's lifetime:

1. 1830: 5,000 copies; published by E. B. Grandin in Palmyra, New York. In general, the first edition is a faithful copy of the printer's manuscript (although on one occasion the original manuscript rather than the printer's was used for typesetting). For the most part, this edition reproduces what the compositor, John H. Gilbert, considered grammatical "errors." Gilbert added punctuation and determined the paragraphing for the first edition. In the Preface, Joseph Smith explains the loss of the Book of Lehi—116 pages of manuscript (see MANUSCRIPT, LOST 116 PAGES). The testimonies of the Three and the Eight Witnesses were placed at the end of the book. In this and all other early editions, there is no versification.

2. 1837: Either 3,000 or 5,000 copies; published by Parley P. PRATT and John Goodson, Kirtland, Ohio. For this edition, hundreds of grammatical changes and a few emendations were made in the text. The 1830 edition and the printer's manuscript were used as the basis for this edition.

3. 1840: 2,000 copies; published for Ebenezer Robinson and Don Carlos Smith (by Shepard and Stearns, Cincinnati, Ohio), Nauvoo, Illinois. Joseph Smith compared the printed text with the original manuscript and discovered a number of errors made in copying the printer's manuscript from the original. Thus the 1840 edition restores some of the readings of the original manuscript.

4. 1841: 4,050 copies (5,000 contracted); published for Brigham YOUNG, Heber C. KIMBALL, and Parley P. Pratt (by J. Tompkins, Liverpool, England). This first European edition was printed with the permission of Joseph Smith; it is essentially a reprinting of the 1837 edition with British spellings.

Two additional British editions, one in 1849 (edited by Orson PRATT) and the other in 1852 (edited by Franklin D. Richards), show minor editing of the text. In the 1852 edition, Richards added numbers to the paragraphs to aid in finding passages, thereby creating the first—although primitive—versification for the Book of Mormon.

Three other important LDS editions have involved major changes in format as well as minor editing:

1. 1879: Edited by Orson Pratt. Major changes in the format of the text included division of the long chapters in the original text, a true versification system (which has been followed in all subsequent LDS editions), and footnotes (mostly scriptural references).

2. 1920: Edited by James E. Talmage. Further changes in format included introductory material, double columns, chapter summaries, and new footnotes. Some of the minor editing found in this edition appeared earlier in the 1905 and 1911 editions, also under the editorship of Talmage.

3. 1981: Edited by a committee headed by members of the Quorum of the Twelve. This edition is a 1984), metallurgy of golden plates (Oct. 1984), pre-Hispanic domesticated barley (Dec. 1984), the loss of technologies (July 1985), the legal implementation of the Nephite system of weights and measures (Mar. 1987), and possible silks and linens (Nov. 1988).

F.A.R.M.S. Staff. "Weights and Measures in the Time of Mosiah II." Provo, Utah, 1983.

Nibley, Hugh W. The Prophetie Book of Mormon, in CWHN 8:245–46, 385–86, and Since Cumorah, in CWHN 7:220–27. Discusses metallic plates, steel, cement, money, and fauna.

Putnam, Reed. "Were the Golden Plates Made of Tumbaga?" IE (Sept. 1966):788–89, 828–31.

Smith, R. P. "The Nephite Monetary System." IE 57 (May 1954):316–17.

Sorenson, John L. "A Reconsideration of Early Metal in Mesoamerica." Katunob 9 (Mar. 1976):1–18.

———. An Ancient American Setting for the Book of Mormon. Salt Lake City, 1985.

Wright, H. Curtis. "Ancient Burials of Metallic Foundation Documents in Stone Boxes." In Occasional Papers, University of Illinois Graduate School of Library and Information Science 157 (1982):1–42.

DANIEL C. PETERSON

BOOK OF MORMON EDITIONS (1830–1981)

Two major goals of each published edition of the Book of Mormon have been (1) to faithfully reproduce the text; and (2) to make the text accessible to the reader. The goal of textual accuracy has led later editors to earlier editions and, when available, to the original and printer's manuscripts (see BOOK OF MORMON MANUSCRIPTS). The goal of accessibility has led to some modernization and standardization of the text itself and the addition of reader's helps (introductory material, versification, footnotes, chapter summaries, dates, pronunciation guides, and indexes).

Four editions were published during Joseph SMITH's lifetime:

1. 1830: 5,000 copies; published by E. B. Grandin in Palmyra, New York. In general, the first edition is a faithful copy of the printer's manuscript (although on one occasion the original manuscript rather than the printer's was used for typesetting). For the most part, this edition reproduces what the compositor, John H. Gilbert, considered grammatical "errors." Gilbert added punctuation and determined the paragraphing for the first edition. In the Preface, Joseph Smith explains the loss of the Book of Lehi—116 pages of manuscript (see MANUSCRIPT, LOST 116 PAGES). The testimonies of the Three and the Eight Witnesses were placed at the end of the book. In this and all other early editions, there is no versification.

2. 1837: Either 3,000 or 5,000 copies; published by Parley P. PRATT and John Goodson, Kirtland, Ohio. For this edition, hundreds of grammatical changes and a few emendations were made in the text. The 1830 edition and the printer's manuscript were used as the basis for this edition.

3. 1840: 2,000 copies; published for Ebenezer Robinson and Don Carlos Smith (by Shepard and Stearns, Cincinnati, Ohio), Nauvoo, Illinois. Joseph Smith compared the printed text with the original manuscript and discovered a number of errors made in copying the printer's manuscript from the original. Thus the 1840 edition restores some of the readings of the original manuscript.

4. 1841: 4,050 copies (5,000 contracted); published for Brigham YOUNG, Heber C. KIMBALL, and Parley P. Pratt (by J. Tompkins, Liverpool, England). This first European edition was printed with the permission of Joseph Smith; it is essentially a reprinting of the 1837 edition with British spellings.

Two additional British editions, one in 1849 (edited by Orson PRATT) and the other in 1852 (edited by Franklin D. Richards), show minor editing of the text. In the 1852 edition, Richards added numbers to the paragraphs to aid in finding passages, thereby creating the first—although primitive—versification for the Book of Mormon.

Three other important LDS editions have involved major changes in format as well as minor editing:

1. 1879: Edited by Orson Pratt. Major changes in the format of the text included division of the long chapters in the original text, a true versification system (which has been followed in all subsequent LDS editions), and footnotes (mostly scriptural references).

2. 1920: Edited by James E. Talmage. Further changes in format included introductory material, double columns, chapter summaries, and new footnotes. Some of the minor editing found in this edition appeared earlier in the 1905 and 1911 editions, also under the editorship of Talmage.

3. 1981: Edited by a committee headed by members of the Quorum of the Twelve. This edition is a major reworking of the 1920 edition: The text appears again in double columns, but new introductory material, chapter summaries, and footnotes are provided. About twenty significant textual errors that had entered the printer's manuscript are corrected by reference to the original manuscript. Other corrections were made from comparison with the printer's manuscript and the 1840 Nauvoo edition.

THE REORGANIZED CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS (RLDS) also has its own textual tradition. Prior to 1874, the RLDS used an edition of the Book of Mormon published by James O. Wright (1858, New York), basically a reprinting of the 1840 Nauvoo edition. The first and second RLDS editions (1874, Plano, Illinois; and 1892, Lamoni, Iowa) followed the 1840 text and had their own system of versification. Unlike the later LDS editions, all RLDS editions have retained the original longer chapters.

In 1903 the RLDS obtained the printer's manuscript and used it to produce their third edition (1908, Lamoni, Iowa). The text of the 1908 edition restored many of the readings found in that manuscript, but generally did not alter the grammatical changes made in the 1837 Kirtland edition. This edition also included a new versification, which has remained unchanged in all subsequent RLDS editions. In 1966 the RLDS published a thoroughly modernized Book of Mormon text. Both the 1908 (with minor editing) and the 1966 texts are available, but only the 1908 edition is authorized for use in the RLDS Church.

A critical text of the Book of Mormon was published in 1984–1987 by the Foundation for Ancient Research and Mormon Studies. This is the first published text of the Book of Mormon to show the precise history of many textual variants. Although this textual study of the editions and manuscripts of the Book of Mormon is incomplete and preliminary, it is helpful for a general overview of the textual history of the Book of Mormon.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Anderson, Richard L. "Gold Plates and Printer's Ink." Ensign, 6 (Sept. 1976):71–76.
- Heater, Shirley R. "Gold Plates, Foolscap, & Printer's Ink; Part II: Editions of the Book of Mormon." Zarahemla Record 37–38 (1987):2–15.
- Larson, Stanley R. "A Study of Some Textual Variations in the Book of Mormon Comparing the Original and the Printer's Manuscripts and the 1830, the 1837, and the 1840 Editions." Master's thesis, Brigham Young University, 1974.

Matthews, Robert J. "The New Publication of the Standard Works 1979, 1981." BYU Studies 22 (1982):387–424.

Skousen, Royal. "Towards a Critical Edition of the Book of Mormon." BYU Studies 30 (1990):41–69.

Stocks, Hugh G. "The Book of Mormon, 1830–1879: A Publishing History." Master's thesis, UCLA, 1979.

———. "The Book of Mormon in English, 1870–1920: A Publishing History and Analytical Bibliography." Ph.D. diss., UCLA, 1986.

ROYAL SKOUSEN

---

BOOK OF MORMON GEOGRAPHY

Although the Book of Mormon is primarily a religious record of the NEPHITES, LAMANITES, and JAREDITES, enough geographic details are embedded in the narrative to allow reconstruction of at least a rudimentary geography of Book of Mormon lands. In the technical usage of the term "geography" (e.g., physical, economic, cultural, or political), no Book of Mormon geography has yet been written. Most Latter-day Saints who write geographies have in mind one or both of two activities: first, internal reconstruction of the relative size and configuration of Book of Mormon lands based upon textual statements and allusions; second, speculative attempts to match an internal geography to a location within North or South America. Three questions relating to Book of Mormon geography are discussed here: (1) How can one reconstruct a Book of Mormon geography? (2) What does a Book of Mormon geography look like? (3) What hypothetical locations have been suggested for Book of Mormon lands?

RECONSTRUCTING INTERNAL BOOK OF MORMON GEOGRAPHY. Although Church leadership officially and consistently distances itself from issues regarding Book of Mormon geography in order to focus attention on the spiritual message of the book, private speculation and scholarship in this area have been abundant. Using textual clues, laymen and scholars have formulated over sixty possible geographies. Dissimilarities among them stem from differences in (1) the interpretation of scriptural passages and statements of General Authorities; (2) procedures for reconciling scriptural information; (3) initial assumptions concerning the text and traditional LDS identification of certain feamajor reworking of the 1920 edition: The text appears again in double columns, but new introductory material, chapter summaries, and footnotes are provided. About twenty significant textual errors that had entered the printer's manuscript are corrected by reference to the original manuscript. Other corrections were made from comparison with the printer's manuscript and the 1840 Nauvoo edition.

THE REORGANIZED CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS (RLDS) also has its own textual tradition. Prior to 1874, the RLDS used an edition of the Book of Mormon published by James O. Wright (1858, New York), basically a reprinting of the 1840 Nauvoo edition. The first and second RLDS editions (1874, Plano, Illinois; and 1892, Lamoni, Iowa) followed the 1840 text and had their own system of versification. Unlike the later LDS editions, all RLDS editions have retained the original longer chapters.

In 1903 the RLDS obtained the printer's manuscript and used it to produce their third edition (1908, Lamoni, Iowa). The text of the 1908 edition restored many of the readings found in that manuscript, but generally did not alter the grammatical changes made in the 1837 Kirtland edition. This edition also included a new versification, which has remained unchanged in all subsequent RLDS editions. In 1966 the RLDS published a thoroughly modernized Book of Mormon text. Both the 1908 (with minor editing) and the 1966 texts are available, but only the 1908 edition is authorized for use in the RLDS Church.

A critical text of the Book of Mormon was published in 1984–1987 by the Foundation for Ancient Research and Mormon Studies. This is the first published text of the Book of Mormon to show the precise history of many textual variants. Although this textual study of the editions and manuscripts of the Book of Mormon is incomplete and preliminary, it is helpful for a general overview of the textual history of the Book of Mormon.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Anderson, Richard L. "Gold Plates and Printer's Ink." Ensign, 6 (Sept. 1976):71–76.
- Heater, Shirley R. "Gold Plates, Foolscap, & Printer's Ink; Part II: Editions of the Book of Mormon." Zarahemla Record 37–38 (1987):2–15.
- Larson, Stanley R. "A Study of Some Textual Variations in the Book of Mormon Comparing the Original and the Printer's Manuscripts and the 1830, the 1837, and the 1840 Editions." Master's thesis, Brigham Young University, 1974.

Matthews, Robert J. "The New Publication of the Standard Works 1979, 1981." BYU Studies 22 (1982):387–424.

Skousen, Royal. "Towards a Critical Edition of the Book of Mormon." BYU Studies 30 (1990):41–69.

Stocks, Hugh G. "The Book of Mormon, 1830–1879: A Publishing History." Master's thesis, UCLA, 1979.

———. "The Book of Mormon in English, 1870–1920: A Publishing History and Analytical Bibliography." Ph.D. diss., UCLA, 1986.

ROYAL SKOUSEN

---

BOOK OF MORMON GEOGRAPHY

Although the Book of Mormon is primarily a religious record of the NEPHITES, LAMANITES, and JAREDITES, enough geographic details are embedded in the narrative to allow reconstruction of at least a rudimentary geography of Book of Mormon lands. In the technical usage of the term "geography" (e.g., physical, economic, cultural, or political), no Book of Mormon geography has yet been written. Most Latter-day Saints who write geographies have in mind one or both of two activities: first, internal reconstruction of the relative size and configuration of Book of Mormon lands based upon textual statements and allusions; second, speculative attempts to match an internal geography to a location within North or South America. Three questions relating to Book of Mormon geography are discussed here: (1) How can one reconstruct a Book of Mormon geography? (2) What does a Book of Mormon geography look like? (3) What hypothetical locations have been suggested for Book of Mormon lands?

RECONSTRUCTING INTERNAL BOOK OF MORMON GEOGRAPHY. Although Church leadership officially and consistently distances itself from issues regarding Book of Mormon geography in order to focus attention on the spiritual message of the book, private speculation and scholarship in this area have been abundant. Using textual clues, laymen and scholars have formulated over sixty possible geographies. Dissimilarities among them stem from differences in (1) the interpretation of scriptural passages and statements of General Authorities; (2) procedures for reconciling scriptural information; (3) initial assumptions concerning the text and traditional LDS identification of certain features mentioned (especially the hill CUMORAH and the “narrow neck of land,” which figure prominently in the text); and (4) personal penchants and disciplinary training.

Those who believe that reconstructing a Book of Mormon geography is possible must first deal with the usual problems of interpreting historical texts. Different weights must be given to various passages, depending upon the amount and precision of the information conveyed. Many Book of Mormon cities cannot be situated because of insufficient textual information; this is especially true for Lamanite and Jaredite cities. The Book of Mormon is essentially a Nephite record, and most geographic elements mentioned are in Nephite territory.

From textual evidence, one can approximate some spatial relationships of various natural features and cities. Distances in the Book of Mormon are recorded in terms of the time required to travel from place to place. The best information for reconstructing internal geography comes from the accounts of wars between Nephites and Lamanites during the first century B.C., with more limited information from Nephite missionary journeys. Travel distance can be standardized to a degree by controlling, where possible, for the nature of the terrain (e.g., mountains versus plains) and the relative velocity (e.g., an army’s march versus travel with children or animals). The elementary internal geography presented below is based on an interpretation of distances thus standardized and directions based on the text.

AN INTERNAL BOOK OF MORMON GEOGRAPHY. Numerous attempts have been made to diagram physical and political geographies depicting features mentioned in the text, but this requires many additional assumptions and is difficult to accomplish without making approximate relationships appear precise (Sorenson, 1991). The description presented below of the size and configuration of Book of Mormon lands and the locations of settlements within it summarizes the least ambiguous evidence.

Book of Mormon lands were longer from north to south than from east to west. They consisted of two land masses connected by an isthmus (“a narrow neck of land”) flanked by an “east sea” and a “west sea” (Alma 22:27, 32). The land north of the narrow neck was known as the “land northward” and that to the south as the “land southward” (Alma 22:32). The Jaredite narrative took place entirely in the land northward (Omni 1:22; Ether 10:21), but details are insufficient to place their cities relative to one another. Most of the Nephite narrative, on the other hand, took place in the land southward. Travel accounts for the land southward indicate that the Nephites and Lamanites occupied an area that could be traversed north to south by normal travel in perhaps thirty days.

The land southward was divided by a “narrow strip of wilderness” that ran from the “sea east” to the “sea west” (Alma 22:27). Nephites occupied the land to the north of this wilderness, and the Lamanites, that to the south. Sidon, the only river mentioned by name, ran northward between eastern and western wildernesses from headwaters in the narrow strip of wilderness (Alma 22:29). The Sidon probably emptied into the east sea—based on the description of the east wilderness as a rather wide, coastal zone—but its mouth is nowhere specified.

The relative locations of some important Nephite cities can be inferred from the text. Zarahemla was the Nephite capital in the first century B.C. That portion of the land southward occupied by the Nephites was known as the “land of Zarahemla” (Hel. 1:18). The city of Nephi, the original Nephite colony, by this time had been occupied by Lamanites and served at times as one of their capitals for the land south of the narrow wilderness divide (Alma 47:20). Based upon the migration account of Alma<sup>1</sup>, the distance between the cities of Zarahemla and Nephi can be estimated to be about twenty-two days’ travel by a company that includes children and flocks, mostly through mountainous terrain (cf. Mosiah 23:3; 24:20, 25).

The distance from Zarahemla to the narrow neck was probably less than that between Zarahemla and Nephi. The principal settlement near the narrow neck was the city of Bountiful, located near the east sea (Alma 52:17–23). This lowland city was of key military importance in controlling access to the land northward from the east-sea side.

The relative location of the hill Cumorah is most tenuous, since travel time from Bountiful, or the narrow neck, to Cumorah is nowhere specified. Cumorah was near the east sea in the land northward, and the limited evidence suggests that it was probably not many days’ travel from the narrow neck of land (Mosiah 8:8; Ether 9:3). It is also probable that the portion of the land northward occupied by the Jaredites was smaller than the Nephite-Lamanite land southward.

Book of Mormon lands encompassed mountainous wildernesses, coastal plains, valleys, a large river, a highland lake, and lowland wetlands. The land also apparently experienced occasional volcanic eruptions and earthquakes (3 Ne. 8:5–18). Culturally, the Book of Mormon describes an urbanized, agrarian people having metallurgy (Hel. 6:11), writing (1 Ne. 1:1–3), lunar and solar calendars (2 Ne. 5:28; Omni 1:21), domestic animals (2 Ne. 5:11), various grains (1 Ne. 8:1), gold, silver, pearls, and “costly apparel” (Alma 1:29; 4 Ne. 1:24). Based upon these criteria, many scholars currently see northern Central America and southern Mexico (Mesoamerica) as the most likely location of Book of Mormon lands. However, such views are private and do not represent an official position of the Church.

HYPOTHESIZED LOCATIONS OF BOOK OF MORMON LANDS. Two issues merit consideration in relation to possible external correlations of Book of Mormon geography. What is the official position of the Church, and what are the pervading opinions of its members?

In early Church history, the most common opinion among members and Church leaders was that Book of Mormon lands encompassed all of North and South America, although at least one more limited alternative view was also held for a time by some. The official position of the Church is that the events narrated in the Book of Mormon occurred somewhere in the Americas, but that the specific location has not been revealed. This position applies both to internal geographies and to external correlations. No internal geography has yet been proposed or approved by the Church, and none of the internal or external geographies proposed by individual members (including that proposed above) has received approval. Efforts in that direction by members are neither encouraged nor discouraged. In the words of John A. Widtsoe, an apostle, “All such studies are legitimate, but the conclusions drawn from them, though they may be correct, must at the best be held as intelligent conjectures” (Vol. 3, p. 93).

Three statements sometimes attributed to the Prophet Joseph Smith are often cited as evidence of an official Church position. An 1836 statement asserts that “Lehi and his company . . . landed on the continent of South America, in Chili [sic], thirty degrees, south latitude” (Richards, Little, p. 272). This view was accepted by Orson Pratt and printed in the footnotes to the 1879 edition of the Book of Mormon, but insufficient evidence exists to clearly attribute it to Joseph Smith (“Did Lehi Land in Chili [sic]?”; cf. Roberts, Vol. 3, pp. 501–503, and Widtsoe, Vol. 3, pp. 93–98).

In 1842 an editorial in the Church newspaper claimed that “Lehi . . . landed a little south of the Isthmus of Darien [Panama]” (T&S 3 [Sept. 15, 1842]:921–22). This would move the location of Lehi’s landing some 3,000 miles north of the proposed site in Chile. Although Joseph Smith had assumed editorial responsibility for the paper by this time, it is not known whether this statement originated with him or even represented his views. Two weeks later, another editorial appeared in the Times and Seasons that, in effect, constituted a book review of Incidents of Travel in Central America, Chiapas and Yucatan, by John Lloyd Stephens. This was the first accessible book in English containing detailed descriptions and drawings of ancient Mayan ruins. Excerpts from it were included in the Times and Seasons, along with the comment that “it will not be a bad plan to compare Mr. Stephens’ ruined cities with those in the Book of Mormon: light cleaves to light, and facts are supported by facts. The truth injures no one” (T&S 3 [Oct. 1, 1842]:927).

In statements since then, Church leaders have generally declined to give any opinion on issues of Book of Mormon geography. When asked to review a map showing the supposed landing place of Lehi’s company, President Joseph F. Smith declared that the “Lord had not yet revealed it” (Cannon, p. 160 n.). In 1929, Anthony W. Ivins, counselor in the First Presidency, added, “There has never been anything yet set forth that definitely settles that question [of Book of Mormon geography]. . . . We are just waiting until we discover the truth” (CR, Apr. 1929, p. 16). While the Church has not taken an official position with regard to location of geographical places, the authorities do not discourage private efforts to deal with the subject (Cannon).

The unidentified Times and Seasons editorialist seems to have favored modern Central America as the setting for Book of Mormon events. As noted, recent geographies by some Church members promote this identification, but others consider upstate New York or South America the correct setting. Considerable diversity of opinion remains among Church members regarding Book of Mormon geography; however, most students of the problem agree that the hundreds of geographical references in the Book of Mormon are remarkably consistent—even if the students cannot always agree upon precise locations.

Of the numerous proposed external Book of Mormon geographies, none has been positively and unambiguously confirmed by archaeology. More fundamentally, there is no agreement on whether such positive identification could be made or, if so, what form a “proof” would take; nor is it clear what would constitute “falsification” or “disproof” of various proposed geographies. Until these methodological issues have been resolved, all internal and external geographies—including supposed archaeological tests of them—should, at best, be considered only intelligent conjectures.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Allen, Joseph L. Exploring the Lands of the Book of Mormon. Orem, Utah, 1989.
- Cannon, George Q. “Book of Mormon Geography.” Juvenile Instructor 25 (Jan. 1, 1890):18–19; repr., Instructor 73 (Apr. 1938):159–60.
- Clark, John E. “A Key for Evaluating Nephite Geographies.” Review of Books on the Book of Mormon 1 (1989):20–70.
- Hauck, F. Richard. Deciphering the Geography of the Book of Mormon. Salt Lake City, 1988.
- Palmer, David A. In Search of Cumorah: New Evidences for the Book of Mormon from Ancient Mexico. Bountiful, Utah, 1981.
- Richards, F., and J. Little, eds. Compendium of the Doctrines of the Gospel, rev. ed. Salt Lake City, 1925.
- Roberts, B. H. New Witnesses for God, 3 vols. Salt Lake City, 1909.
- Sorenson, John L. An Ancient American Setting for the Book of Mormon. Salt Lake City, 1985.
- . A Hundred and Fifty Years of Book of Mormon Geographies: A History of the Ideas. Salt Lake City, 1991.
- Warren, Bruce W., and Thomas Stuart Ferguson. The Messiah in Ancient America. Provo, Utah, 1987.
- Washburn, J. Nile. Book of Mormon Lands and Times. Salt Lake City, 1974.
- Widtsoe, John A. Evidences and Reconciliations, 3 vols. Salt Lake City, 1951.

JOHN E. CLARK

BOOK OF MORMON LANGUAGE

The language of the Book of Mormon exhibits features typical of a translation from an ancient Near Eastern text as well as the stamp of nineteenth-century English and the style of the King James Version (KJV) of the Bible. That the language of the Book of Mormon should resemble that of the KJV seems only natural, since in the time of the Prophet Joseph SMITH, the KJV was the most widely read book in America and formed the standard of religious language for most English-speaking people (see CWHN 8:212–18). Furthermore, the Book of Mormon shares certain affinities with the KJV: both include works of ancient PROPHETS of ISRAEL as well as accounts of part of the ministry of Jesus Christ, both are translations into English, and both are to become “one” in God’s hand as collections of his word to his children (Ezek. 37:16–17; 1 Ne. 13:41; D&C 42:12).

LANGUAGES USED BY THE NEPHITES. Statements in the Book of Mormon have spawned differing views about the language in which the book was originally written. In approximately 600 B.C., NEPHI<sub>1</sub>—the first Book of Mormon author and one who had spent his youth in JERUSALEM—wrote, “I make a record [the small plates of Nephi] in the language of my father, which consists of the learning of the Jews and the language of the Egyptians” (1 Ne. 1:2). One thousand years later, MORONI<sub>2</sub>, the last Nephite prophet, noted concerning the PLATES of Mormon that “we have written this record . . . in the characters which are called among us the reformed Egyptian, being handed down and altered by us, according to our manner of speech. And if our plates [metal leaves] had been sufficiently large we should have written in Hebrew; but the Hebrew hath been altered by us also. . . . But the Lord knoweth . . . that none other people knoweth our language” (Morm. 9:32–34). In light of these two passages, it is evident that Nephite record keepers knew Hebrew and something of Egyptian. It is unknown whether Nephi, Mormon, or Moroni wrote Hebrew in modified Egyptian characters or inscribed their plates in both the Egyptian language and Egyptian characters or whether Nephi wrote in one language and Mormon and Moroni, who lived some nine hundred years later, in another. The mention of “characters” called “reformed Egyptian” tends to support the hypothesis of Hebrew in Egyptian script. Although Nephi’s observation (1 Ne. 1:2) is troublesome for that view, the statement is ambiguous and inconclusive for both views.

Nephite authors seem to have patterned their writing after the plates of brass, a record containing biblical texts composed before 600 B.C. that was in the possession of descendants of JOSEPH OF

of Mormon geography; however, most students of the problem agree that the hundreds of geographical references in the Book of Mormon are remarkably consistent—even if the students cannot always agree upon precise locations.

Of the numerous proposed external Book of Mormon geographies, none has been positively and unambiguously confirmed by archaeology. More fundamentally, there is no agreement on whether such positive identification could be made or, if so, what form a “proof” would take; nor is it clear what would constitute “falsification” or “disproof” of various proposed geographies. Until these methodological issues have been resolved, all internal and external geographies—including supposed archaeological tests of them—should, at best, be considered only intelligent conjectures.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Allen, Joseph L. Exploring the Lands of the Book of Mormon. Orem, Utah, 1989.
- Cannon, George Q. “Book of Mormon Geography.” Juvenile Instructor 25 (Jan. 1, 1890):18–19; repr., Instructor 73 (Apr. 1938):159–60.
- Clark, John E. “A Key for Evaluating Nephite Geographies.” Review of Books on the Book of Mormon 1 (1989):20–70.
- Hauck, F. Richard. Deciphering the Geography of the Book of Mormon. Salt Lake City, 1988.
- Palmer, David A. In Search of Cumorah: New Evidences for the Book of Mormon from Ancient Mexico. Bountiful, Utah, 1981.
- Richards, F., and J. Little, eds. Compendium of the Doctrines of the Gospel, rev. ed. Salt Lake City, 1925.
- Roberts, B. H. New Witnesses for God, 3 vols. Salt Lake City, 1909.
- Sorenson, John L. An Ancient American Setting for the Book of Mormon. Salt Lake City, 1985.
- . A Hundred and Fifty Years of Book of Mormon Geographies: A History of the Ideas. Salt Lake City, 1991.
- Warren, Bruce W., and Thomas Stuart Ferguson. The Messiah in Ancient America. Provo, Utah, 1987.
- Washburn, J. Nile. Book of Mormon Lands and Times. Salt Lake City, 1974.
- Widtsoe, John A. Evidences and Reconciliations, 3 vols. Salt Lake City, 1951.

JOHN E. CLARK

BOOK OF MORMON LANGUAGE

The language of the Book of Mormon exhibits features typical of a translation from an ancient Near Eastern text as well as the stamp of nineteenth-century English and the style of the King James Version (KJV) of the Bible. That the language of the Book of Mormon should resemble that of the KJV seems only natural, since in the time of the Prophet Joseph SMITH, the KJV was the most widely read book in America and formed the standard of religious language for most English-speaking people (see CWHN 8:212–18). Furthermore, the Book of Mormon shares certain affinities with the KJV: both include works of ancient PROPHETS of ISRAEL as well as accounts of part of the ministry of Jesus Christ, both are translations into English, and both are to become “one” in God’s hand as collections of his word to his children (Ezek. 37:16–17; 1 Ne. 13:41; D&C 42:12).

LANGUAGES USED BY THE NEPHITES. Statements in the Book of Mormon have spawned differing views about the language in which the book was originally written. In approximately 600 B.C., NEPHI<sub>1</sub>—the first Book of Mormon author and one who had spent his youth in JERUSALEM—wrote, “I make a record [the small plates of Nephi] in the language of my father, which consists of the learning of the Jews and the language of the Egyptians” (1 Ne. 1:2). One thousand years later, MORONI<sub>2</sub>, the last Nephite prophet, noted concerning the PLATES of Mormon that “we have written this record . . . in the characters which are called among us the reformed Egyptian, being handed down and altered by us, according to our manner of speech. And if our plates [metal leaves] had been sufficiently large we should have written in Hebrew; but the Hebrew hath been altered by us also. . . . But the Lord knoweth . . . that none other people knoweth our language” (Morm. 9:32–34). In light of these two passages, it is evident that Nephite record keepers knew Hebrew and something of Egyptian. It is unknown whether Nephi, Mormon, or Moroni wrote Hebrew in modified Egyptian characters or inscribed their plates in both the Egyptian language and Egyptian characters or whether Nephi wrote in one language and Mormon and Moroni, who lived some nine hundred years later, in another. The mention of “characters” called “reformed Egyptian” tends to support the hypothesis of Hebrew in Egyptian script. Although Nephi’s observation (1 Ne. 1:2) is troublesome for that view, the statement is ambiguous and inconclusive for both views.

Nephite authors seem to have patterned their writing after the plates of brass, a record containing biblical texts composed before 600 B.C. that was in the possession of descendants of JOSEPH OF EGYPT (1 Ne. 5:11–16). At least portions of this record were written in Egyptian, since knowledge of “the language of the Egyptians” enabled LEHI, father of Nephi, to “read these engravings” (Mosiah 1:2–4). But whether it was the Egyptian language or Hebrew written in Egyptian script is again not clear. Egyptian was widely used in Lehi’s day, but because poetic writings are skewed in translation, because prophetic writings were generally esteemed as sacred, and because Hebrew was the language of the Israelites in the seventh century B.C., it would have been unusual for the writings of Isaiah and Jeremiah—substantially preserved on the brass plates (1 Ne. 5:13; 19:23)—to have been translated from Hebrew into a foreign tongue at this early date. Thus, Hebrew portions written in Hebrew script, Egyptian portions in Egyptian script, and Hebrew portions in Egyptian script are all possibilities. If the brass plates came into being while the Israelites were still in Egypt, then earlier portions (e.g., prophecies of Joseph in Egypt) were possibly written in Egyptian and later portions (e.g., words of Jeremiah) in Hebrew.

Concerning Book of Mormon composition, Mormon 9:33 indicates that limited space on the GOLD PLATES dictated using Egyptian characters rather than Hebrew. In Lehi’s day, both Hebrew and Egyptian were written with consonants only. Unlike Hebrew, Egyptian had bi-consonantal and even triconsonantal signs. Employing such characters—particularly in modified form—would save space.

Written characters were handed down and altered according to Nephite speech (Morm. 9:32). This observation suggests that at least later generations of Nephites used Egyptian characters to write their contemporary spoken language, an altered form of Hebrew. It is extremely unlikely that a people isolated from simultaneous contact with the two languages could have maintained a conversational distinction between, and fluency in the two languages over a thousand-year period. Thus, if Egyptian characters were altered as the living language changed, then the Nephites were probably using such characters to write their spoken language, which was largely Hebrew.

Though some of Lehi’s group that left Jerusalem may have spoken Egyptian, a reading knowledge of the script on the brass plates would have allowed them to “read these engravings” (Mosiah 1:4). But the possibility that Lehi’s colony could maintain spoken Egyptian as a second language through a thousand years without merging it with Hebrew or losing it is beyond probability. Therefore, the fact that the Nephites had “altered” the Egyptian characters according to their “manner of speech” underscores the probability that they were writing Hebrew with Egyptian characters. In addition, Moroni’s language (c. A.D. 400) was probably different enough from that of Lehi (c. 600 B.C.) that reading Lehi’s language may have required as much study in Moroni’s day as Old English requires of modern English-speaking people.

LANGUAGE AMONG NATIVE AMERICANS. Because Moroni’s time represents a near midpoint between Lehi and the present, a consideration of the near end of the continuum could be helpful. The vague picture presented by statements in the text might be brought into focus by examining American Indian languages. The time depth from Latin to modern Romance languages is only slightly less than that from Lehi to the present. Similarities among Romance languages are plentiful and obvious, while language similarities between Native American languages and Hebrew or Egyptian are generally viewed as neither plentiful nor obvious. Though some professionals have alluded to similarities, no study has yet convinced scholars of Near Eastern links with any pre-Columbian American language.

One study, however, holds promise for demonstrating links to the Uto-Aztecan language family (Stubbs, 1988). Though other language groups offer suggestive leads, Uto-Aztecan yields more than seven hundred similarities to Hebrew, in phonological, morphological, and semantic patterns consistent with modern linguistic methods. While a handful of Egyptian words are identifiable, they are minimal compared to their Hebrew correspondents.

HEBRAISMS IN THE BOOK OF MORMON. Many typical Hebrew language patterns have been identified in the Book of Mormon, though several are also characteristic of other Near Eastern languages. For example, the cognate accusative, literally redundant in English, is used in Hebrew for emphasis: “They feared a fear” (Ps. 14:5, Hebrew text). Similar structures appear in the Book of Mormon: “to fear exceedingly, with fear” (Alma 18:5), another possible translation of the same cognate accusative (cf. 1 Ne. 3:2; 8:2; Enos 1:13).

Hebrew employs prepositional phrases as adverbs more often than individual adverbs, a feature typical of Book of Mormon language: “in haste" (3 Ne. 21:29) instead of "hastily" and "with gladness" (2 Ne. 28:28) instead of "gladly."

Tvedtnes has noted a possible example of Hebrew agreement: "This people is a free people" (Alma 30:24; emphasis added). In English, "people" is usually considered grammatically plural, but in Hebrew it is often singular. While this phrase in Alma may have been verbless, it may also have contained the third-person singular pronoun /hu/ placed between the two noun phrases or at the end as an anaphoric demonstrative functioning as a copula verb. Uto-Aztec Indian languages also have the word /hu/, which is a third-person singular pronoun in some languages but a "be" verb in others.

Possession in English is shown in two constructs—"the man's house" and "the house of the man"—but only the latter construct is employed in Hebrew. The lack of apostrophe possession in the Book of Mormon is consistent with a translation from the Hebrew construct. Further, the "of" construct is common for adjectival relationships in Hebrew. Correspondingly, the Book of Mormon consistently employs phrases such as "plates of brass" (1 Ne. 3:12) instead of "brass plates" and "walls of stone" (Alma 48:8) rather than "stone walls."

Sentence structures and clause-combining mechanisms in Hebrew differ from those in English. Long strings of subordinate clauses and verbal expressions, such as those in Helaman 1:16–17 and Mosiah 2:20–21 and 7:21–22, are acceptable in Hebrew, though unorthodox and discouraged in English: "Ye all are witnesses . . . that Zeniff, who was made king, . . . he being over-zealous, . . . therefore being deceived by . . . king Laman, who having entered into a treaty, . . . and having yielded up [various cities], . . . and the land round about—and all this he did, for the sole purpose of bringing this people . . . into bondage" (Mosiah 7:21–22).

Frequent phrases such as "from before" and "by the hand of" represent rather literal translations from Hebrew. For example, "he fled from before them" (Mosiah 17:4), instead of the more typically English "he fled from them," portrays the common Hebrew compound preposition /millifne/.

While many words and names found in the Book of Mormon have exact equivalents in the Hebrew Bible, certain others exhibit Semitic characteristics, though their spelling does not always match known Hebrew forms. For example, "Rabbanah" as "great king" (Alma 18:13) may have affinities with the Hebrew root /rbb/, meaning "to be great or many." "Rameumptom" (Alma 31:21), meaning "holy stand," contains consonantal patterns suggesting the stems /rmm/ramah/, "to be high," and /tnm/tam/tom/, "to be complete, perfect, holy." The /p/ between the /m/ and /t/ is a linguistically natural outgrowth of a bilabial /m/ in eluster with a stop /t/, such as the /p/ in /assumption/ from /assume + tion/, and the /b/ in Spanish /hombre/ from Latin /homere/.

Claims that Joseph Smith composed the Book of Mormon by merely imitating King James English, using biblical names and inventing others, typically exhibit insensitivities about its linguistic character. Names such as "Alma" have been thought peculiar inventions. However, the discovery of the name "Alma" in a Jewish text (second century A.D.), the seven hundred observed similarities between Hebrew and Uto-Aztec, literary patterns such as chiasmus, and numerous other features noted in studies since 1830 combine to make the fabrication of the book an overwhelming challenge for anyone in Joseph Smith's day.

[See also Book of Mormon Authorship; Book of Mormon Literature; Book of Mormon Names; Book of Mormon, Near Eastern Background; Book of Mormon Translation by Joseph Smith.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Hoskisson, Paul Y. "Ancient Near Eastern Background of the Book of Mormon." F.A.R.M.S. Reprint. Provo, Utah, 1982.
- Nibley, Hugh. Lehi in the Desert and the World of the Jaredites. CWHN 5.
- . An Approach to the Book of Mormon. CWHN 6.
- Sperry, Sidney B. "The Book of Mormon as Translation English." IE 38 (Mar. 1935):141, 187–88.
- . "Hebrew Idioms in the Book of Mormon." IE 57 (Oct. 1954):703, 728–29.
- . Book of Mormon Compendium. Salt Lake City, 1968.
- Stubbs, Brian D. "A Creolized Base in Uto-Aztec." F.A.R.M.S. Paper. Provo, Utah, 1988.
- Tvedtnes, John A. "Hebraisms in the Book of Mormon: A Preliminary Survey." BYU Studies 11 (Autumn 1970):50–60.

BRIAN D. STUBBS

---

BOOK OF MORMON LITERATURE

Although understated as literature in its clear and plain language, the Book of Mormon exhibits a wide variety of literary forms, including intricate Hebraic poetry, memorable narratives, rhetori-

haste" (3 Ne. 21:29) instead of "hastily" and "with gladness" (2 Ne. 28:28) instead of "gladly."

Tvedtnes has noted a possible example of Hebrew agreement: "This people is a free people" (Alma 30:24; emphasis added). In English, "people" is usually considered grammatically plural, but in Hebrew it is often singular. While this phrase in Alma may have been verbless, it may also have contained the third-person singular pronoun /hu/ placed between the two noun phrases or at the end as an anaphoric demonstrative functioning as a copula verb. Uto-Aztec Indian languages also have the word /hu/, which is a third-person singular pronoun in some languages but a "be" verb in others.

Possession in English is shown in two constructs—"the man's house" and "the house of the man"—but only the latter construct is employed in Hebrew. The lack of apostrophe possession in the Book of Mormon is consistent with a translation from the Hebrew construct. Further, the "of" construct is common for adjectival relationships in Hebrew. Correspondingly, the Book of Mormon consistently employs phrases such as "plates of brass" (1 Ne. 3:12) instead of "brass plates" and "walls of stone" (Alma 48:8) rather than "stone walls."

Sentence structures and clause-combining mechanisms in Hebrew differ from those in English. Long strings of subordinate clauses and verbal expressions, such as those in Helaman 1:16–17 and Mosiah 2:20–21 and 7:21–22, are acceptable in Hebrew, though unorthodox and discouraged in English: "Ye all are witnesses . . . that Zeniff, who was made king, . . . he being over-zealous, . . . therefore being deceived by . . . king Laman, who having entered into a treaty, . . . and having yielded up [various cities], . . . and the land round about—and all this he did, for the sole purpose of bringing this people . . . into bondage" (Mosiah 7:21–22).

Frequent phrases such as "from before" and "by the hand of" represent rather literal translations from Hebrew. For example, "he fled from before them" (Mosiah 17:4), instead of the more typically English "he fled from them," portrays the common Hebrew compound preposition /millifne/.

While many words and names found in the Book of Mormon have exact equivalents in the Hebrew Bible, certain others exhibit Semitic characteristics, though their spelling does not always match known Hebrew forms. For example, "Rabbanah" as "great king" (Alma 18:13) may have affinities with the Hebrew root /rbb/, meaning "to be great or many." "Rameumptom" (Alma 31:21), meaning "holy stand," contains consonantal patterns suggesting the stems /rmm/ramah/, "to be high," and /tnm/tam/tom/, "to be complete, perfect, holy." The /p/ between the /m/ and /t/ is a linguistically natural outgrowth of a bilabial /m/ in eluster with a stop /t/, such as the /p/ in /assumption/ from /assume + tion/, and the /b/ in Spanish /hombre/ from Latin /homere/.

Claims that Joseph Smith composed the Book of Mormon by merely imitating King James English, using biblical names and inventing others, typically exhibit insensitivities about its linguistic character. Names such as "Alma" have been thought peculiar inventions. However, the discovery of the name "Alma" in a Jewish text (second century A.D.), the seven hundred observed similarities between Hebrew and Uto-Aztec, literary patterns such as chiasmus, and numerous other features noted in studies since 1830 combine to make the fabrication of the book an overwhelming challenge for anyone in Joseph Smith's day.

[See also Book of Mormon Authorship; Book of Mormon Literature; Book of Mormon Names; Book of Mormon, Near Eastern Background; Book of Mormon Translation by Joseph Smith.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Hoskisson, Paul Y. "Ancient Near Eastern Background of the Book of Mormon." F.A.R.M.S. Reprint. Provo, Utah, 1982.
- Nibley, Hugh. Lehi in the Desert and the World of the Jaredites. CWHN 5.
- . An Approach to the Book of Mormon. CWHN 6.
- Sperry, Sidney B. "The Book of Mormon as Translation English." IE 38 (Mar. 1935):141, 187–88.
- . "Hebrew Idioms in the Book of Mormon." IE 57 (Oct. 1954):703, 728–29.
- . Book of Mormon Compendium. Salt Lake City, 1968.
- Stubbs, Brian D. "A Creolized Base in Uto-Aztec." F.A.R.M.S. Paper. Provo, Utah, 1988.
- Tvedtnes, John A. "Hebraisms in the Book of Mormon: A Preliminary Survey." BYU Studies 11 (Autumn 1970):50–60.

BRIAN D. STUBBS

---

BOOK OF MORMON LITERATURE

Although understated as literature in its clear and plain language, the Book of Mormon exhibits a wide variety of literary forms, including intricate Hebraic poetry, memorable narratives, rhetorically effective sermons, diverse letters, allegory, figurative language, imagery, symbolic types, and wisdom literature. In recent years these aspects of Joseph Smith's 1829 English translation have been increasingly appreciated, especially when compared with biblical and other ancient forms of literature.

There are many reasons to study the Book of Mormon as literature. Rather than being "formless," as claimed by one critic (Bernard DeVoto, American Mercury 19 [1930]:5), the Book of Mormon is both coherent and polished (although not obtrusively so). It tells "a densely compact and rapidly moving story that interweaves dozens of plots with an inexhaustible fertility of invention and an uncanny consistency that is never caught in a slip or contradiction" (CWHN 7:138).

Despite its small working vocabulary of about 2,225 root words in English, the book distills much human experience and contact with the divine. It presents its themes artfully through simple yet profound imagery, direct yet complex discourses, and straightforward yet intricate structures. To read the Book of Mormon as literature is to discover how such literary devices are used to convey the messages of its content. Attention to form, diction, figurative language, and rhetorical techniques increases sensitivity to the structure of the text and appreciation of the work of the various authors. The stated purpose of the Book of Mormon is to show the LAMANITES, a remnant of the House of ISRAEL, the covenants made with their fathers, and to convince Jew and Gentile that Jesus is the Christ (see Book of Mormon title page). MORMON selected materials and literarily shaped the book to present these messages in a stirring and memorable way.

While the discipline of identifying and evaluating literary features in the Book of Mormon is very young and does not supplant a spiritual reading of the text, those analyzing the book from this perspective find it a work of immediacy that shows as well as tells as great literature usually does. It no longer fits Mark Twain's definition of a classic essentially as a book everyone talks about but no one reads; rather, it is a work that "wears you out before you wear it out" (J. Welch, "Study, Faith, and the Book of Mormon," BYU 1987-88 Devotional and Fireside Speeches, p. 148. [Provo, Utah, 1988]). It is increasingly seen as a unique work that beautifully and compellingly reveals and speaks to the essential human condition.

POETRY. Found embedded in the narrative of the Book of Mormon, poetry provides the best examples of the essential connection between form and content in the Book of Mormon. When many inspired words of the Lord, angels, and prophets are analyzed according to ancient verse forms, their meaning can be more readily perceived. These forms include line forms, symmetry, parallelism, and chiasmic patterns, as defined by Adele Berlin (The Dynamics of Biblical Parallelism [Bloomington, Ind., 1985]) and Wilford Watson (Classical Hebrew Poetry [Sheffield, 1984]). Book of Mormon texts shift smoothly from narrative to poetry, as in this intensifying passage:

But behold, the Spirit hath said this much unto me, saying: Cry unto this people, saying—

Repent ye, and prepare the way of the Lord, and walk in his paths, which are straight; for behold, the kingdom of heaven is at hand, and the Son of God cometh upon the face of the earth [Alma 7:9].

The style of the Book of Mormon has been criticized by some as being verbose and redundant, but in most cases these repetitions are orderly and effective. For example, parallelisms, which abound in the Book of Mormon, serve many functions. They add emphasis to twice-repeated concepts and give definition to sharply drawn contrasts. A typical synonymous parallelism is in 2 Nephi 9:52:

Pray unto him continually by day, and give thanks unto his holy name by night.

Nephi's discourse aimed at his obstinate brothers includes a sharply antithetical parallelism:

Ye are swift to do iniquity
But slow to remember the Lord your God. [1 Ne. 17:45.]

Several fine examples of chiasmus (an a-b-b-a pattern) are also found in the Book of Mormon. In the Psalm of Nephi (2 Ne. 4:15-35), the initial appeals to the soul and heart are accompanied by negations, while the subsequent mirror uses of heart and soul are conjoined with strong affirmations, making the contrasts literarily effective and climactic:

Awake, my soul! No longer droop in sin.
Rejoice, O my heart, and give place no more for the enemy of my soul.
Do not anger again because of mine enemies.

Do not slacken my strength because of mine afflictions.

Rejoice, O my heart, and cry unto the Lord, and say:

O Lord, I will praise thee forever;
yea, my soul will rejoice in thee, my God, and the rock of my salvation. [2 Ne. 4:28–30.]

Other precise examples of extended chiasmus (a–b–c—c–b–a) are readily discernible in Mosiah 5:10–12 and Alma 36:1–30 and 41:13–15. This literary form in Alma 36 effectively focuses attention on the central passage of the chapter (Alma 36:17–18); in Alma 41, it fittingly conveys the very notion of restorative justice expressed in the passage (cf. Lev. 24:13–23, which likewise uses chiasmus to convey a similar notion of justice).

Another figure known as a fortiori is used to communicate an exaggerated sense of multitude, as in Alma 60:22, where a “number parallelism” is chiastically enclosed by a twice-repeated phrase:

Yea, will ye sit in idleness while ye are surrounded with thousands of those, yea, and tens of thousands,
who do also sit in idleness?

Scores of Book of Mormon passages can be analyzed as poetry. They range from Lehi’s brief desert poems (1 Ne. 2:9–10, a form Hugh Nibley identifies as an Arabic qasida) [CWHN 6:270–75] to extensive sermons of Jacob, Abinadi, and the risen Jesus (2 Ne. 6–10; Mosiah 12–16; and 3 Ne. 27).

NARRATIVE TEXTS. In the Book of Mormon, narrative texts are often given vitality by vigorous conflict and impassioned dialogue or personal narration. Nephi relates his heroic actions in obtaining the brass plates from Laban; Jacob resists the false accusations of Sherem, upon whom the judgment of the Lord falls; Ammon fights off plunderers at the waters of Sebus and wins the confidence of king Lamoni; Amulek is confronted by the smooth-tongued lawyer Zeezrom; Alma<sub>2</sub> and Amulek are preserved while their accusers are crushed by collapsing prison walls; Captain Moroni<sub>1</sub> engages in a showdown with the Lamanite chieftain Zerahemnah; Amalickiah rises to power through treachery and malevolence; a later prophet named NEPHI<sub>2</sub> reveals to an unbelieving crowd the murder of their chief judge by the judge’s own brother; and the last two Jaredite kings fight to the mutual destruction of their people.

Seen as a whole, the Book of Mormon is an epic account of the history of the NEPHITE nation. Extensive in scope with an eponymic hero, it presents action involving long and arduous journeys and heroic deeds, with supernatural beings taking an active part. Encapsulated within this one-thousand-year account of the establishment, development, and destruction of the Nephites is the concentrated epic of the rise and fall of the Jaredites, who preceded them in type and time. (For its epic milieu, see CWHN 5:285–394.) The climax of the book is the dramatic account of the visit of the resurrected Jesus to an assemblage of righteous Nephites.

SERMONS AND SPEECHES. Prophetic discourse is a dominant literary form in the Book of Mormon. Speeches such as King BENJAMIN’s address (Mosiah 1–6), Alma<sub>2</sub>’s challenge to the people of Zarahemla (Alma 5), and Mormon’s teachings on faith, hope, and charity (Moro. 7) are crafted artistically and have great rhetorical effectiveness in conveying their religious purposes. The public oration of SAMUEL THE LAMANITE (Hel. 13–15) is a classic prophetic judgment speech. Taking rhetorical criticism as a guide, one can see how Benjamin’s ritual address first aims to persuade the audience to reaffirm a present point of view and then turns to deliberative rhetoric—“which aims at effecting a decision about future action, often the very immediate future” (Kennedy, New Testament Interpretation Through Rhetorical Criticism [1984], p. 36). King Benjamin’s speech is also chiasmic as a whole and in several of its parts (Welch, pp. 202–205).

LETTERS. The eight epistles in the Book of Mormon are conversational in tone, revealing the diverse personalities of their writers. These letters are from Captain Moroni<sub>1</sub> (Alma 54:5–14; 60:1–36), Ammoron (Alma 54:16–24), Helaman<sub>1</sub> (Alma 56:2–58:41), Pahoran (Alma 61:2–21), Giddianhi (3 Ne. 3:2–10), and Mormon (Moro. 8:2–30; 9:1–26).

ALLEGORY, METAPHOR, IMAGERY, AND TYPOLOGY. These forms are also prevalent in the Book of Mormon. ZENOS’s allegory of the olive tree (Jacob 5) vividly incorporates dozens of horticultural details as it depicts the history of God’s dealings with Israel. A striking simile curse, with Near Eastern parallels, appears in Abinadi’s prophetic denunciation: The life of King Noah shall be “as a garment in a furnace of fire, . . . as a stalk, even as a dry stalk of the field, which is run over by the beasts and trodden under foot" (Mosiah 12:10–11).

An effective extended metaphor is Alma's comparison of the word of God to a seed planted in one's heart and then growing into a fruitful TREE OF LIFE (Alma 32:28–43). In developing this metaphor, Alma uses a striking example of synesthesia: As the word enlightens their minds, his listeners can know it is real—"ye have tasted this light" (Alma 32:35).

Iteration of archetypes such as tree, river, darkness, and fire graphically confirms Lehi's understanding "that there is an opposition in all things" (2 Ne. 2:11) and that opposition will be beneficial to the righteous.

A figural interpretation of God-given words and God-directed persons or events is insisted on, although not always developed, in the Book of Mormon. "All things which have been given of God from the beginning of the world, unto man, are the typifying of [Christ]" (2 Ne. 11:4); all performances and ordinances of the law of Moses "were types of things to come" (Mosiah 13:31); and the LIAISON, or compass, was seen as a type: "For just as surely as this director did bring our fathers, by following its course, to the promised land, shall the words of Christ, if we follow their course, carry us beyond this vale of sorrow into a far better land of promise" (Alma 37:45). In its largest typological structure, the Book of Mormon fits well the seven phases of revelation posited by Northrop Frye: creation, revolution or exodus, law, wisdom, prophecy, gospel, and apocalypse (The Great Code: The Bible and Literature [New York, 1982]).

WISDOM LITERATURE. Transmitted sayings of the wise are scattered throughout the Book of Mormon, especially in counsel given by fathers to their sons. Alma counsels, "O remember, my son, and learn wisdom in thy youth; yea, learn in thy youth, to keep the commandments of God" (Alma 37:35; see also 38:9–15). Benjamin says, "I tell you these things that ye may learn wisdom; that ye may learn that when ye are in the service of your fellow beings ye are only in the service of your God" (Mosiah 2:17). A memorable aphorism is given by Lehi: "Adam fell that men might be; and men are, that they might have joy" (2 Ne. 2:25). Pithy sayings such as "fools mock, but they shall mourn" (Ether 12:26) and "wickedness never was happiness" (Alma 41:10) are often repeated by Latter-day Saints.

APOCALYPTIC LITERATURE. The vision in 1 Nephi 11–15 (sixth century B.C.) is comparable in form with early APOCALYPTIC literature. It contains a vision, is delivered in dialogue form, has an otherworldly mediator or escort, includes a commandment to write, treats the disposition of the recipient, prophesies persecution, foretells the judgment of the wicked and of the world, contains cosmic transformations, and has an otherworldly place as its spatial axis. Later Jewish developments of complex angelology, mystic numerology, and symbolism are absent.

STYLE AND TONE. Book of Mormon writers show an intense concern for style and tone. Alma desires to be able to "speak with the trump of God, with a voice to shake the earth," yet realizes that "I am a man, and do sin in my wish; for I ought to be content with the things which the Lord hath allotted unto me" (Alma 29:1–3). Moroni<sub>2</sub> expresses a feeling of inadequacy in writing: "Lord, the Gentiles will mock at these things, because of our weakness in writing. . . . Thou hast also made our words powerful and great, even that we cannot write them; wherefore, when we write we behold our weakness, and stumble because of the placing of our words" (Ether 12:23–25; cf. 2 Ne. 33:1). Moroni's written words, however, are not weak. In cadences of ascending strength he boldly declares:

O ye pollutions, ye hypocrites, ye teachers, who sell yourselves for that which will canker, why have ye polluted the holy church of God? Why are ye ashamed to take upon you the name of Christ? . . . Who will despise the works of the Lord? Who will despise the children of Christ? Behold, all ye who are despisers of the works of the Lord, for ye shall wonder and perish [Morm. 8:38, 9:26].

The styles employed by the different writers in the Book of Mormon vary from the unadorned to the sublime. The tones range from Moroni's strident condemnations to Jesus' humblest pleading: "Behold, mine arm of mercy is extended towards you, and whosoever will come, him will I receive" (3 Ne. 9:14).

A model for communication is Jesus, who, Moroni reports, "told me in plain humility, even as a man telleth another in mine own language, concerning these things; and only a few have I written, because of my weakness in writing" (Ether 12:39–40). Two concepts in this report are repeated throughout the Book of Mormon—plain speech and inability to write about some things. "I have spoken plainly unto you," Nephi says, "that ye cannot misunderstand" (2 Ne. 25:28). "My soul delighteth in plainness," he continues, "for after this manner doth the Lord God work among the children of men" (2 Ne. 31:3). Yet Nephi also delights in the words of Isaiah, which "are not plain unto you" although "they are plain unto all those that are filled with the spirit of prophecy" (2 Ne. 25:4). Containing both plain and veiled language, the Book of Mormon is a spiritually and literarily powerful book that is direct yet complex, simple yet profound.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- England, Eugene. "A Second Witness for the Logos: The Book of Mormon and Contemporary Literary Criticism." In By Study and Also by Faith, 2 vols., ed. J. Lundquist and S. Ricks, Vol. 2, pp. 91-125. Salt Lake City, 1990.
- Jorgensen, Bruce W.; Richard Dilworth Rust; and George S. Tate. Essays on typology in Literature of Belief, ed. Neal E. Lambert. Provo, Utah, 1981.
- Nichols, Robert E., Jr. "Beowulf and Nephi: A Literary View of the Book of Mormon." Dialogue 4 (Autumn 1969):40-47.
- Parry, Donald W. "Hebrew Literary Patterns in the Book of Mormon." Ensign 19 (Oct. 1989):58-61.
- Rust, Richard Dilworth. "Book of Mormon Poetry." New Era (Mar. 1983):46-50.
- Welch, John W. "Chiasmus in the Book of Mormon." In Chiasmus in Antiquity, ed. J. Welch, pp. 198-210. Hildesheim, 1981.

RICHARD DILWORTH RUST
DONALD W. PARRY

BOOK OF MORMON MANUSCRIPTS

The printed versions of the Book of Mormon derive from two manuscripts. The first, called the original manuscript (O), was written by at least three scribes as Joseph SMITH translated and dictated. The most important scribe was Oliver COWDERY. This manuscript was begun no later than April 1829 and finished in June 1829.

A copy of the original was then made by Oliver Cowdery and two other scribes. This copy is called the printer's manuscript (P), since it was the one normally used to set the type for the first (1830) edition of the Book of Mormon. It was begun in July 1829 and finished early in 1830.

The printer's manuscript is not an exact copy of the original manuscript. There are on the average three changes per original manuscript page.

A page from the original Book of Mormon manuscript, covering 1 Nephi 4:38-5:14. It shows how fluent Joseph Smith's dictation was. He did not change or revise the text as he dictated. Oliver Cowdery, one of his scribes, stated, "Day after day I continued, uninterrupted, to write from his mouth . . . a voice dictated by the inspiration of heaven."

spoken plainly unto you," Nephi says, "that ye cannot misunderstand" (2 Ne. 25:28). "My soul delighteth in plainness," he continues, "for after this manner doth the Lord God work among the children of men" (2 Ne. 31:3). Yet Nephi also delights in the words of Isaiah, which "are not plain unto you" although "they are plain unto all those that are filled with the spirit of prophecy" (2 Ne. 25:4). Containing both plain and veiled language, the Book of Mormon is a spiritually and literarily powerful book that is direct yet complex, simple yet profound.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- England, Eugene. "A Second Witness for the Logos: The Book of Mormon and Contemporary Literary Criticism." In By Study and Also by Faith, 2 vols., ed. J. Lundquist and S. Ricks, Vol. 2, pp. 91-125. Salt Lake City, 1990.
- Jorgensen, Bruce W.; Richard Dilworth Rust; and George S. Tate. Essays on typology in Literature of Belief, ed. Neal E. Lambert. Provo, Utah, 1981.
- Nichols, Robert E., Jr. "Beowulf and Nephi: A Literary View of the Book of Mormon." Dialogue 4 (Autumn 1969):40-47.
- Parry, Donald W. "Hebrew Literary Patterns in the Book of Mormon." Ensign 19 (Oct. 1989):58-61.
- Rust, Richard Dilworth. "Book of Mormon Poetry." New Era (Mar. 1983):46-50.
- Welch, John W. "Chiasmus in the Book of Mormon." In Chiasmus in Antiquity, ed. J. Welch, pp. 198-210. Hildesheim, 1981.

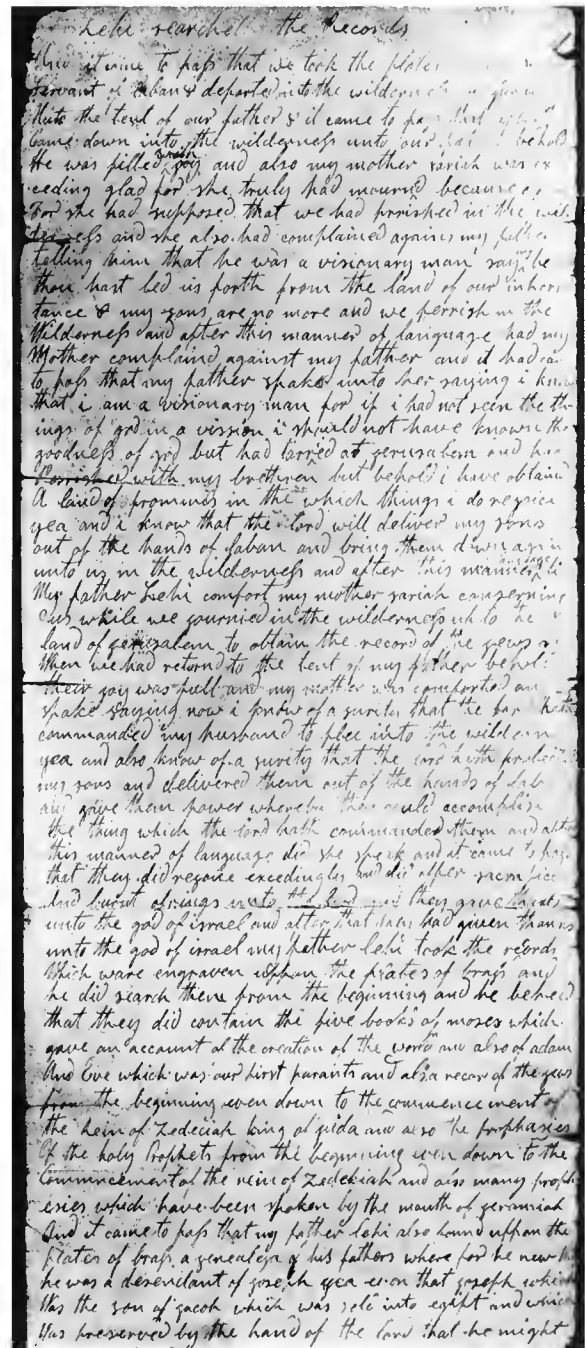

RICHARD DILWORTH RUST
DONALD W. PARRY

BOOK OF MORMON MANUSCRIPTS

The printed versions of the Book of Mormon derive from two manuscripts. The first, called the original manuscript (O), was written by at least three scribes as Joseph SMITH translated and dictated. The most important scribe was Oliver COWDERY. This manuscript was begun no later than April 1829 and finished in June 1829.

A copy of the original was then made by Oliver Cowdery and two other scribes. This copy is called the printer's manuscript (P), since it was the one normally used to set the type for the first (1830) edition of the Book of Mormon. It was begun in July 1829 and finished early in 1830.

The printer's manuscript is not an exact copy of the original manuscript. There are on the average three changes per original manuscript page.

A page from the original Book of Mormon manuscript, covering 1 Nephi 4:38-5:14. It shows how fluent Joseph Smith's dictation was. He did not change or revise the text as he dictated. Oliver Cowdery, one of his scribes, stated, "Day after day I continued, uninterrupted, to write from his mouth . . . a voice dictated by the inspiration of heaven."

These changes appear to be natural scribal errors; there is little or no evidence of conscious editing. Most of the changes are minor, and about one in five produce a discernible difference in meaning. Because they were all relatively minor, most of the errors thus introduced into the text have remained in the printed editions of the Book of Mormon and have not been detected and corrected except by reference to the original manuscript. About twenty of these errors were corrected in the 1981 edition.

The compositor for the 1830 edition added punctuation, paragraphing, and other printing marks to about one-third of the pages of the printer's manuscript. These same marks appear on one fragment of the original, indicating that it was used at least once in typesetting the 1830 edition.

In preparation for the second (1837) edition, hundreds of grammatical changes and a few textual emendations were made in P. After the publication of this edition, P was retained by Oliver Cowdery. After his death in 1850, his brother-in-law, David WHITMER, kept P until his death in 1888. In 1903 Whitmer's grandson sold P to the REORGANIZED CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS, which owns it today. It is wholly extant except for two lines at the bottom of the first leaf.

The original manuscript was not consulted for the editing of the 1837 edition. However, in producing the 1840 edition, Joseph Smith used O to restore some of its original readings. In October 1841, Joseph Smith placed O in the cornerstone of the NAUVOO HOUSE. Over forty years later, Lewis Bidamon, Emma SMITH's second husband, opened the cornerstone and found that water seepage had destroyed most of O. The surviving pages were handed out to various individuals during the 1880s.

Today approximately 25 percent of the text of O survives: 1 Nephi 2 through 2 Nephi 1, with gaps; Alma 22 through Helaman 3, with gaps; and a few other fragments. All but one of the authentic pages and fragments of O are housed in the archives of the LDS Historical Department; one-half of a sheet (from 1 Nephi 14) is owned by the University of Utah.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Heater, Shirley R. "Gold Plates, Foolscap, & Printer's Ink, Part 1: Manuscripts of the Book of Mormon." Zarahemla Record 35-36 (1987):3-15.
- Jessee, Dean C. "The Original Book of Mormon Manuscript." BYU Studies 10 (1970):259-78.

ROYAL SKOUSEN

---

BOOK OF MORMON NAMES

The Book of Mormon contains 337 proper names and 21 gentiles (or analogous forms) based on proper names. Included in this count are names that normally would not be called proper, such as kinds of animals, if they appear as transliterations in the English text and not as translations. Conversely, proper names that appear only in translation are not included, such as Bountiful and Desolation. Of these 337 proper names, 188 are unique to the Book of Mormon, while 149 are common to the Book of Mormon and the Bible. If the textual passages common to the Book of Mormon and the Bible are excluded, 53 names occur in both books.

It would seem convenient to divide the Book of Mormon collection or listing of names (onomasticon) into three groups because it mentions (1) JAREDITES, (2) the community founded by LEHI (which might be termed "Lehites"), and (3) the people referred to as the people of Zarahemla (who might be called "Mulekites"), each of which contributed to the history of the Book of Mormon and therefore to the list of proper names (see BOOK OF MORMON PEOPLES). While this grouping can be made with some degree of accuracy for Jaredite names, it is not easy to maintain the distinction between Lehite and Mulekite, because a portion of the Lehites united with the Mulekites sometime before 130 B.C.; practically nothing is known about Mulekite names before that time. For the present, Lehite and Mulekite names must be treated together. Given this grouping of the Book of Mormon onomasticon, 142 of the 188 unique Book of Mormon names are Lehite-Mulekite, 41 are Jaredite, and 5 are common to both groups.

Much preliminary work remains to be done on the Book of Mormon onomasticon. The transliteration system of the English text must be clarified: does the j of the text indicate only the Nephite phoneme /y/ or can it also represent /h/ in the name "Job," as it does once in the King James Version? A reliable critical analysis of the text is needed: what is the range of possible spellings of Cumorah that might indicate phonemic values? Linguistic phenomena beg explanation: there are no exclusively Book of Mormon names that begin with /b/; but several begin with /p/. Q and x do not occur in any Book of Mormon name. V, w, and y do not occur in any exclusively Book of Mormon name. D, f, and u do not begin any exclusively Book of Mormon name.

The Lehite-Mulekite names often show great-

These changes appear to be natural scribal errors; there is little or no evidence of conscious editing. Most of the changes are minor, and about one in five produce a discernible difference in meaning. Because they were all relatively minor, most of the errors thus introduced into the text have remained in the printed editions of the Book of Mormon and have not been detected and corrected except by reference to the original manuscript. About twenty of these errors were corrected in the 1981 edition.

The compositor for the 1830 edition added punctuation, paragraphing, and other printing marks to about one-third of the pages of the printer's manuscript. These same marks appear on one fragment of the original, indicating that it was used at least once in typesetting the 1830 edition.

In preparation for the second (1837) edition, hundreds of grammatical changes and a few textual emendations were made in P. After the publication of this edition, P was retained by Oliver Cowdery. After his death in 1850, his brother-in-law, David WHITMER, kept P until his death in 1888. In 1903 Whitmer's grandson sold P to the REORGANIZED CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS, which owns it today. It is wholly extant except for two lines at the bottom of the first leaf.

The original manuscript was not consulted for the editing of the 1837 edition. However, in producing the 1840 edition, Joseph Smith used O to restore some of its original readings. In October 1841, Joseph Smith placed O in the cornerstone of the NAUVOO HOUSE. Over forty years later, Lewis Bidamon, Emma SMITH's second husband, opened the cornerstone and found that water seepage had destroyed most of O. The surviving pages were handed out to various individuals during the 1880s.

Today approximately 25 percent of the text of O survives: 1 Nephi 2 through 2 Nephi 1, with gaps; Alma 22 through Helaman 3, with gaps; and a few other fragments. All but one of the authentic pages and fragments of O are housed in the archives of the LDS Historical Department; one-half of a sheet (from 1 Nephi 14) is owned by the University of Utah.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Heater, Shirley R. "Gold Plates, Foolscap, & Printer's Ink, Part 1: Manuscripts of the Book of Mormon." Zarahemla Record 35-36 (1987):3-15.
- Jessee, Dean C. "The Original Book of Mormon Manuscript." BYU Studies 10 (1970):259-78.

ROYAL SKOUSEN

BOOK OF MORMON NAMES

The Book of Mormon contains 337 proper names and 21 gentiles (or analogous forms) based on proper names. Included in this count are names that normally would not be called proper, such as kinds of animals, if they appear as transliterations in the English text and not as translations. Conversely, proper names that appear only in translation are not included, such as Bountiful and Desolation. Of these 337 proper names, 188 are unique to the Book of Mormon, while 149 are common to the Book of Mormon and the Bible. If the textual passages common to the Book of Mormon and the Bible are excluded, 53 names occur in both books.

It would seem convenient to divide the Book of Mormon collection or listing of names (onomasticon) into three groups because it mentions (1) JAREDITES, (2) the community founded by LEHI (which might be termed "Lehites"), and (3) the people referred to as the people of Zarahemla (who might be called "Mulekites"), each of which contributed to the history of the Book of Mormon and therefore to the list of proper names (see BOOK OF MORMON PEOPLES). While this grouping can be made with some degree of accuracy for Jaredite names, it is not easy to maintain the distinction between Lehite and Mulekite, because a portion of the Lehites united with the Mulekites sometime before 130 B.C.; practically nothing is known about Mulekite names before that time. For the present, Lehite and Mulekite names must be treated together. Given this grouping of the Book of Mormon onomasticon, 142 of the 188 unique Book of Mormon names are Lehite-Mulekite, 41 are Jaredite, and 5 are common to both groups.

Much preliminary work remains to be done on the Book of Mormon onomasticon. The transliteration system of the English text must be clarified: does the j of the text indicate only the Nephite phoneme /y/ or can it also represent /h/ in the name "Job," as it does once in the King James Version? A reliable critical analysis of the text is needed: what is the range of possible spellings of Cumorah that might indicate phonemic values? Linguistic phenomena beg explanation: there are no exclusively Book of Mormon names that begin with /b/; but several begin with /p/. Q and x do not occur in any Book of Mormon name. V, w, and y do not occur in any exclusively Book of Mormon name. D, f, and u do not begin any exclusively Book of Mormon name.

The Lehite-Mulekite names often show greatest affinity with Semitic languages (CWHN 6:281–94). For instance, Abish and Abinadi resemble ab, father, names in Hebrew; Alma appears in a Bar Kokhba letter (c. A.D. 130) found in the Judean desert; Mulek could be a diminutive of West Semitic mlk, king; Omni and Limhi appear to have the same morphology as Old Testament Omri and Zimri; Jershon is remarkably close to a noun form of the Hebrew root yrš (see below). Some Lehite-Mulekite names more closely resemble Egyptian: Ammon, Korihor, Pahoran, and Paanchi (CWHN 5:25–34). Jaredite names exhibit no consistently obvious linguistic affinity.

Like proper names in most languages, the proper names of the Book of Mormon probably had semantic meanings for Book of Mormon peoples. Such meanings are evident from several instances wherein the Book of Mormon provides a translation for a proper name. For example, Irreantum means “many waters” (1 Ne. 17:5), and Rabbanah is interpreted as “powerful or great king” (Alma 18:13). The single greatest impediment to understanding the semantic possibilities for the Book of Mormon proper names remains the lack of the original Nephite text. The transliterations of the English text allow only educated conjectures and approximations about the nature of the names and their possible semantic range. In addition, such postulations, if to be of any value, must be based on a knowledge of the possible linguistic origins of the names, such as Iron Age Hebrew and Egyptian for Lehite and Mulekite names.

The proper names of the Book of Mormon can provide information about the text and the language(s) used to compose it. When studied with apposite methodology, these names testify to the ancient origin of the Book of Mormon. For example, Jershon is the toponym for a land given by the Nephites to a group of Lamanites as an inheritance; based on the usual correspondence in the King James Version of j for the Hebrew phoneme /y/, Book of Mormon Jershon could correspond to the Hebrew root yrš meaning “to inherit,” thus providing an appropriate play on words in Alma 27:22: “and this land Jershon is the land which we will give unto our brethren for an inheritance.” Similarly, one Book of Mormon name used for a man that might have seemed awkward, Alma, now is known from two second-century A.D. Hebrew documents of the Bar Kokhba period (Yadin, p. 176) and thus speaks for a strong and continuing Hebrew presence among Book of Mormon peoples.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Hoskisson, Paul Y. “An Introduction to the Relevance of and a Methodology for a Study of the Proper Names of the Book of Mormon.” In By Study and Also by Faith, ed. J. Lundquist and S. Ricks, Vol. 2, pp. 126–35. Salt Lake City, 1990.
- Tvedtnes, John A. “A Phonemic Analysis of Nephite and Jaredite Proper Names.” F.A.R.M.S. Paper. Provo, Utah, 1977.
- Yadin, Y. Bar Kokhba, p. 176. Jerusalem, 1971.

PAUL Y. HOSKISSON

BOOK OF MORMON NEAR EASTERN BACKGROUND

According to the Book of Mormon, the JAREDITES, the NEPHITES, and the “Mulekites” (see MULEK) migrated to the Western Hemisphere from the Near East in antiquity, a claim that has been challenged. While Book of Mormon students readily admit that no direct, concrete evidence currently exists substantiating the links with the ancient Near East that are noted in the book, evidence can be adduced—largely external and circumstantial—that commands respect for the claims of the Book of Mormon concerning its ancient Near Eastern background (CWHN 8:65–72). A few examples will indicate the nature and strength of these ties, particularly because such details were not available to Joseph Smith, the translator of the Book of Mormon, from any sources that existed in the early nineteenth century (see BOOK OF MORMON TRANSLATION BY JOSEPH SMITH).

1. LEHI (c. 600 B.C.) was a righteous, wellborn, and prosperous man of the tribe of Manasseh who lived in or near Jerusalem. He traveled much, had a rich estate in the country, and had an eye for fine metalwork. His family was strongly influenced by the contemporary Egyptian culture. At a time of mounting tensions in Jerusalem (the officials were holding secret meetings by night), he favored the religious reform party of Jeremiah, while members of his family were torn by divided loyalties. One of many prophets of doom in the land, “a visionary man,” he was forced to flee with his family, fearing pursuit by the troops of one Laban, a high military official of the city. Important records that Lehi needed were kept in the house of Laban (1 Ne. 1–5; CWHN 6:46–131; 8:534–35). This closely parallels the situation in Lachish at the time, as described in contemporary records discovered in 1934–1935 (H. Torczyner, The Lachish Letters, 2

est affinity with Semitic languages (CWHN 6:281–94). For instance, Abish and Abinadi resemble ab, father, names in Hebrew; Alma appears in a Bar Kokhba letter (c. A.D. 130) found in the Judean desert; Mulek could be a diminutive of West Semitic mlk, king; Omni and Limhi appear to have the same morphology as Old Testament Omri and Zimri; Jershon is remarkably close to a noun form of the Hebrew root yrš (see below). Some Lehite-Mulekite names more closely resemble Egyptian: Ammon, Korihor, Pahoran, and Paanchi (CWHN 5:25–34). Jaredite names exhibit no consistently obvious linguistic affinity.

Like proper names in most languages, the proper names of the Book of Mormon probably had semantic meanings for Book of Mormon peoples. Such meanings are evident from several instances wherein the Book of Mormon provides a translation for a proper name. For example, Irreantum means “many waters” (1 Ne. 17:5), and Rabbanah is interpreted as “powerful or great king” (Alma 18:13). The single greatest impediment to understanding the semantic possibilities for the Book of Mormon proper names remains the lack of the original Nephite text. The transliterations of the English text allow only educated conjectures and approximations about the nature of the names and their possible semantic range. In addition, such postulations, if to be of any value, must be based on a knowledge of the possible linguistic origins of the names, such as Iron Age Hebrew and Egyptian for Lehite and Mulekite names.

The proper names of the Book of Mormon can provide information about the text and the language(s) used to compose it. When studied with apposite methodology, these names testify to the ancient origin of the Book of Mormon. For example, Jershon is the toponym for a land given by the Nephites to a group of Lamanites as an inheritance; based on the usual correspondence in the King James Version of j for the Hebrew phoneme /y/, Book of Mormon Jershon could correspond to the Hebrew root yrš meaning “to inherit,” thus providing an appropriate play on words in Alma 27:22: “and this land Jershon is the land which we will give unto our brethren for an inheritance.” Similarly, one Book of Mormon name used for a man that might have seemed awkward, Alma, now is known from two second-century A.D. Hebrew documents of the Bar Kokhba period (Yadin, p. 176) and thus speaks for a strong and continuing Hebrew presence among Book of Mormon peoples.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Hoskisson, Paul Y. “An Introduction to the Relevance of and a Methodology for a Study of the Proper Names of the Book of Mormon.” In By Study and Also by Faith, ed. J. Lundquist and S. Ricks, Vol. 2, pp. 126–35. Salt Lake City, 1990.
- Tvedtnes, John A. “A Phonemic Analysis of Nephite and Jaredite Proper Names.” F.A.R.M.S. Paper. Provo, Utah, 1977.
- Yadin, Y. Bar Kokhba, p. 176. Jerusalem, 1971.

PAUL Y. HOSKISSON

BOOK OF MORMON NEAR EASTERN BACKGROUND

According to the Book of Mormon, the JAREDITES, the NEPHITES, and the “Mulekites” (see MULEK) migrated to the Western Hemisphere from the Near East in antiquity, a claim that has been challenged. While Book of Mormon students readily admit that no direct, concrete evidence currently exists substantiating the links with the ancient Near East that are noted in the book, evidence can be adduced—largely external and circumstantial—that commands respect for the claims of the Book of Mormon concerning its ancient Near Eastern background (CWHN 8:65–72). A few examples will indicate the nature and strength of these ties, particularly because such details were not available to Joseph Smith, the translator of the Book of Mormon, from any sources that existed in the early nineteenth century (see BOOK OF MORMON TRANSLATION BY JOSEPH SMITH).

1. LEHI (c. 600 B.C.) was a righteous, wellborn, and prosperous man of the tribe of Manasseh who lived in or near Jerusalem. He traveled much, had a rich estate in the country, and had an eye for fine metalwork. His family was strongly influenced by the contemporary Egyptian culture. At a time of mounting tensions in Jerusalem (the officials were holding secret meetings by night), he favored the religious reform party of Jeremiah, while members of his family were torn by divided loyalties. One of many prophets of doom in the land, “a visionary man,” he was forced to flee with his family, fearing pursuit by the troops of one Laban, a high military official of the city. Important records that Lehi needed were kept in the house of Laban (1 Ne. 1–5; CWHN 6:46–131; 8:534–35). This closely parallels the situation in Lachish at the time, as described in contemporary records discovered in 1934–1935 (H. Torczyner, The Lachish Letters, 2 vols., Oxford, 1938; cf. CWHN 8:380–406). The Bar Kokhba letters, discovered in 1965–1966, recount the manner in which the wealthy escaped from Jerusalem under like circumstances in both earlier and later centuries (Y. Yadin, Bar Kokhba, Chaps. 10 and 16, Jerusalem, 1971; cf. CWHN 8:274–88).

2. Lehi's flight recalls the later retreat of the Desert Sectaries of the Dead Sea, both parties being bent on "keeping the commandments of the Lord" (cf. 1 Ne. 4:33–37; Battle Scroll [1QM] x.7–8). Among the Desert Sectaries, all volunteers were sworn in by covenant (Battle Scroll [1QM] vii.5–6). In the case of NEPHI<sub>1</sub>, son of Lehi, he is charged with having "taken it upon him to be our ruler and our teacher. . . . He says that the Lord has talked with him . . . [to] lead us away into some strange wilderness" (1 Ne. 16:37–38). Later in the New World, Nephi, then MOSIAH<sub>1</sub>, and then ALMA<sub>1</sub> (c. 150 B.C.) led out more devotees, for example, the last-named, to a place of trees by "the waters of Mormon" (2 Ne. 5:11–10; Omni 1:12–13; Mosiah 18). The organization and practices instigated by Alma are like those in the Old World communities: swearing in, baptism, one priest to fifty members, traveling teachers or inspectors, a special day for assembly, all labor and share alike, called "the children of God," all defer to one pre-eminent Teacher, and so on (Mosiah 18; 25). Parallels with the Dead Sea Scroll communities are striking, even to the rival Dead Sea colonies led by the False Teacher (CWHN 6:135–44, 157–67, 183–93; 7:264–70; 8:289–327).

3. "And my father dwelt in a tent" (1 Ne. 2:15). Mentioned fourteen times in 1 Nephi, the sheikh's tent is the center of everything. When Lehi's sons returned from Jerusalem safely after fleeing Laban's men and hiding in caves, "they did rejoice . . . and did offer sacrifices . . . on an altar of stones . . . and gave thanks" (1 Ne. 2:7; 5:9). Taking "seeds of every kind" for a protracted settlement, "keeping to the more fertile parts of the wilderness," they hunt along the way, making "not much fire," living on raw meat, guided at times by a "Liahona"—a brass ball "of curious workmanship" with two divination arrows that show the way. One long camping was "at a place we call Shazer" (cf. Arabic shajer, trees or place of trees); and they buried Ishmael at Nahom, where his daughters mourned and chided Lehi (1 Ne. 16; cf. Arabic Nahm, a moaning or sighing together, a chiding).

Canaanite horned altar or incense burner from Megiddo in ancient Palestine (c. 1900 B.C.) in the Rockefeller Museum, Jerusalem. This distinctive style of altar was also used by the Israelites (see Lev. 4:7; 1 Kings 1:50; 2:28). Courtesy LaMar C. Berrett.

Lehi vividly describes a sayl, a flash flood of "filthy water" out of a wadi or stream bed that can sweep one's camp away (1 Ne. 8:13, 32; 12:16), a common event in the area where he was traveling. At their first "river of water" Lehi recited a formal "qasida," an old form of desert poetry, to his sons Laman and Lemuel, urging them to be like the stream and the valley in keeping God's commands (1 Ne. 2). He describes the terror of those who in "a mist of darkness . . . did lose their way, wandered off and were lost." He sees "a great and spacious building," appearing to stand high "in the air . . . filled with people, . . . and their manner of dress was exceeding fine" (1 Ne. 8; cf. the "skyscrapers" of southern Arabia, e.g., the town of Shibam). The building fell in all its pride like the fabled Castle of Ghumdan. Other desert imagery abounds (CWHN 5:43–92).

4. Among lengthier connected accounts, MORONI<sub>1</sub> (c. 75 B.C.), leading an uprising against an oppressor, "went forth among the people waving the rent part of his garment" to show the writing on it (Alma 46:19–20). The legendary Persian hero Kaveh did the same thing with his garment. The men of Moroni "came running, . . . rending their garments. . . as a covenant [saying] . . . may [God] cast us at the feet of our enemies . . . to be trodden underfoot" (Alma 46:21–22). Both the rending of and the treading on the garments were ancient practices (CWHN 6:216–18; 7:198–202; 8:92–95). The inscription on the banner, "in memory of our God, our religion, and our peace, our wives, and our children" (Alma 46:12), is similar to the banners and trumpets of the armies in the Dead Sea Battle Scroll ([1QM] iii.1–iv.2). Before the battle Moroni goes before the army and dedicates the land southward as Desolation, and the rest he named "a chosen land, and the land of liberty" (Alma 46:17). In the Battle Scroll ([1QM] vii.8ff.) the high priest similarly goes before the army and dedicates the land of the enemy to destruction and that of Israel to salvation (CWHN 6:213–16). Moroni compares his torn garment-banner to the coat of Joseph, half of which was preserved and half decayed: "Let us remember the words of Jacob, before his death . . . as this remnant of [the coat] hath been preserved, so shall a remnant of [Joseph] be preserved." So Jacob had both "sorrow . . . [and] joy" at the same time (Alma 46:24–25). An almost identical story is told by the tenth-century savant Tha'alabi, the collector of traditions from Jewish refugees in Persia (CWHN 6:209–21; 8:249, 280–81).

5. There is a detailed description of a coronation in the Book of Mormon that is paralleled only in ancient nonbiblical sources, notably Nathan hababli's description of the coronation of the Prince of the Captivity. The Book of Mormon version in Mosiah 2–6 (c. 125 B.C.) is a classic account of the well-documented ancient "Year Rite": (a) The people gather at the temple, (b) bringing firstfruits and offerings (Mosiah 2:3–4); (c) they camp by families, all tent doors facing the temple; (d) a special tower is erected, (e) from which the king addresses the people, (f) unfolding unto them "the mysteries" (the real ruler is God, etc.); (g) all accept the covenant in a great acclamation; (h) it is the universal birthday, all are reborn; (i) they receive a new name, are duly sealed, and registered in a national census; (j) there is stirring choral music (cf. Mosiah 2:28; 5:2–5); (k) they feast by families (cf. Mosiah 2:5) and return to their homes (CWHN 6:295–310).

This "patternism" has been recognized only since the 1930s.

6. The literary evidence of Old World ties with the Book of Mormon is centered on Egyptian influences, requiring special treatment. The opening colophon to Nephi's autobiography in the Book of Mormon is characteristic: "I, Nephi . . . I make it with mine own hand" (1 Ne. 1:1, 3). The characters of the original Book of Mormon writing most closely resemble Meroitic, a "reformed Egyptian" known from an Egyptian colony established on the upper Nile River in the same period (see ANTHON TRANSCRIPT; BOOK OF MORMON LANGUAGE). Proper names in the Book of Mormon include Ammon (the most common name in both 26th Dynasty Egypt [664–525 B.C.] and the Book of Mormon); Alma, which has long been derided for its usage as a man's name (now found in the Bar Kokhba letters as "Alma, son of Judah"); Aha, a Similar to the horn altar from Israel is this four-cornered altar or incense burner from Oaxaca, Mexico, dating to the Monte Alban I period (c. 500–100 B.C.) Specimen in Museo-Frissell, Oaxaca, Mexico. Courtesy F.A.R.M.S.

Nephite general (cf. Egyptian aha, “warrior”); Paankhi (an important royal name of the Egyptian Late Period [525–332 B.C.]); Hermounts, a country of wild beasts (cf. Egyptian Hermonthis, god of wild places); Laman and Lemuel, “pendant names” commonly given to eldest sons (cf. Qabil and Habil, Harut and Marut); Lehi, a proper name (found on an ancient potsherd in Ebion Gezer about 1938); Manti, a form of the Egyptian god Month; Korihor (cf. Egyptian Herhor, Horihor); and Giddianhi (cf. Egyptian Djhwiti-ankhi, “Thoth is my life”), etc. (CWNH 5:25–34; 6:281–94; 7:149–52, 168–72; 8:281–82; see BOOK OF MORMON NAMES).

7. The authenticity of the GOLD PLATES on which the Book of Mormon was inscribed has often been questioned until the finding of the Darius Plates in 1938. Many other examples of sacred and historical writing on metal plates have been found since (C. Wright in By Study and Also by Faith, 2:273–334, ed. J. Lundquist and S. Ricks, Salt Lake City, 1990). The brass (bronze) plates recall the Copper Scroll of the Dead Sea Scrolls, the metal being used to preserve particularly valuable information, namely the hiding places of treasures—scrolls, money, sacred utensils—concealed from the enemy. The Nephites were commanded, “They shall hide up their treasures . . . when they shall flee before their enemies;” but if such treasures are used for private purposes thereafter, “because they will not hide them up unto [God], cursed be they and also their treasures” (Hel. 13:19–20; CWHN 5:105–107; 6:21–28; 7:56–57, 220–21, 272–74).

8. In sharp contrast to other cultures in the book, the JAREDITES carried on the warring ways of the steppes of Asia “upon this north country” (Ether 1, 3–6). Issuing forth from the well-known dispersion center of the great migrations in western Asia, they accepted all volunteers in a mass migration (Ether 1:41–42). Moving across central Asia they crossed shallow seas in barges (Ether 2:5–6). Such great inland seas were left over from the last ice age (CWHN 5:183–85, 194–96). Reaching the “great sea” (possibly the Pacific), they built ships with covered decks and peaked ends, “after the manner of Noah’s ark” (Ether 6:7), closely resembling the prehistoric “magur boats” of Mesopotamia. The eight ships were lit by shining stones, as was Noah’s Ark according to the Palestinian Talmud, the stones mentioned in the Talmud and elsewhere being produced by a peculiar process described in ancient legends. Such arrangements were necessary because of “the furious wind . . . [that] did never cease to blow” (Ether 6:5, 8). In this connection, there are many ancient accounts of the “windflood”—tremendous winds sustained over a period of time—that followed the Flood and destroyed the Tower (CWHN 5:359–79; 6:329–34; 7:208–10).

9. The society of the Book of Ether is that of the “Epic Milieu” or “Heroic Age,” a product of world upheaval and forced migrations (cf. descriptions in H. M. Chadwick, The Growth of Literature, 3 vols., Cambridge, 1932–1940). On the boundless plains loyalty must be secured by oaths, which are broken as individuals seek ever more power and gain. Kings’ sons or brothers rebel to form new armies and empires, sometimes putting the king and his family under lifelong house arrest, while “drawing off” followers by gifts and lands in feudal fashion. Regal splendor is built on prison labor; there are plots and counterplots, feuds, and vendettas. War is played like a chess game with times and places set for battle and challenges by trumpet and messenger, all culminating in the personal duel of the rulers, winner take all. This makes for wars of extermination and total social breakdown with “every man with his band fighting for that which he desired” (Ether 7–15; CWHN 5:231–37, 285–307).

10. Elements of the archaic matriarchy were brought from the Old World by Book of Mormon peoples (Ether 8:9–10). For instance, a Jaredite queen plots to put a young successor on the throne by treachery or a duel, and then supplants him with another, remaining in charge like the ancient perennial Great Mother in a royal court (cf. CWHN 5:210–13). The mother-goddess apparently turns up also among the Nephites in a cult-place (Siron), where the harlot Isabel and her associates were visited by crowds of devotees (Alma 39:3–4, 11); Isabel was the name of the great hierodule of the Phoenicians (CWHN 8:542).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Nibley, Hugh W. CWHN, Vols. 5–8. Salt Lake City, 1988–1989.

HUGH W. NIBLEY

BOOK OF MORMON PEOPLES

At least fifteen distinct groups of people are mentioned in the Book of Mormon. Four (NEPHITES, LAMANITES, JAREDITES, and the people of Zarahemla [Mulekites]) played a primary role; five were of secondary concern; and six more were tertiary elements.

NEPHITES. The core of this group were direct descendants of NEPHI<sup>1</sup>, the son of founding father LEHI. Political leadership within the Nephite wing of the colony was “conferred upon none but those who were descendants of Nephi” (Mosiah 25:13). Not only the early kings and judges but even the last military commander of the Nephites, MORMON, qualified in this regard (he explicitly notes that he was “a pure descendant of Lehi” [3 Ne. 5:20] and “a descendant of Nephi” [Morm. 1:5]).

In a broader sense, “Nephites” was a label given all those governed by a Nephite ruler, as in Jacob 1:13: “The people which were not Lamanites were Nephites; nevertheless, they were called [when specified according to descent] Nephites, Jacobites, Josephites, Zoramites, Lamanites, Lemuelites, and Ishmaelites.” It is interesting to note that groups without direct ancestral connections could come under the Nephite sociopolitical umbrella. Thus, “all the people of Zarahemla were numbered with the Nephites” (Mosiah 25:13). This process of political amalgamation had kinship overtones in many instances, as when a body of converted Lamanites “took upon themselves the name of Nephi, that they might be called the children of Nephi and be numbered among those who were called Nephites” (Mosiah 25:12). The odd phrase “the people of the Nephites” in such places as Alma 54:14 and Helaman 1:1 suggests a social structure where possibly varied populations (“the people”) were controlled by an elite (“the Nephites”).

Being a Nephite could also entail a set of religious beliefs and practices (Alma 48:9–10; 4 Ne. 1:36–37) as well as participation in a cultural tradition (Enos 1:21; Hel. 3:16). Most Nephites seem to have been physically distinguishable from the Lamanites (Jacob 3:5; Alma 55:4, 8; 3 Ne. 2:15).

The sociocultural and political unity implied by the use of the general title “Nephites” is belied by the historical record, which documents a long series of “dissensions” within and from Nephite rule, with large numbers periodically leaving to join the Lamanites (Alma 31:8; 43:13; Hel. 1:15).

The Book of Mormon—a religiously oriented lineage history—is primarily a record of events kept by and centrally involving the Nephites. Since the account was written from the perspective of this people (actually, of its leaders), all other groups are understood and represented from the point of view of Nephite elites. There are only fragments in the Nephite record that indicate directly the perspectives of other groups, or even of Nephite commoners.

LAMANITES. This name, too, was applied in several ways. Direct descendants of Laman, Lehi’s eldest son, constituted the backbone of the Lamanites, broadly speaking (Jacob 1:13–14; 4 Ne. 1:38–39). The “Lemuelites” and “Ishmaelites,” who allied themselves with the descendants of Laman in belief and behavior, were also called Lamanites (Jacob 1:13–14). So were “all the dissenters of [from] the Nephites” (Alma 47:35). This terminology was used in the Nephite record, although one cannot be sure that all dissenters applied the term to themselves. However, at least one such dissenter, Ammoron, a Zoramite, bragged, “I am a bold Lamanite” (Alma 54:24).

Rulers in the Lamanite system appear to have had more difficulty than Nephite rulers in binding component social groups into a common polity (Alma 17:27–35; 20:4, 7, 9, 14–15; 47:1–3). They seem to have depended more on charisma or compulsion than on shared tradition, ideals, or an apparatus of officials. Whether a rule existed that Lamanite kings be descendants of Laman is unclear. Early in the second century B.C. two successive Lamanite kings were called Laman (Mosiah 7:21; 24:3); since this designation was being interpreted across a cultural boundary by a record keeper of Nephite culture, it is possible that “Laman” was really a title of office, in the same manner that Nephite kings bore the title “Nephi” (Jacob 1:9–11). Later, however, Lamoni, a local Lamanite ruler, is described as “a descendant of Ishmael,” not of Laman (Alma 17:21), and his father, king over the entire land of Nephi (originally a homeland of the Nephites, but taken and occupied by the Lamanites throughout much of the remainder of Book of Mormon history), would have had the same ancestry. Evidently, if there was a rule that Laman's descendants inherit the throne, it was inconsistently applied. Moreover, Amalickiah and his brother, both Nephite dissenters, gained the Lamanite throne and claimed legitimacy (Alma 47:35; 52:3).

Repeatedly, the Lamanites are said to have been far more numerous than the Nephites (Jarom 1:6; Mosiah 25:3; Hel. 4:25), a fact that might appear to be inconsistent with the early Nephite characterization of them as savage hunters, which normally require much more land per person than farmers require (Enos 1:20; Jarom 1:6). The expression "people of the Lamanites" (Alma 23:9–12) may indicate that Lamanite elites dominated a disparate peasantry.

The few direct glimpses that Nephite history allows of the Lamanites indicate a level well beyond "savage" culture, though short of the "civilization" claimed for the Nephites. Perhaps their sophistication was due somewhat to the influence of Nephite dissenters among them (see Mosiah 24:3–7). Apparently some Lamanites proved apt learners from this source; moreover, those converted to the prophetic religion taught by Nephite missionaries are usually described as exemplary (Alma 23:5–7; 56; Hel. 6:1).

THE PEOPLE OF ZARAHÉMLA (MULEKITES). In the third century B.C., when the Nephite leader Mosiah<sub>1</sub> and his company moved from the land of Nephi down to the Sidon river, "they discovered a people, who were called the people of Zarahemla" (Omni 1:13–14) because their ruler bore that name. These people were descendants of a party that fled the Babylonian conquest of Jerusalem in 586 B.C., among whom was a son of the Jewish king Zedekiah, MULEK. Hence Latter-day Saints often refer to the descendants of this group of people as Mulekites, although the Book of Mormon never uses the term. When discovered by the Nephites around 200 B.C., this people was "exceedingly numerous," although culturally degenerate due to illiteracy and warfare (Omni 1:16–17). The Nephite account says the combined population welcomed Mosiah as king.

Mosiah found that the people of Zarahemla had discovered the last known survivor of the Jaredites shortly before his death. By that means, or through survivors not mentioned, elements of Jaredite culture seem to have been brought to the Nephites by the people of Zarahemla (CWHN 5:238–47). The fact that the people of Zarahemla spoke a language unintelligible to the Nephites further hints at an ethnic makeup more diverse than the brief text suggests, which assumes a solely Jewish origin.

The Mulekites are little referred to later, probably because they were amalgamated thoroughly into eclectic Nephite society (Mosiah 25:13). However, as late as 51 B.C., a Lamanite affiliate who was a descendant of king Zarahemla attacked and gained brief control over the Nephite capital (Hel. 1:15–34).

JAREDITES. This earliest people referred to in the Book of Mormon originated in Mesopotamia at the "great tower" referred to in Genesis 11. From there a group of probably eight families journeyed to America under divine guidance.

The existing record is a summary by MORONI<sub>2</sub>, last custodian of the Nephite records, of a history written on gold plates by Ether, the final Jaredite prophet, around the middle of the first millennium B.C. Shaped by the editorial hands of Ether, MORONI<sub>2</sub>, and MOSIAH<sub>2</sub> (Mosiah 28:11–17), and by the demand for brevity, the account gives but a skeletal narrative covering more than two millennia of Jaredite history. Most of it concerns just one of the eight lineages, Jared's, the ruling line to which Ether belonged, hence the name Jaredites (see BOOK OF MORMON PLATES AND RECORDS).

Eventually a flourishing cultural tradition developed (Ether 10:21–27), although maintaining a viable population seems to have been a struggle at times (Ether 9:30–34; 11:6–7). By the end, millions were reported victims of wars of extermination witnessed by the prophet Ether (Ether 15:2). A single survivor, Coriantumr, the last king, was encountered by the people of Zarahemla sometime before 200 B.C., although it is plausible that several remote groups also could have survived to meld unnoticed by historians into the successor Mulekite and Lamanite populations.

SECONDARY GROUPS. The same seven lineage groups are mentioned among Lehi's descendants near the beginning of the Nephite record and again 900 years later (Jacob 1:13; Morm. 1:8). Each was named after a first-generation ancestor and presumably consisted of his descendants. Among the Nephites there were four: Nephites proper, Jacobites, Josephites, and Zoramites. Within the Lamanite faction, Laman's own descendants were joined by the Lemuelites and Ishmaelites. These divisions disappeared after the appearance of Christ at Bountiful (there were neither “Lamanites, nor any manner of -ites” [4 Ne. 1:17]), but that descent was not forgotten, for the old lineages later reappeared (4 Ne. 1:20, 36–37). What might have happened was that some public functions that the groups had filled were taken over for several generations by the Christian church, which they all had joined. Based on analogy to social systems in related lands, it is possible that membership in these seven groups governed marriage selection and property inheritance, and perhaps residence (Alma 31:3). The Lemuelites evidently had their own city (Alma 23:12–13), and descent determined where the Nephites and the people of Zarahemla sat during Mosiah<sub>2</sub>’s politico-religious assembly (Mosiah 25:4; cf. 25:21–23). Such functions may also have been filled by groups other than the seven lineages.

The seven lineage groups may be referred to as “tribes,” as in 3 Nephi 7:2–4. Immediately before the natural disasters that signaled the crucifixion of Jesus Christ, Nephite social unity collapsed, and they “did separate one from another into tribes, every man according to his family and his kindred and friends; . . . therefore their tribes became exceedingly great” (3 Ne. 7:2–4).

The Jacobites are always listed first of the three secondary peoples among the Nephites. They were descendants of Nephi’s younger brother, Jacob. Nothing is said of them as a group except that they were counted as Nephites politically and culturally. Since Jacob himself was chief priest under the kingship of his brother Nephi, and since he and his descendants maintained the religious records begun by Nephi, it is possible that the Jacobites as a lineage group bore some special priestly responsibilities.

The Josephites are implied to have been descendants of Joseph, Nephi’s youngest brother. The text is silent on any distinctive characteristics.

The Zoramites descended from Zoram, Laban’s servant who agreed under duress to join the party of Lehi following the slaying of Laban in Jerusalem (1 Ne. 4:31–37). Both early and late in the account (Jacob 1:13 and 4 Ne. 1:36), the Zoramites are listed in alignment with Nephi’s descendants, although around 75 B.C. at least some of them dissented for a time and joined the Lamanite alliance (Alma 43:4). As they were then “appointed . . . chief captains” over the Lamanite armies (Alma 48:5), they may earlier have played a formal military role among the Nephites. A reason for their split with the Nephites was evidently recollection of what had happened to their founding ancestor: Ammoron, dissenter from the Nephites and king of the Lamanites in the first century B.C., recalled: “I am . . . a descendant of Zoram, whom your fathers pressed and brought out of Jerusalem” (Alma 54:23).

During their dissidence, their worship, characterized as idolatrous yet directed to a god of spirit, was conducted in “synagogues” from which the wealthy drove out the poor (Alma 31:1, 9–11; 32:5). Their practices departed from both Nephite ways and the LAW OF MOSES (Alma 31:9–12). Shortly after the signs marking the birth of Christ and almost eight years after the earliest mention of their separation from the Nephites, these Zoramites were still dissident and were luring naive Nephites to join the Gadianton robbers by means of “lyings” and “flattering words” (3 Ne. 1:29). Yet two centuries later they were back in the Nephite fold (4 Ne. 1:36).

The list of secondary peoples among the Lamanites starts with the Lemuelites. Presumably they were the posterity of Lehi’s second eldest son, Lemuel. Nothing is said of the group as a separate entity other than routine listings among the Nephites’ enemies (Jacob 1:13–14; Morm. 1:8–9), although a “city of Lemuel” is mentioned in Alma 23:12.

The Ishmaelites were descendants of the father-in-law of Nephi and his brothers (1 Ne. 7:2–5). Why Ishmael’s sons (1 Ne. 7:6) did not found separate lineages of their own is nowhere indicated. As with the other secondary groups, there is little to go on in characterizing the Ishmaelites. At one time they occupied a particular land of Ishmael within the greater land of Nephi, where one of their number, Lamoni, ruled (Alma 17:21).

Somehow, by the days of Ammon and his fellow missionaries (first century B.C.), the Ishmaelites had gained the throne over the entire land of Nephi as well as kingship over some component kingdoms. (Alma 20:9 has the grand king implying that Lamoni’s brothers, too, were rulers.) Yet the king recited the familiar Lamanite litany of complaint about how in the first generation Nephi had “robbed our fathers” of the right to rule (Alma 20:13). Evidently he was a culturally loyal Lamanite even though of a minor lineage.

The final information known about both Ishmaelites and Lemuelites is their presence in the combined armies fighting against the Nephites in Mormon's day (Morm. 1:8). Presumably their contingents were involved in the final slaughter of the Nephites at CUMORAH.

TERTIARY GROUPS. Six other groups qualify as peoples, even though they did not exhibit the staying power of the seven lineages.

The earliest described are the people of Zeniff (Zeniffites). Zeniff, a Nephite, about half a century after Mosiah had first discovered the people and land of Zarahemla, led a group out of Zarahemla who were anxious to resettle "the land of Nephi, or . . . the land of our fathers' first inheritance" (Mosiah 9:1). Welcomed at first by the Lamanites there, in time they found themselves forced to pay a high tax to their overlords. A long section on them in the book of Mosiah (Mosiah 9–24) relates their dramatic temporal and spiritual experiences over three generations until they were able to escape back to Zarahemla. There they became Nephites again, although perhaps they retained some residential and religious autonomy as one of the "seven churches" (Mosiah 25:23).

Two groups splintered off from the people of Zeniff. The people of Alma<sub>1</sub> were religious refugees who believed in the words of the prophet Abinadi and fled from oppression and wickedness under King Noah, the second Zeniffite king (Mosiah 18, 23–24). Numbering in the hundreds, they maintained independent social and political status for less than twenty-five years before escaping from Lamanite control and returning to Nephite territory, where they established the "church of God" in Zarahemla (Mosiah 25:18) but soon disappeared from the record as an identifiable group.

The second Zeniffite fragment started when the priests of King Noah, headed by Amulon, fled into the wilderness to avoid execution by their rebellious subjects. In the course of their escape, they kidnapped Lamanite women and took them as wives, thus founding the Amulonites in a land where they established their own version of Nephite culture (Mosiah 24:1). In time, they adopted the religious "order of Nehor" (see below), usurped political and military leadership, and "stirred up" the Lamanites to attack the Nephites (Alma 21:4; 24:1–2; 25:1–5). They and the Amalekites (see below) helped the Lamanites construct a city named Jerusalem in the land of Nephi. Judging from brief statements by the Nephites (Mosiah 12–13; Alma 21:5–10), both Amulonites and Amalekites saw themselves as defenders of a belief system based on the Old Testament, which no doubt explains the naming of their city.

One of the earliest groups of Nephite dissenters was the Amlicites. Ambitious Amlici, a disciple of Nehor, likely claiming noble birth (Alma 51:8), gathered a large body of followers and challenged the innovative Nephite system of rule by judges instituted by Mosiah<sub>2</sub>; Amlici wished to be king. When his aim was defeated by "the voice of the people," he plotted an attack coordinated with the Lamanites that nearly succeeded in capturing Zarahemla, the Nephite capital. Loyal forces under ALMA<sub>2</sub> finally succeeded in destroying or scattering the enemy (Alma 2:1–31). Amlici was slain, but the fate of his forces is unclear. Likely, elements of them went with the defeated Lamanite army to the land of Nephi. The name Amlicite is not used thereafter.

Another group of Nephite dissenters, the Amalekites, lived in the land of Nephi (Alma 21:2–3; 43:13). Their origin is never explained. However, based on the names and dates, it is possible that they constituted the Amlicite remnant previously mentioned, their new name possibly arising by "lamanitization" of the original. They were better armed than common Lamanites (Alma 43:20) and, like some Zoramites, were made military leaders within the Lamanite army because of their "more wicked and murderous disposition" (Alma 43:6). From the record of the Nephite missionaries, we learn that they believed in a god (Alma 22:7). Many of them, like the Amlicites, belonged to the religious order of Nehor and built sanctuaries or synagogues where they worshipped (Alma 21:4, 6). Like the Amulonites, they adamantly resisted accepting Nephite orthodox religion (Alma 23:14). Instead, they believed that God would save all people. From their first mention to the last, only about fifteen years elapsed.

During a fourteen-year mission in the land of Nephi, the Nephite missionaries Ammon and his brothers gained many Lamanite converts (Alma 17–26). A Lamanite king, Lamoni, who was among these converts, gave the Lamanite converts the name Anti-Nephi-Lehies. These people were singularly distinguished by their firm commitment to the gospel of Jesus Christ, including, most prominently, the Savior's injunctions to love one's enemies and not to resist evil (3 Ne. 12:39, 44; Matt. 5:39, 44). Ammon maintained that in Christlike love this people exceeded the Nephites (Alma 26:33). After their conversion, the Book of Mormon says, they “had no more desire to do evil” (Alma 19:33) and “did not fight against God any more, neither against any of their brethren” (Alma 23:7). Having previously shed human blood, they covenanted as a people never again to take human life (Alma 24:6) and even buried all their weapons (Alma 24:17). They would not defend themselves when attacked by Lamanites, and 1,005 of them were killed (Alma 24:22). Ammon urged the vulnerable Anti-Nephi-Lehies to flee to Nephite territory. Among the Nephites they became known as the people of Ammon (or Ammonites; see Alma 56:57). They ended up in a separate locale within the Nephite domain, the land of Jereshon (Alma 27:26). Later, they moved en masse to the land of Melek (Alma 35:13), where they were joined from time to time by other Lamanite refugees.

Some years later, desiring to assist the Nephite armies in defending the land but not wishing to break their covenant (Alma 53:13), the people of Ammon sent 2,000 of their willing sons to be soldiers, since their sons had not taken the covenant of nonviolence that they had. These “two thousand stripling soldiers” (Alma 53:22) became known as the sons of Helaman, their Nephite leader, and had much success in battle (Alma 56:56). Although they were all wounded, none were ever killed, a remarkable blessing ascribed “to the miraculous power of God, because of their exceeding faith” (Alma 57:26; cf. 56:47).

According to Helaman 3:11, a generation later some of the people of Ammon migrated into “the land northward.” This is the last mention of them in the Book of Mormon.

OTHER GROUPS. Among the other groups mentioned in the Book of Mormon are the widespread secret combinations or “robbers.” Yet these groups do not qualify as “peoples” but as associations, which individuals could join or leave on their own volition.

Another group, the “order of Nehor,” was a cult centered around the ideas that priests should be paid and that God would redeem all people. They were not really a “people” in the technical sense—the term implies a biological continuity that a cult lacks.

The inhabitants of separate cities were also sometimes called peoples. Local beliefs and customs no doubt distinguished them from each other, but insufficient detail prohibits describing units of this scale.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Nibley, Hugh W. Lehi in the Desert; The World of the Jaredites; There Were Jaredites. CWHN 5. Salt Lake City, 1988.
- Sorenson, John L. An Ancient American Setting for the Book of Mormon. Salt Lake City, 1985.
- Weleh, John W. “Lehi’s Last Will and Testament: A Legal Approach.” In The Book of Mormon: Second Nephi, The Doctrinal Structure, ed. M. Nyman and C. Tate, pp. 61–82. Provo, Utah, 1989.

JOHN L. SORENSON

---

BOOK OF MORMON PERSONALITIES

[The experiences, thoughts, feelings, and personalities of several individuals are brought to light in the Book of Mormon. Jesus Christ is central in the book; see Jesus Christ in the Book of Mormon.

The founding prophet was Lehi. For articles concerning him and members of his family, see Lehi; Laman; Nephi<sub>1</sub>; Jacob; and Ishmael. Concerning Lehi’s wife, Sariah, and the other women of the Book of Mormon, see Women in the Book of Mormon.

The last Nephite king (153–90 B.C.) was Mosiah<sub>2</sub>. For articles on his grandfather, father, and brother, see Mosiah<sub>1</sub>, Benjamin, Helaman<sub>1</sub>. From 90 B.C. to A.D. 321 the Nephite records were kept by descendants of Alma<sub>1</sub>; see Alma<sub>1</sub>; Alma<sub>2</sub>; Helaman<sub>2</sub>; Helaman<sub>3</sub>; Nephi<sub>2</sub>; Nephi<sub>3</sub>; Nephi<sub>4</sub>. The last Nephite prophets, military leaders, and historians were Mormon and his son, Moroni<sub>2</sub>, named after an earlier chief captain Moroni<sub>1</sub>.

Four other prophets figure prominently in the Book of Mormon; see Abinadi; Amulek; Samuel the Lamanite; and Brother of Jared. Prophets from the Old World quoted in the Book of Mormon include Ezias; Isaiah; Joseph; Moses; Neum; Zenock; and Zenos. Regarding the various groups of people in the Book of Mormon, see Book of Mormon Peoples; Jaredites; Lamanites; Mulek; and Nephites. See also Book of Mormon Names.]

---

BOOK OF MORMON PLATES AND RECORDS

The Book of Mormon is a complex text with a complicated history. It is primarily an abridgment of several earlier records by its chief editor and namesake, MORMON. All these records are referred to as “plates” because they were engraved on thin love this people exceeded the Nephites (Alma 26:33). After their conversion, the Book of Mormon says, they “had no more desire to do evil” (Alma 19:33) and “did not fight against God any more, neither against any of their brethren” (Alma 23:7). Having previously shed human blood, they covenanted as a people never again to take human life (Alma 24:6) and even buried all their weapons (Alma 24:17). They would not defend themselves when attacked by Lamanites, and 1,005 of them were killed (Alma 24:22). Ammon urged the vulnerable Anti-Nephi-Lehies to flee to Nephite territory. Among the Nephites they became known as the people of Ammon (or Ammonites; see Alma 56:57). They ended up in a separate locale within the Nephite domain, the land of Jereshon (Alma 27:26). Later, they moved en masse to the land of Melek (Alma 35:13), where they were joined from time to time by other Lamanite refugees.

Some years later, desiring to assist the Nephite armies in defending the land but not wishing to break their covenant (Alma 53:13), the people of Ammon sent 2,000 of their willing sons to be soldiers, since their sons had not taken the covenant of nonviolence that they had. These “two thousand stripling soldiers” (Alma 53:22) became known as the sons of Helaman, their Nephite leader, and had much success in battle (Alma 56:56). Although they were all wounded, none were ever killed, a remarkable blessing ascribed “to the miraculous power of God, because of their exceeding faith” (Alma 57:26; cf. 56:47).

According to Helaman 3:11, a generation later some of the people of Ammon migrated into “the land northward.” This is the last mention of them in the Book of Mormon.

OTHER GROUPS. Among the other groups mentioned in the Book of Mormon are the widespread secret combinations or “robbers.” Yet these groups do not qualify as “peoples” but as associations, which individuals could join or leave on their own volition.

Another group, the “order of Nehor,” was a cult centered around the ideas that priests should be paid and that God would redeem all people. They were not really a “people” in the technical sense—the term implies a biological continuity that a cult lacks.

The inhabitants of separate cities were also sometimes called peoples. Local beliefs and customs no doubt distinguished them from each other, but insufficient detail prohibits describing units of this scale.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Nibley, Hugh W. Lehi in the Desert; The World of the Jaredites; There Were Jaredites. CWHN 5. Salt Lake City, 1988.
- Sorenson, John L. An Ancient American Setting for the Book of Mormon. Salt Lake City, 1985.
- Weleh, John W. “Lehi’s Last Will and Testament: A Legal Approach.” In The Book of Mormon: Second Nephi, The Doctrinal Structure, ed. M. Nyman and C. Tate, pp. 61–82. Provo, Utah, 1989.

JOHN L. SORENSON

---

BOOK OF MORMON PERSONALITIES

[The experiences, thoughts, feelings, and personalities of several individuals are brought to light in the Book of Mormon. Jesus Christ is central in the book; see Jesus Christ in the Book of Mormon.

The founding prophet was Lehi. For articles concerning him and members of his family, see Lehi; Laman; Nephi<sub>1</sub>; Jacob; and Ishmael. Concerning Lehi’s wife, Sariah, and the other women of the Book of Mormon, see Women in the Book of Mormon.

The last Nephite king (153–90 B.C.) was Mosiah<sub>2</sub>. For articles on his grandfather, father, and brother, see Mosiah<sub>1</sub>, Benjamin, Helaman<sub>1</sub>. From 90 B.C. to A.D. 321 the Nephite records were kept by descendants of Alma<sub>1</sub>; see Alma<sub>1</sub>; Alma<sub>2</sub>; Helaman<sub>2</sub>; Helaman<sub>3</sub>; Nephi<sub>2</sub>; Nephi<sub>3</sub>; Nephi<sub>4</sub>. The last Nephite prophets, military leaders, and historians were Mormon and his son, Moroni<sub>2</sub>, named after an earlier chief captain Moroni<sub>1</sub>.

Four other prophets figure prominently in the Book of Mormon; see Abinadi; Amulek; Samuel the Lamanite; and Brother of Jared. Prophets from the Old World quoted in the Book of Mormon include Ezias; Isaiah; Joseph; Moses; Neum; Zenock; and Zenos. Regarding the various groups of people in the Book of Mormon, see Book of Mormon Peoples; Jaredites; Lamanites; Mulek; and Nephites. See also Book of Mormon Names.]

---

BOOK OF MORMON PLATES AND RECORDS

The Book of Mormon is a complex text with a complicated history. It is primarily an abridgment of several earlier records by its chief editor and namesake, MORMON. All these records are referred to as “plates” because they were engraved on thin love this people exceeded the Nephites (Alma 26:33). After their conversion, the Book of Mormon says, they “had no more desire to do evil” (Alma 19:33) and “did not fight against God any more, neither against any of their brethren” (Alma 23:7). Having previously shed human blood, they covenanted as a people never again to take human life (Alma 24:6) and even buried all their weapons (Alma 24:17). They would not defend themselves when attacked by Lamanites, and 1,005 of them were killed (Alma 24:22). Ammon urged the vulnerable Anti-Nephi-Lehies to flee to Nephite territory. Among the Nephites they became known as the people of Ammon (or Ammonites; see Alma 56:57). They ended up in a separate locale within the Nephite domain, the land of Jereshon (Alma 27:26). Later, they moved en masse to the land of Melek (Alma 35:13), where they were joined from time to time by other Lamanite refugees.

Some years later, desiring to assist the Nephite armies in defending the land but not wishing to break their covenant (Alma 53:13), the people of Ammon sent 2,000 of their willing sons to be soldiers, since their sons had not taken the covenant of nonviolence that they had. These “two thousand stripling soldiers” (Alma 53:22) became known as the sons of Helaman, their Nephite leader, and had much success in battle (Alma 56:56). Although they were all wounded, none were ever killed, a remarkable blessing ascribed “to the miraculous power of God, because of their exceeding faith” (Alma 57:26; cf. 56:47).

According to Helaman 3:11, a generation later some of the people of Ammon migrated into “the land northward.” This is the last mention of them in the Book of Mormon.

OTHER GROUPS. Among the other groups mentioned in the Book of Mormon are the widespread secret combinations or “robbers.” Yet these groups do not qualify as “peoples” but as associations, which individuals could join or leave on their own volition.

Another group, the “order of Nehor,” was a cult centered around the ideas that priests should be paid and that God would redeem all people. They were not really a “people” in the technical sense—the term implies a biological continuity that a cult lacks.

The inhabitants of separate cities were also sometimes called peoples. Local beliefs and customs no doubt distinguished them from each other, but insufficient detail prohibits describing units of this scale.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Nibley, Hugh W. Lehi in the Desert; The World of the Jaredites; There Were Jaredites. CWHN 5. Salt Lake City, 1988.
- Sorenson, John L. An Ancient American Setting for the Book of Mormon. Salt Lake City, 1985.
- Weleh, John W. “Lehi’s Last Will and Testament: A Legal Approach.” In The Book of Mormon: Second Nephi, The Doctrinal Structure, ed. M. Nyman and C. Tate, pp. 61–82. Provo, Utah, 1989.

JOHN L. SORENSON

---

BOOK OF MORMON PERSONALITIES

[The experiences, thoughts, feelings, and personalities of several individuals are brought to light in the Book of Mormon. Jesus Christ is central in the book; see Jesus Christ in the Book of Mormon.

The founding prophet was Lehi. For articles concerning him and members of his family, see Lehi; Laman; Nephi<sub>1</sub>; Jacob; and Ishmael. Concerning Lehi’s wife, Sariah, and the other women of the Book of Mormon, see Women in the Book of Mormon.

The last Nephite king (153–90 B.C.) was Mosiah<sub>2</sub>. For articles on his grandfather, father, and brother, see Mosiah<sub>1</sub>, Benjamin, Helaman<sub>1</sub>. From 90 B.C. to A.D. 321 the Nephite records were kept by descendants of Alma<sub>1</sub>; see Alma<sub>1</sub>; Alma<sub>2</sub>; Helaman<sub>2</sub>; Helaman<sub>3</sub>; Nephi<sub>2</sub>; Nephi<sub>3</sub>; Nephi<sub>4</sub>. The last Nephite prophets, military leaders, and historians were Mormon and his son, Moroni<sub>2</sub>, named after an earlier chief captain Moroni<sub>1</sub>.

Four other prophets figure prominently in the Book of Mormon; see Abinadi; Amulek; Samuel the Lamanite; and Brother of Jared. Prophets from the Old World quoted in the Book of Mormon include Ezias; Isaiah; Joseph; Moses; Neum; Zenock; and Zenos. Regarding the various groups of people in the Book of Mormon, see Book of Mormon Peoples; Jaredites; Lamanites; Mulek; and Nephites. See also Book of Mormon Names.]

---

BOOK OF MORMON PLATES AND RECORDS

The Book of Mormon is a complex text with a complicated history. It is primarily an abridgment of several earlier records by its chief editor and namesake, MORMON. All these records are referred to as “plates” because they were engraved on thin sheets of metal. Various source documents were used by Mormon in his compilation, leading to abrupt transitions and chronological disjunctions that can confuse readers. However, when one is aware of the history of the text, these are consistent and make good sense. The various plates and records referred to in the Book of Mormon and used in making it are (1) the plates of brass; (2) the record of LEHI; (3) the large plates of NEPHI<sub>1</sub>; (4) the small plates of Nephi; (5) the plates of Mormon; and (6) the twenty-four gold plates of Ether.

THE GOLD PLATES. The GOLD PLATES that the Prophet Joseph SMITH received and translated were the plates of Mormon on which Mormon and his son MORONI<sub>2</sub> made their abridgment. Mormon, a prophet and military leader who lived at the end of the NEPHITE era (c. A.D. 385), was the penultimate custodian of the records of earlier Nephite prophets and rulers. In particular, he had the large plates of Nephi, which were the official Nephite chronicle and which he was commanded to continue (Morm. 1:4). He later made his own plates of Mormon, on which he compiled an abridgment of the large plates of Nephi (W of M 1:3–5; 3 Ne. 5:9–10), which covered 985 years of Nephite history, from Lehi's day to his. The large plates drew on still earlier records and the writings of various prophets and frequently included various source materials such as letters, blessings, discourses, and memoirs.

After Mormon had completed his abridgment through the reign of King BENJAMIN (c. 130 B.C.), he discovered the small plates of Nephi, a separate history of the same time period focusing on the spiritual events of those years and quoting extensively from the plates of brass. Inspired to add the small plates of Nephi to his own record, Mormon inserted a brief explanation for the double account of early Nephite history (W of M 1:2–9).

Mormon continued his abridgment, selecting from the large plates, paraphrasing, and often adding his own comments, extending the account down to his time. Anticipating death, he passed the plates to his son Moroni. Over the next few decades, Moroni wandered alone, making additions to his father's record, including two chapters now included in a book previously abridged by his father (Morm. 7–8) and an account of the JAREDITES that he had abridged from the twenty-four gold plates of Ether. He also copied an extensive vision of the last days that had been recorded by an early Jaredite prophet, the BROTHER OF JARED, and which Moroni was commanded to seal (Ether 4:4–5). He also added brief notes on church rituals (Moro. 1–6), a sermon and two letters from his father (Moro. 7–9), and an exhortation to future readers (Moro. 10). Finally, Moroni took this somewhat heterogeneous collection of records—the plates of Mormon, the small plates of Nephi, his abridgment of the plates of Ether, and the sealed portion containing the vision of the brother of Jared—and buried them in the earth. About 1,400 years later, in 1823, Moroni, now resurrected, appeared to the Prophet Joseph Smith and revealed the location of these records. The plates of Mormon, which, except for the sealed portion, were subsequently translated by Joseph Smith, are known today as the gold plates.

This gold plate of Darius proclaims his majesty and the vast extent of his Persian empire. It was buried in a neatly made stone box in 516–515 B.C. at Persepolis. This gold plate and its duplicate silver tablet were discovered in 1933. Similarly, the Nephites of the sixth century B.C. kept two sets of records on gold plates, one of which was buried in a stone box in 421 A.D. Courtesy Paul R. Cheesman.

The present English Book of Mormon, however, is not simply a translation of all those gold plates. Joseph Smith and Martin HARRIS began by translating the plates of Mormon, and when they had reached the reign of King Benjamin, they had 116 pages of translation. Harris borrowed these pages to show to his wife, then lost them, and they were never recovered (see MANUSCRIPT, LOST 116 PAGES). Joseph was commanded not to retranslate this material (D&C 10:30–46), but instead to substitute a translation of the parallel small plates of Nephi, which includes the books of 1 Nephi, 2 Nephi, Jacob, Enos, Jarom, and Omni. Thus, the present Book of Mormon contains only the second account of early Nephite history.

The translation continues from the rest of the plates of Mormon, which were abridged from the large plates of Nephi, and includes the books of Mosiah, Alma, Helaman, 3 Nephi, 4 Nephi, and Mormon (the last two chapters of which were written by Moroni). Next follow Moroni's abridgment of Jaredite history (the book of Ether) and his closing notes (the book of Moroni). Joseph Smith was commanded not to translate the sealed vision of the brother of Jared, which apparently made up a substantial portion of the gold plates (Ludlow, p. 320). Although Joseph Smith translated only from the gold plates, he and his associates saw many other records (JD 19:38; Millennial Star 40 [1878]:771–72).

THE PLATES OF BRASS. It is now known that many ancients of the Mediterranean area wrote on metal plates. "Where the record was one of real importance, plates of copper, bronze, or even more precious metal were used instead of the usual wooden, lead, or clay tablets" (CWHN 5:119; see also H. C. Wright, in Journal of Library History 16 [1981]:48–70). Such a metal record was in the possession of one Laban, a leader in Jerusalem in 600 B.C. How Laban obtained these plates and where they originally came from are not known. Several theories have been advanced, including the possibility that the plates of brass originated in the days of JOSEPH OF EGYPT (Ludlow, p. 56). The Book of Mormon indicates that Laban and his father had inherited and preserved the record because they were descendants of this Joseph (1 Ne. 5:16).

The Book of Mormon does tell how the prophet Lehi came to possess the plates of brass. After fleeing Jerusalem, Lehi was commanded by God to send his sons back to the city to obtain the plates from Laban. When he received them, Lehi found that they contained the five books of Moses, a record of the Jews from the beginning down to the reign of Zedekiah, the prophecies of the holy prophets for that same time period (including some of JEREMIAH's prophecies), and a genealogy of Lehi's fathers (1 Ne. 3–5).

Nephi and succeeding spiritual leaders highly valued the plates of brass. They were passed down by major prophets from Nephi to Mormon, and since they were written in an adapted form of Egyptian (see BOOK OF MORMON LANGUAGE), their keepers were taught to read that language (Mosiah 1:2–4). The plates of brass were the basic scriptures of the Nephite nation, and for centuries their prophets read them, quoted them in sermons, and excerpted material from them to enrich their own writings. For example, when the prophet ABINADI cited the Ten Commandments in a disputation with the priests of Noah, his knowledge of the Ten Commandments was due, at least indirectly, to the plates of brass (Mosiah 12–13). As MOSIAH<sub>2</sub> stated, "For it were not possible that our father, Lehi, could have remembered all these things, to have taught them to his children, except it were for the help of these plates" (Mosiah 1:4).

Book of Mormon records, particularly the small plates of Nephi, occasionally quote at length from the plates of brass, and these quotations include twenty-one complete chapters from Isaiah. Although the translation of these quotations generally follows the wording of the King James Version of the Bible, there are many significant differences, which may indicate the existence of older textual sources (Tvedtnes, pp. 165–77). It is also evident from the scriptural quotations in the Book of Mormon that the plates of brass contained a more extensive record of the writings of Hebrew prophets than does the present Old Testament. For example, the Book of Mormon includes prophecies of Joseph of Egypt that are not found in the Bible, as well as writings of ZENOS, ZENOCK, NEUM, and EZIAS, prophets who are not specifically named in the Old Testament.

THE RECORD OF LEHI. Unfortunately, Mormon's abridgment of the record of Lehi was the material translated in the 116 manuscript pages that were lost, and consequently it is not available in the present Book of Mormon. Lehi wrote an account of his life and spiritual experiences that was included in the large plates of Nephi (1 Ne. 19:1). Mormon abridged this record in his plates, and Joseph Smith translated it, but since it was lost by Martin Harris, very little is now known about it except what can be inferred from references in other texts (Brown, pp. 25–32; see also the preface to the first edition [1830] of the Book of Mormon). When Nephi and JACOB cite the words of Lehi, they seem to be quoting from this now-lost text, and at least the first eight chapters of 1 Nephi (part of the small plates) appear to be based on the record of Lehi. Other passages in the small plates may also have been derived from that record.

THE LARGE PLATES OF NEPHI. Nephi began the large plates soon after his arrival in the New World. They were the official continuous chronicle of the Nephites from the time they left Jerusalem (c. 600 B.C.) until they were destroyed (A.D. 385). Apparently the large plates were divided into books, each named for its primary author. These plates “contained a ‘full account of the history of [Nephi’s] people’ (1 Ne. 9:2, 4; 2 Ne. 4:14; Jacob 1:2–3), the genealogy of Lehi (1 Ne. 19:2) and the ‘more part’ of the teachings of the resurrected Jesus Christ to the Nephite nation (3 Ne. 26:7)” (Ludlow, p. 57). Begun as basically a secular history, they later became a combined record, mingling a thousand years of Nephite history and religious experiences.

The large plates emphasize the covenants made with the house of Israel and quote messianic prophecies of Old World prophets not found in the Old Testament. This information was excerpted from the plates of brass that Lehi’s colony brought with it from Jerusalem. They also record wars and contentions, correspondence between military leaders, and information on various missionary journeys. The interventions and miraculous power of God permeate this history. The recorded sermons of King Benjamin, Abinadi, and ALMA<sub>2</sub> are indicative of these individuals’ deep understanding of the gospel of Jesus Christ and of their faith in his prophesied coming. These plates feature an account of the post-Resurrection ministry and teachings of Christ to the people of the western world (3 Ne. 11–28).

The large plates of Nephi were passed down from king to king until they came into the possession of Mosiah<sub>2</sub>. He added such records as those of Zeniff and ALMA<sub>1</sub> to the large plates and then gave them to Alma<sub>2</sub>. The plates subsequently passed through a line of prophets until Ammaron’s day in the early fourth century A.D. Ammaron chose Mormon, then only a child, to continue the record when he was mature. Mormon recorded the events of his day on the large plates and then used them as the source for his abridgment, which was later buried in the hill CUMORAH. Joseph Smith did not receive the large plates, but the Book of Mormon suggests that they may yet be published to the world (3 Ne. 26:6–10).

THE SMALL PLATES OF NEPHI. Approximately twenty years after beginning the large plates, Nephi was commanded to make another set of plates. This second set was to be reserved for an account of the ministry of his people (1 Ne. 9; 2 Ne. 5:28–33). They were to contain the things considered most precious—“preaching which was sared, or revelation which was great, or prophesying” (Jacob 1:2–4).

The small plates were kept for over four centuries, not quite half the time covered by the large plates, by nine writers: Nephi, Jacob, Enos, Jarom, Omni, Amaron, Chemish, Abinadom, and Amaleki. All of these authors were the sons or brothers of their predecessors. Though these plates include the writings of many over a long time period, 80 percent of the text was written by Nephi, the first writer, and an additional 12 percent by his brother Jacob.

Mormon included the small plates with his record when he delivered the plates of Mormon to his son Moroni because their witness of Christ pleased him and because he was impressed by the Spirit of the Lord to include them “for a wise purpose” (W of M 1:3–7). However, since the small plates covered the historical period already recorded in his abridgment of the record of Lehi (namely, from Lehi down to the reign of King Benjamin) and since the book of Mosiah began with the end of King Benjamin’s reign, Mormon found it necessary to write a brief explanation to show how the small plates of Nephi connect with the book of Mosiah. He entitled this explanation “Words of Mormon.”

While the writers of the small plates recognized the need to provide a historical narrative, their main purpose was to talk of Christ, to preach of Christ, and to prophesy of Christ (2 Ne. 25:26).

Because Nephi was concerned with teaching his people the covenants and promises made to ancient Israel, he extracted these teachings from earlier prophets as recorded on the plates of brass. He quoted extensively from the prophet Isaiah (2 Ne. 12–24; cf. Isa. 2–14) and then wrote a commentary on it, predicting the future of Jews, Lamanites, and Gentiles and prophesying much that would happen in the latter days (2 Ne. 25–30).

Jacob continued his brother's approach by recording his own sermons and a long quotation from and explanation of a prophecy of Zenos. The writings of later authors in the small plates are much briefer and less concerned with spiritual matters.

Amaleki noted in his writings that the small plates were full and turned them over to King Benjamin (Omni 1:25, 30), who then possessed both the large and the small plates of Nephi, as well as the plates of brass. All these sets of plates were handed down from generation to generation until they were entrusted to Mormon.

THE PLATES OF MORMON. After Mormon received the plates, he made a new set on which he engraved his abridgment of the large plates of Nephi (3 Ne. 5:10–11). It is this abridgment plus some additions by Mormon's son Moroni that constitute the gold plates given to Joseph Smith. He described them as follows:

These records were engraven on plates which had the appearance of gold, each plate was six inches wide and eight inches long and not quite so thick as common tin. They were filled with engravings, in Egyptian characters and bound together in a volume, as the leaves of a book with three rings running through the whole. The volume was something near six inches in thickness, a part of which was sealed. The characters on the unsealed part were small, and beautifully engraved [Jessee, p. 214].

The descriptions reported by other witnesses add details which suggest that the plates were composed of a gold alloy (possibly tumbaga) and that they weighed about fifty pounds (Putnam, pp. 788–89, 829–31). Each plate was as thick as parchment or thick paper.

Most of the time, Mormon relied on the large plates of Nephi for his information. Much of the historical narrative in the Book of Mormon appears to be his paraphrase of earlier records, but occasionally first-person documents are worked into the text. For example, in Mosiah 9 and 10 the narrative suddenly includes a first-person account of Zeniff (apparently an earlier document that Mormon simply copied), and then in chapter 11 Mormon's paraphrase resumes. In addition, many sermons, blessings, and letters appear to be reproduced intact.

Nevertheless, some passages can definitely be ascribed to Mormon: the abridgment of his contributions to the large plates (Morm. 1–7), his sermon and letters recorded by Moroni (Moro. 7–9), and the explanatory comments that he inserted into his narrative. In some of these interpolations he identifies himself (W of M; 3 Ne. 5:8–26; 26:6–12; 28:24; 4 Ne. 1:23), but it seems likely that the frequent “thus we see” comments are also Mormon attempting to stress matters of particular spiritual importance to his readers (e.g., Alma 24:19, 27; 50:19–23; Hel. 3:27–30; 12:1–2).

THE TWENTY-FOUR GOLD PLATES OF ETHER.

These twenty-four gold plates were a record of ancient Jaredites, inhabitants of the Americas before the Nephites. This particular people left the Tower of Babel at the time of the confusion of tongues. Their prophet-leaders were led to the ocean, where they constructed eight peculiar barges. These were driven by the wind across the waters to America, where the Jaredites became a large and powerful nation. After many centuries, wickedness and wars led to a final war of annihilation. During that final war, Ether, a prophet of God, wrote their history and spiritual experiences on twenty-four gold plates, perhaps relying on earlier Jaredite records (see J. Welch, “Preliminary Comments on the Sources behind the Book of Ether,” in F.A.R.M.S. Manuscript Collection, pp. 3–7. Provo, Utah, 1986).

After witnessing the destruction of his people, Ether hid the twenty-four gold plates. Many years later (c. 121 B.C.) they were discovered by a small Nephite exploring party and given to Mosiah<sub>2</sub>, a prophet-king, who translated them into the Nephite language through the use of SEER STONES (Mosiah 8:8–9; 28:11–16). Much later (c. A.D. 400) Moroni abridged this history of the Jaredites as his father Mormon had intended, concentrating on spiritual matters and adding inspired commentaries. Moroni included this abridgment, now known as the book of Ether, with what he and his father had already written. (The twenty-four gold plates of Ether were not among the plates received by Joseph Smith.)

CHARACTERISTICS OF MORMON'S EDITING. The Book of Mormon is quite complicated. The foregoing summary of the plates and other records from which the book was derived is drawn from a number of scattered but consistent comments included in the present text. The narrative itself is often complex. For instance, in Mosiah 1–25, Mormon narrates the stories of three separate groups and subgroups of people—principally the people of Mosiah, of Limhi, and of Alma—with their respective histories and interactions with each other and with the Lamanites (see BOOK OF MORMON PEOPLES). The story might have been quite confusing, as it jumps from one people to another, and back and forth in time, but Mormon has kept it remarkably clear. Alma 17–26 is a lengthy flashback recounting the histories of several missionaries on the occasion of their reunion with old friends, and Alma 43–63 narrates the history of a war with the Lamanites, keeping straight the events that happened on two fronts.

Mormon's account might have been much more complex. He emphasizes that he is presenting less than one hundredth of the material available to him (e.g., W of M 1:5; 3 Ne. 26:6–7). Furthermore, his source materials give a lineage history of one family, Lehi and his descendants, and do not encompass all events in the ancient western world (Sorenson, 1985, pp. 50–56). Mormon further simplifies his record by continuing Jacob's practice of lumping diverse peoples into two major groups:

Now the people which were not Lamanites were Nephites; nevertheless, they were called Nephites, Jacobites, Josephites, Zoramites, Lamanites, Lemuelites, and Ishmaelites. But I, Jacob, shall not hereafter distinguish them by these names, but I shall call them Lamanites that seek to destroy the people of Nephi, and those who are friendly to Nephi I shall call Nephites, or the people of Nephi, according to the reigns of the kings [Jacob 1:13–14; see also Morm. 1:8–9].

The vast editing project that produced the Book of Mormon would require clear guidelines for selecting materials for inclusion. Mormon is quite explicit about the purpose of his abridgment. Like Nephi, he is writing a history to lead people to Christ, and he is writing specifically for the people of later times (2 Ne. 25:23; Morm. 7). The plates of Mormon were created to come forth in the latter days. Mormon is interested in pointing out the principles that will be of most use to such people, and his careful editing and his “thus” and “thus we see” passages are all directed at making the moral lessons easier to identify and understand.

Finally, Mormon took his job as record keeper and abridger very seriously. He was commanded by God to make his record (title page to the Book of Mormon; 3 Ne. 26:12). Also, Nephite society had a strong tradition of the importance of written records, and this was one of the criteria by which they distinguished themselves from the more numerous Mulekites (Omni 1:14–19). Furthermore, the various plates seem to have been handed down from one prophet or king to another as sacred relics and symbols of authority (Mosiah 28:20; 3 Ne. 1:2). In addition, the Nephites had a ceremonial record exchange when different branches of the family were reunited (Mosiah 8:1–5; 22:14). Most important, the Nephites knew that they would be held responsible for and would be judged by what was written in the records, just as all people will be (2 Ne. 25:21–22; 33:10–15; Morm. 8:12).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Brown, S. Kent. “Lehi's Personal Record: Quest for a Missing Source.” BYU Studies 24 (winter 1984):19–42.
- Doxey, Roy W. “What is the Approximate Weight of the Gold Plates from Which the Book of Mormon Was Translated?” In A Sure Foundation: Answers to Difficult Gospel Questions, pp. 50–52. Salt Lake City, 1988.
- Jessee, Dean C. Personal Writings of Joseph Smith. Salt Lake City, 1984.
- Ludlow, Daniel H. A Companion to Your Study of the Book of Mormon. Salt Lake City, 1976.
- Putnam, Read H. “Were the Golden Plates Made of Tumbaga?” IE 69 (Sept. 1966):788–89, 828.
- Sorenson, John L. “The ‘Brass Plates’ and Biblical Scholarship.” Dialogue 10 (Autumn 1977):31–39.
- . An Ancient American Setting for the Book of Mormon. Salt Lake City, 1985.
- Sperry, Sidney B. Our Book of Mormon. Salt Lake City, 1950.
- Tvedtnes, J. “Isaiah Variants in the Book of Mormon.” In Isaiah and the Prophets, ed. M. Nyman, pp. 165–77. Provo, Utah, 1984.

GRANT R. HARDY
ROBERT E. PARSONS

---

BOOK OF MORMON RELIGIOUS TEACHINGS AND PRACTICES

Most of the Book of Mormon is about a group of Israelites who were guided by prophets, had the doctrines and ordinances of the gospel of Jesus

CHARACTERISTICS OF MORMON'S EDITING. The Book of Mormon is quite complicated. The foregoing summary of the plates and other records from which the book was derived is drawn from a number of scattered but consistent comments included in the present text. The narrative itself is often complex. For instance, in Mosiah 1–25, Mormon narrates the stories of three separate groups and subgroups of people—principally the people of Mosiah, of Limhi, and of Alma—with their respective histories and interactions with each other and with the Lamanites (see BOOK OF MORMON PEOPLES). The story might have been quite confusing, as it jumps from one people to another, and back and forth in time, but Mormon has kept it remarkably clear. Alma 17–26 is a lengthy flashback recounting the histories of several missionaries on the occasion of their reunion with old friends, and Alma 43–63 narrates the history of a war with the Lamanites, keeping straight the events that happened on two fronts.

Mormon's account might have been much more complex. He emphasizes that he is presenting less than one hundredth of the material available to him (e.g., W of M 1:5; 3 Ne. 26:6–7). Furthermore, his source materials give a lineage history of one family, Lehi and his descendants, and do not encompass all events in the ancient western world (Sorenson, 1985, pp. 50–56). Mormon further simplifies his record by continuing Jacob's practice of lumping diverse peoples into two major groups:

Now the people which were not Lamanites were Nephites; nevertheless, they were called Nephites, Jacobites, Josephites, Zoramites, Lamanites, Lemuelites, and Ishmaelites. But I, Jacob, shall not hereafter distinguish them by these names, but I shall call them Lamanites that seek to destroy the people of Nephi, and those who are friendly to Nephi I shall call Nephites, or the people of Nephi, according to the reigns of the kings [Jacob 1:13–14; see also Morm. 1:8–9].

The vast editing project that produced the Book of Mormon would require clear guidelines for selecting materials for inclusion. Mormon is quite explicit about the purpose of his abridgment. Like Nephi, he is writing a history to lead people to Christ, and he is writing specifically for the people of later times (2 Ne. 25:23; Morm. 7). The plates of Mormon were created to come forth in the latter days. Mormon is interested in pointing out the principles that will be of most use to such people, and his careful editing and his “thus” and “thus we see” passages are all directed at making the moral lessons easier to identify and understand.

Finally, Mormon took his job as record keeper and abridger very seriously. He was commanded by God to make his record (title page to the Book of Mormon; 3 Ne. 26:12). Also, Nephite society had a strong tradition of the importance of written records, and this was one of the criteria by which they distinguished themselves from the more numerous Mulekites (Omni 1:14–19). Furthermore, the various plates seem to have been handed down from one prophet or king to another as sacred relics and symbols of authority (Mosiah 28:20; 3 Ne. 1:2). In addition, the Nephites had a ceremonial record exchange when different branches of the family were reunited (Mosiah 8:1–5; 22:14). Most important, the Nephites knew that they would be held responsible for and would be judged by what was written in the records, just as all people will be (2 Ne. 25:21–22; 33:10–15; Morm. 8:12).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Brown, S. Kent. “Lehi's Personal Record: Quest for a Missing Source.” BYU Studies 24 (winter 1984):19–42.
- Doxey, Roy W. “What is the Approximate Weight of the Gold Plates from Which the Book of Mormon Was Translated?” In A Sure Foundation: Answers to Difficult Gospel Questions, pp. 50–52. Salt Lake City, 1988.
- Jessee, Dean C. Personal Writings of Joseph Smith. Salt Lake City, 1984.
- Ludlow, Daniel H. A Companion to Your Study of the Book of Mormon. Salt Lake City, 1976.
- Putnam, Read H. “Were the Golden Plates Made of Tumbaga?” IE 69 (Sept. 1966):788–89, 828.
- Sorenson, John L. “The ‘Brass Plates’ and Biblical Scholarship.” Dialogue 10 (Autumn 1977):31–39.
- . An Ancient American Setting for the Book of Mormon. Salt Lake City, 1985.
- Sperry, Sidney B. Our Book of Mormon. Salt Lake City, 1950.
- Tvedtnes, J. “Isaiah Variants in the Book of Mormon.” In Isaiah and the Prophets, ed. M. Nyman, pp. 165–77. Provo, Utah, 1984.

GRANT R. HARDY
ROBERT E. PARSONS

---

BOOK OF MORMON RELIGIOUS TEACHINGS AND PRACTICES

Most of the Book of Mormon is about a group of Israelites who were guided by prophets, had the doctrines and ordinances of the gospel of Jesus Christ, but lived the law of Moses until the coming of Christ. After his resurrection, Jesus appeared to some of them, and organized his church, and for four generations they lived in peace and happiness. Many details about the religious teachings and practices of these people are found in the Book of Mormon. Latter-day Saints believe that these Christian teachings are applicable in the world today, both because the eternal DOCTRINE of God is as binding on one generation as on the next and because the contents of the Book of Mormon were selected and preserved by prophets with the modern world in mind. These teachings are also found in the revelations that established contemporary LDS practices and ordinances.

In 3 Nephi and Moroni, documents recorded by firsthand witnesses preserve many words of the resurrected Jesus and give the basic doctrines, covenants, and ordinances of his church. Some of the main points follow:

1. Jesus defined his doctrine. Ye must “repent, and believe in me . . . and be baptized in my name, and become as a little child. . . . This is my doctrine” (3 Ne. 11:32, 38–39). The promise is given that God will visit such people “with fire and with the Holy Ghost” (3 Ne. 11:35).

2. Jesus instructed the people to be baptized by immersion, and gave the words of the BAPTISMAL PRAYER (3 Ne. 11:26–27). Only those who were “accountable and capable of committing sin” were baptized (Moro. 8:9–15; cf. 6:3).

3. Jesus ordained twelve disciples and gave them AUTHORITY to baptize (3 Ne. 11:21–22). Moroni 2:2 preserves the words that Jesus spoke when he laid his hands on these disciples and gave them power to give the Holy Ghost (3 Ne. 18:36–37). The words the disciples used in subsequent ordinations of priests and teachers are found in Moroni 3:1–4.

4. The SACRAMENT PRAYERS are recorded in Moroni 4–5. The words of these prayers derive from the first-person expressions that Jesus spoke when he administered the sacrament in 3 Nephi 18:6–11.

5. The Nephite church met together often “to fast and to pray, and to speak one with another concerning the welfare of their souls, and . . . to partake of bread and wine, in remembrance of the Lord Jesus” (Moro. 6:5–6).

6. These Christians regularly renewed their covenant to keep the commandments Jesus had given them: for instance, to have no contention, anger, or derision; to offer a sacrifice of a broken heart and contrite spirit; to keep the law of chastity in thought and in deed; to love their enemies; to give sustenance to the poor; to do secret acts of charity; to pray alone and with others; to serve only God, not the things of the world; and to strive to become perfected like God and Jesus (3 Ne. 11–14; see SERMON ON THE MOUNT). They were promised that Jesus’ spirit would continue with them and that they would be raised up at the last day.

7. This church was led by Nephi<sup>3</sup>, one of the twelve disciples chosen by Jesus and sent out to preach the things they had heard him say and had seen him do (3 Ne. 27:1). The people were admonished to “give heed unto the words of these twelve” (3 Ne. 12:1).

8. At the Lord’s instruction, the church was called by the name of Jesus Christ, and members called on the Father in the name of Christ in all things (3 Ne. 27:8–9; see NAME OF THE CHURCH).

9. The disciples healed the sick and worked miracles in the name of Jesus (4 Ne. 1:5; see SICK, BLESSING THE).

10. They followed Jesus’ examples in prayer, reverencing and praising God, asking for forgiveness, and praying that the will of God would be done (3 Ne. 13:9–13; 19:16–35). The people were commanded to “pray in [their] families” (3 Ne. 18:21; see FAMILY PRAYER).

11. They had “all things common among them, every man dealing justly, one with another. . . . Therefore there were not rich and poor” (3 Ne. 26:19; 4 Ne. 1:3; see CONSECRATION).

12. As Jesus had instructed, his followers were strict in keeping iniquity out of their communities and synagogues, with “three witnesses of the church” being required to excommunicate offenders; nevertheless, all were helped, and those who sincerely repented were forgiven (3 Ne. 18:28–32; Moro. 6:7–8; see DISCIPLINARY PROCEDURES).

During the centuries before Christ, Nephite prophets had taught the fulness of the gospel and prepared the people for the coming of Jesus Christ. With respect to the points mentioned above, compare the following antecedents in Nephite history. Some can be traced back into ancient Israel; others were introduced at various times through inspiration or revelation:

1. The doctrine of Christ—faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, repentance, baptism, and the purging of sin by the fire of the Holy Ghost—was taught in the Book of Mormon as early as the time of Nephi<sub>1</sub> (2 Ne. 31). Nephite prophets frequently spoke about the “plan of redemption” or, as Alma called it, “the great plan of happiness” (Alma 42:8). They looked forward to the coming of God himself to earth to redeem mankind from their lost and fallen state. They knew that he would atone for the transgression of Adam and for all the sins of those who would “not procrastinate the day of [their] repentance” (Alma 34:33), and that all mankind would be physically resurrected and then judged according to the JUSTICE AND MERCY of God (Alma 40–42).

2. Covenantal baptisms were performed from the beginning of the record, notably by Alma<sub>1</sub> at the waters of Mormon (Mosiah 18). His baptismal prayer sought sanctification of the heart as the covenantor promised to serve God “even until death” so that he or she might be granted eternal life through the redemption of Christ (Mosiah 18:12–13). Alma’s group remained intact even after they took up residence among other Nephites, and those Nephites who submitted to baptism “after the manner he [had baptized] his brethren in the waters of Mormon” belonged to this church (Mosiah 25:18).

3. Centuries before the time of Christ, Nephite priests and teachers were consecrated (2 Ne. 5:26), appointed (Mosiah 6:3; Alma 45:22–23), or ordained by the laying-on of hands (Alma 6:1; cf. Num. 27:23). They watched over the church, stirred the people to remember their covenants (Mosiah 6:3), preached the law and the coming of the Son of God (Alma 16:18–19), and offered their firstlings in “sacrifice and burnt offerings according to the law of Moses” (Mosiah 2:3; cf. Deut. 15:19–23), which they understood to be a type of Christ (2 Ne. 11:4). Nephites and Lamanites had temples, the first one being built “after the manner of the temple of Solomon” (2 Ne. 5:16). The altar was a place of worship where the people assembled, “watching and praying continually, that they might be delivered from Satan, and from death, and from destruction” (Alma 15:17). Nephite priests also taught in synagogues, or gathering places, and ideally no one was excluded (2 Ne. 26:26; Alma 32:2– 12). Because they held the Melchizedek Priesthood (Alma 13:6–19), they could function in the ordinances of the Aaronic Priesthood even though they were not Levites. Nephite priests were ordained in a manner that looked “forward on the Son of God, [the ordination] being a type of his order” (Alma 13:16).

4. The covenantal language used by King BENJAMIN (c. 124 B.C.) was similar to the language of the Nephite sacrament prayers. Benjamin’s people witnessed that they were willing to keep God’s commandments, took upon them the name of Christ, and promised to “remember to retain the name written always in [their] hearts” (Mosiah 5:5–12; cf. Num. 6:27).

5. The Nephites gathered to fast and pray for spiritual blessings (Mosiah 27:22; Hel. 3:35). In addition, like their Israelite ancestors, they fasted in connection with mourning for the dead (Hel. 9:10; cf. 2 Sam. 3:35).

6. Covenant renewals were a long-standing part of the law of Moses, pursuant to which all men, women, and children were required to gather around the temple at appointed times to hear and recommit themselves to keep the law of God (Deut. 31:10–13; cf. Mosiah 2:5). Nephite religious law at the time of Alma<sub>2</sub> prohibited sorcery, idol worship, idleness, babbling, envy, strife, wearing costly apparel, pride, lying, deceit, malice, reviling, stealing, robbing, whoredom, adultery, murder, and all manner of wickedness (Alma 1:32; 16:18). In addition, Nephi<sub>2</sub> counseled against oppressing the poor, withholding food from the hungry, sacrilege, denying the spirit of prophecy, and deserting to the Lamanites (Hel. 4:12).

7. The righteous Nephites were accustomed to being led by prophets, inspired kings, high priests, and chief judges. These leaders kept the sacred records that were frequently cited in Nephite religious observances. The institutions of Nephite prophecy varied from time to time: some prophets were also kings; subsidiary prophets worked under King Benjamin (W of M 1:17–18); others, like ABINADI, were lone voices crying repentance. Their surviving messages, however, were constant and accurate: they preached the gospel and the coming of Christ, and they knew that when he came he would ordain twelve authorized leaders both in the East (1 Ne. 1:10; 11:29) and in the West (1 Ne. 12:7–10).

8. The name of Jesus Christ was revealed to the early Nephite prophets (2 Ne. 10:3; 25:19), and thereafter the Nephites prayed and acted in the name of Jesus Christ (2 Ne. 32:9; Jacob 4:6). Alma<sub>1</sub> called his followers “the church of Christ” (Mosiah 18:17).

9. Like the Israelite prophets, the Nephite prophets performed miracles in the name of the Lord. As had Elijah (1 Kgs. 17), for example, Nephi<sub>2</sub> closed the heavens and caused a famine (Hel. 11:4), and Nephi<sub>3</sub> raised the dead and healed the sick (3 Ne. 7:19–22).

10. The Nephites watched and prayed continually (Alma 15:17). They were counseled to pray three times a day—morning, noon, and night—for mercy, for deliverance from the power of the devil, for prosperity, and for the welfare of their families (Alma 34:18–25; cf. Ps. 55:17). They taught that effective prayer had to be coupled with charitable actions (Alma 34:26–29), which are necessary to retain a remission of sin (Mosiah 4:26).

11. Regarding wealth and possessions, many early Book of Mormon prophets condemned the evils of seeking power and riches. The cycle leading from prosperity to pride, wickedness, and then catastrophe was often repeated, echoing formulas characteristic of DEUTERONOMY. The righteous Nephites covenanted to give liberally to the poor and to bear one another’s burdens.

12. Typically, those who entered into the required covenant became “numbered” among the Nephites. If they transgressed, their names were “blotted out,” presumably being removed from a roster (Mosiah 5:11; 6:1). Detailed procedures for excommunicating transgressors were established by Alma<sub>1</sub>, who was given authority by King MOSIAH<sub>2</sub> to judge members of the church. Forgiveness was to be extended “as often as [the] people repent” (Mosiah 26:29–30).

Teachings and practices such as these specifically prepared the way for the personal coming of Jesus Christ after his resurrection. Despite years of preparation, the immediate reaction of some of the Nephite multitude to the initial words of the resurrected Christ was still to wonder “what he would concerning the law of Moses” (3 Ne. 15:2). Even though the prophets had long explained the limited function of the law, it remained a sacred and integral part of their lives until it was fulfilled by Jesus (e.g., 2 Ne. 25:24–25; Alma 30:3; 3 Ne. 1:24).

When Jesus spoke, it became evident how old things “had become new” (3 Ne. 15:2).

The diversity of religious experience in the Book of Mormon is further seen in the great number of religious communities it mentions in varying situations. Outside of orthodox Nephite circles (whose own success varied from time to time), there were an extravagant royal cult of King Noah and his temple priests (Mosiah 11); a false, rivaling church in Zarahemla formed by Nehor (Alma 1); centers of worship among the Lamanites (Alma 23:2); the wicked and agnostic Korihor (Alma 30); an astounding aristocratic and apostate prayer stand (an elevated platform for a single worshipper) of the Zoramites (Alma 31:13–14); and secret combinations or societies with staunch oath-swearing adherents intent on murder and gain (3 Ne. 3:9). Frequent efforts were made by Nephite missionaries, such as Alma<sub>2</sub>, Ammon, and Nephi<sub>2</sub>, to convert people from these groups to the gospel of Jesus Christ and to organize them into righteous churches and communities. On occasion, the converts became more righteous than all their contemporaries. Even among the righteous, there were varying degrees of comprehension and knowledge, for the mysteries of God were imparted by God and his prophets according to the diligence of the hearers (Alma 12:9–11).

Many doctrinal points and practical insights fill the pages of the Book of Mormon. A few of them are the following: Alma<sub>2</sub> explains that by his suffering Jesus came to “know according to the flesh how to succor his people” (Alma 7:12). Alma<sub>2</sub> describes how faith may be nurtured into knowledge (Alma 32). Benjamin identifies sin as “rebellion against God” (Mosiah 2:36–37) and presents a hopeful outlook for all who will “yield to the enticings of the Holy Spirit and put off the natural man” (Mosiah 3:19). Alma<sub>2</sub> depicts the condition of spirits after death as they return to God, “who gave them life” (Alma 40:11). Jacob speaks poignantly of the nakedness of the unrepentant, who will stand filthy before the judgment of God (2 Ne. 9:14). Benjamin extols the “blessed and happy state” of the righteous who taste the love and goodness of God (Mosiah 2:41; 4:11). And Lehi states the purpose of existence: “Men are that they might have joy” (2 Ne. 2:25). The Book of Mormon teaches the one pathway to eternal happiness by numerous inspiring images, instructions, and examples.

Many Book of Mormon prophetic teachings have already been fulfilled (e.g., 1 Ne. 13; 2 Ne. 3; Hel. 14), but several still look to the future. One reason some people were puzzled when Jesus declared he had fulfilled the law and the prophets was that many prophecies of Isaiah, Nephi<sup>1</sup>, and others remained open—in particular, the Nephites had not yet been reunited with a redeemed people of Israel. Jesus explained: “I do not destroy that which hath been spoken concerning things which are to come” (3 Ne. 15:7). Yet to be fulfilled in the prophetic view of the Book of Mormon are promises that the branches of scattered Israel will be gathered in Christ and will combine their records into one (2 Ne. 29:13–14), that the remnants of Lehi’s descendants will be greatly strengthened in the Lord (2 Ne. 30:3–6; 3 Ne. 21:7–13), and that a great division will occur: a New Jerusalem will be built in the Western Hemisphere by the righteous (3 Ne. 21:23; Ether 13:1–9), while the wicked will be destroyed (1 Ne. 30:10). “Then,” Jesus said, “shall the power of heaven come down among them; and I also will be in the midst” (3 Ne. 21:25).

[See also Jesus Christ in the Book of Mormon.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Most Latter-day Saint doctrinal writings refer to the Book of Mormon on particular topics, but no comprehensive analysis of Nephite religious experience as such has been written.

In general, see Sidney B. Sperry, Book of Mormon Compendium (Salt Lake City, 1968); and Rodney Turner, “The Three Nephite Churches of Christ,” in The Keystone Scripture, ed. P. Cheesman, pp. 100–126 (Provo, Utah, 1988).

For a cultural anthropologist’s approach to Nephite religious institutions and practices, see John L. Sorenson, An Ancient American Setting for the Book of Mormon (Salt Lake City, 1985).

JOHN W. WELCH

---

BOOK OF MORMON STUDIES

Since the publication of the BOOK OF MORMON in 1830, a substantial amount of material analyzing, defending, and attacking it has been published. Studies of this complex record have taken various approaches, for the book itself invites close scrutiny and rewards patient and reflective research.

For most Latter-day Saints the primary purpose of scripture study is not to prove to themselves the truth of scriptural records—which they already accept—but to gain wisdom and understanding about the teachings of these sacred writings and to apply in daily life gospel principles learned there. Because of the origins of the Book of Mormon, however, many people have also explored the secondary features of this document: its vocabulary, style, factual assertions, main themes, and subtle nuances.

Book of Mormon research has generally followed many of the same forms as biblical research. In both fields, writings range from expository texts to doctrinal, historical, geographical, textual, literary, and comparative commentaries. But there are also several salient differences. For example, unlike the authors of the Bible, the prophets, compilers, and abridgers of the Book of Mormon frequently state explicitly the dates when they worked, their purposes in writing, and the sources from which they drew, thus clarifying many compositional and interpretive issues; furthermore, academic and archaeological studies of the Book of Mormon are more limited than in biblical research because the earliest extant text is Joseph SMITH’s 1829 English translation and the precise locations of Book of Mormon settlements are unknown. Nevertheless, a significant number of internal and comparative analyses have been pursued. The works of the following individuals are most notable.

ALEXANDER CAMPBELL. The founder of the Disciples of Christ and a colleague of Sidney RIGDON before Rigdon converted to Mormonism, Alexander Campbell (1788–1866) composed a response to the Book of Mormon that he published on February 7, 1831, in his paper the Millennial Harbinger (reprinted as a pamphlet called Delusions). In it, Campbell challenged the idea that the Book of Mormon had been written by multiple ancient prophets and attacked the character of Joseph Smith. He said that the book was solely the product of Joseph Smith, written by him alone and “certainly conceived in one cranium” (p. 13). Campbell claimed that the book simply represents the reflections of Joseph Smith on the social, political, and religious controversies of his day: “infant baptism, ordination, the trinity, regeneration, repentance, justification, the fall of man, the atonement, transubstantiation, fasting, penance, church government, religious experience, the call to the ministry, the general resurrection, eternal punishment, who may baptize, and even the question of Hel. 14), but several still look to the future. One reason some people were puzzled when Jesus declared he had fulfilled the law and the prophets was that many prophecies of Isaiah, Nephi<sup>1</sup>, and others remained open—in particular, the Nephites had not yet been reunited with a redeemed people of Israel. Jesus explained: “I do not destroy that which hath been spoken concerning things which are to come” (3 Ne. 15:7). Yet to be fulfilled in the prophetic view of the Book of Mormon are promises that the branches of scattered Israel will be gathered in Christ and will combine their records into one (2 Ne. 29:13–14), that the remnants of Lehi’s descendants will be greatly strengthened in the Lord (2 Ne. 30:3–6; 3 Ne. 21:7–13), and that a great division will occur: a New Jerusalem will be built in the Western Hemisphere by the righteous (3 Ne. 21:23; Ether 13:1–9), while the wicked will be destroyed (1 Ne. 30:10). “Then,” Jesus said, “shall the power of heaven come down among them; and I also will be in the midst” (3 Ne. 21:25).

[See also Jesus Christ in the Book of Mormon.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Most Latter-day Saint doctrinal writings refer to the Book of Mormon on particular topics, but no comprehensive analysis of Nephite religious experience as such has been written.

In general, see Sidney B. Sperry, Book of Mormon Compendium (Salt Lake City, 1968); and Rodney Turner, “The Three Nephite Churches of Christ,” in The Keystone Scripture, ed. P. Cheesman, pp. 100–126 (Provo, Utah, 1988).

For a cultural anthropologist’s approach to Nephite religious institutions and practices, see John L. Sorenson, An Ancient American Setting for the Book of Mormon (Salt Lake City, 1985).

JOHN W. WELCH

---

BOOK OF MORMON STUDIES

Since the publication of the BOOK OF MORMON in 1830, a substantial amount of material analyzing, defending, and attacking it has been published. Studies of this complex record have taken various approaches, for the book itself invites close scrutiny and rewards patient and reflective research.

For most Latter-day Saints the primary purpose of scripture study is not to prove to themselves the truth of scriptural records—which they already accept—but to gain wisdom and understanding about the teachings of these sacred writings and to apply in daily life gospel principles learned there. Because of the origins of the Book of Mormon, however, many people have also explored the secondary features of this document: its vocabulary, style, factual assertions, main themes, and subtle nuances.

Book of Mormon research has generally followed many of the same forms as biblical research. In both fields, writings range from expository texts to doctrinal, historical, geographical, textual, literary, and comparative commentaries. But there are also several salient differences. For example, unlike the authors of the Bible, the prophets, compilers, and abridgers of the Book of Mormon frequently state explicitly the dates when they worked, their purposes in writing, and the sources from which they drew, thus clarifying many compositional and interpretive issues; furthermore, academic and archaeological studies of the Book of Mormon are more limited than in biblical research because the earliest extant text is Joseph SMITH’s 1829 English translation and the precise locations of Book of Mormon settlements are unknown. Nevertheless, a significant number of internal and comparative analyses have been pursued. The works of the following individuals are most notable.

ALEXANDER CAMPBELL. The founder of the Disciples of Christ and a colleague of Sidney RIGDON before Rigdon converted to Mormonism, Alexander Campbell (1788–1866) composed a response to the Book of Mormon that he published on February 7, 1831, in his paper the Millennial Harbinger (reprinted as a pamphlet called Delusions). In it, Campbell challenged the idea that the Book of Mormon had been written by multiple ancient prophets and attacked the character of Joseph Smith. He said that the book was solely the product of Joseph Smith, written by him alone and “certainly conceived in one cranium” (p. 13). Campbell claimed that the book simply represents the reflections of Joseph Smith on the social, political, and religious controversies of his day: “infant baptism, ordination, the trinity, regeneration, repentance, justification, the fall of man, the atonement, transubstantiation, fasting, penance, church government, religious experience, the call to the ministry, the general resurrection, eternal punishment, who may baptize, and even the question of freemasonry, republican government, and the rights of man" (p. 13). He also asserted that the Book of Mormon misunderstands Israelite and Jewish history (portraying the Nephites as Christians hundreds of years before the birth of Christ) and is written in abysmal English grammar. Campbell characterized Joseph Smith as a "knave" who was "ignorant" and "impudent" (p. 11; see also ANTI-MORMON PUBLICATIONS). Delusions is significant among Book of Mormon studies because in many ways it set the agenda for most subsequent critiques of the Book of Mormon (e.g., that the book derives from, or responds to, various trends in early-nineteenth-century upstate New York). Subsequently, however, Campbell changed his position, adopting the Spaulding-Rigdon theory, according to which Sidney Rigdon purloined a copy of a manuscript by Solomon Spaulding, developed from it what became the Book of Mormon, which he passed on to Joseph Smith in the late 1820s, and later pretended to have met Joseph for the first time in 1830 (see SPAULDING MANUSCRIPT).

ORSON PRATT. In Divine Authenticity of the Book of Mormon (1850–1851), a series of six pamphlets, Orson Pratt (1811–1881), a member of the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles, drew together early Latter-day Saint thinking about the Book of Mormon. He argued on logical grounds for the divine authenticity of the Book of Mormon, confronted criticisms of it, and presented evidence in favor of its truth, relying heavily on biblical and historical evidences. He did not discuss the contents of the Book of Mormon directly, but addressed ideas of other churches that hindered their acceptance, or even serious consideration, of the Book of Mormon.

The first three pamphlets discussed the nature of revelation, giving evidence to support Pratt's claim that continued communication from God is both necessary and scriptural. The final three pamphlets reported on many witnesses who received heavenly visions substantiating Joseph Smith's claims (see BOOK OF MORMON WITNESSES), and asserted that the divinity of the Book of Mormon is confirmed by many miracles, similar to those recorded in the Bible, experienced by Latter-day Saints. Finally, he appealed to prophetic evidence for the Book of Mormon, taken from Daniel and Isaiah. In an 1872 discourse, Pratt proposed a geography for the Book of Mormon that has greatly influenced LDS thinking (see BOOK OF MORMON GEOGRAPHY).

George Reynolds (1842–1909) held many Church positions in England before coming to America in 1865. He served as secretary to the First Presidency until the end of his life and was called as one of the First Seven Presidents of the Seventy in 1890. He was the first to write extensive commentaries on the Book of Mormon. His Book of Mormon concordance required twenty-one years to produce. Courtesy University of Utah.

GEORGE REYNOLDS AND JANNE M. SJODÄHL. During the nineteenth century, most defenses of, and attacks on, the Book of Mormon were based primarily on reason, on examinations of the environment contemporary with the book, or on the Bible. But George Reynolds (1842–1909) and Janne M. Sjodahl (1853–1939), in their seven-volume Commentary on the Book of Mormon (reissued 1955–1961), investigated the plausibility of the claims of the Book of Mormon by examining external evidences of a historical, cultural, linguistic, or religious nature from the Old World and the New. Although their examples and explanations are often not heavily documented and were sometimes mistaken, this work was the first major effort to study the cultural and historical contexts of the Book of Mormon (i.e., to place the book in a historical context by adducing relevant materials from the ancient world).

Whereas in The Story of the Book of Mormon, an earlier work, Reynolds had agreed with Orson Pratt on Book of Mormon geography, in their Commentary he and Sjodahl placed geography at a low level of priority and were interested primarily in establishing an internally consistent map of all Book of Mormon sites, without attempting to identify those sites with modern locations (Reynolds, pp. 19, 49, 301–330; Reynolds and Sjodahl, Vol. 1, pp. ix–xi). Reynolds eventually authored nearly three hundred articles and several Book of Mormon resource works. Sjodahl published An Introduction to the Study of the Book of Mormon, featuring a wide variety of cultural and linguistic theories.

B. H. ROBERTS. Among the most influential Latter-day Saint writers of his time, B. H. Roberts (1857–1933) wrote widely on a variety of Church-related topics, including the Book of Mormon. Like Reynolds and Sjodahl, he was interested not only in the theological implications of the Book of Mormon but also in its historical, geographical, and cultural setting (1909, Vol. 2, pp. 143–44, 162, 347–458; Vol. 3, pp. 3–92). Roberts was not afraid to ask difficult—and, for him, sometimes unanswerable—questions about the Book of Mormon, but affirmed his faith in the Book of Mormon to the end of his life (1985, pp. 61–148; J. Welch, Ensign 16 [Mar. 1986]:58–62).

FRANCIS KIRKHAM. In his two-volume study A New Witness for Christ in America (1942), Francis Kirkham (1877–1972) examined the 1820s historical evidence relating to the coming forth of the Book of Mormon. Kirkham showed that the testimonies of Joseph Smith and his friends are consistent and coherent, while those of his enemies are frequently inconsistent and contradictory. He carefully documented how alternative explanations for the origin of the Book of Mormon sometimes changed or were abandoned. While favoring the traditional view of Book of Mormon origins, Kirkham allowed all to speak for themselves with little commentary. He liberally presented the primary materials, published and unpublished, from libraries and archives across the United States. His use of the widest available range of primary sources set a new standard in the study of the origins of the Book of Mormon.

Kirkham's second volume of A New Witness for Christ in America (1951) examined the alternative explanations of Book of Mormon origins. Regarding the assertion that Joseph Smith wrote the book personally, Kirkham presented statements of some who knew Joseph well, with views representing both sides of the issue of whether he was capable of writing such a book. Kirkham also gave extensive evidence to show that the Spaulding hypothesis was fraught with difficulties. The theory provides only the most circumstantial and dubious evidence for Rigdon's theft of the manuscript and for his passing it on to Joseph Smith with no one else's knowledge. Even though the Spaulding hypothesis has fallen into disfavor as an explanation of the Book of Mormon during the past several decades, it is still occasionally revived.

HUGH W. NIBLEY. In his considerable corpus of writings on the Book of Mormon, written over a period of some forty years, Hugh W. Nibley (b. 1910) has taken several approaches, mainly historical contextualization based on the internal claims of the Book of Mormon as a document of people who come from the ancient Near East, but also testing the book for authenticity on the basis of internal evidence alone, and seeing the fateful collapse of mighty civilizations as an ominous warning to people today.

In Lehi in the Desert (1949–1952), after reviewing the great American archaeologist William F. Albright's criteria for determining the historical plausibility of ancient accounts, Nibley asks these questions about the story of Lehi: "Does it correctly reflect 'the cultural horizon and religious and social ideas and practices of the time'? Does it have authentic historical and geographical background? Is the mise-en-scène mythical, highly imaginative, or extravagantly improbable? Is its local color correct, and are its proper names convincing?" (CWHN 5:4). The proper approach to the Book of Mormon, according to Nibley, is simply to give the book the benefit of the doubt, granting that it is what it claims to be (a historically authentic ancient document of a people who originated in ancient Israel) and then testing the internal evidence of the book itself (names, cultural and religious ideas) against what can be known about the ancient Near East. When this is done, a picture emerges that is strikingly consistent with what can be determined about the ancient Near East. Most of Nibley's examples come from the Arabs, Egyptians, and Israelites.

Hugh W. Nibley (1910– ), noted linguist and historian of religion, was one of the first to detect and explore numerous cultural similarities between ancient Near Eastern literatures and Book of Mormon texts. His candid wit and wide-ranging insights emphasize the relevance of the Book of Mormon to modern world circumstances (1989). Photographer: Mark A. Philbrick. Courtesy F.A.R.M.S.

With wit and erudition, Nibley argues against alternative explanations of the Book of Mormon. For example, in discussing Thomas O'Dea's environmentalist assertion that the book is obviously an American work, Nibley calls for greater specificity and uniqueness of the American sentiments that allegedly permeate the work (CWIM 8:185–86). With skillful parry and thrust, Nibley proceeds in his studies on the Book of Mormon, sometimes defending points in the book, sometimes taking the offensive against those who attack it, always enriching the reader's understanding of its setting. As a teacher, lecturer, and writer, Nibley has been widely influential on subsequent studies of the Book of Mormon.

JOHN L. SORENSON. Devoting his attention to Mesoamerica in an effort to understand better the geographical, anthropological, and cultural setting of BOOK OF MORMON PEOPLES, John L. Sorenson (b. 1924) examines the text of the Book of Mormon. He carefully analyzes the Mesoamerican evidence, particularly the geography, climatic conditions, modes of life and warfare, and archaeological remains in An Ancient American Setting for the Book of Mormon, in order to create a plausible, coherent matrix for understanding the book. With regard to Book of Mormon geography, Sorenson concludes that the events recorded in the Book of Mormon occurred in a fairly restricted area of southern Mexico and Guatemala:

The narrow neck of land is the Isthmus of Tehuantepec. The east sea is the Gulf of Mexico or its component, the Gulf of Campeche. The west sea is the Pacific Ocean to the west of Mexico and Guatemala. The land southward comprises that portion of Mexico east and south of the Isthmus of Tehuantepec. . . . The land northward consists of part of Mexico west and north of the Isthmus of Tehuantepec. . . . The final battleground where both Jaredite and Nephite peoples met their end was around the Tuxtla Mountains of south-central Veracruz [pp. 46–47].

An Ancient American Setting for the Book of Mormon has placed the study of the ancient American background of the Book of Mormon on a scholarly footing as no previous work (see BOOK OF MORMON GEOGRAPHY).

CURRENT DIRECTIONS IN BOOK OF MORMON STUDIES. Much of the scholarly work on the Book of Mormon has been devoted to a fuller understanding of its theological riches or concerned with applying the Book of Mormon principle to "liken all scriptures unto us" (1 Ne. 19:23). Some of the recent publications of the Religious Studies Center at Brigham Young University have focused on various theological aspects of the Book of Mormon and on seeking life applications from the book (e.g., essays by various authors in Cheesman, in McConkie and Millet, and in Nyman and Tate).

Following the lead of Nibley, Sorenson, and others, several recent studies on the Book of Mormon have been concerned with enhancing an understanding of its Old World background and American setting. The research and publications of the Foundation for Ancient Research and Mormon Studies (F.A.R.M.S.), the Society for Early Historic Archaeology (SEHA), and the Archaeological Research Institute have been particularly concerned with the historical and geographic context of the Book of Mormon.

In certain circles, one of the major focuses in current Book of Mormon studies is concerned with its historicity. Whereas in the past, positions on the Book of Mormon divided themselves roughly between those who accepted it as an inspired and historically authentic ancient document and those who rejected it in both these regards, several different lines of approach have developed.

According to one view—a position that has existed since even before its first publication—the Book of Mormon is a conscious fabrication of Joseph Smith. Those holding to this view see the book as reflecting no inspiration and having no historical value, although they may see some religious value in it as a statement of Joseph Smith's religious feelings. The assumption underlying this view may be either a doctrinaire rejection of divine intervention in human affairs or a specific rejection of Joseph Smith's claims to experience with the divine. Those maintaining this position may accept either the Spaulding theory or, more commonly, various environmentalist explanations for the contents of the book (see VIEW OF THE HEBREWS). One environmentalist explanation that has attracted some interest in the recent past among both believers and nonbelievers is based on the purported "magic worldview" that suffused the environment in which Joseph Smith grew up. However, this position has been heavily criticized and has not been widely received.

Another view of the Book of Mormon accepts its inspiration but rejects its historical authenticity, seeing it as in some sense inspired but not the product of antiquity, coming rather from the pen of Joseph Smith.

A third position accepts parts of the Book of Mormon as ancient, but views other parts of the book as inspired expansions on the text. This view has suffered because a concession that any part of the book is authentically ancient (and beyond the powers of Joseph Smith to have established through research) seems an admission that the Book of Mormon is what it claims to be and what has traditionally been claimed for it: that it is ancient.

While these views have been articulated by some members in the LDS community, the majority of LDS students of the Book of Mormon accept the traditional view of its divine authenticity and study it as both an ancient document and a tract for modern days, thereby enhancing their appreciation of, and benefit from, the book.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

For bibliographies, see annual issues of the Review of Books on the Book of Mormon and John W. Welch, Gary P. Gillum, and DeeAnn Hofer, Comprehensive Bibliography of the Book of Mormon, F.A.R.M.S. Report, Provo, Utah, 1982. For essays on Pratt, Reynolds, Roberts, Kirkham, Sperry, and Nibley, see articles in the Ensign, 1984–1986.

Bush, Lester E., Jr. "The Spaulding Theory Then and Now." Dialogue 10 (Autumn 1977):40–69.

Cheesman, Paul R., ed. The Book of Mormon: The Keystone Scripture. Provo, Utah, 1988.

Clark, John. "A Key for Evaluating Nephite Geographies" (review of F. Richard Hauck, Deciphering the Geography of the Book of Mormon). Review of Books on the Book of Mormon, 1 (1989):20–70.

Kirkham, Francis W. A New Witness for Christ in America, rev. ed., 2 vols. Salt Lake City, 1959–1960.

McConkie, Joseph Fielding, and Robert L. Millet. Doctrinal Commentary on the Book of Mormon, 2 vols. Salt Lake City, 1987–1988.

Nibley, Hugh. Lehi in the Desert/The World of the Jaredites/There Were Jaredites; An Approach to the Book of Mormon; Since Cumorah; and The Prophetic Book of Mormon. In CWHN 5–8.

Nyman, Monte S., and Charles D. Tate, eds. The Book of Mormon: First Nephi, The Doctrinal Foundation; Second Nephi, The Doctrinal Structure; Jacob Through Words of Mormon, to Learn with Joy. Provo, Utah, 1988–1990.

Reynolds, George. The Story of the Book of Mormon. Salt Lake City, 1888.

———, and Janne M. Sjodahl. Commentary on the Book of Mormon, 5th ed., 7 vols. Salt Lake City, 1972.

Reynolds, Noel B., ed. Book of Mormon Authorship: New Light on Ancient Origins. Provo, Utah, 1982.

Ricks, Stephen D., and William J. Hamblin, eds. Warfare in the Book of Mormon. Salt Lake City, 1990.

Roberts, B. H. New Witnesses for God, Vols. 2–3. Salt Lake City, 1909.

———. Studies of the Book of Mormon, ed. B. Madsen. Urbana, Ill., 1985.

Sjodahl, Janne M. An Introduction to the Study of the Book of Mormon. Salt Lake City, 1927.

Sorenson, John L. An Ancient American Setting for the Book of Mormon. Salt Lake City, 1985.

Sperry, Sidney B. Book of Mormon Compendium. Salt Lake City, 1968.

BOOK OF MORMON TRANSLATION BY JOSEPH SMITH

By its own terms, the Book of Mormon is a translation of an ancient book; yet Joseph SMITH knew no ancient languages at the time he dictated this text to his scribes. He and several of his close associates testified that the translation was accomplished “by the gift and power of God” (HC 1:315; see also D&C 1:29; 20:8).

Little is known about the translation process itself. Few details can be gleaned from comments made by Joseph’s scribes and close associates. Only Joseph Smith knew the actual process, and he declined to describe it in public. At a Church conference in 1831, Hyrum Smith invited the Prophet to explain more fully how the Book of Mormon came forth. Joseph Smith responded that “it was not intended to tell the world all the particulars of the coming forth of the Book of Mormon; and . . . it was not expedient for him to relate these things” (HC 1:220).

Much is known, however, about when and where the work of translation occurred. The events are documented by several independent firsthand witnesses. Joseph Smith first obtained the GOLD PLATES at the hill CUMORAH in New York, in the early morning hours of September 22, 1827. To avoid local harassment and mobs, he moved to HARMONY, PENNSYLVANIA, in December 1827. There he copied and translated some of the characters from the plates, with his wife Emma and her brother Reuben Hale acting as scribes. In 1856, Emma recalled that Joseph dictated the translation to her word for word, spelled out the proper names, and would correct her scribal errors even though he could not see what she had written. At one point while translating, Joseph was surprised to learn that Jerusalem had walls around it (E. C. Briggs, “Interview with David Whitmer,” Saints’ Herald 31 [June 21, 1884]:396–97). Emma was once asked in a later interview if Joseph had read from any books or notes while dictating. She answered, “He had neither,” and when pressed, added: “If he had anything of the kind he could not have concealed it from me” (Saints’ Herald 26 [Oct. 1, 1879]:290).

Martin HARRIS came to Harmony in February 1828, and shortly afterward took a transcript and translation of some of the characters to New York City, where he showed them to Professor Charles Anthon at Columbia College (see ANTHON TRANSCRIPT). He returned fully satisfied that Joseph was telling the truth, and from April 12 to June 14, 1828, Harris acted as scribe while Joseph Smith translated the book of Lehi.

On June 15, 1828, Joseph and Emma’s first son was born but died a few hours later. About July 15, Joseph learned that Martin Harris had lost the 116 pages they had translated (see MANUSCRIPT, LOST 116 PAGES), and subsequently the angel MORONI took the plates and the interpreters temporarily from Joseph, who was chastened but reassured by the Lord that the work would go forth (D&C 3:15–16).

On September 22, 1828, the plates and translation tools were returned to Joseph Smith, and during that winter he translated “a few more pages” (D&C 5:30). The work progressed slowly until April 5, 1829, when Oliver COWDERY, a school teacher who had seen the Lord and the plates in a vision (PWJS, p. 8), arrived in Harmony and offered his scribal services to Joseph. Virtually all of the English text of the Book of Mormon was then translated between April 7 and the last week of June, less than sixty working days.

The dictation flowed smoothly. From the surviving portions of the Original Manuscript it appears that Joseph dictated about a dozen words at a time. Oliver would read those words back for verification, and then they would go on. Emma later added that after a meal or a night’s rest, Joseph would begin, without prompting, where he had previously left off (The Saints’ Herald 26 [Oct. 1, 1879]:290). No time was taken for research, internal cross-checking, or editorial rewriting. In 1834 Oliver wrote: “These were days never to be forgotten—to sit under the sound of a voice dictated by the inspiration of heaven, awakened the utmost gratitude of this bosom! Day after day I continued, uninterrupted, to write from his mouth as he translated” (Messenger and Advocate 1 [Oct. 1834]:14).

During April, May, and June 1829, many events occurred in concert with the translation of the Book of Mormon. By May 15, the account of Christ’s ministry in 3 Nephi had been translated. That text explicitly mentions the necessity of being baptized by proper authority, and this injunction inspired Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery to pray, leading to the restoration of the Aaronic Priesthood on May 15 (JS—H 1:68–74) and of the Melchizedek Priesthood soon afterward (see AARONIC PRIESTHOOD: RESTORATION OF; MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOOD: RESTORATION OF). Time was also required for trips to Colesville, New York, for supplies (thirty miles away); to earn money to purchase paper; to obtain a federal copyright on June 11, 1829; to baptize Samuel and Hyrum Smith; to preach to several interested people; and, during the first week of June, to move by buckboard over 100 miles to the Peter Whitmer farm in Fayette, New York, where about 150 final pages were translated, with some of the Whitmers also acting as scribes. The work was completed before the end of June, at which time the Three and the Eight Witnesses were allowed to see the plates (see BOOK OF MORMON WITNESSES).

The original manuscript for Helaman 1:15–16 shows how the name “Coriantumr” was first written by Oliver Cowdery phonetically but was then crossed out and spelled correctly on the same line as the translation progressed. Witnesses stated that Joseph Smith spelled the proper names that he translated.

Most evidence supports the idea that Joseph and Oliver began their work in April 1829 with the speech of BENJAMIN (Mosiah 1–6), translated to the end of the book of Moroni in May, then translated the Title Page, and finally translated the small plates of Nephi (1 Nephi–Omni) and the Words of Mormon before the end of June (Welch and Rathbone). The text of the Title Page, “the last leaf” of the plates of Mormon (HC 1:71), was used as the book’s description on the copyright form filed on June 11, 1829.

Many factors, including divine sources of knowledge and Joseph’s own spiritual efforts and personal vocabulary, apparently played their roles in producing the English text of the Book of Mormon. Some accounts emphasize the divine factor. Years later, David WHITMER indicated that words would appear to Joseph on something resembling a piece of parchment and that he would read the words off to his scribe (An Address to All Believers in Christ, 1887, p. 12). Other accounts indicate that human effort was also involved. When Oliver Cowdery attempted to translate in April 1829, he was told by the Lord: “You must study it out in your mind; then you must ask me if it be right” (D&C 9:8). According to David Whitmer, Joseph could only translate when he was humble and faithful. One morning something had gone wrong about the house; Joseph could not translate a single syllable until he went into an orchard, prayed, and then he and Emma made amends (CHC 1:131). Joseph’s ability to translate apparently increased as the work progressed.

Most reports state that throughout the project Joseph used the “Nephite interpreters” or, for convenience, he would use a SEER STONE (see CHC 1:128–30). Both instruments were sometimes called by others the URIM AND THUMMIM. In 1830, Oliver Cowdery is reported to have testified in court that these tools enabled Joseph “to read in English, the reformed Egyptian characters, which were engraved on the plates” (Benton, Evangelical Magazine and Gospel Advocate 2 [Apr. 9, 1831]:15). In an 1891 interview, William Smith indicated that when his brother Joseph used the “interpreters” (which were like a silver bow twisted into the shape of a figure eight with two stones between the rims of the bow connected by a rod to a breastplate), his hands were left free to hold the plates. Other late reports mention a variety of further details, but they cannot be historically confirmed or denied.

Regarding the nature of the English translation, its language is unambiguous and straightforward. Joseph once commented that the book was “translated into our own language” (TPJS, p. 17; cf. D&C 1:24). In several chapters, for good and useful reasons, this meant that the language would follow the King James idiom of the day (see CWHN 8:212–16; Welch, 1990, pp. 134–63). It also assured that the manuscript would contain human misspellings and grammatical oddities, implying that if it had been translated in another decade its phraseology and vocabulary might have been slightly different.

At the same time, circumstantial evidence in the English text suggests that the translation was quite precise. For example, the independent and identical translations of 1 Nephi 1:8 and of Alma 36:22 (precisely quoting twenty-one of Lehi’s words in 1 Nephi 1:8) typify the internal accuracy manifested in this long and complex record. Moreover, several formulaic terms, Hebraisms, stylistic indications of multiple authorship, varieties of parallelism and extended chiasmus (see BOOK OF MORMON AUTHORSHIP; BOOK OF MORMON LITERATURE), as well as certain Semitic proper names and some textual variants, not at all evident from the King James Bible, corroborate the claim that the translation was faithful to a consistent underlying text.

Naturally, it is rarely possible to translate exactly the same range of meanings, word for word, from one language into another, and thus opinions have varied about the nature of the correspondence of the ancient text to the English translation. David Whitmer is quoted as saying that “frequently one character would make two lines of manuscript while others made but a word or two words” (Deseret News, Nov. 10, 1881). Nevertheless, the linguistic relationship between the English translation and the characters on the plates cannot be determined without consulting the Nephite original, which was returned to the angel Moroni in 1829 (see MORONI, VISITATIONS OF).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Roberts, B. H. “Translation of the Book of Mormon.” IE 9 (Apr. 1906):706–136.
- Ricks, Stephen D. “Joseph Smith’s Means and Methods of Translating the Book of Mormon.” F.A.R.M.S. Paper. Provo, Utah, 1984.
- Welch, John W. “How Long Did It Take Joseph Smith to Translate the Book of Mormon?” Ensign 18 (Jan. 1988):46.

———. The Sermon at the Temple and the Sermon on the Mount, pp. 130–63. Salt Lake City, 1990.

Welch, John W., and Tim Rathbone. “The Translation of the Book of Mormon: Basic Historical Information.” F.A.R.M.S. Paper. Provo, Utah, 1986.

JOHN W. WELCH
TIM RATHBONE

BOOK OF MORMON TRANSLATIONS

After the Prophet Joseph SMITH’s original translation of the Book of Mormon from the gold plates into English in 1829 and the return of those plates to the angel Moroni, no translations from English into other languages appeared until the 1850s. During the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries, the Church produced translations of the Book of Mormon irregularly, often in groups of languages, and at widely separated intervals. However, in the 1970s and later, translations from the English text of the Book of Mormon became systematic and frequent.

Making the Book of Mormon and other STANDARD WORKS available in many languages is foreshadowed by the divine injunction “that every man shall hear the fulness of the gospel in his own tongue, and in his own language” (D&C 90:11). As missions were opened on the continent of Europe in 1850 and 1851, Church leaders in many of the newly opened missions mounted simultaneous translation efforts. The Danish edition (1851), produced by Erastus Snow for the Scandinavian Mission from a Danish translation by Peter Olsen Hansen, was the first printed (see SCANDINAVIA, THE CHURCH IN). At the same time, John TAYLOR supervised translations into French by Curtis E. Bolton and German by George P. Dykes, while Lorenzo SNOW was working on the Italian edition and John Davis on a Welsh one. All of these appeared in 1852, and culminated with George Q. Cannon’s translation of the Book of Mormon into Hawaiian in 1855. No further translations were published for twenty years.

In 1875 Meliton G. Trejo and Daniel W. Jones produced the first translation of selections from the Book of Mormon into Spanish. This ninety-six-page document, comprising only the books of 1 and 2 Nephi, Omni, 3 Nephi, and Mormon, was the first partial translation and one of only two partial printings of the Book of Mormon in book form at the time. (The other was the publication of 1 Nephi—Words of Mormon in the DESERET ALPHABET.) Trejo and James Z. Stewart completed a translation of the entire book into Spanish in 1886. The remainder of the nineteenth century produced three further translations: Swedish (1878), Maori (1889), and Dutch (1890). Sixteen more, including the first in Asian languages and several in South Pacific tongues, appeared between 1903 and 1977.

In 1971, in support of an expanding missionary program, the Church organized a Translation Services Department (see ORGANIZATION) to direct a systematic program of scripture translation. They began with the production of a large number of translations of Selections from the Book of Mormon, designed to place selected chapters in the hands of missionaries, general readers, and members as quickly as possible and to train translators. The Selections, chosen and approved by the FIRST PRESIDENCY and the QUORUM OF THE TWELVE APOSTLES, were the same in all languages, and consisted of the following:

Book	Chapters
1 Nephi	1–7, 16–18
2 Nephi	1–4; 5:1–20; 9, 29, 31–33
Enos	all
Mosiah	2–5, 17, 18
Alma	5, 11, 12, 32, 34, 39–42
Helaman	13–16
3 Nephi	1, 8, 11–30
4 Nephi	all
Mormon	1, 4, 6–9
Moroni	all

This Selections volume is being progressively replaced by full translations. As of 1990, the entire Book of Mormon was available in 36 languages (including English), while Selections was available in 44 additional languages.

Retranslations of early editions began in 1952 with the second translation into Spanish. Subsequently, the Japanese, Italian, and German editions were retranslated; other retranslations appeared as Selections from 1980 on. With the issuance of the 1981 English edition of the Book of Mormon (see BOOK OF MORMON EDITIONS), the Church Translation Department began systematically reviewing all existing translations, setting pri-

———. The Sermon at the Temple and the Sermon on the Mount, pp. 130–63. Salt Lake City, 1990.

Welch, John W., and Tim Rathbone. “The Translation of the Book of Mormon: Basic Historical Information.” F.A.R.M.S. Paper. Provo, Utah, 1986.

JOHN W. WELCH
TIM RATHBONE

BOOK OF MORMON TRANSLATIONS

After the Prophet Joseph SMITH’s original translation of the Book of Mormon from the gold plates into English in 1829 and the return of those plates to the angel Moroni, no translations from English into other languages appeared until the 1850s. During the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries, the Church produced translations of the Book of Mormon irregularly, often in groups of languages, and at widely separated intervals. However, in the 1970s and later, translations from the English text of the Book of Mormon became systematic and frequent.

Making the Book of Mormon and other STANDARD WORKS available in many languages is foreshadowed by the divine injunction “that every man shall hear the fulness of the gospel in his own tongue, and in his own language” (D&C 90:11). As missions were opened on the continent of Europe in 1850 and 1851, Church leaders in many of the newly opened missions mounted simultaneous translation efforts. The Danish edition (1851), produced by Erastus Snow for the Scandinavian Mission from a Danish translation by Peter Olsen Hansen, was the first printed (see SCANDINAVIA, THE CHURCH IN). At the same time, John TAYLOR supervised translations into French by Curtis E. Bolton and German by George P. Dykes, while Lorenzo SNOW was working on the Italian edition and John Davis on a Welsh one. All of these appeared in 1852, and culminated with George Q. Cannon’s translation of the Book of Mormon into Hawaiian in 1855. No further translations were published for twenty years.

In 1875 Meliton G. Trejo and Daniel W. Jones produced the first translation of selections from the Book of Mormon into Spanish. This ninety-six-page document, comprising only the books of 1 and 2 Nephi, Omni, 3 Nephi, and Mormon, was the first partial translation and one of only two partial printings of the Book of Mormon in book form at the time. (The other was the publication of 1 Nephi—Words of Mormon in the DESERET ALPHABET.) Trejo and James Z. Stewart completed a translation of the entire book into Spanish in 1886. The remainder of the nineteenth century produced three further translations: Swedish (1878), Maori (1889), and Dutch (1890). Sixteen more, including the first in Asian languages and several in South Pacific tongues, appeared between 1903 and 1977.

In 1971, in support of an expanding missionary program, the Church organized a Translation Services Department (see ORGANIZATION) to direct a systematic program of scripture translation. They began with the production of a large number of translations of Selections from the Book of Mormon, designed to place selected chapters in the hands of missionaries, general readers, and members as quickly as possible and to train translators. The Selections, chosen and approved by the FIRST PRESIDENCY and the QUORUM OF THE TWELVE APOSTLES, were the same in all languages, and consisted of the following:

Book	Chapters
1 Nephi	1–7, 16–18
2 Nephi	1–4; 5:1–20; 9, 29, 31–33
Enos	all
Mosiah	2–5, 17, 18
Alma	5, 11, 12, 32, 34, 39–42
Helaman	13–16
3 Nephi	1, 8, 11–30
4 Nephi	all
Mormon	1, 4, 6–9
Moroni	all

This Selections volume is being progressively replaced by full translations. As of 1990, the entire Book of Mormon was available in 36 languages (including English), while Selections was available in 44 additional languages.

Retranslations of early editions began in 1952 with the second translation into Spanish. Subsequently, the Japanese, Italian, and German editions were retranslated; other retranslations appeared as Selections from 1980 on. With the issuance of the 1981 English edition of the Book of Mormon (see BOOK OF MORMON EDITIONS), the Church Translation Department began systematically reviewing all existing translations, setting priorities for retranslation, and producing new editions more in conformity with the English format.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

"Book of Mormon Editions, Translated and Published." Deseret News 1989–90 Church Almanac. Salt Lake City, 1988.
The Millennial Star, Vols. 13–14 (1850–1851).

HUGH G. STOCKS

---

BOOK OF MORMON WITNESSES

Beginning with the first edition of 1830, the Book of Mormon has generally contained two sets of testimonies—the "Testimony of Three Witnesses" and the "Testimony of Eight Witnesses." When Joseph SMITH first obtained the GOLD PLATES, he was told to show them to no one. As translation progressed, he and those assisting him learned, both in the pages of the Book and by additional revelation, that three special witnesses would know, by the power of God, "that these things are true" and that several besides himself would see the plates and testify to their existence (Ether 5:2–4; 2 Ne. 27:12–13; D&C 5:11–13). The testimonies of the witnesses affirm that these things occurred.

The witnesses were men known for truthfulness and sobriety. Though each of the Three Witnesses was eventually excommunicated from the Church (two returned), none ever denied or retracted his published testimony. Each reaffirmed at every opportunity the veracity of his testimony and the reality of what he had seen and experienced.

A June 1829 revelation confirmed that Oliver COWDERY, David WHITMER, and Martin HARRIS would be the Three Witnesses (D&C 17). Soon thereafter, they, with Joseph Smith, retired to the woods near FAYETTE, NEW YORK, and prayed for the promised divine manifestation. The "Testimony of Three Witnesses" summarizes the supernatural event that followed, when an angel appeared and showed them the plates and engravings and they heard the Lord declare that the Book of Mormon was "translated by the gift and power of God." They said that the same divine voice "commanded us that we should bear record of it."

Joseph Smith's mother later recounted Joseph's great relief at no longer being the sole witness of the divine experiences of the restoration

(see LAW OF WITNESSES). That others had also seen an angel and "will have to testify to the truth of what I have said for now they know for themselves" relieved him of a great burden (Lucy Smith Preliminary Manuscript, Church Archives).

Soon afterward, at the Smith farm in New York, eight others were allowed to view and handle the plates: Christian Whitmer, Jacob Whitmer, Peter Whitmer, Jr., John Whitmer, Hiram Page, Joseph Smith, Sr., Hyrum Smith, and Samuel H. Smith. Their signed "Testimony of Eight Witnesses" reports that Joseph Smith showed these eight men the metal plates, which they "hefted" while turning the individual "leaves" and examining the engravings of "curious workmanship." In 1829 the word curious carried the meaning of the Latin word for "careful," suggesting that the plates were wrought "with care and art." Five of these Eight Witnesses remained solidly with the Church; John Whitmer was excommunicated in 1838, and his brother Jacob Whitmer and brother-in-law Hiram Page then became inactive.

Most of these eleven witnesses were members of the large Smith and Whitmer families—families who had assisted in guarding and in translating the ancient record. Not surprisingly, other family members reported indirect contact with the plates and the translation. Young William Smith once helped his brother Joseph carry the plates wrapped in a work frock. Joseph's wife Emma SMITH felt the pliable plates as she dusted around the cloth-covered record on her husband's translating table. Burdened with daily chores and caring for her family and visitors working on the translation, Mother Whitmer (Peter Whitmer, Sr.'s, wife) was shown the plates by a heavenly messenger to assure her that the work was of God.

Martin Harris, a prosperous farmer of Palmyra, New York, who had long sought a religion fulfilling biblical prophecy, assisted with the translation previous to his experience as a witness. In 1828 he spent two months transcribing as Joseph Smith dictated the first major segment of Book of Mormon translation—116 handwritten pages. After Martin lost these pages, he wrote no more for the Prophet, but he later financed the publication of the book.

Oliver Cowdery was the main scribe for the Book of Mormon. A schoolteacher, he learned of the gold plates and the translation while boarding with Joseph Smith's parents near Palmyra, New York. In early April 1829, Oliver walked from the orities for retranslation, and producing new editions more in conformity with the English format.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

"Book of Mormon Editions, Translated and Published." Deseret News 1989–90 Church Almanac. Salt Lake City, 1988.
The Millennial Star, Vols. 13–14 (1850–1851).

HUGH G. STOCKS

---

BOOK OF MORMON WITNESSES

Beginning with the first edition of 1830, the Book of Mormon has generally contained two sets of testimonies—the "Testimony of Three Witnesses" and the "Testimony of Eight Witnesses." When Joseph SMITH first obtained the GOLD PLATES, he was told to show them to no one. As translation progressed, he and those assisting him learned, both in the pages of the Book and by additional revelation, that three special witnesses would know, by the power of God, "that these things are true" and that several besides himself would see the plates and testify to their existence (Ether 5:2–4; 2 Ne. 27:12–13; D&C 5:11–13). The testimonies of the witnesses affirm that these things occurred.

The witnesses were men known for truthfulness and sobriety. Though each of the Three Witnesses was eventually excommunicated from the Church (two returned), none ever denied or retracted his published testimony. Each reaffirmed at every opportunity the veracity of his testimony and the reality of what he had seen and experienced.

A June 1829 revelation confirmed that Oliver COWDERY, David WHITMER, and Martin HARRIS would be the Three Witnesses (D&C 17). Soon thereafter, they, with Joseph Smith, retired to the woods near FAYETTE, NEW YORK, and prayed for the promised divine manifestation. The "Testimony of Three Witnesses" summarizes the supernatural event that followed, when an angel appeared and showed them the plates and engravings and they heard the Lord declare that the Book of Mormon was "translated by the gift and power of God." They said that the same divine voice "commanded us that we should bear record of it."

Joseph Smith's mother later recounted Joseph's great relief at no longer being the sole witness of the divine experiences of the restoration

(see LAW OF WITNESSES). That others had also seen an angel and "will have to testify to the truth of what I have said for now they know for themselves" relieved him of a great burden (Lucy Smith Preliminary Manuscript, Church Archives).

Soon afterward, at the Smith farm in New York, eight others were allowed to view and handle the plates: Christian Whitmer, Jacob Whitmer, Peter Whitmer, Jr., John Whitmer, Hiram Page, Joseph Smith, Sr., Hyrum Smith, and Samuel H. Smith. Their signed "Testimony of Eight Witnesses" reports that Joseph Smith showed these eight men the metal plates, which they "hefted" while turning the individual "leaves" and examining the engravings of "curious workmanship." In 1829 the word curious carried the meaning of the Latin word for "careful," suggesting that the plates were wrought "with care and art." Five of these Eight Witnesses remained solidly with the Church; John Whitmer was excommunicated in 1838, and his brother Jacob Whitmer and brother-in-law Hiram Page then became inactive.

Most of these eleven witnesses were members of the large Smith and Whitmer families—families who had assisted in guarding and in translating the ancient record. Not surprisingly, other family members reported indirect contact with the plates and the translation. Young William Smith once helped his brother Joseph carry the plates wrapped in a work frock. Joseph's wife Emma SMITH felt the pliable plates as she dusted around the cloth-covered record on her husband's translating table. Burdened with daily chores and caring for her family and visitors working on the translation, Mother Whitmer (Peter Whitmer, Sr.'s, wife) was shown the plates by a heavenly messenger to assure her that the work was of God.

Martin Harris, a prosperous farmer of Palmyra, New York, who had long sought a religion fulfilling biblical prophecy, assisted with the translation previous to his experience as a witness. In 1828 he spent two months transcribing as Joseph Smith dictated the first major segment of Book of Mormon translation—116 handwritten pages. After Martin lost these pages, he wrote no more for the Prophet, but he later financed the publication of the book.

Oliver Cowdery was the main scribe for the Book of Mormon. A schoolteacher, he learned of the gold plates and the translation while boarding with Joseph Smith's parents near Palmyra, New York. In early April 1829, Oliver walked from the

Smith home to HARMONY, PENNSYLVANIA, where Joseph Smith was translating. On the way Oliver visited his friend David Whitmer, who also developed an intense interest in the new scripture. When persecution increased in Harmony, David came as requested and moved Joseph and Oliver to his family farm near Fayette (more than 100 miles away), about June 1.

Joseph Smith later recalled the insistent pleading of Harris, Whitmer, and Cowdery after they learned that three would be permitted to see the plates. The June 1829 revelation confirmed that they would be the Three Witnesses—and that they would then testify both from firsthand knowledge and “by the power of God” to the end “that my servant Joseph Smith, Jr., may not be destroyed” (D&C 17:3–4). Of the perhaps 200 recorded interviews with the Three Witnesses, a significant percentage stress the spiritual intensity of the witnesses as they described the angel and the plates. By themselves, the Prophet’s reputation and claims were vulnerable, but the testimony of additional reputable, solemn witnesses who shared a divine experience added credibility.

Lucy Smith’s autobiography records the overwhelming gratitude of the Three Witnesses as they returned to the Whitmer house after sharing this experience. Joseph Smith’s own history gives the fullest details of the event: repeated prayers followed by a vision given simultaneously to the Prophet, Cowdery, and Whitmer, and soon after a nearly identical vision experienced by the Prophet with Harris. According to Joseph, the intense glory of God enveloped the natural surroundings, and in this divine light the angel appeared, carefully displayed the plates, specifically counseled David Whitmer—the only one of the three who did not eventually return to the Church—to endure to the end, and the voice of God declared the book divine (HC 1:54–56).

By early 1838, disagreements on Church policies brought disaffection and excommunication for each of the Three Witnesses, and they separated; Cowdery died in 1850, Harris in 1875, and Whitmer in 1888. Throughout their lives, each witness freely answered questions about his firsthand experience with the angel and the plates. Obviously not relying on Joseph Smith’s account, which was not written until the months following their excommunication, each spoke spontaneously and independently; yet the details harmonized with each other and with Joseph Smith’s history.

Joseph Smith and the Eight Witnesses, by Harold T. (Dale) Kilbourn (1984), illustrates Joseph Smith allowing the eight witnesses to touch the gold plates from which the Book of Mormon was translated. “We did handle with our hands; and we also saw the engravings thereon, all of which has the appearance of ancient work, and of curious workmanship. And this we bear record with words of soberness.”

The alienation of the witnesses from the Church stemmed largely from conflicts regarding authority. After receiving revelation, the Three Witnesses felt they shared equally with Joseph Smith in foundational experiences, and their certainty about a past vision contributed to their inflexibility concerning future revelations. They sided with the Prophet’s critics who reacted negatively to the failure of the Kirtland Safety Society (see KIRTLAND ECONOMY), and they opposed Joseph Smith’s vigorous doctrinal and administrative leadership. After their excommunication, each felt deep rejection, resulting, predictably, in their harsh criticisms of Church leadership. Even in these circumstances, each of the Three Witnesses continued to maintain vigorously the authenticity of their published testimony. None expressed any doubt as to what they had testified. Both Oliver Cowdery and Martin Harris returned to the Church at the end of their lives; David Whitmer retained religious independence but to the end aggressively defended the Book of Mormon.

Skeptics have discounted the “Testimony of Three Witnesses” on the ground of collusion or deception. Yet each of the three was a respected and independent member of non-Mormon society, active in his community. Their lives, fully documented, clearly demonstrate their honesty and intelligence. David Whitmer repeatedly reacted against charges of possible “delusion.” To one skeptic, he responded: “Of course we were in the spirit when we had the view . . . but we were in the body also, and everything was as natural to us, as it is at any time” (Anderson, p. 87). Perhaps their later alienation makes them even more credible as witnesses, for no collusion could have withstood their years of separation from the Church and from each other.

The testimonies of the Three and Eight Witnesses balance the supernatural and the natural, the one stressing the angel and heavenly voice, the other the existence of a tangible record on gold plates. To the end of their lives, each of the Three said he had seen the plates, and each of the Eight insisted that he had handled them. Most of the Eight and all of the Three Witnesses reiterated their Book of Mormon testimonies just before death. Together with Joseph Smith they fulfill Nephi’s prophecy: “They shall testify to the truth of the book and the things therein” (2 Ne. 27:12).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Contributions of the Three Witnesses to the translation of the Book of Mormon are detailed in Lucy Mack Smith, Biographical Sketches of Joseph Smith the Prophet and His Progenitors for Many Generations (Liverpool, 1853 [reprinted Salt Lake City, 1902 under the title History of the Prophet Joseph by His Mother Lucy Mack Smith]). Joseph Smith’s recollections of the events of June 1829 are found in Dean C. Jessee, ed., The Papers of Joseph Smith, Vol. 1 (Salt Lake City, 1989) (see transcriptions of the 1839 draft and 1839 manuscript history). See also Joseph Smith’s published History of the Church.

For the Witnesses’ testimonies, and their lives outside the Church, see Richard Lloyd Anderson, Investigating the Book of Mormon Witnesses (corr. ed.; Salt Lake City, 1989). Primary documents concerning their testimonies appear in Preston Nibley, Witnesses of the Book of Mormon (Salt Lake City, 1953). For life sketches, see Andrew Jenson, Latter-day Saints Biographical Encyclopedia, Vol. 1 (Salt Lake City, 1901). Profiles for most of the Witnesses are also in Lyndon Cook, Revelations of the Prophet Joseph Smith (Salt Lake City, 1985).

RICHARD LLOYD ANDERSON

BOOK OF MOSES

The book of Moses is an extract of several chapters from Genesis in the JOSEPH SMITH TRANSLATION OF THE BIBLE (JST) and constitutes one of the texts in the PEARL OF GREAT PRICE. The Prophet Joseph

SMITH began an inspired revision of the Old Testament in June 1830 to restore and clarify vital points of history and doctrine missing from the Bible.

As for other ancient books, the original title of the first chapter of Moses may have been its opening line, “The words of God” (Moses 1:1). The account deals with Moses’ revelation, and beginning with chapter 2 largely parallels Genesis 1:1–6:13. The revelation came to Moses after his call to deliver the Israelites from bondage in Egypt (Moses 1:26). Much of it concerns God’s dealings with Adam and Eve and their immediate posterity following their expulsion from the GARDEN OF EDEN, a topic on which the current text of Genesis is silent. Structurally, a series of orienting visions (chap. 1) is followed by a revelation of the Creation and its aftermath (2:1–8:1). Embedded within this revelation is an extended account of ENOCH (6:25–51; 7:1–8:1), which itself quotes from a record of Adam (6:51–68). A narrative concerning Enoch’s descendants, chiefly Noah, appears next (8:2–30).

An outline of the book of Moses follows:

Chapter 1. God reveals himself and his creations to Moses; Satan tries to deceive Moses; God’s work and glory are characterized.

Chapter 2. God reveals to Moses—and commands him to write—the creation of the HEAVENS and the EARTH; man has dominion over other living things.

Chapter 3. All things were created in a spirit state before being created naturally on the earth; man and woman are created in God’s image.

Chapter 4. Satan, who had rebelled in the pre-earthly council, tempts Eve; Adam and Eve transgress and are expelled from the Garden, becoming subject to death (see DEVIL).

Chapter 5. Children are born to Adam and Eve; Adam offers animal sacrifice as a type and shadow of the anticipated Savior’s atoning sacrifice; the gospel of the future Jesus Christ is preached; Cain rebels, and wickedness spreads.

Chapter 6. Adam and his faithful posterity have a “pure and undefiled” language, both written and spoken, and keep records (see ADAMIC LANGUAGE); Enoch preaches the word of God and proclaims that the plan of salvation was revealed to Adam; faith, repentance, baptism, and the gift of the Holy Ghost are taught.

Chapter 7. God reveals himself to Enoch, who preaches and establishes the city of ZION; Enoch foresees the coming of Christ, his atonement and his resurrection; Enoch foresees the active in his community. Their lives, fully documented, clearly demonstrate their honesty and intelligence. David Whitmer repeatedly reacted against charges of possible “delusion.” To one skeptic, he responded: “Of course we were in the spirit when we had the view . . . but we were in the body also, and everything was as natural to us, as it is at any time” (Anderson, p. 87). Perhaps their later alienation makes them even more credible as witnesses, for no collusion could have withstood their years of separation from the Church and from each other.

The testimonies of the Three and Eight Witnesses balance the supernatural and the natural, the one stressing the angel and heavenly voice, the other the existence of a tangible record on gold plates. To the end of their lives, each of the Three said he had seen the plates, and each of the Eight insisted that he had handled them. Most of the Eight and all of the Three Witnesses reiterated their Book of Mormon testimonies just before death. Together with Joseph Smith they fulfill Nephi’s prophecy: “They shall testify to the truth of the book and the things therein” (2 Ne. 27:12).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Contributions of the Three Witnesses to the translation of the Book of Mormon are detailed in Lucy Mack Smith, Biographical Sketches of Joseph Smith the Prophet and His Progenitors for Many Generations (Liverpool, 1853 [reprinted Salt Lake City, 1902 under the title History of the Prophet Joseph by His Mother Lucy Mack Smith]). Joseph Smith’s recollections of the events of June 1829 are found in Dean C. Jessee, ed., The Papers of Joseph Smith, Vol. 1 (Salt Lake City, 1989) (see transcriptions of the 1839 draft and 1839 manuscript history). See also Joseph Smith’s published History of the Church.

For the Witnesses’ testimonies, and their lives outside the Church, see Richard Lloyd Anderson, Investigating the Book of Mormon Witnesses (corr. ed.; Salt Lake City, 1989). Primary documents concerning their testimonies appear in Preston Nibley, Witnesses of the Book of Mormon (Salt Lake City, 1953). For life sketches, see Andrew Jenson, Latter-day Saints Biographical Encyclopedia, Vol. 1 (Salt Lake City, 1901). Profiles for most of the Witnesses are also in Lyndon Cook, Revelations of the Prophet Joseph Smith (Salt Lake City, 1985).

RICHARD LLOYD ANDERSON

BOOK OF MOSES

The book of Moses is an extract of several chapters from Genesis in the JOSEPH SMITH TRANSLATION OF THE BIBLE (JST) and constitutes one of the texts in the PEARL OF GREAT PRICE. The Prophet Joseph

SMITH began an inspired revision of the Old Testament in June 1830 to restore and clarify vital points of history and doctrine missing from the Bible.

As for other ancient books, the original title of the first chapter of Moses may have been its opening line, “The words of God” (Moses 1:1). The account deals with Moses’ revelation, and beginning with chapter 2 largely parallels Genesis 1:1–6:13. The revelation came to Moses after his call to deliver the Israelites from bondage in Egypt (Moses 1:26). Much of it concerns God’s dealings with Adam and Eve and their immediate posterity following their expulsion from the GARDEN OF EDEN, a topic on which the current text of Genesis is silent. Structurally, a series of orienting visions (chap. 1) is followed by a revelation of the Creation and its aftermath (2:1–8:1). Embedded within this revelation is an extended account of ENOCH (6:25–51; 7:1–8:1), which itself quotes from a record of Adam (6:51–68). A narrative concerning Enoch’s descendants, chiefly Noah, appears next (8:2–30).

An outline of the book of Moses follows:

Chapter 1. God reveals himself and his creations to Moses; Satan tries to deceive Moses; God’s work and glory are characterized.

Chapter 2. God reveals to Moses—and commands him to write—the creation of the HEAVENS and the EARTH; man has dominion over other living things.

Chapter 3. All things were created in a spirit state before being created naturally on the earth; man and woman are created in God’s image.

Chapter 4. Satan, who had rebelled in the pre-earthly council, tempts Eve; Adam and Eve transgress and are expelled from the Garden, becoming subject to death (see DEVIL).

Chapter 5. Children are born to Adam and Eve; Adam offers animal sacrifice as a type and shadow of the anticipated Savior’s atoning sacrifice; the gospel of the future Jesus Christ is preached; Cain rebels, and wickedness spreads.

Chapter 6. Adam and his faithful posterity have a “pure and undefiled” language, both written and spoken, and keep records (see ADAMIC LANGUAGE); Enoch preaches the word of God and proclaims that the plan of salvation was revealed to Adam; faith, repentance, baptism, and the gift of the Holy Ghost are taught.

Chapter 7. God reveals himself to Enoch, who preaches and establishes the city of ZION; Enoch foresees the coming of Christ, his atonement and his resurrection; Enoch foresees the RESTORATION of the gospel in the LAST DAYS, the NEW JERUSALEM, and the second coming of the Savior.

Chapter 8. Great wickedness arises at the time of Noah; he and his sons preach the gospel, but it goes unheeded; all flesh is destroyed by the flood.

A comparison of the book of Moses with Old Testament pseudepigraphic texts shows parallels not found in the present text of Genesis. For example, Adam and Eve were to offer sacrifices to God after being driven from the Garden (Moses 5:5–7; cf. Life of Adam and Eve, 29.4), and Satan rebelled against God and was expelled from heaven (Moses 4:3–4; cf. Life, 12–16).

A major point of doctrine restored by the book of Moses is that the gospel of salvation was preached “from the beginning” (Moses 5:58), an idea echoed both by Paul’s statement that the gospel was preached to Abraham (Gal. 3:8) and by the Book of Mormon (Jacob 4:4–5; 7:10–11; cf. D&C 29:41–42). Similarly, Eusebius (c. A.D. 263–339) maintained that the teaching of Christianity was neither new nor strange and that the religion of the patriarchs was identical with that of the Christians (Ecclesiastical History 1.2.1–22).

In this connection, the book of Moses clarifies the fact that Adam and Eve understood the coming mission of Jesus Christ (Moses 6:51–63). Sacrificial offerings, Adam learned, were “a similitude of the sacrifice of the Only Begotten” (5:6–8). Further, Adam was baptized in water, received the Holy Ghost (5:9; 6:64–68), and was taught the plan of salvation (6:62). Adam and Eve and their posterity were also taught the purpose of the Fall and rejoiced in the Lord’s plan for redemption (5:10–12).

The book of Moses augments the biblical account of Enoch, who is briefly referred to in Genesis 5:22–24 as one who “walked with God.” This restoration of Moses’ account includes the fact that Enoch beheld in a vision the Savior’s ministry (Moses 7:55–57), the SPIRIT WORLD (6:35–36; 7:56–57), the restoration of the gospel in the last days (7:62), and the second advent of the Savior (7:60, 65). Enoch’s importance in the book of Moses parallels his significant role in other Enoch texts (Nibley, p. vii).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Charlesworth, James H. The Old Testament Pseudepigrapha, Vol. 2, p. 285. Garden City, N.Y., 1983, 1985.

Nibley, Hugh. Enoch The Prophet. In CWHN, 2. Salt Lake City, 1986.

Reynolds, Noel B. “The Brass Plates Version of Genesis.” In By Study and Also by Faith, ed. J. Lundquist and S. Ricks, Vol. 2, pp. 136–73. Salt Lake City, 1990.

BRUCE T. TAYLOR

---

BOOK OF REMEMBRANCE

From antiquity God has commanded his people to keep records. In the days of Adam the people wrote a book of remembrance “by the spirit of inspiration” (Moses 6:5) to identify the faithful, to “know” their fathers (Moses 6:45–46), to define “the right of priesthood” (Abr. 1:31), and to promote literacy (see Moses 6:6). Biblical records indicate similar practices (see Ezra 2:62; Neh. 7:5; Ezek. 13:9; Mal. 3:16). NEPHI<sub>1</sub>, in the Book of Mormon, stressed the importance of family history. In 1 Nephi 3–5, the Lord commanded LEHI to obtain the brass plates containing a history of his ancestors before leaving Jerusalem, to “enlarge their memory” (Alma 37:8) so that his posterity might know whence and from whom they came and might not lose the language of their fathers. Later, the Savior admonished the Nephites to be accurate and complete in their record keeping (3 Ne. 23:7–13). He also quoted Malachi 3:16–18, which includes a statement about keeping a book of remembrance (3 Ne. 24:16–18).

Latter-day Saints are encouraged to prepare family records as a Book of Remembrance, containing patriarchal blessings, records of ordinations and other sacred information, as well as personal and family histories, spiritual experiences, and other evidences of God’s goodness and love (D&C 85:9; 128:7–8, 24). As a latter-day prophet said, “Those who keep a book of remembrance are more likely to keep the Lord in remembrance in their daily lives. Journals are a way of counting our blessings and of leaving an inventory of these blessings for our posterity” (Kimball, p. 76).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Kimball, Spencer W. “Listen to the Prophets.” Ensign (May 1978):76.

CYNTHIA M. GARDNER

RESTORATION of the gospel in the LAST DAYS, the NEW JERUSALEM, and the second coming of the Savior.

Chapter 8. Great wickedness arises at the time of Noah; he and his sons preach the gospel, but it goes unheeded; all flesh is destroyed by the flood.

A comparison of the book of Moses with Old Testament pseudepigraphic texts shows parallels not found in the present text of Genesis. For example, Adam and Eve were to offer sacrifices to God after being driven from the Garden (Moses 5:5–7; cf. Life of Adam and Eve, 29.4), and Satan rebelled against God and was expelled from heaven (Moses 4:3–4; cf. Life, 12–16).

A major point of doctrine restored by the book of Moses is that the gospel of salvation was preached “from the beginning” (Moses 5:58), an idea echoed both by Paul’s statement that the gospel was preached to Abraham (Gal. 3:8) and by the Book of Mormon (Jacob 4:4–5; 7:10–11; cf. D&C 29:41–42). Similarly, Eusebius (c. A.D. 263–339) maintained that the teaching of Christianity was neither new nor strange and that the religion of the patriarchs was identical with that of the Christians (Ecclesiastical History 1.2.1–22).

In this connection, the book of Moses clarifies the fact that Adam and Eve understood the coming mission of Jesus Christ (Moses 6:51–63). Sacrificial offerings, Adam learned, were “a similitude of the sacrifice of the Only Begotten” (5:6–8). Further, Adam was baptized in water, received the Holy Ghost (5:9; 6:64–68), and was taught the plan of salvation (6:62). Adam and Eve and their posterity were also taught the purpose of the Fall and rejoiced in the Lord’s plan for redemption (5:10–12).

The book of Moses augments the biblical account of Enoch, who is briefly referred to in Genesis 5:22–24 as one who “walked with God.” This restoration of Moses’ account includes the fact that Enoch beheld in a vision the Savior’s ministry (Moses 7:55–57), the SPIRIT WORLD (6:35–36; 7:56–57), the restoration of the gospel in the last days (7:62), and the second advent of the Savior (7:60, 65). Enoch’s importance in the book of Moses parallels his significant role in other Enoch texts (Nibley, p. vii).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Charlesworth, James H. The Old Testament Pseudepigrapha, Vol. 2, p. 285. Garden City, N.Y., 1983, 1985.

Nibley, Hugh. Enoch The Prophet. In CWHN, 2. Salt Lake City, 1986.

Reynolds, Noel B. “The Brass Plates Version of Genesis.” In By Study and Also by Faith, ed. J. Lundquist and S. Ricks, Vol. 2, pp. 136–73. Salt Lake City, 1990.

BRUCE T. TAYLOR

---

BOOK OF REMEMBRANCE

From antiquity God has commanded his people to keep records. In the days of Adam the people wrote a book of remembrance “by the spirit of inspiration” (Moses 6:5) to identify the faithful, to “know” their fathers (Moses 6:45–46), to define “the right of priesthood” (Abr. 1:31), and to promote literacy (see Moses 6:6). Biblical records indicate similar practices (see Ezra 2:62; Neh. 7:5; Ezek. 13:9; Mal. 3:16). NEPHI<sub>1</sub>, in the Book of Mormon, stressed the importance of family history. In 1 Nephi 3–5, the Lord commanded LEHI to obtain the brass plates containing a history of his ancestors before leaving Jerusalem, to “enlarge their memory” (Alma 37:8) so that his posterity might know whence and from whom they came and might not lose the language of their fathers. Later, the Savior admonished the Nephites to be accurate and complete in their record keeping (3 Ne. 23:7–13). He also quoted Malachi 3:16–18, which includes a statement about keeping a book of remembrance (3 Ne. 24:16–18).

Latter-day Saints are encouraged to prepare family records as a Book of Remembrance, containing patriarchal blessings, records of ordinations and other sacred information, as well as personal and family histories, spiritual experiences, and other evidences of God’s goodness and love (D&C 85:9; 128:7–8, 24). As a latter-day prophet said, “Those who keep a book of remembrance are more likely to keep the Lord in remembrance in their daily lives. Journals are a way of counting our blessings and of leaving an inventory of these blessings for our posterity” (Kimball, p. 76).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Kimball, Spencer W. “Listen to the Prophets.” Ensign (May 1978):76.

CYNTHIA M. GARDNER

---

BORN IN THE COVENANT

Latter-day Saints make several formal COVENANTS with God such as baptism, confirmation, ordination to the priesthood, and eternal marriage, commonly called temple marriage. A temple marriage or SEALING refers to the ceremony in which a man and a woman are married (sealed) to each other for TIME AND ETERNITY in a temple by the AUTHORITY of the holy priesthood. Children born to the couple after this marriage are automatically sealed to their parents eternally and are spoken of as having been born in the covenant.

Children born to parents not members of the Church or to members who have not been married (sealed) in a temple by priesthood authority are not born in the covenant. However, if these parents subsequently are sealed in temple covenants they can have their children sealed to them, and can secure the same eternal family ties as if all were born in the covenant.

For the eternal blessings of being sealed as a family member to be valid, each must remain faithful to his or her covenants.

[See also Salvation of the Dead.]

RALPH L. COTTRELL, JR.

---

BORN OF GOD

Born of God or “born again” refers to the personal spiritual experience in which repentant individuals receive a forgiveness of sins and a witness from God that if they continue to live the COMMANDMENTS and endure to the end, they will inherit ETERNAL LIFE. The scriptures teach that just as each individual is “born into the world by water, and blood, and the spirit,” so must one be “born again” of water and the Spirit and be cleansed by the blood of Christ (John 3:5; Moses 6:59). To be born of God implies a sanctifying process by which the old or NATURAL MAN is supplanted by the new spiritual man who enjoys the companionship of the Holy Ghost and hence is no longer disposed to commit sin (Col. 3:9–10; Mosiah 3:19; TPJS, p. 51). When individuals are born again they are spiritually begotten sons and daughters of God and more specifically of Jesus Christ (Mosiah 5:7; 27:25). The Book of Mormon prophet ALMA<sup>1</sup> calls this inner transformation a “mighty change in your hearts” (Alma 5:14).

LDS scripture and literature contain numerous examples of individuals who have undergone this process of spiritual rebirth. Enos relates that after “mighty prayer and supplication” the Lord declared that his sins had been forgiven (Enos 1:1–8). After King Benjamin’s discourse, the people said that the Spirit had “wrought a mighty change in us, or in our hearts,” and that they had “no more disposition to do evil, but to do good continually” (Mosiah 5:2). Of his conversion experience, Alma<sup>2</sup> says, “Nevertheless, after wading through much tribulation, repenting nigh unto death, the Lord in mercy hath seen fit to snatch me out of an everlasting burning, and I am born of God” (Mosiah 27:28). Similar experiences are recounted about King Lamoni and his father (Alma 19, 22). In an account written in 1832, the Prophet Joseph Smith describes his FIRST VISION as being significant not only for opening a new DISPENSATION of the gospel, but also for his personal conversion. He writes, “The Lord opened the heavens upon me and I saw the Lord and he spake unto me saying Joseph my son thy sins are forgiven thee. [A]nd my soul was filled with love and for many days I could rejoice with great joy and the Lord was with me” (PJS 1:6–7).

MORMON explains the “mighty change” that must occur if one is to be born of God. The first fruit of repentance is the BAPTISM of water and fire, which baptism “cometh by faith unto the fulfilling of the commandments.” Then comes a REMISSION OF SINS that brings a meekness and lowliness of heart. Such a transformation results in one’s becoming worthy of the companionship of the Holy Ghost, who “fillet with hope and perfect love, which love endureth by diligence unto prayer” (Moro. 8:25–26).

LDS scriptures teach that spiritual rebirth comes by the GRACE of God to those who adhere to the principles and ordinances of the gospel of Jesus Christ, namely, faith, repentance, baptism, and reception of the GIFT OF THE HOLY GHOST. For the process to be genuine, however, one must be diligently engaged in good works, for as James says, “faith without works is dead; . . . by works [is] faith made perfect” (James 2:20, 22). A mere confession of change, or receiving baptism or another ordinance, does not necessarily mean that one has been born of God.

Other Christian faiths also emphasize the

---

BORN IN THE COVENANT

Latter-day Saints make several formal COVENANTS with God such as baptism, confirmation, ordination to the priesthood, and eternal marriage, commonly called temple marriage. A temple marriage or SEALING refers to the ceremony in which a man and a woman are married (sealed) to each other for TIME AND ETERNITY in a temple by the AUTHORITY of the holy priesthood. Children born to the couple after this marriage are automatically sealed to their parents eternally and are spoken of as having been born in the covenant.

Children born to parents not members of the Church or to members who have not been married (sealed) in a temple by priesthood authority are not born in the covenant. However, if these parents subsequently are sealed in temple covenants they can have their children sealed to them, and can secure the same eternal family ties as if all were born in the covenant.

For the eternal blessings of being sealed as a family member to be valid, each must remain faithful to his or her covenants.

[See also Salvation of the Dead.]

RALPH L. COTTRELL, JR.

---

BORN OF GOD

Born of God or “born again” refers to the personal spiritual experience in which repentant individuals receive a forgiveness of sins and a witness from God that if they continue to live the COMMANDMENTS and endure to the end, they will inherit ETERNAL LIFE. The scriptures teach that just as each individual is “born into the world by water, and blood, and the spirit,” so must one be “born again” of water and the Spirit and be cleansed by the blood of Christ (John 3:5; Moses 6:59). To be born of God implies a sanctifying process by which the old or NATURAL MAN is supplanted by the new spiritual man who enjoys the companionship of the Holy Ghost and hence is no longer disposed to commit sin (Col. 3:9–10; Mosiah 3:19; TPJS, p. 51). When individuals are born again they are spiritually begotten sons and daughters of God and more specifically of Jesus Christ (Mosiah 5:7; 27:25). The Book of Mormon prophet ALMA<sub>1</sub> calls this inner transformation a “mighty change in your hearts” (Alma 5:14).

LDS scripture and literature contain numerous examples of individuals who have undergone this process of spiritual rebirth. Enos relates that after “mighty prayer and supplication” the Lord declared that his sins had been forgiven (Enos 1:1–8). After King Benjamin’s discourse, the people said that the Spirit had “wrought a mighty change in us, or in our hearts,” and that they had “no more disposition to do evil, but to do good continually” (Mosiah 5:2). Of his conversion experience, Alma<sub>2</sub> says, “Nevertheless, after wading through much tribulation, repenting nigh unto death, the Lord in mercy hath seen fit to snatch me out of an everlasting burning, and I am born of God” (Mosiah 27:28). Similar experiences are recounted about King Lamoni and his father (Alma 19, 22). In an account written in 1832, the Prophet Joseph Smith describes his FIRST VISION as being significant not only for opening a new DISPENSATION of the gospel, but also for his personal conversion. He writes, “The Lord opened the heavens upon me and I saw the Lord and he spake unto me saying Joseph my son thy sins are forgiven thee. [A]nd my soul was filled with love and for many days I could rejoice with great joy and the Lord was with me” (PJS 1:6–7).

MORMON explains the “mighty change” that must occur if one is to be born of God. The first fruit of repentance is the BAPTISM of water and fire, which baptism “cometh by faith unto the fulfilling of the commandments.” Then comes a REMISSION OF SINS that brings a meekness and lowliness of heart. Such a transformation results in one’s becoming worthy of the companionship of the Holy Ghost, who “fillet with hope and perfect love, which love endureth by diligence unto prayer” (Moro. 8:25–26).

LDS scriptures teach that spiritual rebirth comes by the GRACE of God to those who adhere to the principles and ordinances of the gospel of Jesus Christ, namely, faith, repentance, baptism, and reception of the GIFT OF THE HOLY GHOST. For the process to be genuine, however, one must be diligently engaged in good works, for as James says, “faith without works is dead; . . . by works [is] faith made perfect” (James 2:20, 22). A mere confession of change, or receiving baptism or another ordinance, does not necessarily mean that one has been born of God.

Other Christian faiths also emphasize the importance of being "born again." Unlike many of these, Latter-day Saints do not believe this experience alone is sufficient for SALVATION. Instead, the process of spiritual rebirth signals to Latter-day Saints the beginning of a new life abounding with faith, grace, and good works. Only by ENDURING TO THE END may the individual return to the presence of God. Those who receive the ordinance of baptism and are faithful in keeping the commandments may enjoy the constant presence of the Holy Ghost who, like fire, will act as a sanctifier, and will witness to the hearts of the righteous that their sins are forgiven, imparting hope for eternal life.

Persons who have experienced this mighty change manifest attitudinal and behavioral changes. Feeling their hearts riveted to the Lord, their obedience extends beyond performance of duty. President Harold B. LEE taught, "Conversion must mean more than just being a 'card-carrying' member of the Church with a tithing receipt, a membership card, a temple recommend, etc. It means to overcome the tendencies to criticize and to strive continually to improve inward weaknesses and not merely the outward appearances" (Ensign, June 1971, p. 8). Latter-day Saints believe that individuals who are truly born of God gladly give a life of service to their fellow beings—they share the gospel message, sacrifice their own time, energy, and resources for the benefit of others, and in general hold high the light of Christ, being faithful to all the commandments.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Cannon, Elaine, and Ed J. Pinegar. The Mighty Change. Salt Lake City, 1978.

ED J. PINEGAR

BRANCH, BRANCH PRESIDENT

A branch is generally the smallest organized congregation of the Church (normally fewer than two hundred members). At first, local Latter-day Saint congregations were known as "churches" (D&C 24:3; 26:1). Soon these units were more commonly called "branches" (D&C 72:23; 107:39), reflecting the manner in which they were formed—members sharing the gospel and creating new congregations in neighboring communities.

As the Church has grown, STAKES, composed of several large congregations known as WARDS, are formed in centers of strength. In MISSION areas, DISTRICTS are composed of smaller congregations known as branches. Branches may also be found in stakes, typically in outlying communities where a smaller number of Church members can support only a less complete organization. In recent years a new kind of branch has emerged. In large urban centers an increasing number of ethnic minorities, isolated from the majority because of language and too small as a group to form a ward, have been organized as a branch. Furthermore, the Church has outlined programs that may be followed by isolated families or groups that are too small to form even a branch.

A branch is headed by a branch president, whereas a WARD is presided over by a BISHOP. Unlike the bishop, who must hold the office of HIGH PRIEST, the branch president need not be a high priest, but must be an ELDER in the MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOOD. The branch president and his two counselors have responsibilities similar to, and function like, a BISHOPRIC.

In the United States in 1990 there were 72 missions, 1,112 stakes, 7,750 wards, and 1,286 branches. Elsewhere there were 156 missions, 627 stakes, 2,786 wards, and 4,483 branches (Ensign 20 [May 1990]:22; Deseret News 1991–1992; Church Almanac, p. 94).

RICHARD O. COWAN

BRIGHAM YOUNG COLLEGE

President Brigham YOUNG founded Brigham Young College (BYC) in Logan, Utah, on July 24, 1877, just two years after he founded Brigham Young Academy (Brigham Young University from 1903) in Provo, Utah. Established to train the youth of the Church in northern Utah, southern Idaho, and western Wyoming, BYC had nearly 40,000 students in its forty-nine years of operation (1877–1926). At first a normal school primarily preparing elementary teachers (1877–1894), it then inaugurated college courses and for fifteen years granted bachelors' degrees (1894–1909). During its final period (1910–1926), the school operated as a high school and junior college. With the Church Board of Education decision to discontinue its schools except Brigham Young University, Brigham Young College closed its doors in May 1926; gave its library to Utah State Agricultural College, importance of being "born again." Unlike many of these, Latter-day Saints do not believe this experience alone is sufficient for SALVATION. Instead, the process of spiritual rebirth signals to Latter-day Saints the beginning of a new life abounding with faith, grace, and good works. Only by ENDURING TO THE END may the individual return to the presence of God. Those who receive the ordinance of baptism and are faithful in keeping the commandments may enjoy the constant presence of the Holy Ghost who, like fire, will act as a sanctifier, and will witness to the hearts of the righteous that their sins are forgiven, imparting hope for eternal life.

Persons who have experienced this mighty change manifest attitudinal and behavioral changes. Feeling their hearts riveted to the Lord, their obedience extends beyond performance of duty. President Harold B. LEE taught, "Conversion must mean more than just being a 'card-carrying' member of the Church with a tithing receipt, a membership card, a temple recommend, etc. It means to overcome the tendencies to criticize and to strive continually to improve inward weaknesses and not merely the outward appearances" (Ensign, June 1971, p. 8). Latter-day Saints believe that individuals who are truly born of God gladly give a life of service to their fellow beings—they share the gospel message, sacrifice their own time, energy, and resources for the benefit of others, and in general hold high the light of Christ, being faithful to all the commandments.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Cannon, Elaine, and Ed J. Pinegar. The Mighty Change. Salt Lake City, 1978.

ED J. PINEGAR

BRANCH, BRANCH PRESIDENT

A branch is generally the smallest organized congregation of the Church (normally fewer than two hundred members). At first, local Latter-day Saint congregations were known as "churches" (D&C 24:3; 26:1). Soon these units were more commonly called "branches" (D&C 72:23; 107:39), reflecting the manner in which they were formed—members sharing the gospel and creating new congregations in neighboring communities.

As the Church has grown, STAKES, composed of several large congregations known as WARDS, are formed in centers of strength. In MISSION areas, DISTRICTS are composed of smaller congregations known as branches. Branches may also be found in stakes, typically in outlying communities where a smaller number of Church members can support only a less complete organization. In recent years a new kind of branch has emerged. In large urban centers an increasing number of ethnic minorities, isolated from the majority because of language and too small as a group to form a ward, have been organized as a branch. Furthermore, the Church has outlined programs that may be followed by isolated families or groups that are too small to form even a branch.

A branch is headed by a branch president, whereas a WARD is presided over by a BISHOP. Unlike the bishop, who must hold the office of HIGH PRIEST, the branch president need not be a high priest, but must be an ELDER in the MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOOD. The branch president and his two counselors have responsibilities similar to, and function like, a BISHOPRIC.

In the United States in 1990 there were 72 missions, 1,112 stakes, 7,750 wards, and 1,286 branches. Elsewhere there were 156 missions, 627 stakes, 2,786 wards, and 4,483 branches (Ensign 20 [May 1990]:22; Deseret News 1991–1992; Church Almanac, p. 94).

RICHARD O. COWAN

BRIGHAM YOUNG COLLEGE

President Brigham YOUNG founded Brigham Young College (BYC) in Logan, Utah, on July 24, 1877, just two years after he founded Brigham Young Academy (Brigham Young University from 1903) in Provo, Utah. Established to train the youth of the Church in northern Utah, southern Idaho, and western Wyoming, BYC had nearly 40,000 students in its forty-nine years of operation (1877–1926). At first a normal school primarily preparing elementary teachers (1877–1894), it then inaugurated college courses and for fifteen years granted bachelors' degrees (1894–1909). During its final period (1910–1926), the school operated as a high school and junior college. With the Church Board of Education decision to discontinue its schools except Brigham Young University, Brigham Young College closed its doors in May 1926; gave its library to Utah State Agricultural College, importance of being "born again." Unlike many of these, Latter-day Saints do not believe this experience alone is sufficient for SALVATION. Instead, the process of spiritual rebirth signals to Latter-day Saints the beginning of a new life abounding with faith, grace, and good works. Only by ENDURING TO THE END may the individual return to the presence of God. Those who receive the ordinance of baptism and are faithful in keeping the commandments may enjoy the constant presence of the Holy Ghost who, like fire, will act as a sanctifier, and will witness to the hearts of the righteous that their sins are forgiven, imparting hope for eternal life.

Persons who have experienced this mighty change manifest attitudinal and behavioral changes. Feeling their hearts riveted to the Lord, their obedience extends beyond performance of duty. President Harold B. LEE taught, "Conversion must mean more than just being a 'card-carrying' member of the Church with a tithing receipt, a membership card, a temple recommend, etc. It means to overcome the tendencies to criticize and to strive continually to improve inward weaknesses and not merely the outward appearances" (Ensign, June 1971, p. 8). Latter-day Saints believe that individuals who are truly born of God gladly give a life of service to their fellow beings—they share the gospel message, sacrifice their own time, energy, and resources for the benefit of others, and in general hold high the light of Christ, being faithful to all the commandments.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Cannon, Elaine, and Ed J. Pinegar. The Mighty Change. Salt Lake City, 1978.

ED J. PINEGAR

BRANCH, BRANCH PRESIDENT

A branch is generally the smallest organized congregation of the Church (normally fewer than two hundred members). At first, local Latter-day Saint congregations were known as "churches" (D&C 24:3; 26:1). Soon these units were more commonly called "branches" (D&C 72:23; 107:39), reflecting the manner in which they were formed—members sharing the gospel and creating new congregations in neighboring communities.

As the Church has grown, STAKES, composed of several large congregations known as WARDS, are formed in centers of strength. In MISSION areas, DISTRICTS are composed of smaller congregations known as branches. Branches may also be found in stakes, typically in outlying communities where a smaller number of Church members can support only a less complete organization. In recent years a new kind of branch has emerged. In large urban centers an increasing number of ethnic minorities, isolated from the majority because of language and too small as a group to form a ward, have been organized as a branch. Furthermore, the Church has outlined programs that may be followed by isolated families or groups that are too small to form even a branch.

A branch is headed by a branch president, whereas a WARD is presided over by a BISHOP. Unlike the bishop, who must hold the office of HIGH PRIEST, the branch president need not be a high priest, but must be an ELDER in the MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOOD. The branch president and his two counselors have responsibilities similar to, and function like, a BISHOPRIC.

In the United States in 1990 there were 72 missions, 1,112 stakes, 7,750 wards, and 1,286 branches. Elsewhere there were 156 missions, 627 stakes, 2,786 wards, and 4,483 branches (Ensign 20 [May 1990]:22; Deseret News 1991–1992; Church Almanac, p. 94).

RICHARD O. COWAN

BRIGHAM YOUNG COLLEGE

President Brigham YOUNG founded Brigham Young College (BYC) in Logan, Utah, on July 24, 1877, just two years after he founded Brigham Young Academy (Brigham Young University from 1903) in Provo, Utah. Established to train the youth of the Church in northern Utah, southern Idaho, and western Wyoming, BYC had nearly 40,000 students in its forty-nine years of operation (1877–1926). At first a normal school primarily preparing elementary teachers (1877–1894), it then inaugurated college courses and for fifteen years granted bachelors' degrees (1894–1909). During its final period (1910–1926), the school operated as a high school and junior college. With the Church Board of Education decision to discontinue its schools except Brigham Young University, Brigham Young College closed its doors in May 1926; gave its library to Utah State Agricultural College, also in Logan; and sold its buildings and land to Logan City to be used as a high school. The old BYC buildings were demolished in the 1960s, and the new Logan High School was built on the site.

Four alumni of Brigham Young College became members of the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles: Richard R. Lyman, Melvin J. Ballard, John A. Widtsoe, and Albert E. Bowen.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Garr, Arnold Kent. "A History of Brigham Young College, Logan, Utah." Master's thesis, Utah State University, 1973.
- Sorensen, A. N. "Brigham Young College." In The History of a Valley: Cache Valley, Utah-Idaho, ed. Joel E. Ricks, pp. 349–69. Logan, Utah, 1956.

ARNOLD K. GARR

---

BRIGHAM YOUNG UNIVERSITY

PROVO, UTAH, CAMPUS

Brigham Young University (BYU) is a four-year private institution located in Provo, Utah, owned and operated by The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints as part of the CHURCH EDUCATIONAL SYSTEM. Twenty-seven thousand students from all fifty states and many other countries study under the direction of approximately 1,500 full-time faculty in the ten colleges and two professional schools. Approximately 80 percent of the students are enrolled in one of the 130 different undergraduate programs. Along with these extensive undergraduate programs, BYU offers master's and doctoral degrees in a variety of disciplines through fifty-seven graduate departments as well as the Law School and the Graduate School of Management. BYU awarded 6,421 degrees in the 1989–1990 school year. With its close ties to the sponsoring Church, BYU has been committed to providing the best possible postsecondary education for the youth of the Church in an atmosphere that emphasizes both teaching and scholarly research—both reasoned and revealed learning.

BYU functions under the direction of the Church through a board of trustees that includes the First Presidency, the general presidents of the

This aerial view of Brigham Young University from the south shows the Provo, Utah, campus with Mt. Timpanogos to the north (c. 1985). Courtesy Brigham Young University.

also in Logan; and sold its buildings and land to Logan City to be used as a high school. The old BYC buildings were demolished in the 1960s, and the new Logan High School was built on the site.

Four alumni of Brigham Young College became members of the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles: Richard R. Lyman, Melvin J. Ballard, John A. Widtsoe, and Albert E. Bowen.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Garr, Arnold Kent. "A History of Brigham Young College, Logan, Utah." Master's thesis, Utah State University, 1973.
- Sorensen, A. N. "Brigham Young College." In The History of a Valley: Cache Valley, Utah-Idaho, ed. Joel E. Ricks, pp. 349–69. Logan, Utah, 1956.

ARNOLD K. GARR

---

BRIGHAM YOUNG UNIVERSITY

PROVO, UTAH, CAMPUS

Brigham Young University (BYU) is a four-year private institution located in Provo, Utah, owned and operated by The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints as part of the CHURCH EDUCATIONAL SYSTEM. Twenty-seven thousand students from all fifty states and many other countries study under the direction of approximately 1,500 full-time faculty in the ten colleges and two professional schools. Approximately 80 percent of the students are enrolled in one of the 130 different undergraduate programs. Along with these extensive undergraduate programs, BYU offers master's and doctoral degrees in a variety of disciplines through fifty-seven graduate departments as well as the Law School and the Graduate School of Management. BYU awarded 6,421 degrees in the 1989–1990 school year. With its close ties to the sponsoring Church, BYU has been committed to providing the best possible postsecondary education for the youth of the Church in an atmosphere that emphasizes both teaching and scholarly research—both reasoned and revealed learning.

BYU functions under the direction of the Church through a board of trustees that includes the First Presidency, the general presidents of the women's AUXILIARY ORGANIZATIONS, and selected General Authorities. The university operates on a budget provided by the Church, one-third of which is derived from student tuition.

This aerial view of Brigham Young University from the south shows the Provo, Utah, campus with Mt. Timpanogos to the north (c. 1985). Courtesy Brigham Young University.

STUDENTS. About 9,000 of BYU's 27,000 students are from Utah, 16,000 from other states, and 2,000 from countries outside the United States. Approximately 49 percent of the students are women, and 51 percent, men. About 25 percent of the students are married. Approximately 40 percent have served as MISSIONARIES for the Church. Most students live in apartments or dormitories on or near campus, and many work to support themselves while at school; about one-third of the students are employed part-time by the university.

In 1989, entering freshmen had an average American College Test (ACT) composite score of 24.7 (of a possible 36; the national average for all freshmen that year was 18.6) and an average high school grade point average (GPA) of 3.43 (of a possible 4.0). At that time BYU was fifth among the nation's private universities in the number of undergraduates who went on to earn doctoral degrees and eighteenth among all universities in the United States in the number of entering National Merit scholars.

Most students at BYU are members of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints; members of other faiths who will accept and observe its standards of conduct are welcome.

FACULTY. The 1,500 faculty members at Brigham Young University have degrees from most of the major universities of the United States, and most are members of the Church. This is the natural result of an expectation that the faculty member should be involved fully in the work of the university and should be able to exert influence on students in the full breadth of the mission of BYU, including teaching of religious education courses. Realizing that students are influenced religiously in all their classes, the university officers have sought to attract the best-qualified members of the Church to faculty positions; however, well-qualified persons of other faiths are also employed on the faculty.

MISSION OF THE UNIVERSITY. The religious focus of BYU is evident in its Bulletin's declaration of purpose: "The mission of Brigham Young University—founded, supported, and guided by The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints—is to assist individuals in their quest for perfection and eternal life. That assistance should provide a period of intensive learning in a stimulating setting where a commitment to excellence is expected and the full realization of human potential is pursued" (p. 1).

Latter-day Saints believe that the study of all truth is especially important for those who have received the saving truths of the gospel of Jesus Christ. The Lord has instructed, "Teach ye diligently and my grace shall attend you, that you may be instructed more perfectly in . . . things both in heaven and in the earth, and under the earth; things which have been, things which are, things which must shortly come to pass; . . . a knowledge also of countries and of kingdoms. . . . Seek ye out of the best books words of wisdom; . . . seek learning, even by study and also by faith" (D&C 88:78–79, 118).

On the occasion of his inauguration, Dallin H. Oaks, eighth president of BYU, said, "Our reason for being is to be a university. But our reason for being a university is to encourage and prepare young men and women to rise to their full spiritual potential as sons and daughters of God" (Inauguration Response of President Dallin H. Oaks, Nov. 1971, p. 18).

HISTORY. By the 1870s the economic state of the Church and its members was tenuous at best as they struggled to establish themselves in the Great Basin. A deep-rooted determination to learn had led them to establish community schools almost as soon as townsites were chosen (see ACADEMIES). The vision was higher than the performance, and although attendance was poor in some of the community elementary schools, President Brigham YOUNG and others were planning more consequential and more influential schools, for, as he said, "all science and art belong to the Saints" (JD 10:224). "It is the business of the Elders of this Church," President Young said at another time, "to gather up all the truths in the world pertaining to life and salvation, to the Gospel we preach, to mechanism[s] of every kind, to the sciences, and to philosophy, wherever [they] may be found in every nation, kindred, tongue, and people, and bring it to Zion" (JD 7:283–84).

Consequently, late in 1875, Brigham Young donated a building and established the Brigham Young Academy in Provo. A preliminary term of instruction was held, beginning in January 1876;

As part of the semicentennial anniversary of Brigham Young University, October 15–17, 1925, a parade passes before the Karl G. Maeser Memorial Building (built 1911).

and in April of that year, Karl G. Maeser, a young, well-educated German immigrant, was appointed to lead the school. Maeser was instructed that “neither the alphabet nor the multiplication tables were to be taught without the Spirit of God” (Wilkinson and Skousen, p. 67). The school began with twenty-nine pupils in the elementary program and one teacher, Karl Maeser. In the words of Ernest L. Wilkinson, seventh president of BYU,

The school was born in poverty, nurtured in conflict, orphaned by the death of Brigham Young, . . . left homeless when its uninsured building was completely destroyed by fire, threatened with faculty and administrative resignations because of irregular or missed salary payments, and nearly abandoned on many occasions because of lack of funds. . . . [At first the academy] was a private school without a sponsor or means of support. . . . It survived only because of the financial sacrifices made by its faculty and Board of Trustees and voluntary gifts from its friends and from The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. [Finally, after 21 years of struggling existence,] the school was incorporated as an educational subsidiary of the LDS Church, which assumed responsibility for its survival [Wilkinson and Skousen, p. xi].

In 1903 the board of trustees changed the name of the school from Brigham Young Academy to Brigham Young University. Nine years later, the board set enrollment limits at 1,300 for the high school and 250 for the college, with a maximum of fifteen paid teachers for the latter. Forty years after its founding, BYU awarded its first four-year college degree.

The university grew from 1,500 students in 1945 to 25,000 by 1970. Since 1970, by decision of the board of trustees, enrollment has been limited to between 25,000 and 27,000 students. Growth has continued, but in less visible ways, with improving facilities, students, and faculty and with the university taking a respected place among other institutions in the state, region, and nation. It continues to struggle with significant problems of growth. With the continuing expansion of Church membership, BYU feels pressure to admit more students than it can adequately accommodate.

The following men have led the institution for the past 115 years: Brigham Young Academy was directed initially by Warren N. Dusenberry (1875–1876) and then for a longer period by Karl G. Maeser (1876–1892), whose character and high educational standards had a permanent impact on the fledgling institution. The presidents of the university thereafter have been Benjamin Cluff, Jr. (1892–1903), George H. Brimhall (1904–1921), Franklin S. Harris (1921–1945), Howard S. McDonald (1945–1949), Ernest L. Wilkinson (1949–1971), Dallin H. Oaks (1971–1980), Jeffrey R. Holland (1980–1989), and Rex E. Lee (from 1989).

RELIGION AND RELIGIOUS EDUCATION. LDS students at BYU are assigned to student wards, which hold their Sunday services in the academic buildings on campus. About 200 students belong to each ward. In these wards, many of the pastoral functions, including sermons, instruction, friendship, and support, are provided by the students themselves. Weekday social activities for students are organized around Church wards. BYU encourages students of other faiths to be actively associated with wards or with their congregations in the community.

Religious instruction represents the university's commitment to a wide spectrum of learning and is a direct response to such divine declarations as "it is impossible for a man to be saved in ignorance" (D&C 131:6) and "the glory of God is intelligence, or, in other words, light and truth" (D&C 93:36). Religious Education has fifty full-time and eighty part-time faculty who teach over 400 classes daily to approximately 22,000 students. It offers courses in scripture study (including the Old Testament, New Testament, Book of Mormon, Doctrine and Covenants, and Pearl of Great Price), Christian history, LDS Church history, family history (genealogy), comparative religion, biblical languages, and other topics.

GENERAL AND HONORS EDUCATION. Honors and general education are emphasized at BYU. General education both underpins and complements fields of major study. The general education curriculum is designed to inform students of how fields of study have come to the present state of knowledge and to enhance their awareness of the methodological and cognitive constraints on the pursuit of truth. In addition, given BYU's concern that the development of individuals be eternal, general education entails continued inquiry into the gospel of Jesus Christ and its implications for knowledge, society, and truth. General-education courses undergo continuing faculty review and evaluation to consider the integration of material and rigorosity of method for each course.

The university's honors education program links a broad university perspective with the specific concentration of a major. It is open to all students, whether or not they choose to complete all the requirements for the designation "University Honors" at graduation.

COLLEGES AND PROGRAMS (1991). The College of Biology and Agriculture has 100 faculty members and offers degrees in the following areas: agronomy and horticulture, animal science, biology, botany and range science, food science and nutrition, microbiology, and zoology. In addition, the college manages research and student training on an 800-acre farm and a 6,200-acre livestock ranch. The college oversees the Ezra Taft Benson Agriculture and Food Institute, which emphasizes training and research in small-plot agriculture and family nutrition for developing areas of the world. The college also manages a 460-acre wildlife preserve in southern Utah and the M. L. Bean Life Science Museum, which houses the university's extensive botanical and zoological collections.

The College of Education, with ninety-five faculty members, offers degree programs in education leadership, educational psychology, elementary education, and secondary education. In addition to an extensive program in the preparation of public school teachers and administrators on both the elementary and secondary levels, the college offers study in early childhood teaching, special-education teaching (for students who will work with those who have intellectual or emotional handicaps or learning disabilities), and communication sciences and disorders (speech and language pathology and audiology).

The College of Engineering and Technology has ninety-eight faculty in six departments: chemical engineering, civil engineering, electrical and computer engineering, mechanical engineering, industrial education, and technology. Research programs include the Advanced Combustion Engineering Research Center, the CAM (computer-aided manufacturing) Software Research Center, the Catalysis Laboratory, the Engineering Computer Graphics Laboratory, and the Digital Signal Processing program.

The College of Family, Home, and Social Sciences has 200 faculty in fifteen academic departments and centers, including anthropology, clothing and textiles, economics, family sciences, geography, history, home economics, political science, psychology, social work, and sociology. The college supervises several centers and institutes, including the Center for Studies of the Family; the Charles Redd Center for Western Studies, which promotes research and publishing regarding the American West and maintains a large oral history program; the Joseph Fielding Smith Institute for Church History, which is primarily engaged in research and writing of history about The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, for both a professional and a general audience; the Center for Family and Community History, which supervises genealogy, family, community, and public history programs; and the David M. Kennedy Center for International Studies, which sponsors and supervises interdisciplinary programs in American, Asian, Canadian, European, Latin American, and Near Eastern studies.

The College of Fine Arts and Communications, with 135 faculty, offers thirty-seven areas of emphasis in art, communications, design, music, and theatre and film. The college has for its use five speech and drama theaters; two concert halls; two art galleries; a major art museum; and journalism, advertising, and broadcast laboratories, including a campus daily newspaper, and the university radio (KBYU-FM) and television (KBYU-TV) stations. The BYU Motion Picture Studio became part of the Church Audiovisual Department in 1991. In addition, musical ensembles and performing groups from the college tour each summer throughout the United States, Europe, and Asia.

The College of Humanities has 230 full-time faculty and offers majors in Asian, Classical, English, French, Germanic, Near Eastern, Portuguese, Slavic, and Spanish languages and literatures; humanities; comparative literature; library and information sciences; linguistics; and philosophy. As a result of their two-year mission experience in a foreign country, many students at BYU elect to continue language study in addition to their major emphasis, resulting in an unusually high number of students speaking foreign languages at BYU. The college also oversees the work of the Humanities Research Center, with a main emphasis on computer-assisted language and literature research; BYU Studies, a quarterly journal for the community of LDS scholars; the Center for the Study of Christian Values in Literature; and almost a dozen different foreign-language houses where students live in residence and carry on daily activities with native teachers.

The College of Nursing has forty faculty. It accepts approximately 120 baccalaureate students and fifteen master's students into its NLN-accredited program annually (National League for Nursing). Its programs offer emphases in family, medical-surgical, child, and psychological nursing.

The College of Physical and Mathematical Sciences, with 155 faculty, has departments of chemistry, computer science, geology, mathematics, physics and astronomy, and statistics. The college has established a number of special facilities and programs, including four State Centers of Excellence: X-ray imagery, chemical separations, computer-aided education, and supercritical fluid-separation technologies. The college also oversees the Center for Thermodynamics, the Center for Statistical and Computing Research, and research programs and special facilities for solid-state physics, astrophysics and astronomy, calorimetry, environmental chemistry, molecular structure studies, chemical separations, earth sciences, and fission-track dating.

The College of Physical Education has ninety faculty members and offers degrees in health sciences; physical education—dance; physical education—sports; recreation management and youth leadership. In intercollegiate athletics, BYU is a member of the Western Athletic Conference and participates in most intercollegiate sports for both men and women. The college oversees, in addition to its own degree programs, a campuswide intramural program consisting of more than sixty events involving thousands of women and men. The university's athletic facilities include not only large intercollegiate facilities for basketball, football, and track but also indoor and outdoor tracks, pools, courts, and playing fields that accommodate the intramural programs and other recreational exercise for students and faculty members.

The J. Willard and Alice S. Marriott School of Management has approximately 110 faculty in its six academic departments, including accountancy, business management, information management, managerial economics, public management, and organizational behavior. The Graduate School of Management offers the master of accountancy, the master of business administration, the executive MBA, the master of organizational behavior, the master of public administration, and the executive MPA programs. In addition, the School of Management coordinates university programs in Air Force and Army ROTC with their sixteen military faculty.

The J. Reuben Clark Law School, with its twenty-eight faculty members, offers a six-semester course of graduate professional study leading to the doctor of jurisprudence degree. The Law School also offers a master of comparative law program.

BYU offers several Study-Abroad Programs, including semesters in several European and Asian countries, Mexico, and Israel (see BRIGHAM YOUNG UNIVERSITY: JERUSALEM CENTER FOR NEAR EASTERN STUDIES).

The Division of Continuing Education at BYU enrolls more than 390,000 students yearly in evening classes, independent study, conferences and workshops, travel study, study abroad, and other courses at centers in California; Ogden, Utah; Salt Lake City; and Rexburg, Idaho.

ACCREDITATION. BYU is fully accredited by the Northwest Association of Schools and Colleges. In addition, most professional programs of the university are reviewed, evaluated, and accredited by national and state associations and boards.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Bergera, Gary James, and Ronald Priddis. Brigham Young University: A House of Faith. Salt Lake City, 1985.
- Brigham Young University Bulletin* (annual catalog). Provo, Utah, 1990.
- Butterworth, Edwin. Brigham Young University: 1,000 Views of 100 Years. Provo, Utah, 1975.
- Clark, Marden J. "On the Mormon Commitment to Education." Dialogue 7 (Winter 1972):11-19.
- Holland, Jeffery R. A School in Zion. Provo, Utah, 1988.
- Kimball, Spencer W. "Second Century Address." BYU Studies 16 (Summer 1976):445-57.
- King, Arthur H. "The Idea of a Mormon University." BYU Studies 13 (Winter 1973):115-25.
- Pardoe, T. Earl. The Sons of Brigham. Provo, Utah, 1969.

Poll, Richard Douglas. The Honors Program at Brigham Young University, 1960-1985. Provo, Utah, 1985.

Waterstradt, Jean Anne, ed. They Gladly Taught: Ten BYU Professors. Provo, Utah, 1986.

Wilkinson, Ernest L., et al. Brigham Young University: The First One Hundred Years, 4 vols. Provo, Utah, 1975-1976.

———, and W. Cleon Skousen. Brigham Young University: A School of Destiny. Provo, Utah, 1976.

ELIOT A. BUTLER
NEAL E. LAMBERT

JERUSALEM CENTER FOR NEAR EASTERN STUDIES

The Jerusalem Center for Near Eastern Studies grew out of a Jerusalem "semester abroad" educational program for undergraduates instituted by Brigham Young University (BYU) in 1968. It became popular among Latter-day Saint students because of their commitment to the religious traditions of the Bible. The academic offerings at the Center focus on biblical and contemporary studies, correlated with a study of archaeology, biblical geography, Near Eastern history, Judaism, Islam, Near Eastern languages, and international relations and politics. Studies are enhanced with weekly field trips to biblical and historical sites in

The Brigham Young University Jerusalem Center for Near Eastern Studies is located on a five-acre site on Mount Scopus. First occupied in March 1987, the center was dedicated in May 1989 by Howard W. Hunter. Photographer: John P. Snyder. Courtesy Brigham Young University.

Israel and extended study tours to Jordan and Egypt.

Several academic programs, varying in content and covering periods ranging from a few weeks to six months, are offered at the Center for undergraduates and graduates. Research scholars from Brigham Young University also use these facilities, often in association with scholars and universities in the Middle East. In addition, the Center hosts a variety of continuing education programs or "travel study tours" for youths and adults.

The Center provides students a period of intensive learning in a stimulating setting in which a commitment to excellence is expected. Ideally, students conclude their studies in the Holy Land with deepened spiritual and intellectual appreciation of its history, peoples, and cultures.

The Jerusalem Center facilities are located on the northern half of the Mount of Olives, adjacent to the Mt. Scopus campus of Hebrew University. The eight-floor study center is terraced into the hillside. It is constructed of white Jerusalem limestone and designed with an architectural blend of domes, arches, and straight lines, complemented by flower gardens that feature several species of trees and bushes referred to in the Bible. The interior of the Center, with its cupolas, arches, galleries, and vaulted ceilings, is also congenial to its Near Eastern setting. Large windows and spacious patios offer a magnificent panorama of old and modern Jerusalem.

In the early 1980s the construction of the Center faced resolute opposition from certain religious circles and Israeli nationalist groups who feared that the Center might become a base for Mormon proselytizing of Jews. In the spirit of accommodation and out of a desire for peaceful INTERFAITH RELATIONS, BYU agreed with the government of Israel that the Center would be used exclusively for educational and cultural activities.

The Center also helps to serve the spiritual needs of Latter-day Saints, visiting or residing, in the Holy Land. An ecclesiastical organization consisting of a district and several branches has been established to provide worship services each sabbath (see MIDDLE EAST, THE CHURCH IN).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- "BYU's Jerusalem Center Opens." Ensign 17 (June 1987):77.
 "David Galbraith Heads BYU Jerusalem Center." Ensign 17 (Aug. 1987):79.

DAVID B. GALBRAITH

BRIGHAM YOUNG UNIVERSITY—HAWAII CAMPUS

BYU—Hawaii is a four-year, liberal arts institution located on northeastern Oahu, thirty-seven miles from Honolulu. Its multiracial student body of 2,000 comes from over fifty countries: 60 percent from Hawaii and the U.S. mainland, and 40 percent from the South Pacific and the Asian rim (see OCEANIA, THE CHURCH IN; ASIA, EAST, THE CHURCH IN; ASIA, SOUTH AND SOUTHEAST, THE CHURCH IN; HAWAII, THE CHURCH IN).

In 1865 the Church purchased 6,000 acres of land at Laie, where missionaries had conducted a primary school for many years. In 1921 David O. MCKAY, a member of the QUORUM OF THE TWELVE APOSTLES, visited the islands and became convinced that Church-sponsored higher education in Hawaii was essential to serve the Pacific basin. It was not until the late 1940s, however, that Church leaders of Oahu seriously began to investigate educational needs. In 1954 David O. McKay, then President of the Church, took definite steps to establish a school by appointing Dr. Reuben D. Law to head a proposed junior college in Laie.

In 1955, with a student body of 153—nearly all from Hawaii—and a faculty of 20, the Church College of Hawaii (CCH) was established as a two-year college and began classes in six war-surplus buildings while labor missionaries built a permanent campus. The school quickly expanded into a four-year teacher-training institution for Church schools in the South Pacific, which it remained for its first two decades. Midway through this period, following several years of effort to find a way to provide employment opportunities for the student body, the Church opened the POLYNESIAN CULTURAL CENTER in October 1963, which currently provides employment for nearly half the students.

In the early 1970s, CCH temporarily underwent a change of direction toward becoming a vocational school. A significant drop in enrollment resulted, however, and after careful study and reconsideration—both in Hawaii and in Utah—a decision was made to reestablish the college as a liberal-arts institution.

Major restructuring was initiated in 1974, when Church College of Hawaii was renamed Brigham Young University—Hawaii Campus and came under the direction of the president of BRIGHAM YOUNG UNIVERSITY in Provo, Utah. Since that time, enrollment has increased to 2,000 students.

Located in Laie, Oahu, Hawaii, the Church College of Hawaii (now Brigham Young University—Hawaii Campus) was established in 1954. Photograph, 1960, by Camera Hawaii.

Accredited by the Western Association of Schools and Colleges, the school is organized into seven academic divisions. Although there is no religious requirement for admission, all students and faculty are expected to follow the dress, grooming, and moral standards of the school's honor code. Since the late 1960s, BYU—Hawaii has excelled in various athletic competitions and has won national championships in rugby and men's and women's volleyball.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Britsch, R. Lanier. Moramona: The Mormons in Hawaii. Laie, Hawaii, 1989.
- Law, Reuben D. The Founding and Early Development of The Church College of Hawaii. St. George, Utah, 1972.

ALTON L. WADE

BRITISH ISLES, THE CHURCH IN

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints came to the British Isles when seven LDS missionaries landed at Liverpool, England, on July 19,

1837. The success of this first mission (more than 1,500 converts by April 1839) set the stage for the even more successful apostolic mission of 1839–1841, which saw nine of the eleven apostles (the twelfth place was vacant at the time) serving as missionaries in England under the direction of Brigham YOUNG. The Church grew rapidly in Great Britain among the working classes of the Northwest, the Midlands, and, especially, Wales. Membership counts at the end of 1851 showed 33,000 members of the Church in the United Kingdom and Ireland and 12,000 in Utah. Although total membership in the British Isles declined after the mid-1850s due to emigration and attrition, substantial additions through baptisms continued through the 1860s. From 1870 to the mid-1950s, the Church did not experience sustained growth in the United Kingdom and Ireland. But the dedication of the London Temple (in Lingfield, Surrey) in September 1958 and the creation of the Manchester England Stake on March 27, 1970, initiated a second growth phase of membership; by 1990 the Church had more than 160,000 members in 9 missions, 40 stakes, and

Located in Laie, Oahu, Hawaii, the Church College of Hawaii (now Brigham Young University—Hawaii Campus) was established in 1954. Photograph, 1960, by Camera Hawaii.

Accredited by the Western Association of Schools and Colleges, the school is organized into seven academic divisions. Although there is no religious requirement for admission, all students and faculty are expected to follow the dress, grooming, and moral standards of the school's honor code. Since the late 1960s, BYU—Hawaii has excelled in various athletic competitions and has won national championships in rugby and men's and women's volleyball.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Britsch, R. Lanier. Moramona: The Mormons in Hawaii. Laie, Hawaii, 1989.
- Law, Reuben D. The Founding and Early Development of The Church College of Hawaii. St. George, Utah, 1972.

ALTON L. WADE

BRITISH ISLES, THE CHURCH IN

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints came to the British Isles when seven LDS missionaries landed at Liverpool, England, on July 19,

1837. The success of this first mission (more than 1,500 converts by April 1839) set the stage for the even more successful apostolic mission of 1839–1841, which saw nine of the eleven apostles (the twelfth place was vacant at the time) serving as missionaries in England under the direction of Brigham YOUNG. The Church grew rapidly in Great Britain among the working classes of the Northwest, the Midlands, and, especially, Wales. Membership counts at the end of 1851 showed 33,000 members of the Church in the United Kingdom and Ireland and 12,000 in Utah. Although total membership in the British Isles declined after the mid-1850s due to emigration and attrition, substantial additions through baptisms continued through the 1860s. From 1870 to the mid-1950s, the Church did not experience sustained growth in the United Kingdom and Ireland. But the dedication of the London Temple (in Lingfield, Surrey) in September 1958 and the creation of the Manchester England Stake on March 27, 1970, initiated a second growth phase of membership; by 1990 the Church had more than 160,000 members in 9 missions, 40 stakes, and more than 330 wards and branches in the British Isles. The strength of the Church in the United Kingdom and Ireland in 1990 is indicated by the number of stakes: thirty-two in England, five in Scotland, two in Wales, and one in Northern Ireland. Branches (congregations) in the Republic of Ireland, whose members are not as numerous as in other areas, are under the jurisdiction of mission districts rather than a stake.

This building at 42 Islington Street, Liverpool, England (no longer standing), served from 1855 to 1904 as headquarters for the British and European Missions of the Church and as the office of the Millennial Star.

When the missionaries first arrived in the British Isles, they went to Preston, England, where Joseph Fielding's brother, Rev. James Fielding, had invited him and his missionary companions to preach at his Vauxhall Chapel. James's enthusiasm waned when it became apparent that he risked losing his congregation, and he promptly closed the chapel to the missionaries. They then taught in private homes, and a week later baptized the first nine British converts in the river Ribble, at Preston. By Sunday, August 6, there were nearly fifty converts in Preston, and Elder Heber C. Kimball organized the Preston Branch. In two months, membership had reached 140, and the original branch was divided into five separate branches in October. Missionary work was extended to Bedford, and to Alston, near the Scottish border, where the missionaries had relatives. Elder Kimball preached in the villages of the Ribble Valley.

On Christmas Day of 1837, the members met for the first conference in Britain, and on Sunday, April 8, 1838, another conference held in the Cockpit, Preston, drew down the curtain on the first phase of Mormon missionary work in Britain. There were 1,500–2,000 British members of the Church, and the leadership was transferred to Joseph Fielding as elders Kimball and Orson Hyde set sail for America.

APOSTOLIC MISSION, 1838–1841. The second major LDS missionary thrust in the British Isles began on July 8, 1838, at Far West, Missouri, when the Prophet Joseph SMITH received a revelation instructing the Twelve Apostles to prepare to serve a mission in Great Britain. Brigham Young and six other apostles left from New York for Britain between December 1839 and March 1840. Willard Richards, who had remained there after the 1837 mission, was ordained an apostle in Britain on April 14, 1840, by Brigham Young. The missionaries baptized thousands of converts (Wilford WOODRUFF personally baptized more than a thousand), organized branches and conferences, and directed the work of the Church, including printing scriptures and tracts, and began publishing the MILLENNIAL STAR, the British Church periodical that would have a continuous run from 1840 through 1970. In 1841, shortly before he returned to America, Brigham Young arranged for richly bound copies of the Book of Mormon to be presented to Queen Victoria and Prince Albert. The volume presented to the queen was located in the Royal Library at Windsor in 1986.

The Britain of those days was ripe for a message of hope, and the preaching of a restored gospel of Jesus Christ was timely. By June 1842 there were 8,245 members of the Church in the United Kingdom and Ireland. Six years later there were 18,000, and by the end of 1851 England had 24,199 Latter-day Saints, Wales had 5,244, Scotland had 3,291, and Ireland had 160—a total of almost 33,000—and an additional 11,000 had already emigrated to America. In 1851 there were more members of the Church in the United Kingdom and Ireland than there were in Utah (12,000).

EMIGRATION. Emigration to the United States to help build the main body of the Church was the recommended pattern for the members during the first century of the Church in the British Isles. The PERPETUAL EMIGRATING FUND was established in September 1849 to assist. Those who emigrated with the help of this revolving fund were to pay back the money as they could, so that others might be helped. The fund was formally discontinued in 1887, after thousands had benefited from it. Additional thousands were assisted by friends and relatives who had already emigrated. From 1847 to 1869, more than 32,000 British and Irish converts to the Church left their homelands for a new life in pioneer America. When the novelist Charles Dickens visited the Amazon before it set sail from London on June 4, 1863, to see what the Mormon emigrants were like, he noted: "I . . . had come aboard this Emigrant Ship to see what eight hundred Latter-day Saints were like. . . . Nobody is in an ill-temper, nobody is the worse for drink, nobody swears an oath or uses a coarse word, nobody appears depressed, nobody is weeping, and down upon the deck in every corner where it is possible to find a few square feet to kneel, crouch or lie in, people, in every suitable attitude for writing, are writing letters. Now, I have seen emigrants ships before this day in June. And these people are strikingly different from all other people in like circumstances whom I have ever seen, and I wonder aloud, 'What would a stranger suppose these emigrants to be!' . . . I should have said they were in their degree, the pick and flower of England" (Dickens, pp. 223–25).

Dickens set down his impressions of Mormon emigrants in one of a series of essays that appeared at intervals between 1860 and 1869 in his weekly magazine, All the Year Round. He later published them in the chapter "Bound for the Great Salt Lake" in The Uncommercial Traveller. He concluded with:

I afterwards learned that a dispatch was sent home by the captain before he struck out into the wide Atlantic, highly extolling the behaviour of these emigrants, and the perfect order and propriety of all their social arrangements. . . . I went on board their ship to bear testimony against them if they deserved it, as I fully believed they would; to my great astonishment they did not deserve it; and my predispositions and tendencies must not affect me as an honest witness. I went over the Amazon's side, feeling it impossible to deny that, so far, some remarkable influence had produced a remarkable result, which better known influences have often missed [Dickens, p. 232].

The 895 LDS emigrants under the direction of Elder William Bramall were well organized. The ship's captain explained:

The most of these came aboard yesterday evening. They came from various parts of England in small parties that had never seen one another before. Yet they had not been a couple of hours on board, when they established their own police, made their own regulations, and set their own watches at all the hatchways. Before nine o'clock, the ship was as orderly and quiet as a man-of-war [Dickens, p. 223].

THE CHURCH IN BRITAIN IN THE TWENTIETH CENTURY. The early years of the twentieth century were troubled times for the Church in the United Kingdom and Ireland. Much of its strength had been drawn away through emigration; between 1870 and 1892 Church membership declined from 9,000 to barely 2,600. Then, against the backdrop of the polygamy issue, and fanned by newspaper exposés and by novels from writers such as Sir Arthur Conan Doyle and Winifred Graham, an "anti-Mormon crusade" reached a peak in 1911. Persecution was rife, violence was threatened, and missionaries were occasionally tarred and feathered, as in Nuneaton, Warwickshire. Nevertheless, the Church grew in this time of trials, more than doubling in membership between 1897 and 1910, and averaging more than 8,000 members in Great Britain from then until after the end of World War I. But with missionary work disrupted by two world wars, a modest decline kept membership at an average of about 6,000 through 1950.

In the mid-1950s, membership in the United Kingdom and Ireland stood at 9,000, when the second major phase of the growth and development of the Church in the British Isles began. Emphasis was given to "staying and building," and steps were taken to ensure that Church members in the United Kingdom did not need to emigrate to enjoy all the blessings of the Church membership.

President David O. McKay dedicated the London Temple, at Lingfield, Surrey, on September 7–9, 1958. The first European stake was created March 17, 1960, in Manchester, and others followed in rapid succession. Where only a handful of LDS chapels existed in Britain before 1960, with most congregations worshiping in rented rooms or halls, by 1970 more than 100 chapels had been completed, and this number rose to around 250 by the end of the 1980s. These manifestations of a permanent presence led to a dramatic reawakening in the British Isles, and an era of increased baptisms and Church growth.

The home of John and Jane Benbow (1832–1840), near Castle Frome, Herefordshire, England (c. 1987). Before his conversion to the LDS Church, Benbow was a prominent member of the United Brethren. Wilford Woodruff preached here in March 1840, baptizing the first of approximately 600 converts from the United Brethren. John and Jane Benbow and Thomas Kington financed the first British edition of the Book of Mormon and LDS hymn book. Courtesy W. Dee Halverson.

The Public Communications Department was established in 1975 to disseminate information about the Church. The Church Educational System began its work with youth, and missionary and temple work increased. More genealogical records were obtained for microfilming, and a network of family history centers was inaugurated. The Church welfare services program, with its support to the needy based on the principle of work, commenced in 1980 with the purchase of a 305-acre farm at Kington, Worcestershire. In January 1985 the London Missionary Training Center, located near the temple, opened its doors.

THE 150TH ANNIVERSARY. Media attention peaked in 1987, when the Church celebrated its 150th anniversary in the British Isles. Broadcaster and writer Ian Bradley produced a thirty-minute BBC documentary on the Church that aired twice on radio in Britain, and also on the World Service.

At the anniversary dinner at the Savoy Hotel in London, on July 24, and in the presence of distinguished guests from both sides of the Atlantic, the British contribution to the colonizing of the American Far West was formally recognized in a videotaped message from U.S. President Ronald Reagan: "The Mormon contribution to American life is beyond measuring, and the contribution of the British Isles to the Mormon Church is also immense. They are the contributions of love and joy; of faith and family; of work and community. They are a dedication to the values that are at the heart of free nations—and good ones—and they are a faith in the promise of tomorrow."

THE CHURCH IN THE BRITISH ISLES IN 1990. Britain, like many other parts of Europe, has experienced a decline in religious observance since World War II. Many British churches now have congregations that are predominantly middle-aged to elderly, and largely female. Latter-day Saints in the United Kingdom and Ireland, in contrast, are experiencing the second flowering of the Church there. About 37 percent of British LDS baptisms came between 1837 and 1869, and nearly 50 percent have come since 1950. During the 1970s and 1980s, a new LDS congregation was established in the United Kingdom and Ireland almost every two weeks, and a new chapel was dedicated almost every month.

DEMOGRAPHICS. In demographic terms, the LDS Church in the British Isles at the end of 1989 had a young membership profile. While 43 percent of the British population that year were under thirty, the Church figure was 53 percent. Primary children (ages three to eleven) made up 20 percent of the British Latter-day Saints; 10 percent were teenagers (ages twelve to eighteen); and 25 percent were young adults (ages eighteen to thirty).

EDUCATION. The majority of LDS British youth attended state schools in 1989. Studies showed 13 percent of members of the Church had some form of higher education. Among recent converts this figure was 18 percent.

EMPLOYMENT. In 1989 unemployment was a major social problem in the British Isles, and the rate for LDS men was similar to the national figure of 13 percent. When they were employed, Church males generally showed a higher percentage in white-collar occupations compared with the figure for all British men; fewer LDS women were in the labor force than British women generally.

THE CHALLENGE OF LAY CLERGY. The recent increased growth of the Church in the United Kingdom and Ireland meant that the majority of local Church leaders in 1989 were still first-generation members. This created great need for effective leadership training of its lay clergy.

BRITISH CONTRIBUTIONS TO THE CHURCH. British contributions to the Church have taken two main forms: providing a training ground for many early Church leaders, and helping to build and sustain the fledgling Church through the influx of British immigrants. Of the 1839 apostolic mission, in particular, it is important to note that that group of missionaries contained the next four Presidents of the Church: Brigham Young, John Taylor, Wilford Woodruff, and Lorenzo Snow. They received vital training and experience in the British Isles, and forged a strong unity within the Quorum of the Twelve that sustained the Church through the testing times that followed the martyrdom of the Prophet Joseph Smith in 1844. These men would lead and direct the Church into the twentieth century.

As a young man, David O. McKay was a missionary in Scotland, his ancestral homeland. This picture, on the shores of Loch Lomond, was probably taken during his tour of the European missions in 1952, the year after he was sustained as President of the Church. Courtesy Utah State Historical Society.

All of the men who have served as President of the Church, from Joseph Smith to Ezra Taft Benson, trace their ancestry back to the British Isles. The ancestors of President Benson, for example, came from Caversham, Oxfordshire. All of the Church Presidents except Joseph Smith, Harold B. Lee, and Spencer W. Kimball labored as missionaries in Great Britain.

CHURCH LEADERS BORN IN BRITAIN. John Taylor, the third President of the Church, was born in Milnthorpe, Westmoreland, and joined the Church in Upper Canada. George Q. Cannon and Charles W. Penrose, both of whom became members of the Quorum of the Twelve and later counselors in the First Presidency, came from Liverpool and Camberwell, London, respectively. George Teasdale and James E. Talmage, also apostles, were from London and from Hungerford, Berkshire. John Rex Winder, from Biddenden, Kent, was a counselor in the First Presidency (1887–1910), and George Reynolds, from London, and B. H. Roberts, from Warrington, were presidents of the Seventy.

Other British General Authorities were John Longden, from Oldham, Lancashire, and John Wells, from Carolton, Nottinghamshire. In 1990, Nottingham-born Derek A. Cuthbert was serving in the First Quorum of the Seventy. Ruth May Fox, born in Westbury, Wiltshire, in 1853, was the general president of the Young Women from 1929–1937. May Anderson of Liverpool was editor of the Church's CHILDREN'S FRIEND magazine from 1902 to 1940, first counselor in the General Presidency of the Primary from 1905 to 1925, and its President from 1925 to 1939. She was also the moving force behind the establishment of the Primary Children's Hospital in Salt Lake City (see HOSPITALS). May Green Hineckley, of Brampton, Derbyshire, was General President of the Primary and editor of the Children's Friend from 1940 to 1943. The Church's Sunday School organization was founded in 1849 by Scotsman Richard Ballantyne.

Life was not all work. The Saints carried with them a love of music. As the first pioneer party crossed the plains, they did so to the strains of William Pitt's Brass Band, from the English Midlands. One of the best-remembered British converts is William Clayton, from Penwortham, Lancashire. He founded the branch of the Church in Manchester before emigrating, and went on to serve as a clerk to Joseph Smith. While crossing the plains, he kept a meticulous record, and wrote the rallying song, "Come, Come, Ye Saints," which is one of the best-known hymns of the Church.

THE MORMON TABERNACLE CHOIR. The renowned Mormon Tabernacle Choir owes its existence, in no small measure, to British emigrants. It is said that Brigham Young, hearing a group of Welsh converts singing four-part harmony in their native tongue, commented, "I don't understand the words, but you should become the nucleus of a great church choir." The first conductor of the Mormon Tabernacle Choir was John Parry, born in Newmarket, Flintshire, and its first organist was a sixteen-year-old native of Norwich, Joseph Daynes. Other early conductors also came from Britain, including George Careless, from London; Ebenezer Beesley, from Oxfordshire; and Evan Stephens, from Pencader, Carmarthenshire. In fact, seven of the first eight directors of the choir were born in the British Isles. The first Tabernacle pipe organ was designed by an Englishman, Joseph Ridges, who built it in Australia.

In June 1982 the British contribution to the choir—indeed, to the Church itself—was graphically demonstrated at the conclusion of a concert in the Royal Albert Hall, London, when the presenter asked all members of the choir with British ancestry to stand. All but four of the 350-voice choir stood.

At a time when a number of the mainstream churches in the United Kingdom and Ireland are wrestling with some of the fundamental doctrines and practices of Christianity—the nature of resurrection, the virgin birth, ecumenism, and the ordination of women—the unchanging nature of LDS beliefs appeals to many who come into contact with the Church. Mormons seem to have found a way to hold on to the fundamentals of the faith, yet be receptive to the pressures of the present. In his cover story for the November 15, 1987, issue of the Sunday Times Magazine, journalist Keith Wheatley wrote: "The phenomenal growth of the Latter-day Saints in recent times shows that they have no need to dilute their doctrines. . . . They seem to be a church whose hour has come."

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Allen, James B., and Thomas G. Alexander, eds. Manchester Mormons. Santa Barbara, Calif., 1974.
- Bloxham, Ben; James R. Moss; and Larry C. Porter, eds. Truth Will Prevail: The Rise of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter- day Saints in the British Isles, 1837–1987. Solihull, U.K., 1987.

Cannon, Donald Q., and Larry C. Porter, eds. Mormonism in the British Isles 1837–1987. BYU Studies 27 (Winter and Spring 1987):3–131; 3–135 (two whole issues on the topic).

Cowley, Matthias F., ed. Wilford Woodruff: History of His Life and Labors, as Recorded in His Daily Journals. Salt Lake City, 1964.

Cuthbert, Derek A. The Second Century: Latter-day Saints in Great Britain, Vol. 1, 1937–1987. Salt Lake City, 1987.

Dickens, Charles. The Uncommercial Traveller and Reprinted Pieces, Etc. London, 1958.

Evans, Richard L. A Century of "Mormonism" in Great Britain. Salt Lake City, 1937.

Jensen, Richard L., and Malcolm R. Thorp, eds. Mormons in Early Victorian Britain. Salt Lake City, 1989.

Kimball, Stanley B. Heber C. Kimball: Mormon Patriarch and Pioneer. Urbana, Ill., 1986.

Taylor, P. A. M. Expectations Westward: The Mormons and the Emigration of Their British Converts in the Nineteenth Century. Edinburgh and London, 1965.

BRYAN J. GRANT

---

BROADCASTING

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is a broadcasting entity. Its involvement in radio and television parallels the rapid expansion of those technologies that began during the early 1900s. In 1921 the Latter-day Saints University in Salt Lake City, Utah, received the first U.S. broadcast license issued to an educational institution. Radio in America developed primarily as a commercial rather than an educational service, as did the Church's broadcasting activities. On May 6, 1922, radio station KZN went on the air in Salt Lake City, and the Church began a long and complex involvement in broadcast and programming innovation.

In 1925 the call letters were changed to KSL when the Church assumed majority ownership of the station and hired Earl J. Glade, one of broadcasting's early pioneers, to manage its operation (see KSL RADIO).

KSL affiliated with the National Broadcasting Company (NBC) in 1929, which immediately began carrying broadcasts of the MORMON TABERNACLE CHOIR. These broadcasts continued until 1933, when KSL became a Columbia Broadcasting System (CBS) affiliate station. In 1936 the Tabernacle Choir Broadcast program took its present format as "Music and the Spoken Word" with he kept a meticulous record, and wrote the rallying song, "Come, Come, Ye Saints," which is one of the best-known hymns of the Church.

THE MORMON TABERNACLE CHOIR. The renowned Mormon Tabernacle Choir owes its existence, in no small measure, to British emigrants. It is said that Brigham Young, hearing a group of Welsh converts singing four-part harmony in their native tongue, commented, "I don't understand the words, but you should become the nucleus of a great church choir." The first conductor of the Mormon Tabernacle Choir was John Parry, born in Newmarket, Flintshire, and its first organist was a sixteen-year-old native of Norwich, Joseph Daynes. Other early conductors also came from Britain, including George Careless, from London; Ebenezer Beesley, from Oxfordshire; and Evan Stephens, from Pencader, Carmarthenshire. In fact, seven of the first eight directors of the choir were born in the British Isles. The first Tabernacle pipe organ was designed by an Englishman, Joseph Ridges, who built it in Australia.

In June 1982 the British contribution to the choir—indeed, to the Church itself—was graphically demonstrated at the conclusion of a concert in the Royal Albert Hall, London, when the presenter asked all members of the choir with British ancestry to stand. All but four of the 350-voice choir stood.

At a time when a number of the mainstream churches in the United Kingdom and Ireland are wrestling with some of the fundamental doctrines and practices of Christianity—the nature of resurrection, the virgin birth, ecumenism, and the ordination of women—the unchanging nature of LDS beliefs appeals to many who come into contact with the Church. Mormons seem to have found a way to hold on to the fundamentals of the faith, yet be receptive to the pressures of the present. In his cover story for the November 15, 1987, issue of the Sunday Times Magazine, journalist Keith Wheatley wrote: "The phenomenal growth of the Latter-day Saints in recent times shows that they have no need to dilute their doctrines. . . . They seem to be a church whose hour has come."

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Allen, James B., and Thomas G. Alexander, eds. Manchester Mormons. Santa Barbara, Calif., 1974.
- Bloxham, Ben; James R. Moss; and Larry C. Porter, eds. Truth Will Prevail: The Rise of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter- day Saints in the British Isles, 1837–1987. Solihull, U.K., 1987.

Cannon, Donald Q., and Larry C. Porter, eds. Mormonism in the British Isles 1837–1987. BYU Studies 27 (Winter and Spring 1987):3–131; 3–135 (two whole issues on the topic).

Cowley, Matthias F., ed. Wilford Woodruff: History of His Life and Labors, as Recorded in His Daily Journals. Salt Lake City, 1964.

Cuthbert, Derek A. The Second Century: Latter-day Saints in Great Britain, Vol. 1, 1937–1987. Salt Lake City, 1987.

Dickens, Charles. The Uncommercial Traveller and Reprinted Pieces, Etc. London, 1958.

Evans, Richard L. A Century of "Mormonism" in Great Britain. Salt Lake City, 1937.

Jensen, Richard L., and Malcolm R. Thorp, eds. Mormons in Early Victorian Britain. Salt Lake City, 1989.

Kimball, Stanley B. Heber C. Kimball: Mormon Patriarch and Pioneer. Urbana, Ill., 1986.

Taylor, P. A. M. Expectations Westward: The Mormons and the Emigration of Their British Converts in the Nineteenth Century. Edinburgh and London, 1965.

BRYAN J. GRANT

---

BROADCASTING

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is a broadcasting entity. Its involvement in radio and television parallels the rapid expansion of those technologies that began during the early 1900s. In 1921 the Latter-day Saints University in Salt Lake City, Utah, received the first U.S. broadcast license issued to an educational institution. Radio in America developed primarily as a commercial rather than an educational service, as did the Church's broadcasting activities. On May 6, 1922, radio station KZN went on the air in Salt Lake City, and the Church began a long and complex involvement in broadcast and programming innovation.

In 1925 the call letters were changed to KSL when the Church assumed majority ownership of the station and hired Earl J. Glade, one of broadcasting's early pioneers, to manage its operation (see KSL RADIO).

KSL affiliated with the National Broadcasting Company (NBC) in 1929, which immediately began carrying broadcasts of the MORMON TABERNACLE CHOIR. These broadcasts continued until 1933, when KSL became a Columbia Broadcasting System (CBS) affiliate station. In 1936 the Tabernacle Choir Broadcast program took its present format as "Music and the Spoken Word" with Richard L. Evans as host. This Sunday morning radio program originating from the Mormon Tabernacle on TEMPLE SQUARE continues today as the longest continuously broadcast network program in America. "Music and the Spoken Word" has been translated for radio distribution into several languages. The format and style of this radio program set the pattern for much of the Church's subsequent programming efforts.

Technical innovation designed to improve signal quality and increase geographic coverage enhanced the Church's broadcast facilities. By 1933 KSL-AM was a Federal Communications Commission (FCC) Class 1-A clear-channel station transmitting at 50,000 watts, the maximum allowable power. During the 1940s and 1950s, FM radio and television stations were added, and the Church also acquired minority interest in two Idaho broadcast properties. FM radio, black-and-white and later color television, stereo sound, cable television, and satellite transmissions have become a major part of the Church's wide-ranging broadcast capabilities.

KSL-AM and its sister FM radio and television stations emerged as the equivalent of a graduate school in broadcast management, programming, engineering, journalism, and advertising. Many, like Arch L. Madsen, who had worked with Glade during KSL's early years, became leaders of international stature and reputation. Under Madsen's leadership in the late 1950s the regional intermountain broadcast activities of the Church were transformed into their present international scope.

In 1961 the Church expanded its international activities with the purchase of WNYW, call letters for five shortwave radio transmitters near Boston. Daily broadcasts to Europe and Latin America, most of them non-Church-related, were made in English, Spanish, Portuguese, French, and German. Church broadcasts included programs on Church news, values, and culture. The Tabernacle Choir broadcast and sessions of general conference were also programmed. In 1974, when the newer technologies of satellites, cable, and videotape were developed, the Church sold WNYW.

On May 6, 1922, President Heber J. Grant began the first radio broadcast over KZN (later KSL), the radio station sponsored by the Deseret News in Salt Lake City. Pictured left to right are Nathan O. Fullmer, Anthony W. Ivins, George Albert Smith, two not identified, Augusta Winters Grant, Heber J. Grant, C. Clarence Neslen, and George J. Cannon.

BONNEVILLE INTERNATIONAL CORPORATION was formed in 1964 as the holding company for the Church's broadcast properties. Bonneville acquired radio and television stations in Seattle, Washington, and additional radio facilities throughout the United States, giving it commercial licenses for seven FM, five AM, and two television stations in 1990.

Three more FCC noncommercial, educational licenses are held by the Church's educational institutions in Utah and Idaho. BRIGHAM YOUNG UNIVERSITY operates KBYU-FM and TV. RICKS COLLEGE operates KRIC-FM, primarily for student training. The production capacity of these stations also allows them to serve Church educational objectives that are unfeasible for commercial broadcast activities.

The Church also holds interests in satellite communications and cable television distribution systems. The first intercontinental satellite transmission between North America and Europe included a performance by the Tabernacle Choir.

Early commercial network affiliation with NBC and CBS led to a basic broadcast philosophy grounded in a belief that FCC licenses are held as a public trust and not as preaching tools. The Church has avoided an evangelistic style of radio and television broadcasting and has limited the religious content of its programming. It is felt that the value and contribution of these facilities would diminish if the stations were used exclusively for religious purposes.

Most of the Church's programming efforts in both radio and television have been keyed to creating a favorable image for the Church rather than presenting its doctrine and making converts. "Music and the Spoken Word," public service announcements, BYU basketball and football games, and an assortment of public affairs and cultural programs have dominated the Church's primary programming content.

The Church's semi-annual general conference broadcasts are a significant exception to this rule. The first general conference was broadcast by KSL in 1924. Since then the broadcast reach of general conference has been expanded to cover much of the world. Through broadcast, cable, satellite, and videotape distribution, the conferences are translated into several languages and distributed to stations in many countries through Bonneville International productions.

During the 1970s the Church experimented with a more direct approach to broadcasting a doctrinal message through a prime-time special, "A Christmas Child." Since this broadcast, a number of Church-produced programs have focused on specific doctrinal messages. The production of programs that teach gospel principles directly to the audience has moved higher on the list of Church broadcast priorities.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Emery, Walter B. Broadcasting and Government: Responsibilities and Regulations, pp. 37-38. East Lansing, Mich., 1961.
- Kahn, Frank J., ed. Documents of American Broadcasting, 3rd ed., pp. xvii, 72-73, 426-27. Englewood Cliffs, N.J., 1978.
- Witherspoon, John, and Roselle Kovitz. "The History of Public Broadcasting," pp. 7, 81. Washington, D.C., 1987.

BRUCE L. CHRISTENSEN

---

BROTHERHOOD

While members of other Christian denominations may speak metaphorically of all humankind being brothers and sisters and children of God, Latter-day Saints believe it literally in the sense that a FATHER IN HEAVEN and a MOTHER IN HEAVEN created spirit children in a PREMORTAL existence. Those spirit children, born into this or other worlds as mortal men and women, are therefore all of the same "generation" and are literally brothers and sisters, children of deity. Among them is Jesus Christ, who is distinct from other men and women in that he is the Firstborn Son of God in the spirit and the Only Begotten of the Father in the flesh.

An important LDS doctrine based on this belief is the concept of equal opportunity for salvation. Since all mortals are offspring of deity, all have equal access to saving grace and may, through good works and moral progression while living as mortals, become saved by that grace. This doctrine of literal kinship is a major driving force behind the Church's proselytizing activities: Latter-day Saints believe that they have an obligation to teach the gospel of Jesus Christ to all the world because all its inhabitants are their brothers and sisters.

Latter-day Saints also believe in the brotherhood of the priesthood, similar to the SISTERHOOD of the Relief Society; a special bond exists among the members of both an individual PRIESTHOOD QUORUM and the entire body of the priesthood. As explained in scripture and instructions from Church leaders, this bond obligates priesthood holders to act as shepherds for one another and to be actively concerned for the welfare of other

BONNEVILLE INTERNATIONAL CORPORATION was formed in 1964 as the holding company for the Church's broadcast properties. Bonneville acquired radio and television stations in Seattle, Washington, and additional radio facilities throughout the United States, giving it commercial licenses for seven FM, five AM, and two television stations in 1990.

Three more FCC noncommercial, educational licenses are held by the Church's educational institutions in Utah and Idaho. BRIGHAM YOUNG UNIVERSITY operates KBYU-FM and TV. RICKS COLLEGE operates KRIC-FM, primarily for student training. The production capacity of these stations also allows them to serve Church educational objectives that are unfeasible for commercial broadcast activities.

The Church also holds interests in satellite communications and cable television distribution systems. The first intercontinental satellite transmission between North America and Europe included a performance by the Tabernacle Choir.

Early commercial network affiliation with NBC and CBS led to a basic broadcast philosophy grounded in a belief that FCC licenses are held as a public trust and not as preaching tools. The Church has avoided an evangelistic style of radio and television broadcasting and has limited the religious content of its programming. It is felt that the value and contribution of these facilities would diminish if the stations were used exclusively for religious purposes.

Most of the Church's programming efforts in both radio and television have been keyed to creating a favorable image for the Church rather than presenting its doctrine and making converts. "Music and the Spoken Word," public service announcements, BYU basketball and football games, and an assortment of public affairs and cultural programs have dominated the Church's primary programming content.

The Church's semi-annual general conference broadcasts are a significant exception to this rule. The first general conference was broadcast by KSL in 1924. Since then the broadcast reach of general conference has been expanded to cover much of the world. Through broadcast, cable, satellite, and videotape distribution, the conferences are translated into several languages and distributed to stations in many countries through Bonneville International productions.

During the 1970s the Church experimented with a more direct approach to broadcasting a doctrinal message through a prime-time special, "A Christmas Child." Since this broadcast, a number of Church-produced programs have focused on specific doctrinal messages. The production of programs that teach gospel principles directly to the audience has moved higher on the list of Church broadcast priorities.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Emery, Walter B. Broadcasting and Government: Responsibilities and Regulations, pp. 37–38. East Lansing, Mich., 1961.
 Kahn, Frank J., ed. Documents of American Broadcasting, 3rd ed., pp. xvii, 72–73, 426–27. Englewood Cliffs, N.J., 1978.
 Witherspoon, John, and Roselle Kovitz. "The History of Public Broadcasting," pp. 7, 81. Washington, D.C., 1987.

BRUCE L. CHRISTENSEN

---

BROTHERHOOD

While members of other Christian denominations may speak metaphorically of all humankind being brothers and sisters and children of God, Latter-day Saints believe it literally in the sense that a FATHER IN HEAVEN and a MOTHER IN HEAVEN created spirit children in a PREMORTAL existence. Those spirit children, born into this or other worlds as mortal men and women, are therefore all of the same "generation" and are literally brothers and sisters, children of deity. Among them is Jesus Christ, who is distinct from other men and women in that he is the Firstborn Son of God in the spirit and the Only Begotten of the Father in the flesh.

An important LDS doctrine based on this belief is the concept of equal opportunity for salvation. Since all mortals are offspring of deity, all have equal access to saving grace and may, through good works and moral progression while living as mortals, become saved by that grace. This doctrine of literal kinship is a major driving force behind the Church's proselytizing activities: Latter-day Saints believe that they have an obligation to teach the gospel of Jesus Christ to all the world because all its inhabitants are their brothers and sisters.

Latter-day Saints also believe in the brotherhood of the priesthood, similar to the SISTERHOOD of the Relief Society; a special bond exists among the members of both an individual PRIESTHOOD QUORUM and the entire body of the priesthood. As explained in scripture and instructions from Church leaders, this bond obligates priesthood holders to act as shepherds for one another and to be actively concerned for the welfare of other members and their families. In practice, this obligation is largely discharged through monthly HOME TEACHING, a system whereby quorum members visit one another, assessing needs and delivering a spiritual message.

Because stakes and wards of the LDS Church are operated by a lay clergy, most active members, both men and women, serve in some unpaid Church calling (see LAY PARTICIPATION AND LEADERSHIP). The service rendered by priesthood holders in their ecclesiastical positions is often labor-intensive and provides an opportunity for close interaction. This system fosters a feeling of brotherhood of service among priesthood holders.

The most common title used by Latter-day Saints in referring to themselves and to each other is "Brother" or "Sister," though General Authorities of the Church are most often referred to by their more formal titles of "Elder" or "President."

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Brown, Hugh B. "The Gospel Is for All Men." IE 72 (June 1969):31–34.
 Johnson, P. Wendel. "The How of Brotherhood." IE 72 (Sept. 1969):70–75.
 Oaks, Dallin H. "Brother's Keeper." Ensign 16 (May 1986):20.
 Taylor, Henry D. "Am I My Brother's Keeper?" Ensign 2 (July 1972):74–75.

TIMOTHY W. SLOVER

---

BROTHER OF JARED

The brother of Jared (c. 2200 B.C.) was the first JAREDITE prophet (see BOOK OF MORMON: BOOK OF ETHER). He led his people from "the great tower" in Mesopotamia to the Western Hemisphere. "A large and mighty man, and a man highly favored of the Lord" (Ether 1:34), he is remembered most for his very great faith that allowed him to see and converse face to face with the premortal Jesus Christ (Ether 3:13; 12:19–21) and to be shown in VISION all the inhabitants and events of the earth from beginning to end (Ether 3:25).

Only a few details are known about the life and revelations of this ancient PROPHET. In response to his prayer of faith, the Lord did not confound his language or that of his family and friends at the time of the Tower of Babel. Instead, the Lord instructed him to lead those people to a land "choice above all the lands of the earth" (Ether

1:42), and he was promised that his descendants would become a great and righteous nation. They were called the Jaredites. The Lord came in a cloud to tell the brother of Jared where they should travel, but he did not see him (Ether 2:4). They gathered flocks and seeds, and journeyed to a place on the sea that they called Moriancumer (Ether 2:13). Although the Book of Mormon does not give this prophet's name, Joseph Smith later identified it as Mahonri Moriancumer (T&S 2 [1841]:362; Juvenile Instructor, Vol. 27 [May 1, 1892]:282).

For four years the Jaredites dwelt in tents on the seashore. During those years, the brother of Jared apparently ceased praying for guidance, and when the Lord appeared again in a cloud, he talked with him for three hours and chastened him, which caused him to repent and return to favor with God. Latter-day Saints see this as evidence of God's concern for his children, of the importance of daily prayer, and of the fact that the Spirit of the Lord will not always strive with man, even with a great prophet, unless he continues to petition the Lord in righteousness (Ether 2:15).

The brother of Jared built eight unique barges (Ether 2:16–25) in which to cross the ocean. Then he prepared sixteen clear molten stones and asked the Lord to make them shine to illuminate the inside of the barges (Ether 3:1–5). As the Lord touched the stones, the brother of Jared saw the finger of the Lord and was "struck with fear" (Ether 3:6). Never before, the record states, had man come before God with such exceeding faith; as a result, he was brought into the presence of the Lord Jesus Christ and saw the premortal SPIRIT BODY of Christ (Ether 3:9–13).

In this vision, the brother of Jared learned many things: he was told that he had been redeemed from the Fall; he saw that human beings were physically created in the image of God and that the spirit body of Jesus looked the same as would his future physical body; he beheld all the inhabitants of the earth from the beginning to the end; and he learned many other sacred things, which he was commanded to record in a cryptic language, sealed up to come forth in the "due time" of the Lord (Ether 3:24; 4:1–2). With that record he included two stones that had been prepared by the Lord to aid future prophets in interpreting the record. For all these reasons, Latter-day Saints esteem the brother of Jared as one of the mightiest prophets who ever lived.

members and their families. In practice, this obligation is largely discharged through monthly HOME TEACHING, a system whereby quorum members visit one another, assessing needs and delivering a spiritual message.

Because stakes and wards of the LDS Church are operated by a lay clergy, most active members, both men and women, serve in some unpaid Church calling (see LAY PARTICIPATION AND LEADERSHIP). The service rendered by priesthood holders in their ecclesiastical positions is often labor-intensive and provides an opportunity for close interaction. This system fosters a feeling of brotherhood of service among priesthood holders.

The most common title used by Latter-day Saints in referring to themselves and to each other is "Brother" or "Sister," though General Authorities of the Church are most often referred to by their more formal titles of "Elder" or "President."

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Brown, Hugh B. "The Gospel Is for All Men." IE 72 (June 1969):31–34.
 Johnson, P. Wendel. "The How of Brotherhood." IE 72 (Sept. 1969):70–75.
 Oaks, Dallin H. "Brother's Keeper." Ensign 16 (May 1986):20.
 Taylor, Henry D. "Am I My Brother's Keeper?" Ensign 2 (July 1972):74–75.

TIMOTHY W. SLOVER

---

BROTHER OF JARED

The brother of Jared (c. 2200 B.C.) was the first JAREDITE prophet (see BOOK OF MORMON: BOOK OF ETHER). He led his people from "the great tower" in Mesopotamia to the Western Hemisphere. "A large and mighty man, and a man highly favored of the Lord" (Ether 1:34), he is remembered most for his very great faith that allowed him to see and converse face to face with the premortal Jesus Christ (Ether 3:13; 12:19–21) and to be shown in VISION all the inhabitants and events of the earth from beginning to end (Ether 3:25).

Only a few details are known about the life and revelations of this ancient PROPHET. In response to his prayer of faith, the Lord did not confound his language or that of his family and friends at the time of the Tower of Babel. Instead, the Lord instructed him to lead those people to a land "choice above all the lands of the earth" (Ether

1:42), and he was promised that his descendants would become a great and righteous nation. They were called the Jaredites. The Lord came in a cloud to tell the brother of Jared where they should travel, but he did not see him (Ether 2:4). They gathered flocks and seeds, and journeyed to a place on the sea that they called Moriancumer (Ether 2:13). Although the Book of Mormon does not give this prophet's name, Joseph Smith later identified it as Mahonri Moriancumer (T&S 2 [1841]:362; Juvenile Instructor, Vol. 27 [May 1, 1892]:282).

For four years the Jaredites dwelt in tents on the seashore. During those years, the brother of Jared apparently ceased praying for guidance, and when the Lord appeared again in a cloud, he talked with him for three hours and chastened him, which caused him to repent and return to favor with God. Latter-day Saints see this as evidence of God's concern for his children, of the importance of daily prayer, and of the fact that the Spirit of the Lord will not always strive with man, even with a great prophet, unless he continues to petition the Lord in righteousness (Ether 2:15).

The brother of Jared built eight unique barges (Ether 2:16–25) in which to cross the ocean. Then he prepared sixteen clear molten stones and asked the Lord to make them shine to illuminate the inside of the barges (Ether 3:1–5). As the Lord touched the stones, the brother of Jared saw the finger of the Lord and was "struck with fear" (Ether 3:6). Never before, the record states, had man come before God with such exceeding faith; as a result, he was brought into the presence of the Lord Jesus Christ and saw the premortal SPIRIT BODY of Christ (Ether 3:9–13).

In this vision, the brother of Jared learned many things: he was told that he had been redeemed from the Fall; he saw that human beings were physically created in the image of God and that the spirit body of Jesus looked the same as would his future physical body; he beheld all the inhabitants of the earth from the beginning to the end; and he learned many other sacred things, which he was commanded to record in a cryptic language, sealed up to come forth in the "due time" of the Lord (Ether 3:24; 4:1–2). With that record he included two stones that had been prepared by the Lord to aid future prophets in interpreting the record. For all these reasons, Latter-day Saints esteem the brother of Jared as one of the mightiest prophets who ever lived.

The brother of Jared and his people crossed the sea to the promised land. His great faith, as noted by Moroni, once caused a mountain, Zerin, to be removed (Ether 12:30). He had twenty-two sons and daughters. He lived to see his people begin to prosper and his nephew, Orihah, anointed as their king.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Eyring, Henry B. "The Brother of Jared." Ensign 8 (July 1978):62–65.

REX C. REEVE, JR.

---

BUFFETINGS OF SATAN

An individual who receives extensive spiritual knowledge, enters into sacred COVENANTS, and then turns away from those promises to the Lord may be left to the buffetings of Satan until complete REPENTANCE has occurred. This sin differs in nature and category from one committed in ignorance. Paul alluded to such in 1 Corinthians 5:1–5, but a clearer understanding of the doctrine is found in latter-day REVELATION (see DS 2:96–98).

To the Prophet Joseph SMITH the Lord revealed the situation of some who had broken the covenants by which they had entered the UNITED ORDER. That revelation reads, "The soul that sins against this covenant, and hardeneth his heart against it, shall be dealt with according to the laws of my church, and shall be delivered over to the buffetings of Satan until the day of redemption" (D&C 82:20–21; cf. 78:12; 104:9–10). The same principle applies to persons whose temple marriage is sealed by the HOLY SPIRIT OF PROMISE, and who later transgress and break their covenants. The revelation states that they "shall be delivered unto the buffetings of Satan unto the day of redemption, saith the Lord God" (D&C 132:26).

Elder Bruce R. McConkie, a latter-day APOSTLE, explained that to be "turned over to the buffetings of Satan is to be given into [Satan's] hands; it is to be turned over to him with all the protective power of the priesthood, of righteousness, and of godliness removed, so that Lucifer is free to torment, persecute, and afflict such a person without let or hindrance. When the bars are down, the cuffs and curses of Satan, both in this world and in the world to come, bring indescribable anguish typified by burning fire and brimstone.

The damned in hell so suffer" (MD, "Buffetings of Satan"; see also McConkie, Vol. 2, p. 335).

The term "buffetings of Satan" used in latter-day revelation is associated with punishment for the violation of covenants and is distinct from the "buffet" or "buffeted" used occasionally in the New Testament, which refers to the suffering, maltreatment, and persecution to which the Savior, Paul, and other church members were often subjected by people (Matt. 26:67; 1 Cor. 4:11; 2 Cor. 12:7).

[See also Damnation; Hell.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

McConkie, Bruce R. Doctrinal New Testament Commentary, 3 vols. Salt Lake City, 1965–1973.

DENNIS D. FLAKE

---

BUILDING PROGRAM

Throughout its history the Church has faced the challenge of providing adequate buildings to serve its growing membership for worship and for cultural, educational, and recreational activities. The "building program" is the term given to the Church's system of central direction, design, and financing for the construction of meetinghouses and temples throughout the world. Under the direction of the First Presidency and Presiding Bishopric, a professional staff headquartered in Salt Lake City creates standard building plans and specifications, and establishes procedures for construction and expenditures. Although this program has been extensively developed in the years since World War II, some central direction and planning have existed from the Church's beginnings.

The Church's first two important buildings, the temples at KIRTLAND, Ohio, and NAUVOO, Illinois, were both projects initiated, financed, and supervised by general Church leaders. Members throughout the Church contributed money, and many local Saints contributed every tenth day's labor. Some young men were called for full-time work, and more experienced craftsmen were employed at subsistence wages paid from contributed funds. Similar procedures were followed for the never-completed Nauvoo House and, after the move west, the Salt Lake Temple and Tabernacle.

As Church membership grew and dispersed throughout hundreds of settlements in the West, design and construction of meetinghouses, stake tabernacles, Church schools, and other buildings

The brother of Jared and his people crossed the sea to the promised land. His great faith, as noted by Moroni, once caused a mountain, Zerin, to be removed (Ether 12:30). He had twenty-two sons and daughters. He lived to see his people begin to prosper and his nephew, Orihah, anointed as their king.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Eyring, Henry B. "The Brother of Jared." Ensign 8 (July 1978):62–65.

REX C. REEVE, JR.

---

BUFFETINGS OF SATAN

An individual who receives extensive spiritual knowledge, enters into sacred COVENANTS, and then turns away from those promises to the Lord may be left to the buffetings of Satan until complete REPENTANCE has occurred. This sin differs in nature and category from one committed in ignorance. Paul alluded to such in 1 Corinthians 5:1–5, but a clearer understanding of the doctrine is found in latter-day REVELATION (see DS 2:96–98).

To the Prophet Joseph SMITH the Lord revealed the situation of some who had broken the covenants by which they had entered the UNITED ORDER. That revelation reads, "The soul that sins against this covenant, and hardeneth his heart against it, shall be dealt with according to the laws of my church, and shall be delivered over to the buffetings of Satan until the day of redemption" (D&C 82:20–21; cf. 78:12; 104:9–10). The same principle applies to persons whose temple marriage is sealed by the HOLY SPIRIT OF PROMISE, and who later transgress and break their covenants. The revelation states that they "shall be delivered unto the buffetings of Satan unto the day of redemption, saith the Lord God" (D&C 132:26).

Elder Bruce R. McConkie, a latter-day APOSTLE, explained that to be "turned over to the buffetings of Satan is to be given into [Satan's] hands; it is to be turned over to him with all the protective power of the priesthood, of righteousness, and of godliness removed, so that Lucifer is free to torment, persecute, and afflict such a person without let or hindrance. When the bars are down, the cuffs and curses of Satan, both in this world and in the world to come, bring indescribable anguish typified by burning fire and brimstone.

The damned in hell so suffer" (MD, "Buffetings of Satan"; see also McConkie, Vol. 2, p. 335).

The term "buffetings of Satan" used in latter-day revelation is associated with punishment for the violation of covenants and is distinct from the "buffet" or "buffeted" used occasionally in the New Testament, which refers to the suffering, maltreatment, and persecution to which the Savior, Paul, and other church members were often subjected by people (Matt. 26:67; 1 Cor. 4:11; 2 Cor. 12:7).

[See also Damnation; Hell.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

McConkie, Bruce R. Doctrinal New Testament Commentary, 3 vols. Salt Lake City, 1965–1973.

DENNIS D. FLAKE

---

BUILDING PROGRAM

Throughout its history the Church has faced the challenge of providing adequate buildings to serve its growing membership for worship and for cultural, educational, and recreational activities. The "building program" is the term given to the Church's system of central direction, design, and financing for the construction of meetinghouses and temples throughout the world. Under the direction of the First Presidency and Presiding Bishopric, a professional staff headquartered in Salt Lake City creates standard building plans and specifications, and establishes procedures for construction and expenditures. Although this program has been extensively developed in the years since World War II, some central direction and planning have existed from the Church's beginnings.

The Church's first two important buildings, the temples at KIRTLAND, Ohio, and NAUVOO, Illinois, were both projects initiated, financed, and supervised by general Church leaders. Members throughout the Church contributed money, and many local Saints contributed every tenth day's labor. Some young men were called for full-time work, and more experienced craftsmen were employed at subsistence wages paid from contributed funds. Similar procedures were followed for the never-completed Nauvoo House and, after the move west, the Salt Lake Temple and Tabernacle.

As Church membership grew and dispersed throughout hundreds of settlements in the West, design and construction of meetinghouses, stake tabernacles, Church schools, and other buildings

The brother of Jared and his people crossed the sea to the promised land. His great faith, as noted by Moroni, once caused a mountain, Zerin, to be removed (Ether 12:30). He had twenty-two sons and daughters. He lived to see his people begin to prosper and his nephew, Orihah, anointed as their king.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Eyring, Henry B. "The Brother of Jared." Ensign 8 (July 1978):62–65.

REX C. REEVE, JR.

---

BUFFETINGS OF SATAN

An individual who receives extensive spiritual knowledge, enters into sacred COVENANTS, and then turns away from those promises to the Lord may be left to the buffetings of Satan until complete REPENTANCE has occurred. This sin differs in nature and category from one committed in ignorance. Paul alluded to such in 1 Corinthians 5:1–5, but a clearer understanding of the doctrine is found in latter-day REVELATION (see DS 2:96–98).

To the Prophet Joseph SMITH the Lord revealed the situation of some who had broken the covenants by which they had entered the UNITED ORDER. That revelation reads, "The soul that sins against this covenant, and hardeneth his heart against it, shall be dealt with according to the laws of my church, and shall be delivered over to the buffetings of Satan until the day of redemption" (D&C 82:20–21; cf. 78:12; 104:9–10). The same principle applies to persons whose temple marriage is sealed by the HOLY SPIRIT OF PROMISE, and who later transgress and break their covenants. The revelation states that they "shall be delivered unto the buffetings of Satan unto the day of redemption, saith the Lord God" (D&C 132:26).

Elder Bruce R. McConkie, a latter-day APOSTLE, explained that to be "turned over to the buffetings of Satan is to be given into [Satan's] hands; it is to be turned over to him with all the protective power of the priesthood, of righteousness, and of godliness removed, so that Lucifer is free to torment, persecute, and afflict such a person without let or hindrance. When the bars are down, the cuffs and curses of Satan, both in this world and in the world to come, bring indescribable anguish typified by burning fire and brimstone.

The damned in hell so suffer" (MD, "Buffetings of Satan"; see also McConkie, Vol. 2, p. 335).

The term "buffetings of Satan" used in latter-day revelation is associated with punishment for the violation of covenants and is distinct from the "buffet" or "buffeted" used occasionally in the New Testament, which refers to the suffering, maltreatment, and persecution to which the Savior, Paul, and other church members were often subjected by people (Matt. 26:67; 1 Cor. 4:11; 2 Cor. 12:7).

[See also Damnation; Hell.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

McConkie, Bruce R. Doctrinal New Testament Commentary, 3 vols. Salt Lake City, 1965–1973.

DENNIS D. FLAKE

---

BUILDING PROGRAM

Throughout its history the Church has faced the challenge of providing adequate buildings to serve its growing membership for worship and for cultural, educational, and recreational activities. The "building program" is the term given to the Church's system of central direction, design, and financing for the construction of meetinghouses and temples throughout the world. Under the direction of the First Presidency and Presiding Bishopric, a professional staff headquartered in Salt Lake City creates standard building plans and specifications, and establishes procedures for construction and expenditures. Although this program has been extensively developed in the years since World War II, some central direction and planning have existed from the Church's beginnings.

The Church's first two important buildings, the temples at KIRTLAND, Ohio, and NAUVOO, Illinois, were both projects initiated, financed, and supervised by general Church leaders. Members throughout the Church contributed money, and many local Saints contributed every tenth day's labor. Some young men were called for full-time work, and more experienced craftsmen were employed at subsistence wages paid from contributed funds. Similar procedures were followed for the never-completed Nauvoo House and, after the move west, the Salt Lake Temple and Tabernacle.

As Church membership grew and dispersed throughout hundreds of settlements in the West, design and construction of meetinghouses, stake tabernacles, Church schools, and other buildings became a local responsibility. In many cases, Church Presidents or other general leaders encouraged such projects, and occasionally provided designs and financial assistance, but usually the responsibility for raising funds and supervising construction remained with local ecclesiastical officers.

In 1923 the Church Architectural Department in Salt Lake City began furnishing plans for meetinghouses and SEMINARY buildings throughout the Church. Over the next decade, about 350 meetinghouses and 35 seminary buildings were constructed from these plans, most of them red-brick buildings in an adaptation of colonial style. Willard Young, a son of Brigham Young, directed the department, with architect Joseph Don Carlos Young, another son, providing most of the plans. Non-Mormon architects also provided plans for more than 185 buildings during this period, mostly outside of Utah. Funding and construction remained a local responsibility, except for about 50 buildings that received some Church support. This department ceased providing plans around 1933, and local congregations again became responsible for the design of their own buildings, with only general direction from the department.

The decades following the Great Depression and World War II left the Church with pressing needs for many new meetinghouses, because of unprecedented growth, particularly outside the Great Basin. The Church Building Committee, led by Howard J. McKean, was organized in 1946 to fill these needs. The program began with a ratio of 40 percent general Church financing and 60 percent raised locally, but within a few years this ratio changed in most cases to 50–50. Under this program, the Church Building Department supervised the preparation of building plans by independent architects. The local bishop or branch president became the contractor for each project, working with an experienced construction foreman, usually a local member. Local congregations contributed as much labor and skill as possible. The value of their work was credited toward their share of the building cost, usually not more than 10 percent of the total. The local branch or ward was required to raise half of its share of the cost before construction could begin, and all of it before completion. If the cash flow stopped, construction stopped. More than 630 meetinghouses were built between 1945 and 1955 following this procedure, with few delays because of funding. In Utah and most other areas of the United States, these red-brick colonial buildings with white steeples became prominent features of the landscape. After 1950, various standard architectural plans were also provided for seminary and institute buildings.

The Provo Utah Edgemont Stake Center, dedicated in 1990, was one of more than 8,000 Church buildings constructed between 1948 and 1990. Courtesy Doug Martin.

By the early 1950s the growth of the Church in the South Pacific created need for meetinghouses and schools in areas where money and skilled labor were in short supply. In 1954, Church leaders, including the new Building Committee chairman, Wendell Mendenhall, responded with a building missionary program. Members with construction skills were called to oversee projects in Polynesia. Supervisors took their families with them and received living allowances. They were to train and supervise young building missionaries and other local volunteers while they built the buildings. This program began with the construction of the Church college and temple in New Zealand. In 1956 it expanded to provide meetinghouses and schools throughout the South Pacific and Australia, using plans sent from Salt Lake City. In 1960–1961 the program extended to meetinghouses in the British Isles and continental Europe, with offices in England, Holland, and Germany. Because of differences in language and building procedures in these countries, local architects prepared plans based on standard guidelines. In 1962 the building missionary program was extended to the Far East, Latin America, the United States, and Canada. Difficulties in supervision and financial management caused the discontinuance of this program in 1965. More than 2,000 buildings were constructed under this system.

In the late 1950s, increased construction in the United States and Canada led to the creation of four area offices within the Building Department in Salt Lake City, each supervising property acquisitions, plan refinement, construction, and financial management of projects within a geographical area. These area offices have been divided and extended through the years to include other countries as well. During the late 1950s and early 1960s, building plans evolved toward more diversified styles.

In 1965 a new Church Building Committee, under the chairmanship of Mark B. Garff, instituted more centralized control of the building program. The headquarters office continued to prepare detailed standardized plans and specifications, including color schemes and landscape designs, for virtually all new buildings. Local architects were retained for each project to help in preparing site plans, obtaining competitive bids and building permits, and overseeing construction. In 1978 the Real Estate, Building, and Operations and Maintenance divisions were combined into the Department of Physical Facilities, with Fred A. Baker as managing director. Area offices were expanded, increased in number, extended worldwide, and placed under the direction of General Authorities assigned as area presidencies in 1984, with many offices moved to the regions they served. Plans for meetinghouses were still produced in the headquarters office in Salt Lake City and distributed through these offices. The ratio of Church to local financial participation in building projects changed over these years, to 70–30 in 1960, to 96–4 in 1982, and to 100–0 in 1990. In the United States, nearly all construction is performed by contractors, while in some other countries local members still contribute some labor. Where practical, meetinghouses are shared by two or more wards or branches.

The building of temples throughout the world has remained under the close supervision of the First Presidency. The Temples and Special Projects Division of the Building Department (later the Department of Physical Facilities) in Salt Lake City began supervising the preparation of plans and construction of temples throughout the world in 1965. In 1983 the design of temple standard plans was transferred to the Architectural and Engineering Division. In most cases, local architects have been retained to adapt these standard designs to local conditions and styles and to aid in supervising bidding and construction.

The centrally directed building program has been one of the largest and most costly programs of the Church. While the high degree of central control and standardization may have discouraged architectural innovation and flexibility in meeting local circumstances, the system has provided consistent guidelines and orderly procedures for an enormous undertaking. Between 1948 and 1990, it directed the construction of more than 8,500 buildings, supporting and aiding the growth and development of the Church around the world.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Allen, James B., and Glen M. Leonard. The Story of the Latter-day Saints. Salt Lake City, 1976.
 Cowan, Richard O. The Church in the Twentieth Century. Salt Lake City, 1985.
 Cummings, David W. Mighty Missionary of the Pacific. Salt Lake City, 1961.

PAUL L. ANDERSON
 RICHARD W. JACKSON

---

BULLETIN

The Bulletin (1980–) constitutes official correspondence from Church headquarters to all general and local-unit Church leaders. It was formerly called the Messenger (1956–1964), the Priesthood Bulletin (1965–1974), and the Messages (1975–1980). Issued as needed by the Correlation Department of the Church under the direction of the FIRST PRESIDENCY and the QUORUM OF THE TWELVE, it communicates or reaffirms current Church policies, practices, procedures, and programs. All previous Bulletins are periodically superseded by the issuance of a revised GENERAL HANDBOOK OF INSTRUCTIONS and by policy letters from the First Presidency.

J. HUGH BAIRD

---

BURIAL

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints counsels its members to bury their dead in the earth to return dust to dust, unless the law of the financial management caused the discontinuance of this program in 1965. More than 2,000 buildings were constructed under this system.

In the late 1950s, increased construction in the United States and Canada led to the creation of four area offices within the Building Department in Salt Lake City, each supervising property acquisitions, plan refinement, construction, and financial management of projects within a geographical area. These area offices have been divided and extended through the years to include other countries as well. During the late 1950s and early 1960s, building plans evolved toward more diversified styles.

In 1965 a new Church Building Committee, under the chairmanship of Mark B. Garff, instituted more centralized control of the building program. The headquarters office continued to prepare detailed standardized plans and specifications, including color schemes and landscape designs, for virtually all new buildings. Local architects were retained for each project to help in preparing site plans, obtaining competitive bids and building permits, and overseeing construction. In 1978 the Real Estate, Building, and Operations and Maintenance divisions were combined into the Department of Physical Facilities, with Fred A. Baker as managing director. Area offices were expanded, increased in number, extended worldwide, and placed under the direction of General Authorities assigned as area presidencies in 1984, with many offices moved to the regions they served. Plans for meetinghouses were still produced in the headquarters office in Salt Lake City and distributed through these offices. The ratio of Church to local financial participation in building projects changed over these years, to 70–30 in 1960, to 96–4 in 1982, and to 100–0 in 1990. In the United States, nearly all construction is performed by contractors, while in some other countries local members still contribute some labor. Where practical, meetinghouses are shared by two or more wards or branches.

The building of temples throughout the world has remained under the close supervision of the First Presidency. The Temples and Special Projects Division of the Building Department (later the Department of Physical Facilities) in Salt Lake City began supervising the preparation of plans and construction of temples throughout the world in 1965. In 1983 the design of temple standard plans was transferred to the Architectural and Engineering Division. In most cases, local architects have been retained to adapt these standard designs to local conditions and styles and to aid in supervising bidding and construction.

The centrally directed building program has been one of the largest and most costly programs of the Church. While the high degree of central control and standardization may have discouraged architectural innovation and flexibility in meeting local circumstances, the system has provided consistent guidelines and orderly procedures for an enormous undertaking. Between 1948 and 1990, it directed the construction of more than 8,500 buildings, supporting and aiding the growth and development of the Church around the world.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Allen, James B., and Glen M. Leonard. The Story of the Latter-day Saints. Salt Lake City, 1976.
 Cowan, Richard O. The Church in the Twentieth Century. Salt Lake City, 1985.
 Cummings, David W. Mighty Missionary of the Pacific. Salt Lake City, 1961.

PAUL L. ANDERSON
 RICHARD W. JACKSON

---

BULLETIN

The Bulletin (1980–) constitutes official correspondence from Church headquarters to all general and local-unit Church leaders. It was formerly called the Messenger (1956–1964), the Priesthood Bulletin (1965–1974), and the Messages (1975–1980). Issued as needed by the Correlation Department of the Church under the direction of the FIRST PRESIDENCY and the QUORUM OF THE TWELVE, it communicates or reaffirms current Church policies, practices, procedures, and programs. All previous Bulletins are periodically superseded by the issuance of a revised GENERAL HANDBOOK OF INSTRUCTIONS and by policy letters from the First Presidency.

J. HUGH BAIRD

---

BURIAL

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints counsels its members to bury their dead in the earth to return dust to dust, unless the law of the financial management caused the discontinuance of this program in 1965. More than 2,000 buildings were constructed under this system.

In the late 1950s, increased construction in the United States and Canada led to the creation of four area offices within the Building Department in Salt Lake City, each supervising property acquisitions, plan refinement, construction, and financial management of projects within a geographical area. These area offices have been divided and extended through the years to include other countries as well. During the late 1950s and early 1960s, building plans evolved toward more diversified styles.

In 1965 a new Church Building Committee, under the chairmanship of Mark B. Garff, instituted more centralized control of the building program. The headquarters office continued to prepare detailed standardized plans and specifications, including color schemes and landscape designs, for virtually all new buildings. Local architects were retained for each project to help in preparing site plans, obtaining competitive bids and building permits, and overseeing construction. In 1978 the Real Estate, Building, and Operations and Maintenance divisions were combined into the Department of Physical Facilities, with Fred A. Baker as managing director. Area offices were expanded, increased in number, extended worldwide, and placed under the direction of General Authorities assigned as area presidencies in 1984, with many offices moved to the regions they served. Plans for meetinghouses were still produced in the headquarters office in Salt Lake City and distributed through these offices. The ratio of Church to local financial participation in building projects changed over these years, to 70–30 in 1960, to 96–4 in 1982, and to 100–0 in 1990. In the United States, nearly all construction is performed by contractors, while in some other countries local members still contribute some labor. Where practical, meetinghouses are shared by two or more wards or branches.

The building of temples throughout the world has remained under the close supervision of the First Presidency. The Temples and Special Projects Division of the Building Department (later the Department of Physical Facilities) in Salt Lake City began supervising the preparation of plans and construction of temples throughout the world in 1965. In 1983 the design of temple standard plans was transferred to the Architectural and Engineering Division. In most cases, local architects have been retained to adapt these standard designs to local conditions and styles and to aid in supervising bidding and construction.

The centrally directed building program has been one of the largest and most costly programs of the Church. While the high degree of central control and standardization may have discouraged architectural innovation and flexibility in meeting local circumstances, the system has provided consistent guidelines and orderly procedures for an enormous undertaking. Between 1948 and 1990, it directed the construction of more than 8,500 buildings, supporting and aiding the growth and development of the Church around the world.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Allen, James B., and Glen M. Leonard. The Story of the Latter-day Saints. Salt Lake City, 1976.
- Cowan, Richard O. The Church in the Twentieth Century. Salt Lake City, 1985.
- Cummings, David W. Mighty Missionary of the Pacific. Salt Lake City, 1961.

PAUL L. ANDERSON
RICHARD W. JACKSON

---

BULLETIN

The Bulletin (1980–) constitutes official correspondence from Church headquarters to all general and local-unit Church leaders. It was formerly called the Messenger (1956–1964), the Priesthood Bulletin (1965–1974), and the Messages (1975–1980). Issued as needed by the Correlation Department of the Church under the direction of the FIRST PRESIDENCY and the QUORUM OF THE TWELVE, it communicates or reaffirms current Church policies, practices, procedures, and programs. All previous Bulletins are periodically superseded by the issuance of a revised GENERAL HANDBOOK OF INSTRUCTIONS and by policy letters from the First Presidency.

J. HUGH BAIRD

---

BURIAL

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints counsels its members to bury their dead in the earth to return dust to dust, unless the law of the country requires CREMATION. However, the decision whether to bury or cremate the body is left to the family of the deceased, taking into account any laws governing the matter. Burial of the body usually follows a funeral or graveside service. The body of a deceased member of the Church who has received the temple ENDOWMENT should be dressed in temple clothing. RELIEF SOCIETY sisters dress deceased women, and priesthood brethren the men. When it is not possible to clothe the body, temple clothing may be laid over it.

A member of the BISHOPRIC typically presides at the burial, where a simple, earnest prayer is offered to dedicate the grave, with blessings promised as the Spirit dictates. This prayer may include a dedication of the grave as a sacred resting place until the resurrection if the person giving the prayer holds the MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOOD and has been asked to give such a dedication. The grave site often becomes a sacred spot for the family of the deceased to visit and care for.

CHARLES D. TATE, JR.

BURNINGS, EVERLASTING

Moses described God as a "consuming fire" (Deut. 4:24), his glory consuming everything corrupt and unholy (D&C 63:34; 101:23–24). The Prophet Joseph SMITH explained, "God Almighty Himself dwells in eternal fire; flesh and blood cannot go there, for all corruption is devoured by the fire," but a resurrected being, "flesh and bones quickened by the Spirit of God," can (TPJS, pp. 326, 367; cf. Luke 24:36–43; 1 Cor. 15:50). Heaven, not hell, is the realm of everlasting burnings, a view contrasting with the popular conception of hell as a place of fire, brimstone, and searing heat. Heat is a characteristic of God's glory (D&C 133:41–44).

Only those cleansed from physical and moral corruption can endure immortal glory (3 Ne. 27:19; Moses 6:57; TPJS, p. 351). Hence, Isaiah rhetorically asked, "Who among us shall dwell with the devouring fire? who among us shall dwell with everlasting burnings?" (Isa. 33:14). Joseph Smith taught, "All men who are immortal (i.e., resurrected beings in any of the DEGREES OF GLORY) dwell in everlasting burnings" (TPJS, pp. 347, 361, 367). Resurrected bodies are qualitatively different according to their glory (1 Cor. 15:39–44; D&C 88:28–32).

Describing a vision of the CELESTIAL KINGDOM, Joseph Smith reported, "I saw the transcendent beauty of the gate through which the heirs of that kingdom will enter, which was like unto circling flames of fire; also the blazing throne of God, whereon was seated the Father and the Son" (D&C 137:2–3).

RODNEY TURNER

BUSINESS

[This is a two-part entry:

LDS Attitudes Toward Business

Church Participation in Business

The first article explains the Church position toward business in general, and the second article describes the nature of the Church's participation in business activities through recently affiliated corporations. For historical information, see Community; Economic History; Kirtland Economy; Pioneer Economy.]

LDS ATTITUDES TOWARD BUSINESS

Business endeavors hold no mandated interest for the Church or its members. Church members involve themselves in all avenues of life in much the same proportion as the general population of the region or country in which they live (see OCCUPATIONAL STATUS). Church members are urged to be honest in all their dealings with their fellow men, including business and professional activities. Elements of history, theology, and practice combine to form a positive LDS attitude toward honest business endeavors.

Many LDS attitudes toward business are rooted in the Church's frontier heritage. As the Church developed settlements in Ohio, Missouri, Illinois, and the Great Basin, it became necessary and desirable to be involved in business activities. Cooperative business efforts were necessary for success, independence, and survival.

In addition to its spiritual and cultural roles, the Church sponsored economic initiatives that could not be mounted by individual entrepreneurs. For example, when it was determined that sugar would be expensive and difficult to obtain in the Great Basin, the Church in the 1850s sponsored a business venture to cultivate and process sugar beets. Converts brought capital and equipment from Europe, and factories were constructed. After extended difficulties, a thriving country requires CREMATION. However, the decision whether to bury or cremate the body is left to the family of the deceased, taking into account any laws governing the matter. Burial of the body usually follows a funeral or graveside service. The body of a deceased member of the Church who has received the temple ENDOWMENT should be dressed in temple clothing. RELIEF SOCIETY sisters dress deceased women, and priesthood brethren the men. When it is not possible to clothe the body, temple clothing may be laid over it.

A member of the BISHOPRIC typically presides at the burial, where a simple, earnest prayer is offered to dedicate the grave, with blessings promised as the Spirit dictates. This prayer may include a dedication of the grave as a sacred resting place until the resurrection if the person giving the prayer holds the MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOOD and has been asked to give such a dedication. The grave site often becomes a sacred spot for the family of the deceased to visit and care for.

CHARLES D. TATE, JR.

BURNINGS, EVERLASTING

Moses described God as a "consuming fire" (Deut. 4:24), his glory consuming everything corrupt and unholy (D&C 63:34; 101:23–24). The Prophet Joseph SMITH explained, "God Almighty Himself dwells in eternal fire; flesh and blood cannot go there, for all corruption is devoured by the fire," but a resurrected being, "flesh and bones quickened by the Spirit of God," can (TPJS, pp. 326, 367; cf. Luke 24:36–43; 1 Cor. 15:50). Heaven, not hell, is the realm of everlasting burnings, a view contrasting with the popular conception of hell as a place of fire, brimstone, and searing heat. Heat is a characteristic of God's glory (D&C 133:41–44).

Only those cleansed from physical and moral corruption can endure immortal glory (3 Ne. 27:19; Moses 6:57; TPJS, p. 351). Hence, Isaiah rhetorically asked, "Who among us shall dwell with the devouring fire? who among us shall dwell with everlasting burnings?" (Isa. 33:14). Joseph Smith taught, "All men who are immortal (i.e., resurrected beings in any of the DEGREES OF GLORY) dwell in everlasting burnings" (TPJS, pp. 347, 361, 367). Resurrected bodies are qualitatively different according to their glory (1 Cor. 15:39–44; D&C 88:28–32).

Describing a vision of the CELESTIAL KINGDOM, Joseph Smith reported, "I saw the transcendent beauty of the gate through which the heirs of that kingdom will enter, which was like unto circling flames of fire; also the blazing throne of God, whereon was seated the Father and the Son" (D&C 137:2–3).

RODNEY TURNER

BUSINESS

[This is a two-part entry:

LDS Attitudes Toward Business

Church Participation in Business

The first article explains the Church position toward business in general, and the second article describes the nature of the Church's participation in business activities through recently affiliated corporations. For historical information, see Community; Economic History; Kirtland Economy; Pioneer Economy.]

LDS ATTITUDES TOWARD BUSINESS

Business endeavors hold no mandated interest for the Church or its members. Church members involve themselves in all avenues of life in much the same proportion as the general population of the region or country in which they live (see OCCUPATIONAL STATUS). Church members are urged to be honest in all their dealings with their fellow men, including business and professional activities. Elements of history, theology, and practice combine to form a positive LDS attitude toward honest business endeavors.

Many LDS attitudes toward business are rooted in the Church's frontier heritage. As the Church developed settlements in Ohio, Missouri, Illinois, and the Great Basin, it became necessary and desirable to be involved in business activities. Cooperative business efforts were necessary for success, independence, and survival.

In addition to its spiritual and cultural roles, the Church sponsored economic initiatives that could not be mounted by individual entrepreneurs. For example, when it was determined that sugar would be expensive and difficult to obtain in the Great Basin, the Church in the 1850s sponsored a business venture to cultivate and process sugar beets. Converts brought capital and equipment from Europe, and factories were constructed. After extended difficulties, a thriving country requires CREMATION. However, the decision whether to bury or cremate the body is left to the family of the deceased, taking into account any laws governing the matter. Burial of the body usually follows a funeral or graveside service. The body of a deceased member of the Church who has received the temple ENDOWMENT should be dressed in temple clothing. RELIEF SOCIETY sisters dress deceased women, and priesthood brethren the men. When it is not possible to clothe the body, temple clothing may be laid over it.

A member of the BISHOPRIC typically presides at the burial, where a simple, earnest prayer is offered to dedicate the grave, with blessings promised as the Spirit dictates. This prayer may include a dedication of the grave as a sacred resting place until the resurrection if the person giving the prayer holds the MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOOD and has been asked to give such a dedication. The grave site often becomes a sacred spot for the family of the deceased to visit and care for.

CHARLES D. TATE, JR.

BURNINGS, EVERLASTING

Moses described God as a "consuming fire" (Deut. 4:24), his glory consuming everything corrupt and unholy (D&C 63:34; 101:23–24). The Prophet Joseph SMITH explained, "God Almighty Himself dwells in eternal fire; flesh and blood cannot go there, for all corruption is devoured by the fire," but a resurrected being, "flesh and bones quickened by the Spirit of God," can (TPJS, pp. 326, 367; cf. Luke 24:36–43; 1 Cor. 15:50). Heaven, not hell, is the realm of everlasting burnings, a view contrasting with the popular conception of hell as a place of fire, brimstone, and searing heat. Heat is a characteristic of God's glory (D&C 133:41–44).

Only those cleansed from physical and moral corruption can endure immortal glory (3 Ne. 27:19; Moses 6:57; TPJS, p. 351). Hence, Isaiah rhetorically asked, "Who among us shall dwell with the devouring fire? who among us shall dwell with everlasting burnings?" (Isa. 33:14). Joseph Smith taught, "All men who are immortal (i.e., resurrected beings in any of the DEGREES OF GLORY) dwell in everlasting burnings" (TPJS, pp. 347, 361, 367). Resurrected bodies are qualitatively different according to their glory (1 Cor. 15:39–44; D&C 88:28–32).

Describing a vision of the CELESTIAL KINGDOM, Joseph Smith reported, "I saw the transcendent beauty of the gate through which the heirs of that kingdom will enter, which was like unto circling flames of fire; also the blazing throne of God, whereon was seated the Father and the Son" (D&C 137:2–3).

RODNEY TURNER

BUSINESS

[This is a two-part entry:

LDS Attitudes Toward Business

Church Participation in Business

The first article explains the Church position toward business in general, and the second article describes the nature of the Church's participation in business activities through recently affiliated corporations. For historical information, see Community; Economic History; Kirtland Economy; Pioneer Economy.]

LDS ATTITUDES TOWARD BUSINESS

Business endeavors hold no mandated interest for the Church or its members. Church members involve themselves in all avenues of life in much the same proportion as the general population of the region or country in which they live (see OCCUPATIONAL STATUS). Church members are urged to be honest in all their dealings with their fellow men, including business and professional activities. Elements of history, theology, and practice combine to form a positive LDS attitude toward honest business endeavors.

Many LDS attitudes toward business are rooted in the Church's frontier heritage. As the Church developed settlements in Ohio, Missouri, Illinois, and the Great Basin, it became necessary and desirable to be involved in business activities. Cooperative business efforts were necessary for success, independence, and survival.

In addition to its spiritual and cultural roles, the Church sponsored economic initiatives that could not be mounted by individual entrepreneurs. For example, when it was determined that sugar would be expensive and difficult to obtain in the Great Basin, the Church in the 1850s sponsored a business venture to cultivate and process sugar beets. Converts brought capital and equipment from Europe, and factories were constructed. After extended difficulties, a thriving sugar beet industry resulted in the 1890s. Similarly, to provide banking services, a Church-sponsored bank was incorporated. A general store—Zion's Cooperative Mercantile Institution (ZCMI)—was begun, as were a newspaper, the DESERET NEWS, and several hospitals; later, radio and television stations were acquired by the Church (see BROADCASTING). As the capital needed for these businesses became available from private sources, the Church divested itself of nearly all business activities unrelated to its ecclesiastical mission.

Thus, historically, members of the Church have been integrally involved in business activities. In their pioneer environment, Latter-day Saints developed, out of necessity, traits of self-sufficiency, pragmatism, and resourcefulness. This heritage is reflected in an entrepreneurial spirit and penchant for hard work that lend themselves very well to business endeavors.

The theology of the Church is also supportive of honest business. Church doctrines emphasize individual AGENCY and self-determination, which provide fertile conceptual soil for fostering business attitudes of free enterprise. The Church teaches that property and wealth are STEWARDSHIPS and that all people will be held accountable to God for what they have done with the time and resources entrusted to them (Young, p. 301). Church leaders continue to encourage members to live within their means, to save and be frugal, and to remain economically independent by avoiding debt. Such principles are harmonious with business success and help prepare Church members to perform well in a business environment.

In addition, the Church's organizational practices provide an opportunity for developing skills that are useful in business. Each member, young and old, is called upon to serve in some CALLING. Young boys and girls give talks in Church and develop public-speaking skills. Church youth are given leadership opportunities, and adult men and women fill numerous leadership and teaching positions in every local congregation (see LAY PARTICIPATION AND LEADERSHIP; LEADERSHIP TRAINING). Budgeting, counseling, organizing, and performing administrative tasks are carried out on a regular basis. From these experiences, members develop business-related skills that are useful in many business contexts.

Over the years, Church leaders have spoken forthrightly about maintaining high standards of business ethics and have warned against becoming carried away by business endeavors: "Material blessings are a part of the gospel if they are achieved in the proper way and for the right purpose" (N. Eldon Tanner, Ensign 9 [Nov. 1979]:80). Fair business dealing, giving value for value received, is scripturally required (Lev. 19:11, 35–36; 25:14; Deut. 24:14–15). Thus, President Spencer W. KIMBALL distinguished clean money from filthy lucre or compromise money: Clean money is "compensation received for a full day's honest work, . . . reasonable pay for faithful service, . . . fair profit from the sale of goods, commodities, or service; . . . income received from transactions where all parties profit" (Kimball, p. 948), and he counseled against conducting business unnecessarily on the Sabbath.

Employers are admonished to be generous and kind; employees, to be loyal and diligent. President Brigham YOUNG encouraged "every man who has capital [to] create business and give employment and means into the hands of laborers"; he saw economic strength in "the bone and sinew of workingmen and women," and encouraged all to be industrious: "If we all labor a few hours a day, we could then spend the remainder of our time in rest and the improvement of our minds" (Young, pp. 300–302). "Let every man and woman be industrious, prudent, and economical in their acts and feelings, and while gathering to themselves, let each one strive to identify his or her interests with . . . those of their neighbor and neighborhood, let them seek their happiness and welfare in that of all" (Young, p. 303).

[See also Consecration; Riches of Eternity; Wealth, Attitudes Toward.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Kimball, Spencer W. "Keep Your Money Clean." IE 56 (Dec. 1953):948–50.
- Young, Brigham. Discourses of Brigham Young, comp. J. Widtsoe. Salt Lake City, 1954.
- On the business experiences and philosophies of a prominent LDS entrepreneur in the 1930s, see Dean L. May, "Sources of Marriner S. Eccles's Economic Thought," Journal of Mormon History 3 (1976):85–99.

STEPHEN D. NADAULD

CHURCH PARTICIPATION IN BUSINESS

Historically, two purposes have characterized Church participation in business: to provide important services to the community that might not otherwise be available, and to provide a reasonable return on the resources of the Church. During the first half century of settlement in Utah, the Church started or helped to start many businesses. Some continue to operate; but as communities became self-sufficient, the Church withdrew from such business activities as banking, health care, commercial printing, sugar processing, and the Hotel Utah.

Most of the business assets of the Church originated in the pioneer era when its people were isolated from other business and commercial centers. When a newspaper was needed to help keep people of Utah informed, the Church established the DESERET NEWS in 1850. In the 1920s, federal officials urged newspapers to develop broadcast operations. In 1922 the Deseret News did as requested, and that was the beginning of KSL and BONNEVILLE INTERNATIONAL CORPORATION. To help Utah farmers develop a cash crop that they could sell beyond the borders of the state, the Church helped pioneer the sugar beet industry. ZCMI department stores were the outgrowth of a cooperative movement among the early pioneers. When hotel accommodations were insufficient to provide housing for a growing number of visitors to Temple Square and other points of interest in Salt Lake City shortly after the turn of the century, the Church joined with other community interests to construct Hotel Utah. Over a period of years, the Church bought out other investors to become the sole owner of Hotel Utah. The Church became more involved in Salt Lake City real estate primarily to preserve the beauty and the integrity of the downtown area, especially around Temple Square. That purpose guided Church officials when they decided in the late 1960s to lease to Salt Lake County, for one dollar per year, the property on which Symphony Hall and the Salt Palace Convention Center are now located.

At the beginning of 1990, major commercial businesses owned by the Church included Beneficial Development Company, Beneficial Life Insurance Company, Bonneville International Corporation, DESERET BOOK COMPANY, Deseret News Publishing Company, Deseret Trust Company, Farm Management Company, Temple Square Hotel Corporation, Utah Home Fire Insurance Company, and Zions Securities Corporation. The Church also owns Laie Resorts, Inc., a small motel, restaurant, and service station located adjacent to the POLYNESIAN CULTURAL CENTER in Hawaii. These businesses come under the umbrella of Deseret Management Company, a holding company that receives and distributes profits, performs internal audits, generates consolidated financial statements, files consolidated income tax returns for the group, coordinates activities, and reviews business operations and plans.

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints Foundation receives from Church businesses contributions from their pretax earnings, which in turn are given to the community as contributions to the arts, education, and charitable groups, and other beneficiaries. The LDS FOUNDATION coordinates the distribution of major portions of the charitable contributions designated by Church-owned businesses. In recent years, the Foundation has been a significant contributor to the new LDS Hospital wing, the new Primary Children's Medical Center, the new Holy Cross Hospital, the Salvation Army, Saint Vincent De Paul Center soup kitchen for the homeless, the Salt Lake City Homeless Shelter, the Utah Symphony, Ballet West, the United Way, and related organizations. Income from Church business operations permits participation in local community causes without using the tithing of members from around the world. Those tithes are dedicated to continuing the primary work of the Church, which includes teaching the gospel to the world, building faith and testimony and promoting activity among the membership, and helping members to complete sacred temple ordinances in proxy for the deceased.

Other business activities are under the aegis of the Investment Properties Division of the Church. For example, it oversees Church-owned farmland in several states and Canada, although many of the agricultural activities on the land are managed by Farm Management Companies.

The Church does not publish financial data regarding its privately owned businesses. However, Church officials have indicated that profits from business operations are used to provide living allowances for the General Authorities of the Church. While business profits are not disclosed, President Gordon B. Hinckley, a member of the First Presidency, said in 1985 that the combined income from all these business interests would not keep the work of the Church going for longer than a very brief period (Hinckley, 1985, p. 50).

In addition to its wholly owned businesses, the Church has controlling interest in the chain of ZCMI department stores. Also, the Church once owned U and I Sugar Company, but many assets of that company have been sold. The company name was changed to U and I, Inc., and, more recently, to AgriNorthwest Company. Its remaining assets are held by Deseret Management Company. The Church also has a significant but noncontrolling interest in Heber J. Grant and Company, a holding company. Other investments include a varied portfolio of stocks and bonds.

Each of the businesses owned by the Church operates in a competitive environment and must succeed or fail according to standard business operating principles. These companies pay taxes to federal, state, and local governments. (The Church is the fourth largest payer of real estate taxes in Salt Lake County.) Church businesses have boards of directors that set policies for the individual companies. In most cases, Church leadership is represented on the boards of directors, but many boards include persons of other faiths.

Operating management is in the hands of professional managers, who need not be Church members. The Church requires them to operate the businesses in harmony with its principles and values of honesty, integrity, sensitivity, and service.

The Church expects its businesses to return something back to the communities from which they derive their revenues, and it encourages managers to participate actively in community activities and in business and professional associations. The Church expects them to set standards of excellence, to be leaders in their particular industries, and always to be conscious of the values of the ownership that they represent.

The major commercial businesses owned by the Church engage in the following activities:

Beneficial Development Company is a property development company dealing primarily with real estate holdings in and around Salt Lake City. In a very few instances, the company has installed roads, water systems, and other amenities for residential developments.

Beneficial Life Insurance Company offers the full range of life insurance protection. The company operates subsidiary insurance companies in Des Moines, Iowa, and Portland, Oregon.

Bonneville International Corporation is a commercial radio and television broadcast company with stations in Salt Lake City, Seattle, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Kansas City, Phoenix, Dallas, Chicago, and New York. A division, Bonneville Communications, provides promotional services, and produces and distributes the weekly MORMON TABERNACLE CHOIR BROADCAST, the general conferences of the Church, the Homefront Series public service announcements, items for the Missionary Department, and various seasonal programs. The company also provides commercial advertising and promotional services for national businesses and organizations.

Deseret Book Company operates retail book stores in Utah, Idaho, California, Oregon, and Arizona. The company also serves as a publishing arm of the Church to publish books and other materials for and about the Church. In addition, the company operates the Mormon Handicrafts outlet in Salt Lake City.

Deseret News Publishing Company publishes Salt Lake City's afternoon daily, the Deseret News, and is a partner in the Newspaper Agency Corporation, which handles printing, advertising, and circulation for the two Salt Lake City dailies.

Deseret Trust Company receives and administers trust funds and trust properties given to the Church.

Farm Management Company manages commercial farms and other agricultural properties owned or leased by the Church, including Deseret Ranches of Florida (Orlando), Deseret Land and Livestock (Rich County, Utah), Deseret Farms of California (Sacramento), Rolling Hills (Emmett, Idaho), West Hills Orchards (Elberta, Utah), and Cactus Lane Ranch (Phoenix, Arizona).

Temple Square Hotel Corporation operates The Inn at Temple Square, a small European-style hotel across from Temple Square; and The Lion House, a historic building in downtown Salt Lake City that is used for luncheons, dinners, wedding receptions, and other social events.

Zions Securities Corporation manages properties owned by the Church, primarily in the downtown area of Salt Lake City, including the ZCMI Mall, the Eagle Gate Plaza office tower, the Eagle Gate Apartments, the Gateway Condominiums, several other apartment buildings, and a number of parking facilities.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Hinckley, Gordon B. "Questions and Answers." Ensign 15 (Nov. 1985):49-52.

———. Untitled address to the Governor's Conference on Utah's Future, Sept. 7, 1988. (Available upon request from the Church's Public Communications Department.)

Lindsey, Robert. "The Mormons—Growth, Prosperity and Controversy." New York Times Magazine, Jan. 12, 1986.

Parrish, Michael. "The Saints Among Us." Rocky Mountain Magazine 2 (Jan.–Feb. 1980):17–32.

Turner, Judd. "The Church in Business." This People 10 (Summer 1989):50–55.

See also the following series of articles on Church and business:

"Arizona Republic Explores LDS Financial Holdings." Deseret News, June 30, 1991, pp. A1, A4.

"LDS Revenues Come Primarily from Tithing." Deseret News, July 1, 1991, pp. A1, A4.

"LDS Church Real Estate Holdings Include Farms, Ranches, Buildings." Deseret News, July 2, 1991, pp. A1, A4, A5.

"LDS Church Uses Media Empire to Set Example in Communities." Deseret News, July 3, 1991, pp. A1, A5.

RODNEY H. BRADY

---

BYU

See: Brigham Young University

progression. Progression apparently occurred in the premortal life, for most spirits there chose to follow Christ and some were noble and great, while others chose to follow Lucifer. Entering mortality affords opportunities for further progression. Obtaining a PHYSICAL BODY is a crucial step, enabling a person to experience physical sensations of all kinds and to progress in knowledge and understanding, all of which will rise with the person in the Resurrection (D&C 130:18). Brigham Young taught that even in mortality, "We are in eternity" (JD 10:22), and the object of this existence is "to learn to enjoy more, and to increase in knowledge and experience" (JD 14:228). "When we have learned to live according to the full value of the life we now possess, we are prepared for further advancement in the scale of eternal progression—for a more glorious and exalted sphere" (JD 9:168).

Life is never static. "One must progress or retrograde. One cannot stand still. Activity is the law of growth, and growth, progress, is the law of life" (A. Bowen, in Christ's Ideals for Living, O. Tanner, ed., Salt Lake City, 1980, p. 368). A person's attitude about "'eternal progression' will largely determine his philosophy of life . . . exalting, increasing, expanding and extending broader and broader until we can know as we are known, see as we are seen" (Young, JD 16:165).

At the Resurrection and Judgment, people will be assigned a DEGREE OF GLORY. Further progress is believed possible within each degree. Marriage and family life, however, continue only in the CELESTIAL KINGDOM, allowing "eternal increase" through having spirit children (see ETERNAL LIVES, ETERNAL INCREASE). "All this and more that cannot enter into our hearts to conceive is promised to the faithful, and are but so many stages in that ceaseless progression of eternal lives" (Young, JD 10:5).

No official Church teaching attempts to specify all the ways in which God progresses in his exalted spheres; "there is no end to [His] works, neither to [His] words" (Moses 1:38). God's glory and power are enhanced as his children progress in glory and power (see Moses 1:39; Young, JD 10:5). Ideas have been advanced to explain how God might progress in knowledge and still be perfect and know all things (see FOREKNOWLEDGE OF GOD; OMNIPOTENT GOD).

The concept of eternal progression is a salient feature of the gospel of Jesus Christ, readily distinguishable from traditional Christian theology. The philosophical views of the Middle Ages were basically incompatible with such a concept, and the idea of progress that emerged in the eighteenth-century Enlightenment was that of social evolution (Bury, The Idea of Progress, London, 1932). The traditional Christian view has held that those in heaven enter "a state of eternal, inactive joy. In the presence of God they would worship him and sing praises to him eternally, but nothing more" (Widtsoe, p. 142). Latter-day Saints, however, constantly seek personal and righteous improvement not only by establishing ZION in this world, but by anticipating the continuation of progression eternally.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Widtsoe, John A. "Is Progress Eternal or Is There Progress in Heaven?" IE 54 (Mar. 1951):142; see also Evidences and Reconciliations, pp. 179–85, Salt Lake City, 1960.

LISA RAMSEY ADAMS

---

ETHER

See: Book of Mormon: Book of Ether

---

ETHICS

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is typically involved in three levels of ethical concern: the theory of values; the foundations of moral decision; and the integration of personal and professional codes of ethics, such as those relating to medical, military, or governmental service. The inner dynamism of the Church and its increasing involvement with a confluence of cultures point beyond closed ethical systems. Latter-day Saints espouse an ethic of divine approbation; to discern the will of God and receive assurance that one is acting under God's approval are the ceaseless quest of DISCIPLESHIP. This may be called Spirit-guided morality.

The scriptures affirm that questions of the good and the right are intertwined with questions of the holy and with the primal Jewish-Christian imperative "Be ye holy for I am holy" (1 Pet. 1:16; cf. Lev. 11:44). Daily tensions between the sacred and the secular are part of the ethical dilemma, and Latter-day Saints seek help from the scriptures and classical sources.

Philosophers often distinguish two approaches to ethics: teleology and deontology. The teleological approach appraises the morality of an act by its relation to an end or purpose, while the deontological approach understands morality primarily in terms of duty or response to law. In Christian ethics, these views have proved difficult to reconcile. For Latter-day Saints, however, both obedience to divine imperatives and pursuit of ultimate happiness are correlative elements in the maturation of human beings. The conflict between duty and desire is overcome as one grows closer to God through faith and service and finds joy in upholding divine counsels and commandments.

Ethicists likewise contrast performance and motive in the religious life. Rabbinical tradition, for example, emphasizes the continuous study and scrupulous observance of Torah, while Reformation Protestantism stresses motive. Again, Latter-day Saints reject this perennial division; both are crucial in the religious life. "Ye shall know them by their fruits" (Matt. 7:16). Grace transforms men toward a Christlike nature. But purity of heart is manifest in scripture study and vigorous service; thus, mastery of law and inner change go hand in hand as components of discipleship and joyful living.

Classical Christian thought encourages the cultivation of habits and dispositions tied to both intellectual and moral virtues. Both ancient and modern revelations advocate such virtues as "knowledge, temperance, patience, brotherly kindness, godliness, charity, humility, diligence" (2 Pet. 1:5–7; cf. D&C 4:5), and all the Christlike attributes of the Sermon on the Mount. There are correlative warnings against besetting vices: pride, unrighteous dominion, lust, anger, unforgiveness, covetousness, idleness, halfheartedness. The Saints are constantly reminded to "seek not the things of this world but seek ye first to build up the kingdom of God and to establish his righteousness" (JST Matt. 6:38). NEPHI<sub>1</sub> and MORONI<sub>2</sub>, both prophets of the Book of Mormon, teach, as does the apostle Paul, the importance of faith, hope, and charity, which is defined as "the pure love of Christ" (1 Cor. 13:1–13; 2 Ne. 31:20; Moro. 7:21–48).

Much ethical discussion today revolves around whether there are any external and binding sanctions for ethics and morality. In the theological context, there is the classical dilemma of whether God's will is right because he wills it or whether he wills it because it is right. Latter-day Saints are not committed to certain theories of natural law. Modern scriptures suggest that ethical laws and "bounds" and conditions exist independent of God (D&C 88:3–40; see LAW: DIVINE AND ETERNAL LAW). They also teach that God both institutes laws and adapts them (TPJS, p. 320). Both the meaning and the application of law in changing circumstances require revelation of the present will of God.

LDS ethics are neither extremely atomistic nor social-communitarian but recognize the importance of both the individual and social aspects of human existence. "And that same sociality which exists among us here will exist among us there [the eternal world], only it will be coupled with eternal glory, which glory we do not now enjoy" (D&C 130:2).

Ethical discussion often focuses on how one comes to know what is good or right. Appeals to intuition or conscience are opposed by radical conventionalism, which presumes that values are reducible to custom and that the mores of a given group or individual are not known (discovered) but simply preferred. Latter-day Saints respect conscience, and the scriptures reiterate that conscience must be refined and directed by the Holy Ghost. They consider ethical maturity to derive from experience; including religious experience; from rational and practical deliberation; and from the mandates, both general and specific, that recur in scripture and the counsels of the prophets.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Hill, Donald G., Jr., ed. Perspectives in Mormon Ethics. Salt Lake City, 1983.

F. NEIL BRADY

---

EUROPE, THE CHURCH IN

[This article discusses the establishment and growth of the Church in continental Europe. See separate articles on the Church in the British Isles, the Middle East, and Scandinavia.]

The Protestant countries of Western Europe—Scandinavia, Switzerland, Germany, and the Netherlands—played a major role in the growth and success of the Church from the beginnings in and Latter-day Saints seek help from the scriptures and classical sources.

Philosophers often distinguish two approaches to ethics: teleology and deontology. The teleological approach appraises the morality of an act by its relation to an end or purpose, while the deontological approach understands morality primarily in terms of duty or response to law. In Christian ethics, these views have proved difficult to reconcile. For Latter-day Saints, however, both obedience to divine imperatives and pursuit of ultimate happiness are correlative elements in the maturation of human beings. The conflict between duty and desire is overcome as one grows closer to God through faith and service and finds joy in upholding divine counsels and commandments.

Ethicists likewise contrast performance and motive in the religious life. Rabbinical tradition, for example, emphasizes the continuous study and scrupulous observance of Torah, while Reformation Protestantism stresses motive. Again, Latter-day Saints reject this perennial division; both are crucial in the religious life. "Ye shall know them by their fruits" (Matt. 7:16). Grace transforms men toward a Christlike nature. But purity of heart is manifest in scripture study and vigorous service; thus, mastery of law and inner change go hand in hand as components of discipleship and joyful living.

Classical Christian thought encourages the cultivation of habits and dispositions tied to both intellectual and moral virtues. Both ancient and modern revelations advocate such virtues as "knowledge, temperance, patience, brotherly kindness, godliness, charity, humility, diligence" (2 Pet. 1:5-7; cf. D&C 4:5), and all the Christlike attributes of the Sermon on the Mount. There are correlative warnings against besetting vices: pride, unrighteous dominion, lust, anger, unforgiveness, covetousness, idleness, halfheartedness. The Saints are constantly reminded to "seek not the things of this world but seek ye first to build up the kingdom of God and to establish his righteousness" (JST Matt. 6:38). NEPHI<sub>1</sub> and MORONI<sub>2</sub>, both prophets of the Book of Mormon, teach, as does the apostle Paul, the importance of faith, hope, and charity, which is defined as "the pure love of Christ" (1 Cor. 13:1-13; 2 Ne. 31:20; Moro. 7:21-48).

Much ethical discussion today revolves around whether there are any external and binding sanctions for ethics and morality. In the theological context, there is the classical dilemma of whether God's will is right because he wills it or whether he wills it because it is right. Latter-day Saints are not committed to certain theories of natural law. Modern scriptures suggest that ethical laws and "bounds" and conditions exist independent of God (D&C 88:3-40; see LAW: DIVINE AND ETERNAL LAW). They also teach that God both institutes laws and adapts them (TPJS, p. 320). Both the meaning and the application of law in changing circumstances require revelation of the present will of God.

LDS ethics are neither extremely atomistic nor social-communitarian but recognize the importance of both the individual and social aspects of human existence. "And that same sociality which exists among us here will exist among us there [the eternal world], only it will be coupled with eternal glory, which glory we do not now enjoy" (D&C 130:2).

Ethical discussion often focuses on how one comes to know what is good or right. Appeals to intuition or conscience are opposed by radical conventionalism, which presumes that values are reducible to custom and that the mores of a given group or individual are not known (discovered) but simply preferred. Latter-day Saints respect conscience, and the scriptures reiterate that conscience must be refined and directed by the Holy Ghost. They consider ethical maturity to derive from experience; including religious experience; from rational and practical deliberation; and from the mandates, both general and specific, that recur in scripture and the counsels of the prophets.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Hill, Donald G., Jr., ed. Perspectives in Mormon Ethics. Salt Lake City, 1983.

F. NEIL BRADY

---

EUROPE, THE CHURCH IN

[This article discusses the establishment and growth of the Church in continental Europe. See separate articles on the Church in the British Isles, the Middle East, and Scandinavia.]

The Protestant countries of Western Europe—Scandinavia, Switzerland, Germany, and the Netherlands—played a major role in the growth and success of the Church from the beginnings in the 1830s until well into the twentieth century. Along with the United States, Canada, and Great Britain, continental Europe provided most of the early LDS converts until around 1960, when successes in Latin America and Asia began to overshadow it as a source of new converts. Without the waves of European converts, many of whom emigrated to fill up the pioneer settlements of the Great Basin Kingdom (see COLONIZATION), the Church would, at best, have grown more slowly, been more insular and provincial.

That success in Europe was, however, geographically uneven. Early converts came overwhelmingly from the countries of the Protestant Reformation. Attempts were made as early as the 1850s to gain converts in France, Italy, Ireland, and Austria-Hungary, but results were meager and missionaries became discouraged. Real success in these and other Catholic countries would have to wait for the more open societies and attitudes of the twentieth century. LDS missionaries also found virtually no access to the Orthodox populations of Eastern Europe, whether in Russia, Greece, or the Balkans, and there were only a very few conversions of European Jews.

LDS converts came from many different Protestant denominations and sects, but most of them were religious “seekers” of one kind or another, sometimes already united in congregations like Timothy Mets’s “New Lighters” in Holland in the early 1860s. Most of the seekers had studied the Bible and were looking for a church with apostles, prophets, and the spiritual gifts they had read about in the New Testament. They also tended to be discouraged with traditional doctrines and the behavior of churches and pastors, and longed for the assurance of communion with the spirit of God in preparation for Christ’s imminent return.

Most European converts came from the middle, lower middle, and especially the working classes. One study which surveyed LDS immigrants to the United States between 1840 and 1869 found that only 11 percent were middle class, mostly artisans; the rest came overwhelmingly from the working classes. Early attempts were made by missionaries to interest such dignitaries as the queens and kings of various countries, but these appeals fell on deaf ears and sometimes even led to the missionaries’ banishment. Their preaching also had little resonance with the traditional nobility, the moneyed aristocracy, and an increasingly secular and powerful intelligentsia. Thus, cut off from “respectable” society, they went “to the poor like their Captain of old” (Hymns, 1985, No. 319), among whom they found believers. Only in the later twentieth century, as they had done in America, did European Latter-day Saints as a group begin to be part of the growing middle class as they received greater opportunities for higher education and financial success.

The new European Saints of the nineteenth century came from both rural and urban societies. Farmers, agricultural workers, and artisans joined with industrial workers and townspeople leaving the depressed countrysides and the slums of industrializing Europe for the kingdom of the Saints in what they and thousands of other emigrants believed was the promised land, the land of unlimited opportunity.

Some three years after the Church was established in Europe, it introduced the doctrine of the GATHERING, which encouraged the new members to gather to ZION. Before 1900 more than 91,600 heeded the call, and although after the turn of the century Church authorities began to discourage emigration, thousands more joined the ever-broadening stream of European immigrants to America. They scrimped and saved, sometimes for years—the average wait was ten years—to get the eighty to one hundred dollars needed to get from Liverpool to Salt Lake City. Saints from the Continent went to Liverpool, where, with British converts, they booked passage on large emigrant ships, such as the Amazon, Nevada, or Monarch of the Sea. They first landed in New Orleans for the trip upstream to Nauvoo, later they landed at New York, Philadelphia, or Boston, traveled by train to Omaha, and then journeyed by covered wagon or handcart the remaining 1,100 miles to Utah. For some the trip was better than tolerable; for many others, it was an ordeal endured only through faith and determination.

Seeing that most new converts were so poor that they could not emigrate without help, the

---

← The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in Europe, including the British Isles and Scandinavia, as of January 1, 1991.

ÉTOILE DU DÉSERT

ORGANE DE L'ÉGLISE DE JÉSUS-CHRIST DES SAINTS-DÉS-DERNIERS-JOURS.

LA VÉRITÉ, L'INTELLIGENCE, LA VERTU ET LA FOI SONT UNIES.

SI VOUS M'AIMES, GARDEZ MES COMMANDEMENTS. (JEAN, XIV, 15.)

Il y a déjà quelque temps j'ai eu l'occasion de publier un récit abrégé de l'origine, des progrès, de l'établissement, des persécutions, de la foi et de la doctrine de l'Eglise de Jésus-Christ des Saints-des-Derniers-Jours. Je me proposais de publier quelque autre ouvrage analogue donnant plus de particularités sur notre doctrine, notre organisation et notre position actuelle. Mais, après réflexion, et après m'être concerté avec mes amis, j'ai pensé qu'il serait préférable, pour l'accomplissement de mes desseins, de prendre la forme d'un recueil.

Conséquemment, nous ferons paraître de temps à autre un cahier pareil à celui-ci, qui non-seulement réalisera le but que je me proposais, mais en outre donnera les nouvelles que nous sommes à même de recevoir de la

Elder John Taylor, one of the first LDS missionaries in continental Europe, began the French publication Etoile du Deseret ("Star of Deseret"). Courtesy Rare Books and Manuscripts, Brigham Young University.

Church, in 1849, set up the PERPETUAL EMIGRATING FUND which allowed thousands of Saints to borrow the money to emigrate and then repay the fund after they were settled in the American West. After the completion of the transeontinental railroad in 1869, the journey was not so arduous because the railroad brought emigrants directly to Zion.

European LDS emigration peaked in the 1850s and 1860s, although a fairly constant stream, especially of Germans, continued after the turmoil of both world wars. They all became part of the "melting pot," with few Saints returning to their native lands.

The European members turned out to be exceptionally good pioneers. Most brought with them solid religious conviction and faith, an unusually strong work ethic, usable and practiced skills derived from the quality artisanship of Europe, and a desire to blend into their new society and surroundings. They also brought a deep respect for Church leaders as God's chosen servants, a willingness to settle where they were called, and a desire to help promote the missionary cause, especially in their native lands. They were persuasive recruiters of their fellow countrymen to the new LDS settlements. Many met incoming emigrant trains to take settlers to their new paradise.

Besides laborers and skilled craftsmen, there were also businessmen and entrepreneurs and teachers; there were women trained as midwives and a few as doctors. Europe also produced poets, journalists, artists, architects, photographers, musicians, and also dramatists. From their ranks arose a range of great leaders from GENERAL AUTHORITIES to missionaries—who usually labored in their homelands. Devout women and children who supported the Church, often at great sacrifice, carried out their own daily and Church duties. Most important, however, were the tens of thousands of less-known European Saints; Zion could not have done without them. Census figures give us some idea of their numbers. In 1880, out of a total Utah population of 143,863, almost 43,000, or 30 percent, were foreign-born. If children born in America to foreign-born members are included, the figure would exceed 60 percent.

Not all European converts to the Church immigrated to America, even in the peak years of the gathering. Some had families they could not and would not leave; others lacked faith and funds. Some drifted from the faith or could not find suitable marriage partners in it. Others succumbed to the extraordinary anti-Mormon pressures and persecutions that arose simultaneously almost everywhere with the arrival of the missionaries. Throughout Europe in the nineteenth and early twentieth centuries, Latter-day Saints, and especially missionaries, were at one time or another harassed, abused, vilified, stoned, jailed, and expelled; yet these same missionaries were simultaneously fed, clothed, housed, protected, and warned by generations of grateful and admiring members. In the nineteenth century, the Church was taken seriously, perhaps too seriously, by those in power. Many Europeans regarded the Church as a non-Christian American sect. Throughout Europe, where the marriage of church and state had been sanctified by tradition, political authority often took its cues on religious matters from a clergy made more vocal by declining influence.

Prominent Europeans visited Utah to get a firsthand view of this unusual and exotic LDS society. They admired the way the Saints had made the "desert . . . blossom as the rose" (Isa. 35:1), but found the people fanatical and their theology incomprehensible. Polygamy was considered especially uncivilized by Europeans, who viewed their own culture, especially near the end of the nineteenth century, as the apogee of civilization. For the European intelligentsia, the LDS Church was purely and distinctly an aberrational American phenomenon.

In spite of all this, the Church took hold in Europe, at least enough to strengthen the Church in America when strengthening was needed most, and also to lay a foundation for its own existence later on. Following their great successes in Great Britain in the 1830s and 1840s, the missionaries crossed the English Channel to work on the European mainland. The responses in Switzerland and Hamburg, Germany, were generally positive, with a foothold established in each of these areas. Less successful were the missions of Lorenzo SNOW in Italy and John TAYLOR in France, but even in those nations a few converts were made, from whom significant LDS posterities have grown. There was a slow but steady growth of the Church in Switzerland and Germany, especially after German unification in 1870. A mission was established in the Netherlands in the 1860s, and over the years thousands became Latter-day Saints and immigrated to Zion.

Results were not so encouraging in the huge Austro-Hungarian Empire of more than fifty million that sprawled over most of the map of East Central Europe. In 1865 President Brigham YOUNG sent one of the apostles, Orson Pratt, to open that empire to missionary work. Elder Pratt and his companion, William Riter, had little success, spending most of their time in jail. A later missionary, Thomas Biesinger, made scattered converts in Vienna and Prague; and a Hungarian convert, Misha Markow, traveled throughout most of the Balkan states and Russia, beginning in 1903, performing isolated baptisms and encountering ubiquitous opposition.

At the same time, attempts were made to breach the edges of the Islamic world in neighboring Turkey. A Swiss convert, Jacob Spori, established a mission there in 1884 with limited success (see MIDDLE EAST, THE CHURCH IN). After Spori baptized some Russians, Elder Francis M. Lyman, an apostle, and Joseph Cannon dedicated imperial Russia to preaching the gospel in 1903.

TWENTIETH CENTURY. For Europeans, Church members included, the dawning twentieth century would bring historic and cataclysmic changes. These included two devastating world wars with literally millions of casualties and a debilitating depression in between, fascism and communism, the Cold War and Americanization, prosperity and the rebirth of Europe, and finally, by 1990, the extension of freedom and democracy to most of the people of the continent.

There were also significant changes in European LDS life. Emigration gradually declined, allowing the European population to grow and more permanent LDS congregations to emerge. New countries, first in the West, then later in the East, were opened to missionary work; and some, such as France, Belgium, and Italy, that had been opened but later closed, reopened and became more fruitful. Freedom of religion and the end of religious persecution spread as democracy overcame a variety of tyrannies. The discontinuance of polygamy and the accommodation to the broader palette of political realities in the world emphasizing the spiritual mission of the Church opened doors.

The defeat of Germany and the Central Powers in World War I, though viewed as a disaster for the people, did have a bit of a silver lining for the Church, especially in Central Europe. The coming of democracy to Germany and Austria permitted the return of missionaries. A vigorous branch was established in Vienna that would serve as a strong foundation for the Church in Austria. The rigors of war and defeat had produced a poverty and humility among the people that helped make them more receptive to the gospel message. Missionaries streamed into post-World War I Germany and, especially in the first years of the Weimar Republic, baptisms were at an all-time high. By 1930 there were more Latter-day Saints in Germany than in any other country outside the United States of America, and expectations ran high for continued growth.

Leipzig Relief Society (1907). Many residents of eastern Germany joined the Church in the late nineteenth and early twentieth century.

The coming of Hitler to power changed life for the Church and its members, not only in Germany but eventually in the rest of Europe as well. Soon the omnipresent police state was making life in Germany more difficult for the Saints, especially the missionaries; many anticipated the Church would be closed down, but it never was. Both members and missionaries made every effort to get along with the regime while rejecting its excesses. What was important to them was to be able to continue to preach the gospel, to stay in the country, and to keep the branches together and prospering after so many years of struggle. Moreover, their numbers were small and they had little leverage with the regime. The Church grew slowly throughout Europe in the 1930s, and the growing tension in society made missionary work progressively more difficult.

In the fall of 1938, at the time of the Munich conference, missionaries were taken out of Germany temporarily; this became a valuable dress rehearsal for the situation a year later, when the Church was forced overnight to withdraw all missionaries from Germany and eventually from all of Europe. After European Mission President Thomas E. McKay left in April 1940, the local leaders of the Church units on the Continent were on their own throughout the war.

The Mormon Tabernacle Choir on world tour in Paris, 1955.

The cataclysm of World War II prompted Church leaders to send Elder Ezra Taft BENSON to Europe in 1946 to survey the damage, find the Saints, arrange for temporal help, and, most important, let them know that the Church cared about them. Elder Benson found decimated but devout congregations of Saints wherever he went, from England to Austria. He lamented over their circumstances and was inspired by their devotion. He also arranged for them to meet, and he set in motion the wheels that would bring the welfare supplies that had been accumulating in America to the needy in Europe. Years later, members vividly and gratefully remembered this mission of mercy and found in it hope and encouragement to face a difficult future; one non-Mormon German professor recalled having received his first pair of shoes after the war from the Mormons. Soon help began to pour in as CARE packages of relief supplies arrived from friends and fellow Saints in America. The Saints in the Netherlands, which had been invaded and occupied by Germany, sent potatoes. Trainloads of welfare supplies were sent from Utah to needy Mormons and non-Mormons alike. It was a great expression of Christianity in action, and the image of the Church in Europe began to change for the better as a result of its participation in this collective humanitarian effort.

Missionaries began to return to Europe as early as 1946. Soon missions were reestablished and some mission presidents had to locate scattered Saints, but others found things intact. Members met where they could, sometimes in bombed-out quarters, sometimes in members' apartments, and sometimes out in the open. A new mission was also established in Finland in 1947. During the first decade after the war, efforts focused again on the traditional interests of strengthening the Saints and gaining new ones.

Prior to the war, European members had never been able to attend a local Church temple. Many had been diligent in doing genealogical research, but unless they had immigrated to the United States or had been able to visit there, they had not had the opportunity to attend a temple and receive the blessings given only therein.

But all this was to change dramatically. Members in post-World War II Europe soon acquired all of the blessings and responsibilities of Saints in America. In 1952, a year after he became President of the Church, David O. MCKAY announced plans to build the first temple in Europe just outside of Bern, Switzerland. This temple was dedicated in September 1955; a second one was completed and opened near London in 1958. The building of these temples symbolized the inauguration of the new age for the Church in Europe. In the 1980s, the Church dedicated a temple in 1984 at Västerhaninge (near Stockholm), Sweden; in 1985 at Freiberg, then the German Democratic Republic (GDR); and in 1987 at Friedrichsdorf (near Frankfurt), then the Federal Republic of Germany.

Some other important changes were the creation of new missions and the establishment of Europe's first stake in 1961. In addition, the progress of secularization, with its emphasis on freedom of religion, the ecumenical spirit of Vatican II in the Roman Catholic Church, and the presence of American LDS service personnel helped to break down the traditional prejudices and make it possible for the Church to gain a real foothold in Italy, and later in Spain and Portugal. New vigor was experienced in France as baptisms increased; membership in France grew from 1,509 in 1960 to 8,606 in 1970. Most significant was the conviction that it was now possible to do missionary work among the Catholics of Western Europe in the same way, and with as encouraging results, as among Protestants.

The Saints became not only more numerous but also more prosperous and better educated; Europeans such as F. Enzio Busche (Germany), Charles A. Didier (Belgium), Derek A. Cuthbert (England), Jacob de Jager (the Netherlands), and Hans B. Ringger (Switzerland) were called as General Authorities. Stakes, wards, and new missions were organized with leadership essentially in local hands; European LDS youth were better educated in Church doctrine through the establishment of seminary and institute classes; a new and larger wave of missionaries from Europe joined the worldwide force; and Central and Eastern Europe were, especially after the political revolutions of 1989, opening their doors to the Church.

In Europe the image of the Latter-day Saints and the Church was changing. The coming of real democracy, with its basic human rights, including the freedom of religion; the pervasive influence of the United States as the primary defender of an exposed Europe in the Cold War; the mobility and growing prosperity that came to Europe; and the continuing growth of the Church generally gave it a more favorable press.

At the same time, the deepening Cold War made life progressively more difficult for some seven thousand Saints in the GDR. Strong anti-communist rhetoric from America, plus Russian influence and strong communist prejudices against churches and people of religious conviction, brought Latter-day Saints behind the Iron Curtain continued surveillance and harassment. The erection of the Berlin Wall in 1961 left them largely to their own devices, with only occasional visits by Church authorities from the West. Some, in order to make their peace with the new order, withdrew from Church fellowship, but a majority banded together to form a strong, cohesive LDS community.

In the 1960s, the Church began a vigorous program of building chapels for European congregations that helped to meet the needs of the Saints as well as to gain some respectability in society. By 1970 chapels dotted the Western European landscape; they attracted some positive outside attention and gave members a new sense of accomplishment. They also helped Saints begin to shed the "seet" image and mentality and to move more confidently into their various national societies after years of persecution and disrespect.

In an attempt to strengthen the LDS European youth, the seminary and institute programs of the Church were established in the early 1970s. These would help LDS families teach their children the gospel and prepare them for missions and lifetimes of service. Gradually, an increasing number of young men and women did serve missions. The 1970s also brought area conferences at which the European Saints were able to see how many of them there actually were and to be counseled anew by Church leaders to remain where they were and help strengthen the Church in their own areas.

EASTERN EUROPE. Prior to the 1960s, LDS success in Europe had been confined largely to the Protestant countries of Western Europe. A few converts, such as Janos Denndorfer, had been made in Hungary around the turn of the century, and a few others later in Czechoslovakia, but the turmoil of the first half of the twentieth century and the dropping of the Iron Curtain around Eastern Europe effectively precluded the early introduction of the gospel and Church into those countries.

In the 1960s, attempts were made to begin missionary work in Yugoslavia, but it was not until

The Swiss Temple in Zollikofen (near Bern, Switzerland, 1978) was dedicated in 1955 by President David O. McKay, with the Mormon Tabernacle Choir participating. This temple, built of white reinforced concrete with gold spire, was the first outside the United States and Canada. Courtesy Floyd Holdman.

Kresimir Cosic came to Brigham Young University, became a convert to the Church, and later was a basketball hero in his native country, that the Church could take hold there. A few missionaries were allowed to enter, but their opportunities to teach the people were circumscribed.

Vienna became the center of attempts by the Church to push into Central and Eastern Europe, much as it had been the capital of the polyglot Austro-Hungarian Empire of the nineteenth century. In the 1970s a few missionary couples were called to serve in Budapest, Hungary, and by the early 1980s they had established a branch comprised of more than one hundred capable, educated Hungarians. This gradual breakthrough almost exactly mirrored the gradual turning of Hungarian society and government away from the strict subservience to the Communist masters and toward the West.

For President Spencer W. Kimball, the need to preach the gospel everywhere in the world, especially in the large areas from which the Church had heretofore been excluded was a consuming passion. He had no political agenda. A major breakthrough came with the work of Ambassador David M. Kennedy in gaining official recognition of the Church in various areas and in the dedication of Poland for the preaching of the gospel by President Kimball in 1977. This represented a major change in Church policy toward communist governments and paved the way for even more significant opportunities in the late 1980s. It became the basis for a policy that allowed contacts with scattered Saints in Czechoslovakia and brought the Church recognition and respect from the communist leadership of the GDR, in all a breakthrough in that part of Europe. The most dramatic results of this changed relationship were the 1985 erection of the temple at Freiberg, GDR, wherein for the first time hundreds of lifelong Latter-day Saints were able to fulfill their dreams of temple worship, and the subsequent admission of LDS missionaries into the country for the first time in nearly forty years. In 1989 the first missionaries allowed to leave the GDR arrived in Salt Lake City to be sent throughout the world.

The nearly bloodless revolutions of 1989 presented the Church with an opportunity to begin a new epoch in Central and Eastern Europe. As the communist order crumbled and more democratic regimes were established in one country after another, one common demand was for freedom of religion. As a result, by the end of 1990 the Church in these countries existed under virtually the same conditions as in Western Europe and the United States. The reunification of Germany applied all of the rules of the Bonn Constitution to what had been the GDR. Missions have been established in Poland, Hungary, and Greece, and reestablished in Czechoslovakia. Leaders of these nations have welcomed Latter-day Saints because of their strong Judeo-Christian values and their wholesome families. Missionaries are currently proselytizing on a limited basis. Congregations of the Church have been officially recognized in the Soviet Union, and it has good prospects there, and in Yugoslavia, for the immediate future. Missionaries have been permitted into Romania and Bulgaria, the first significant breakthroughs in those countries. Thus, at the beginning of the 1990s, The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in Europe stands on a new threshold. Its major challenge, in both East and West, is to become better known and respected. Europeans are generally unaware of its dynamic worldwide growth, the nature of its teachings, or the quality of life it offers.

In Western Europe, the Church is growing slowly, with the exception of its clear success in Portugal, but a process of consolidation appears to be taking place. Strong second-, third-, and even fourth-generation LDS families are appearing everywhere. Church members are taking advantage of expanded opportunities for education, especially higher education, and are thus better able to contribute to and benefit from the prosperity of Western Europe. European Latter-day Saints are sending out more of their own as missionaries than ever before, and two and three generations of indigenous leaders are heading the Church in Europe.

Finally, from an LDS point of view, Europe is still divided. The Western countries are awash in secularism, prosperity, and religious apathy that pose a major challenge for the Church to find new ways to gain the interest and respect of these secular societies. For Central and Eastern Europe, the new decade and the coming new century will undoubtedly see thousands of new LDS converts and congregations. Perhaps even as the people in these countries have brought a new inspiration of freedom and human rights to the West, they will also bring a new spirit of religious desire that will benefit the Church.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Babbel, Frederick W. On Wings of Faith. Salt Lake City, 1972.
 "Encore of the Spirit," Ensign 21 (Oct. 1991): 32–53.
 Sharffs, Gilbert W. Mormonism in Germany. Salt Lake City, 1970.

DOUGLAS F. TOBLER

---

EUTHANASIA

See: Death and Dying; Prolonging Life

---

EVANGELISTS

The sixth ARTICLE OF FAITH names evangelists together with APOSTLES, PROPHETS, and TEACHERS among the essential offices in the organization of the Church (cf. Eph. 4:11; Acts 21:8).

In an address on June 27, 1839, the Prophet Joseph SMITH identified the office of evangelist as a PATRIARCH, who as "the oldest man of the blood of Joseph or of the seed of Abraham" was to bless "the posterity of the Saints" as Jacob blessed his sons (TPJS, p. 151). This was the office of Patriarch to the Church. Evangelists, as patriarchs, had been ordained beginning in 1833, although not mentioned in REVELATION until 1835 (D&C 107:39–40).

Scholars have been unable to define precisely the role or office of the evangelist (Greek, euangelistēs, "one bringing good tidings") in the NEW TESTAMENT. Apparently it was an office or activity that could be combined with the calling of BISHOP (2 Tim. 4:5). The sense of evangelist as an author of one of the canonical Gospels is late. The earliest known pagan and pre-Christian use of the term refers to a person who pronounced oracular statements (Kittel, 2:736).

Whatever the exact nature of the office, the early Christian evangelist was closely linked with apostles and prophets. He was viewed as one who carried on the work of the apostles, but always in a charismatic or prophetic office. One New Testament reference hints that Philip was an evangelist, and mentions his four daughters, who "did prophesy" (Acts 21:8–9).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Kittel, R. Theological Dictionary of The New Testament. Grand Rapids, Mich., 1964.

R. DOUGLAS PHILLIPS

---

EVE

Eve, first woman of earthly creation, companion of ADAM, and mother and matriarch of the human race, is honored by Latter-day Saints as one of the most important, righteous, and heroic of all the human family. Eve's supreme gift to mankind, the opportunity of life on this earth, resulted from her choice to become mortal.

Eve, Adam, Abraham, and others were among the noble and great ones involved with the creation of the earth (Abr. 3:22–24; cf. McConkie, p. 59). God foreordained her and named her Eve, "the Mother of All Living"; in the GARDEN OF EDEN Adam called her Eve, reflecting that calling (Moses 4:26). She was created spiritually and physically in the same manner as was Adam (MD, p. 242). God called their name Adam, and "in the image of his own body, male and female, created he them" (Moses 6:9).

Eve and Adam faced a dilemma as they sought to obey God's commandments. They could not keep the primary commandment to have children as long as they remained nonmortals in the Garden (2 Ne. 2:22–23). The instruction not to eat of the tree of knowledge of good and evil, however, was everywhere. Church members are taking advantage of expanded opportunities for education, especially higher education, and are thus better able to contribute to and benefit from the prosperity of Western Europe. European Latter-day Saints are sending out more of their own as missionaries than ever before, and two and three generations of indigenous leaders are heading the Church in Europe.

Finally, from an LDS point of view, Europe is still divided. The Western countries are awash in secularism, prosperity, and religious apathy that pose a major challenge for the Church to find new ways to gain the interest and respect of these secular societies. For Central and Eastern Europe, the new decade and the coming new century will undoubtedly see thousands of new LDS converts and congregations. Perhaps even as the people in these countries have brought a new inspiration of freedom and human rights to the West, they will also bring a new spirit of religious desire that will benefit the Church.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Babbel, Frederick W. On Wings of Faith. Salt Lake City, 1972.
 "Encore of the Spirit," Ensign 21 (Oct. 1991): 32–53.
 Sharffs, Gilbert W. Mormonism in Germany. Salt Lake City, 1970.

DOUGLAS F. TOBLER

---

EUTHANASIA

See: Death and Dying; Prolonging Life

---

EVANGELISTS

The sixth ARTICLE OF FAITH names evangelists together with APOSTLES, PROPHETS, and TEACHERS among the essential offices in the organization of the Church (cf. Eph. 4:11; Acts 21:8).

In an address on June 27, 1839, the Prophet Joseph SMITH identified the office of evangelist as a PATRIARCH, who as "the oldest man of the blood of Joseph or of the seed of Abraham" was to bless "the posterity of the Saints" as Jacob blessed his sons (TPJS, p. 151). This was the office of Patriarch to the Church. Evangelists, as patriarchs, had been ordained beginning in 1833, although not mentioned in REVELATION until 1835 (D&C 107:39–40).

Scholars have been unable to define precisely the role or office of the evangelist (Greek, euangelistēs, "one bringing good tidings") in the NEW TESTAMENT. Apparently it was an office or activity that could be combined with the calling of BISHOP (2 Tim. 4:5). The sense of evangelist as an author of one of the canonical Gospels is late. The earliest known pagan and pre-Christian use of the term refers to a person who pronounced oracular statements (Kittel, 2:736).

Whatever the exact nature of the office, the early Christian evangelist was closely linked with apostles and prophets. He was viewed as one who carried on the work of the apostles, but always in a charismatic or prophetic office. One New Testament reference hints that Philip was an evangelist, and mentions his four daughters, who "did prophesy" (Acts 21:8–9).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Kittel, R. Theological Dictionary of The New Testament. Grand Rapids, Mich., 1964.

R. DOUGLAS PHILLIPS

---

EVE

Eve, first woman of earthly creation, companion of ADAM, and mother and matriarch of the human race, is honored by Latter-day Saints as one of the most important, righteous, and heroic of all the human family. Eve's supreme gift to mankind, the opportunity of life on this earth, resulted from her choice to become mortal.

Eve, Adam, Abraham, and others were among the noble and great ones involved with the creation of the earth (Abr. 3:22–24; cf. McConkie, p. 59). God foreordained her and named her Eve, "the Mother of All Living"; in the GARDEN OF EDEN Adam called her Eve, reflecting that calling (Moses 4:26). She was created spiritually and physically in the same manner as was Adam (MD, p. 242). God called their name Adam, and "in the image of his own body, male and female, created he them" (Moses 6:9).

Eve and Adam faced a dilemma as they sought to obey God's commandments. They could not keep the primary commandment to have children as long as they remained nonmortals in the Garden (2 Ne. 2:22–23). The instruction not to eat of the tree of knowledge of good and evil, however, was everywhere. Church members are taking advantage of expanded opportunities for education, especially higher education, and are thus better able to contribute to and benefit from the prosperity of Western Europe. European Latter-day Saints are sending out more of their own as missionaries than ever before, and two and three generations of indigenous leaders are heading the Church in Europe.

Finally, from an LDS point of view, Europe is still divided. The Western countries are awash in secularism, prosperity, and religious apathy that pose a major challenge for the Church to find new ways to gain the interest and respect of these secular societies. For Central and Eastern Europe, the new decade and the coming new century will undoubtedly see thousands of new LDS converts and congregations. Perhaps even as the people in these countries have brought a new inspiration of freedom and human rights to the West, they will also bring a new spirit of religious desire that will benefit the Church.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Babbel, Frederick W. On Wings of Faith. Salt Lake City, 1972.
 "Encore of the Spirit," Ensign 21 (Oct. 1991): 32–53.
 Sharffs, Gilbert W. Mormonism in Germany. Salt Lake City, 1970.

DOUGLAS F. TOBLER

---

EUTHANASIA

See: Death and Dying; Prolonging Life

---

EVANGELISTS

The sixth ARTICLE OF FAITH names evangelists together with APOSTLES, PROPHETS, and TEACHERS among the essential offices in the organization of the Church (cf. Eph. 4:11; Acts 21:8).

In an address on June 27, 1839, the Prophet Joseph SMITH identified the office of evangelist as a PATRIARCH, who as "the oldest man of the blood of Joseph or of the seed of Abraham" was to bless "the posterity of the Saints" as Jacob blessed his sons (TPJS, p. 151). This was the office of Patriarch to the Church. Evangelists, as patriarchs, had been ordained beginning in 1833, although not mentioned in REVELATION until 1835 (D&C 107:39–40).

Scholars have been unable to define precisely the role or office of the evangelist (Greek, euangelistēs, "one bringing good tidings") in the NEW TESTAMENT. Apparently it was an office or activity that could be combined with the calling of BISHOP (2 Tim. 4:5). The sense of evangelist as an author of one of the canonical Gospels is late. The earliest known pagan and pre-Christian use of the term refers to a person who pronounced oracular statements (Kittel, 2:736).

Whatever the exact nature of the office, the early Christian evangelist was closely linked with apostles and prophets. He was viewed as one who carried on the work of the apostles, but always in a charismatic or prophetic office. One New Testament reference hints that Philip was an evangelist, and mentions his four daughters, who "did prophesy" (Acts 21:8–9).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Kittel, R. Theological Dictionary of The New Testament. Grand Rapids, Mich., 1964.

R. DOUGLAS PHILLIPS

---

EVE

Eve, first woman of earthly creation, companion of ADAM, and mother and matriarch of the human race, is honored by Latter-day Saints as one of the most important, righteous, and heroic of all the human family. Eve's supreme gift to mankind, the opportunity of life on this earth, resulted from her choice to become mortal.

Eve, Adam, Abraham, and others were among the noble and great ones involved with the creation of the earth (Abr. 3:22–24; cf. McConkie, p. 59). God foreordained her and named her Eve, "the Mother of All Living"; in the GARDEN OF EDEN Adam called her Eve, reflecting that calling (Moses 4:26). She was created spiritually and physically in the same manner as was Adam (MD, p. 242). God called their name Adam, and "in the image of his own body, male and female, created he them" (Moses 6:9).

Eve and Adam faced a dilemma as they sought to obey God's commandments. They could not keep the primary commandment to have children as long as they remained nonmortals in the Garden (2 Ne. 2:22–23). The instruction not to eat of the tree of knowledge of good and evil, however, was uniquely modified with the words “nevertheless, thou mayest choose for thyself” (Moses 3:16–17), and becoming mortal was expressly stated as the consequence.

Satan was present to tempt Adam and Eve, much as he would try to thwart others in their divine missions: “And he sought also to beguile Eve, for he knew not the mind of God, wherefore he sought to destroy the world” (Moses 4:6; cf. Matt. 4:3–11; Moses 1:12–22; JS—H 1:15–16). Eve faced the choice between selfish ease and unselfishly facing tribulation and death (Widtsoe, p. 193). As befit her calling, she realized that there was no other way and deliberately chose mortal life so as to further the purpose of God and bring children into the world.

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints strongly affirms that in partaking of the fruit of the tree of knowledge of good and evil, Eve along with Adam acted in a manner pleasing to God and in accord with his ordained plan (see FALL OF ADAM). Brigham YOUNG explained: “The Lord knew they would do this and he had designed that they should” (JD 10:103). “We should never blame Mother Eve, not the least” (JD 13:145). Adam and Eve “accepted a great challenge. . . . They chose wisely in accordance with the heavenly law of love for others” (Widtsoe, p. 194). Afterward, in one of the earliest recorded statements in scripture, Eve recounted the PLAN OF SALVATION as she expounded on the joy prepared for humankind in eternity: “Were it not for our transgression we never should have had seed, and never should have known good and evil, and the joy of our redemption, and the eternal life which God giveth unto all the obedient” (Moses 5:10–11).

Loving parents in heaven prepared Eve and Adam for their roles in MORTALITY. After the Fall, God gave Adam and Eve the law of SACRIFICE so that they could obtain forgiveness of sins committed in mortality (Moses 5:5). He placed enmity (an abhorrence of evil) between Eve’s seed and Satan and his followers (Moses 4:21). God granted to Eve the powers of motherhood, disclosing the difficult labor of childbirth. The Hebrew word rendered “sorrow” (Gen. 3:16–17) does not connote “sadness,” but “labor,” or “sweat,” or “pain.”

Adam and Eve were husband and wife. While in the Garden, God sealed them in eternal marriage (Gen. 2:22–24). God instructed Eve, “Thy desire shall be to thy husband, and he shall rule over thee” (Gen. 3:16). President Spencer W. KIMBALL explained that the Hebrew word translated as “rule” would better be understood as “‘preside’ because that’s what he does” (Ensign [Mar. 1976]:72), and the husband presides only in righteousness (see FAMILY: TEACHINGS ABOUT). Correlatively, God introduced Eve to Adam in terms that are rendered into English by the phrase “an help meet for him”; these words mean “to be strong, to help, rescue, or save” and “to meet, to correspond to, to be equal,” thus indicating that Eve was to be a strong, saving partner in righteousness (Gen. 2:18).

The Lord himself made coats of skins and clothed Adam and Eve (Moses 4:27). Eve bore unto Adam sons and daughters. She worked with Adam. They prayed to the Lord and heard his voice (Moses 5:4–5). They made “all things known” to their children and taught them to read, write, and to keep records of family remembrance (Moses 5:12; 6:5–6).

Eve is a “joint-participant with Adam in all his ministry, [and] will inherit jointly with him all the blessings appertaining to his high state of exaltation” (MD, p. 242). President Joseph F. SMITH saw her in vision in 1918: among the great and mighty ones in the celestial congregation of the righteous, he beheld “our glorious Mother Eve, with many of her faithful daughters who had lived through the ages and worshipped the true and living God” (D&C 138:39).

The fall of Eve and Adam is profoundly significant: they opened the way of mortality for all humankind, and they subjected themselves to death in order to make continued progression toward eternal life possible. Mother Eve bestowed upon her daughters and sons a heritage of honor, for she acted with wisdom, love, and unselfish sacrifice.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- McConkie, Bruce R. “Eve and the Fall.” In Woman, pp. 57–68. Salt Lake City, 1979.
- Nibley, Hugh W. “Patriarchy and Matriarchy.” CWHN 1:87–114.
- Smith, Joseph Fielding. “Was the Fall of Adam Necessary?” Answers to Gospel Questions, Vol. 4, pp. 79–83. Salt Lake City, 1963.
- Widtsoe, John A. “Was the ‘Fall’ Inevitable?” Evidences and Reconciliations, pp. 192–95. Salt Lake City, 1987.

BEVERLY CAMPBELL

EVENING AND THE MORNING STAR, THE

The Evening and The Morning Star was the first newspaper of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. It was published in fourteen eight-paged, double-columned monthly issues in Independence, Missouri, from June 1832 to July 1833. When the press in Missouri was destroyed by a mob, publication was resumed several months later in Kirtland, Ohio, with ten issues published from December 1833 to September 1834. W. W. (William Wines) Phelps, its editor in Missouri, printed in it a brief history of the Church, a number of LDS hymns, instructions to members of the Church, letters reporting its progress throughout the country, and many of the revelations received by the Prophet Joseph Smith. Oliver COWDERY, its editor in Ohio, printed reports and commentaries about the Saints' difficulties in Missouri and some of the doctrinal writings of Sidney RIGDON, a counselor in the First Presidency.

Because the circulation of the Missouri-printed Star was small and localized, Cowdery reprinted all the original twenty-four issues in Kirtland between January 1835 and October 1836, in a new sixteen-page format, with numerous grammatical improvements, and a few articles deleted. The Evening and the Morning Star was succeeded by the Latter Day Saints' Messenger and Advocate in October 1834 (HC 2:167).

[See also Messenger and Advocate.]

RONALD D. DENNIS

EVIL

[The LDS concept of evil is also explained in the article on Devils. The following article discusses a view of the purposes of evil and presents an LDS response to traditional discussions of the problem of evil.]

In ordinary discourse, the term "evil" has a very wide definition and, along with the term "bad," is used in English most often to refer to morally wrong intentions, choices, and actions of agents (moral evil); to the operations of nonhuman nature such as disease, earthquakes, volcanic eruptions, and tornadoes (natural evil); and to the human and animal pain and suffering (psychological evil) that moral and natural evils may cause. In more technical philosophical discourse, it is applied also to inherent human limitations and defects (metaphysical evil).

The term is used with additional meanings in LDS scripture and discourse. In the Old Testament, the term is translated from the Hebrew term, ra', and its cognates, whose applications range widely from (1) what tastes nasty or is ugly, displeasing, or sad, through (2) moral wickedness and the distress, misery, and tragedy that ensue from it, to (3) willful disobedience of God and his intentions for human beings. The latter two senses of the term predominate in the New Testament and in latter-day scriptures. Given its widely variant meanings, the precise meaning of evil must be ascertained from its context.

LDS scripture further illuminates biblical suggestions about God's purposes for his children and, thereby, helps to clarify one fundamental sense of evil. God disclosed to Moses: "This is my work and my glory—to bring to pass the immortality [resurrection, with everlasting bodily duration] and eternal life [Godlike quality or mode of being] of man" (Moses 1:39). Thus, anything inconsistent with, contrary to, or opposed to the achievement of these ends would be evil.

There seems to be no basis in latter-day scripture for either the privative or relativistic views of evil advocated by some philosophers. In the fifth century, St. Augustine, puzzled by the existence of evil in a world that was created by God, concluded that evil must not be a substance or a positive reality in its own right, but only the absence of good (privatio boni). Yet, in the Old and New Testaments, evil is depicted as menacingly real, a view shared by latter-day scripture. Nor is there any scriptural evidence that good and evil are simply matters of personal preference. Rejecting this kind of relativism, Proverbs declares, "There is a way which seemeth right unto a man, but the end thereof are the ways of death" (Prov. 14:12); and Isaiah warns, "Woe unto them that call evil good, and good evil; that put darkness for light, and light for darkness; that put bitter for sweet, and sweet for bitter!" (Isa. 5:20). Relativism is also rejected in latter-day scripture (2 Ne. 28:8).

Nonbelievers and believers alike often question why God would allow evil of any kind to exist. The question becomes especially acute within an Augustinian worldview that affirms God to be the ex nihilo or absolute creator of whatever exists

EVENING AND THE MORNING STAR, THE

The Evening and The Morning Star was the first newspaper of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. It was published in fourteen eight-paged, double-columned monthly issues in Independence, Missouri, from June 1832 to July 1833. When the press in Missouri was destroyed by a mob, publication was resumed several months later in Kirtland, Ohio, with ten issues published from December 1833 to September 1834. W. W. (William Wines) Phelps, its editor in Missouri, printed in it a brief history of the Church, a number of LDS hymns, instructions to members of the Church, letters reporting its progress throughout the country, and many of the revelations received by the Prophet Joseph Smith. Oliver COWDERY, its editor in Ohio, printed reports and commentaries about the Saints' difficulties in Missouri and some of the doctrinal writings of Sidney RIGDON, a counselor in the First Presidency.

Because the circulation of the Missouri-printed Star was small and localized, Cowdery reprinted all the original twenty-four issues in Kirtland between January 1835 and October 1836, in a new sixteen-page format, with numerous grammatical improvements, and a few articles deleted. The Evening and the Morning Star was succeeded by the Latter Day Saints' Messenger and Advocate in October 1834 (HC 2:167).

[See also Messenger and Advocate.]

RONALD D. DENNIS

EVIL

[The LDS concept of evil is also explained in the article on Devils. The following article discusses a view of the purposes of evil and presents an LDS response to traditional discussions of the problem of evil.]

In ordinary discourse, the term "evil" has a very wide definition and, along with the term "bad," is used in English most often to refer to morally wrong intentions, choices, and actions of agents (moral evil); to the operations of nonhuman nature such as disease, earthquakes, volcanic eruptions, and tornadoes (natural evil); and to the human and animal pain and suffering (psychological evil) that moral and natural evils may cause. In more technical philosophical discourse, it is applied also to inherent human limitations and defects (metaphysical evil).

The term is used with additional meanings in LDS scripture and discourse. In the Old Testament, the term is translated from the Hebrew term, ra', and its cognates, whose applications range widely from (1) what tastes nasty or is ugly, displeasing, or sad, through (2) moral wickedness and the distress, misery, and tragedy that ensue from it, to (3) willful disobedience of God and his intentions for human beings. The latter two senses of the term predominate in the New Testament and in latter-day scriptures. Given its widely variant meanings, the precise meaning of evil must be ascertained from its context.

LDS scripture further illuminates biblical suggestions about God's purposes for his children and, thereby, helps to clarify one fundamental sense of evil. God disclosed to Moses: "This is my work and my glory—to bring to pass the immortality [resurrection, with everlasting bodily duration] and eternal life [Godlike quality or mode of being] of man" (Moses 1:39). Thus, anything inconsistent with, contrary to, or opposed to the achievement of these ends would be evil.

There seems to be no basis in latter-day scripture for either the privative or relativistic views of evil advocated by some philosophers. In the fifth century, St. Augustine, puzzled by the existence of evil in a world that was created by God, concluded that evil must not be a substance or a positive reality in its own right, but only the absence of good (privatio boni). Yet, in the Old and New Testaments, evil is depicted as menacingly real, a view shared by latter-day scripture. Nor is there any scriptural evidence that good and evil are simply matters of personal preference. Rejecting this kind of relativism, Proverbs declares, "There is a way which seemeth right unto a man, but the end thereof are the ways of death" (Prov. 14:12); and Isaiah warns, "Woe unto them that call evil good, and good evil; that put darkness for light, and light for darkness; that put bitter for sweet, and sweet for bitter!" (Isa. 5:20). Relativism is also rejected in latter-day scripture (2 Ne. 28:8).

Nonbelievers and believers alike often question why God would allow evil of any kind to exist. The question becomes especially acute within an Augustinian worldview that affirms God to be the ex nihilo or absolute creator of whatever exists other than himself. On that premise it appears that God is the ultimate source or cause of all evil, or, at least, a knowing accessory before the fact, and thus omniresponsible for all evils that occur.

Latter-day Saints reject the troublesome premise of creation ex nihilo (out of nothing), affirming rather that there are actualities that are coeternal with God. These coeternal actualities include INTELLIGENCES (sometimes perceived as primal selves or persons), chaotic matter (or mass energy), and laws and principles (perhaps best regarded as the properties and relations of matter and intelligences). Given this plurality of uncreated entities, it does not follow, within an LDS worldview, that God is the ultimate source of evil. Evil is traceable, alternatively, to the choices of other autonomous agents (such as Lucifer, the Devil) who are also coeternal with God, and, perhaps, even to recalcitrant properties of uncreated chaotic matter.

Though on the basis of latter-day revelation it is evident that God is neither the source nor the cause of either moral or natural evil, the question still arises as to why he does not prevent or eliminate it. The ancient philosopher Epicurus posed the problem in the form of a dilemma: Either God is unwilling to prevent the evil that occurs or he is unable to prevent it. If he is unable, then he is not omnipotent; if he is unwilling, then he is not perfectly good. Epicurus' statement of the dilemma is based on two assumptions: (1) a perfectly good being prevents all the evil it can; and (2) an omnipotent being can do anything and, hence, can prevent all evil.

From an LDS perspective the first assumption appears to be false. A perfectly good being would certainly wish to maximize the good, but if, in the nature of things, allowing an experience of evil were a necessary condition of achieving the greatest good, a perfectly good being would allow it. For example, it seems evident that the existence of OPPOSITION and TEMPTATION is a necessary condition for the expression of morally significant FREEDOM and the development of genuinely righteous personalities (see 2 Ne. 2:11–16; Moses 6:55).

Latter-day Saints would also reject the second assumption. Since there are realities that are coeternal with God, his omnipotence must be understood not as the power to bring about any state of affairs absolutely, but rather as the power to bring about any state of affairs consistent with the natures of coeternal realities. This insight makes possible an instrumentalist view of evil. With Epicurus' basic assumptions thus modified by latter-day revelation, it seems possible to construct a coherent LDS concept of the nature, use, and existence of evil (see THEODICY).

[See also Great and Abominable Church; Sin; War in Heaven.]

DAVID L. PAULSEN

---

EVOLUTION

The position of the Church on the origin of man was published by the First Presidency in 1909 and stated again by a different First Presidency in 1925:

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, basing its belief on divine revelation, ancient and modern, declares man to be the direct and lineal offspring of Deity. . . . Man is the child of God, formed in the divine image and endowed with divine attributes (see Appendix, "Doctrinal Expositions of the First Presidency").

The scriptures tell why man was created, but they do not tell how, though the Lord has promised that he will tell that when he comes again (D&C 101:32–33). In 1931, when there was intense discussion on the issue of organic evolution, the First Presidency of the Church, then consisting of Presidents Heber J. Grant, Anthony W. Ivins, and Charles W. Nibley, addressed all of the General Authorities of the Church on the matter, and concluded,

Upon the fundamental doctrines of the Church we are all agreed. Our mission is to bear the message of the restored gospel to the world. Leave geology, biology, archaeology, and anthropology, no one of which has to do with the salvation of the souls of mankind, to scientific research, while we magnify our calling in the realm of the Church. . . .

Upon one thing we should all be able to agree, namely, that Presidents Joseph F. Smith, John R. Winder, and Anthon H. Lund were right when they said: "Adam is the primal parent of our race" [First Presidency Minutes, Apr. 7, 1931].

WILLIAM E. EVENSON

other than himself. On that premise it appears that God is the ultimate source or cause of all evil, or, at least, a knowing accessory before the fact, and thus omniresponsible for all evils that occur.

Latter-day Saints reject the troublesome premise of creation ex nihilo (out of nothing), affirming rather that there are actualities that are coeternal with God. These coeternal actualities include INTELLIGENCES (sometimes perceived as primal selves or persons), chaotic matter (or mass energy), and laws and principles (perhaps best regarded as the properties and relations of matter and intelligences). Given this plurality of uncreated entities, it does not follow, within an LDS worldview, that God is the ultimate source of evil. Evil is traceable, alternatively, to the choices of other autonomous agents (such as Lucifer, the Devil) who are also coeternal with God, and, perhaps, even to recalcitrant properties of uncreated chaotic matter.

Though on the basis of latter-day revelation it is evident that God is neither the source nor the cause of either moral or natural evil, the question still arises as to why he does not prevent or eliminate it. The ancient philosopher Epicurus posed the problem in the form of a dilemma: Either God is unwilling to prevent the evil that occurs or he is unable to prevent it. If he is unable, then he is not omnipotent; if he is unwilling, then he is not perfectly good. Epicurus' statement of the dilemma is based on two assumptions: (1) a perfectly good being prevents all the evil it can; and (2) an omnipotent being can do anything and, hence, can prevent all evil.

From an LDS perspective the first assumption appears to be false. A perfectly good being would certainly wish to maximize the good, but if, in the nature of things, allowing an experience of evil were a necessary condition of achieving the greatest good, a perfectly good being would allow it. For example, it seems evident that the existence of OPPOSITION and TEMPTATION is a necessary condition for the expression of morally significant FREEDOM and the development of genuinely righteous personalities (see 2 Ne. 2:11–16; Moses 6:55).

Latter-day Saints would also reject the second assumption. Since there are realities that are coeternal with God, his omnipotence must be understood not as the power to bring about any state of affairs absolutely, but rather as the power to bring about any state of affairs consistent with the natures of coeternal realities. This insight makes possible an instrumentalist view of evil. With Epicurus' basic assumptions thus modified by latter-day revelation, it seems possible to construct a coherent LDS concept of the nature, use, and existence of evil (see THEODICY).

[See also Great and Abominable Church; Sin; War in Heaven.]

DAVID L. PAULSEN

---

EVOLUTION

The position of the Church on the origin of man was published by the First Presidency in 1909 and stated again by a different First Presidency in 1925:

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, basing its belief on divine revelation, ancient and modern, declares man to be the direct and lineal offspring of Deity. . . . Man is the child of God, formed in the divine image and endowed with divine attributes (see Appendix, "Doctrinal Expositions of the First Presidency").

The scriptures tell why man was created, but they do not tell how, though the Lord has promised that he will tell that when he comes again (D&C 101:32–33). In 1931, when there was intense discussion on the issue of organic evolution, the First Presidency of the Church, then consisting of Presidents Heber J. Grant, Anthony W. Ivins, and Charles W. Nibley, addressed all of the General Authorities of the Church on the matter, and concluded,

Upon the fundamental doctrines of the Church we are all agreed. Our mission is to bear the message of the restored gospel to the world. Leave geology, biology, archaeology, and anthropology, no one of which has to do with the salvation of the souls of mankind, to scientific research, while we magnify our calling in the realm of the Church. . . .

Upon one thing we should all be able to agree, namely, that Presidents Joseph F. Smith, John R. Winder, and Anthon H. Lund were right when they said: "Adam is the primal parent of our race" [First Presidency Minutes, Apr. 7, 1931].

WILLIAM E. EVENSON

EXALTATION

To Latter-day Saints, exaltation is a state that a person can attain in becoming like God—SALVATION in the ultimate sense (D&C 132:17). Latter-day Saints believe that all mankind (except the SONS OF PERDITION) will receive varying DEGREES OF GLORY in the AFTERLIFE. Exaltation is the greatest of all the gifts and attainments possible. It is available only in the highest degree of the CELESTIAL KINGDOM and is reserved for members of the CHURCH OF THE FIRSTBORN. This exalted status, called ETERNAL LIFE, is available to be received by a man and wife. It means not only living in God's presence, but receiving power to do as God does, including the power to bear children after the resurrection (TPJS, pp. 300–301; D&C 132:19). Blessings and privileges of exaltation require unwavering faith, repentance, and complete obedience to the GOSPEL OF JESUS CHRIST.

In a revelation to the Prophet Joseph SMITH, the Savior stated the following conditions: "Strait is the gate, and narrow the way that leadeth unto the exaltation and continuation of the lives, and few there be that find it, because ye receive me not in the world neither do ye know me" (D&C 132:22).

All Church ORDINANCES lead to exaltation, and the essential crowning ordinances are the ENDOWMENT and the eternal MARRIAGE covenant of the TEMPLE (D&C 131:1–4, 132).

MARGARET MCCONKIE POPE

EXCOMMUNICATION

See: Disciplinary Procedures

EXHIBITIONS AND WORLD'S FAIRS

From its beginnings, the Church has characteristically presented its message through personal contact or in small groups: Faith and testimony are interpersonal. The Church has placed extensive emphasis on the mass media, and in participating in exhibits such as world's fairs. In addition, in recent years these activities have provided the Church an opportunity to present the message of the gospel amid milestone presentations of the arts, the sciences, and industry. The witness of the living and revealed Jesus Christ has been implicit in all Church exhibits, with two related themes given prominence: life's greatest questions—Where did I come from? Why am I here? What follows death?—and family values.

The Mormon Tabernacle Choir, under the direction of Evan Stephens, with soloists Robert C. Easton, Nellie Druce-Pugsley, and others, won second place in the competition for the Eisteddfod International Prize at the 1893 Columbian World's Fair in Chicago. Photographer: James H. Croekwell.

The first Church participation in a world's fair on a truly international scale was at the World's Columbian Exposition in Chicago in 1893, where the Mormon Tabernacle Choir won high honors in the choral competition. The Church later sponsored booths in several expositions and fairs, including the International Hygiene Exposition at Dresden, Germany, in 1930, and the Century of Progress Exposition in Chicago in 1933–1934. Exhibits were also mounted at international expositions held in San Diego in 1935–1936 and San Francisco in 1939–1940.

The Church's participation in the New York World's Fair in 1964 was a major effort. Its pavilion was a full-size replica of the three east towers of the Salt Lake Temple. Original paintings, the presentation of the film MAN'S SEARCH FOR HAPPINESS, and a replica of the Thorvaldson CHRISTUS STATUE were featured. A large staff of trained volunteer guides conducted tours and question-and-answer

EXALTATION

To Latter-day Saints, exaltation is a state that a person can attain in becoming like God—SALVATION in the ultimate sense (D&C 132:17). Latter-day Saints believe that all mankind (except the SONS OF PERDITION) will receive varying DEGREES OF GLORY in the AFTERLIFE. Exaltation is the greatest of all the gifts and attainments possible. It is available only in the highest degree of the CELESTIAL KINGDOM and is reserved for members of the CHURCH OF THE FIRSTBORN. This exalted status, called ETERNAL LIFE, is available to be received by a man and wife. It means not only living in God's presence, but receiving power to do as God does, including the power to bear children after the resurrection (TPJS, pp. 300–301; D&C 132:19). Blessings and privileges of exaltation require unwavering faith, repentance, and complete obedience to the GOSPEL OF JESUS CHRIST.

In a revelation to the Prophet Joseph SMITH, the Savior stated the following conditions: "Strait is the gate, and narrow the way that leadeth unto the exaltation and continuation of the lives, and few there be that find it, because ye receive me not in the world neither do ye know me" (D&C 132:22).

All Church ORDINANCES lead to exaltation, and the essential crowning ordinances are the ENDOWMENT and the eternal MARRIAGE covenant of the TEMPLE (D&C 131:1–4, 132).

MARGARET MCCONKIE POPE

EXCOMMUNICATION

See: Disciplinary Procedures

EXHIBITIONS AND WORLD'S FAIRS

From its beginnings, the Church has characteristically presented its message through personal contact or in small groups: Faith and testimony are interpersonal. The Church has placed extensive emphasis on the mass media, and in participating in exhibits such as world's fairs. In addition, in recent years these activities have provided the Church an opportunity to present the message of the gospel amid milestone presentations of the arts, the sciences, and industry. The witness of the living and revealed Jesus Christ has been implicit in all Church exhibits, with two related themes given prominence: life's greatest questions—Where did I come from? Why am I here? What follows death?—and family values.

The Mormon Tabernacle Choir, under the direction of Evan Stephens, with soloists Robert C. Easton, Nellie Druce-Pugsley, and others, won second place in the competition for the Eisteddfod International Prize at the 1893 Columbian World's Fair in Chicago. Photographer: James H. Croekwell.

The first Church participation in a world's fair on a truly international scale was at the World's Columbian Exposition in Chicago in 1893, where the Mormon Tabernacle Choir won high honors in the choral competition. The Church later sponsored booths in several expositions and fairs, including the International Hygiene Exposition at Dresden, Germany, in 1930, and the Century of Progress Exposition in Chicago in 1933–1934. Exhibits were also mounted at international expositions held in San Diego in 1935–1936 and San Francisco in 1939–1940.

The Church's participation in the New York World's Fair in 1964 was a major effort. Its pavilion was a full-size replica of the three east towers of the Salt Lake Temple. Original paintings, the presentation of the film MAN'S SEARCH FOR HAPPINESS, and a replica of the Thorvaldson CHRISTUS STATUE were featured. A large staff of trained volunteer guides conducted tours and question-and-answer sessions for the more than six million visitors who came to the pavilion.

Exhibits have since been presented at fair pavilions in Montreal, Canada; Osaka, Japan; San Antonio, Texas; and Seattle, Washington. Some of the exhibit artifacts have since been placed in VISITORS CENTERS throughout the world.

RICHARD J. MARSHALL

EXTERMINATION ORDER

A military order signed by Missouri Governor Lilburn W. Boggs on October 27, 1838, directed that the Mormons be driven from the state or exterminated (see MISSOURI CONFLICT). Boggs's action was based on information brought to him that day by two citizens of Richmond, Missouri, concerning the Mormon–Missourian conflicts in northwest Missouri and on reports of the Battle of Crooked River, in which armed Mormons had clashed with a company of state militia on October 25.

Boggs, acting in his capacity as commander-in-chief of the Missouri militia, ordered General John B. Clark to march to Ray County with a division of militia to carry out operations against armed Mormons. The order described the Mormons as being in “open and avowed defiance of the laws, and of having made war upon the people of this State.” It stated that “the Mormons must be treated as enemies, and must be exterminated or driven from the State if necessary for the public peace—their outrages are beyond all description.”

A copy of the order reached General Samuel D. Lucas of the state militia by the time he encamped outside the LDS town of Far West, in Caldwell County, on October 31. Lucas gave a copy to the LDS Colonel George M. Hinkle and other Church representatives, to whom he dictated terms of surrender, and they showed it to Joseph SMITH. It was probably a significant factor in the Prophet's decision to surrender to Lucas.

Following Joseph Smith's surrender, arrest, and imprisonment, the governor's order was carried out by a combination of militia troops and vigilantes. It culminated in the forcible removal from Missouri of virtually all members of the Church during the winter and early spring of 1838–1839.

The legality and propriety of Boggs's order were vigorously debated in the Missouri legislature during its 1839 session. The order was supported by most northwest Missouri citizens, but was questioned or denounced by others. However, no determination of the order's legality was ever made.

On June 25, 1976, Governor Christopher S. Bond issued an executive order rescinding the Extermination Order, recognizing its legal invalidity and formally apologizing in behalf of the state of Missouri for the suffering it had caused the Latter-day Saints.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

“Document Containing the Correspondence, Orders, etc. in Relation to the Disturbances with the Mormons; and the Evidence Given before the Hon. Austin A. King.” Office of the Boon's Lick Democrat, Fayette, Mo., 1841, p. 61 (contains full text of the order).

Gentry, Leland H. “A History of the Latter-day Saints in Northern Missouri from 1836 to 1839.” Ph.D. diss., Brigham Young University, 1965.

LeSueur, Stephen C. The 1838 Mormon War in Missouri. Columbia, Mo., 1987.

DALE A. WHITMAN

EZEKIEL, PROPHECIES OF

The prophecies of Ezekiel (593–c. 570 B.C.) interest Latter-day Saints because they contain unique insights into aspects of God's saving work with his children, such as the responsibilities of a watchman or leader (chaps. 3, 33), the nature of personal AGENCY and ACCOUNTABILITY (chap. 18), divine mercy and forgiveness (chap. 18), and God's covenant relationships with Israel and Judah (chaps. 34–39). The principal attention of most Latter-day Saints to the book of Ezekiel focuses on chapters 34–48 because they shed light on God's latter-day work, including Israel's return to its land, the restoration of the land to full productivity, the rebuilding of the temple as a residence for God, and the appearance of important records that they identify with the Bible and Book of Mormon.

In chapter 34, Ezekiel described the scattering of Israelites among the nations of the earth as a leadership failure—Israel's “shepherds” had exploited rather than cared for the “sheep” (see ISRAEL: SCATTERING OF ISRAEL). Consequently, the Lord will become the Shepherd to seek out lost sheep and gather “them from the countries . . . to their own land” (34:11, 13). Finally a latter-day David will become their leader (34:24), the steril-sessions for the more than six million visitors who came to the pavilion.

Exhibits have since been presented at fair pavilions in Montreal, Canada; Osaka, Japan; San Antonio, Texas; and Seattle, Washington. Some of the exhibit artifacts have since been placed in VISITORS CENTERS throughout the world.

RICHARD J. MARSHALL

EXTERMINATION ORDER

A military order signed by Missouri Governor Lilburn W. Boggs on October 27, 1838, directed that the Mormons be driven from the state or exterminated (see MISSOURI CONFLICT). Boggs's action was based on information brought to him that day by two citizens of Richmond, Missouri, concerning the Mormon–Missourian conflicts in northwest Missouri and on reports of the Battle of Crooked River, in which armed Mormons had clashed with a company of state militia on October 25.

Boggs, acting in his capacity as commander-in-chief of the Missouri militia, ordered General John B. Clark to march to Ray County with a division of militia to carry out operations against armed Mormons. The order described the Mormons as being in “open and avowed defiance of the laws, and of having made war upon the people of this State.” It stated that “the Mormons must be treated as enemies, and must be exterminated or driven from the State if necessary for the public peace—their outrages are beyond all description.”

A copy of the order reached General Samuel D. Lucas of the state militia by the time he encamped outside the LDS town of Far West, in Caldwell County, on October 31. Lucas gave a copy to the LDS Colonel George M. Hinkle and other Church representatives, to whom he dictated terms of surrender, and they showed it to Joseph SMITH. It was probably a significant factor in the Prophet's decision to surrender to Lucas.

Following Joseph Smith's surrender, arrest, and imprisonment, the governor's order was carried out by a combination of militia troops and vigilantes. It culminated in the forcible removal from Missouri of virtually all members of the Church during the winter and early spring of 1838–1839.

The legality and propriety of Boggs's order were vigorously debated in the Missouri legislature during its 1839 session. The order was supported by most northwest Missouri citizens, but was questioned or denounced by others. However, no determination of the order's legality was ever made.

On June 25, 1976, Governor Christopher S. Bond issued an executive order rescinding the Extermination Order, recognizing its legal invalidity and formally apologizing in behalf of the state of Missouri for the suffering it had caused the Latter-day Saints.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

“Document Containing the Correspondence, Orders, etc. in Relation to the Disturbances with the Mormons; and the Evidence Given before the Hon. Austin A. King.” Office of the Boon's Lick Democrat, Fayette, Mo., 1841, p. 61 (contains full text of the order).

Gentry, Leland H. “A History of the Latter-day Saints in Northern Missouri from 1836 to 1839.” Ph.D. diss., Brigham Young University, 1965.

LeSueur, Stephen C. The 1838 Mormon War in Missouri. Columbia, Mo., 1987.

DALE A. WHITMAN

EZEKIEL, PROPHECIES OF

The prophecies of Ezekiel (593–c. 570 B.C.) interest Latter-day Saints because they contain unique insights into aspects of God's saving work with his children, such as the responsibilities of a watchman or leader (chaps. 3, 33), the nature of personal AGENCY and ACCOUNTABILITY (chap. 18), divine mercy and forgiveness (chap. 18), and God's covenant relationships with Israel and Judah (chaps. 34–39). The principal attention of most Latter-day Saints to the book of Ezekiel focuses on chapters 34–48 because they shed light on God's latter-day work, including Israel's return to its land, the restoration of the land to full productivity, the rebuilding of the temple as a residence for God, and the appearance of important records that they identify with the Bible and Book of Mormon.

In chapter 34, Ezekiel described the scattering of Israelites among the nations of the earth as a leadership failure—Israel's “shepherds” had exploited rather than cared for the “sheep” (see ISRAEL: SCATTERING OF ISRAEL). Consequently, the Lord will become the Shepherd to seek out lost sheep and gather “them from the countries . . . to their own land” (34:11, 13). Finally a latter-day David will become their leader (34:24), the steril-sessions for the more than six million visitors who came to the pavilion.

Exhibits have since been presented at fair pavilions in Montreal, Canada; Osaka, Japan; San Antonio, Texas; and Seattle, Washington. Some of the exhibit artifacts have since been placed in VISITORS CENTERS throughout the world.

RICHARD J. MARSHALL

---

EXTERMINATION ORDER

A military order signed by Missouri Governor Lilburn W. Boggs on October 27, 1838, directed that the Mormons be driven from the state or exterminated (see MISSOURI CONFLICT). Boggs's action was based on information brought to him that day by two citizens of Richmond, Missouri, concerning the Mormon–Missourian conflicts in northwest Missouri and on reports of the Battle of Crooked River, in which armed Mormons had clashed with a company of state militia on October 25.

Boggs, acting in his capacity as commander-in-chief of the Missouri militia, ordered General John B. Clark to march to Ray County with a division of militia to carry out operations against armed Mormons. The order described the Mormons as being in “open and avowed defiance of the laws, and of having made war upon the people of this State.” It stated that “the Mormons must be treated as enemies, and must be exterminated or driven from the State if necessary for the public peace—their outrages are beyond all description.”

A copy of the order reached General Samuel D. Lucas of the state militia by the time he encamped outside the LDS town of Far West, in Caldwell County, on October 31. Lucas gave a copy to the LDS Colonel George M. Hinkle and other Church representatives, to whom he dictated terms of surrender, and they showed it to Joseph SMITH. It was probably a significant factor in the Prophet's decision to surrender to Lucas.

Following Joseph Smith's surrender, arrest, and imprisonment, the governor's order was carried out by a combination of militia troops and vigilantes. It culminated in the forcible removal from Missouri of virtually all members of the Church during the winter and early spring of 1838–1839.

The legality and propriety of Boggs's order were vigorously debated in the Missouri legislature during its 1839 session. The order was supported by most northwest Missouri citizens, but was questioned or denounced by others. However, no determination of the order's legality was ever made.

On June 25, 1976, Governor Christopher S. Bond issued an executive order rescinding the Extermination Order, recognizing its legal invalidity and formally apologizing in behalf of the state of Missouri for the suffering it had caused the Latter-day Saints.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

“Document Containing the Correspondence, Orders, etc. in Relation to the Disturbances with the Mormons; and the Evidence Given before the Hon. Austin A. King.” Office of the Boon's Lick Democrat, Fayette, Mo., 1841, p. 61 (contains full text of the order).

Gentry, Leland H. “A History of the Latter-day Saints in Northern Missouri from 1836 to 1839.” Ph.D. diss., Brigham Young University, 1965.

LeSueur, Stephen C. The 1838 Mormon War in Missouri. Columbia, Mo., 1987.

DALE A. WHITMAN

---

EZEKIEL, PROPHECIES OF

The prophecies of Ezekiel (593–c. 570 B.C.) interest Latter-day Saints because they contain unique insights into aspects of God's saving work with his children, such as the responsibilities of a watchman or leader (chaps. 3, 33), the nature of personal AGENCY and ACCOUNTABILITY (chap. 18), divine mercy and forgiveness (chap. 18), and God's covenant relationships with Israel and Judah (chaps. 34–39). The principal attention of most Latter-day Saints to the book of Ezekiel focuses on chapters 34–48 because they shed light on God's latter-day work, including Israel's return to its land, the restoration of the land to full productivity, the rebuilding of the temple as a residence for God, and the appearance of important records that they identify with the Bible and Book of Mormon.

In chapter 34, Ezekiel described the scattering of Israelites among the nations of the earth as a leadership failure—Israel's “shepherds” had exploited rather than cared for the “sheep” (see ISRAEL: SCATTERING OF ISRAEL). Consequently, the Lord will become the Shepherd to seek out lost sheep and gather “them from the countries . . . to their own land” (34:11, 13). Finally a latter-day David will become their leader (34:24), the sterility of the land will be overcome (36:8–11), the Dead Sea will support fishing (47:1, 7–10), and Israel, as well as the nations, will know that the Lord is with them and “They shall know that I am the Lord” (34:23–28, 30).

Chapters 35–36 reflect the tensions that will develop when returning Israelites find their land inhabited by others who claim it as their own (35:10, 12, 15; 36:2–5). The Lord, however, promised that he would divide the land “by lot” among the returning Israelites for their inheritance, at the same time assuring any non-Israelites living in their midst that they, too, would be granted an “inheritance . . . among the tribes of Israel” (47:22 [13–23]).

The Lord emphasized how real this gathering would be (37:1–14). As in the Resurrection, scattered Israelites, like individual dry bones, might still hope to be formed into one body—with sinews and flesh, breath, and spirit—once more in their own land. The Resurrection thus serves as a metaphor of the gathering as well as a means whereby it will be accomplished, as promised by the Lord: “I will open your graves, and cause you to come up out of your graves, and bring you into the land of Israel” (37:12).

After Israelites gather and prosper, they will live peacefully in “unwalled villages,” “at rest,” dwelling “safely,” “without walls” (38:11). At this point, they will be attacked by Gog, whose goal is to plunder their prosperous land. In the battles that follow, the Lord will refine Israel while bringing judgment against the nations—both those who attack Israel and those who live in distant lands (cf. Isa. 4:4; Zech. 12:2–3; 14:2–3; Zeph. 3:8; Ezek. 39:2–4, 6, 11, 21–24). Jerusalem will be rebuilt as a divine center, God’s temple will be erected in their midst (chaps. 40–47), and he will reside there, so that Jerusalem will be “called Holy, for the Lord shall be there” (JST Ezek. 48:35).

In this gathering context, Ezekiel spoke of the unification of the so-called “sticks” of Judah and Ephraim (i.e., Israel), a joining that signals not only the beginning of the gathering of Israel (Ezek. 37:15–22; cf. 3 Ne. 20:46; 21:1–3, 7–13) but also the means by which the ultimate gathering—of peoples back to God—will be accomplished (cf. 1 Ne. 22:12; 2 Ne. 6:11).

Latter-day Saints identify Judah’s record as the Bible and Ephraim’s record as the Book of Mormon (D&C 27:5). They understand that when the Book of Mormon was translated and published, it became possible to join the two records. And since the stated purpose of the Book of Mormon is to convince “Jew and Gentile that Jesus is the Christ, the Eternal God, manifesting himself unto all nations” (title page of the Book of Mormon), they see this joining of testimonies as being a principal means whereby Israel will be brought back to God (see BOOK OF MORMON, BIBLICAL PROPHECIES ABOUT).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Meservy, Keith H. “Ezekiel’s Sticks and the Gathering of Israel.” Ensign 17 (Feb. 1987):4–13.
- Sperry, Sidney B. The Voice of Israel’s Prophets, pp. 218–37. Salt Lake City, 1952.

KEITH H. MESERVY

---

EZIAS

Ezias was a prophet of Old Testament times whose prophecies were apparently recorded on the PLATES of brass, a record brought to the Western Hemisphere by the Book of Mormon prophet LEHI. Ezias was mentioned by NEPHI<sub>2</sub> (c. 22 B.C.) in a list of prophets who testified of the coming ministry and redemption of Christ (Hel. 8:13–20).

MELVIN J. THORNE

ity of the land will be overcome (36:8–11), the Dead Sea will support fishing (47:1, 7–10), and Israel, as well as the nations, will know that the Lord is with them and “They shall know that I am the Lord” (34:23–28, 30).

Chapters 35–36 reflect the tensions that will develop when returning Israelites find their land inhabited by others who claim it as their own (35:10, 12, 15; 36:2–5). The Lord, however, promised that he would divide the land “by lot” among the returning Israelites for their inheritance, at the same time assuring any non-Israelites living in their midst that they, too, would be granted an “inheritance . . . among the tribes of Israel” (47:22 [13–23]).

The Lord emphasized how real this gathering would be (37:1–14). As in the Resurrection, scattered Israelites, like individual dry bones, might still hope to be formed into one body—with sinews and flesh, breath, and spirit—once more in their own land. The Resurrection thus serves as a metaphor of the gathering as well as a means whereby it will be accomplished, as promised by the Lord: “I will open your graves, and cause you to come up out of your graves, and bring you into the land of Israel” (37:12).

After Israelites gather and prosper, they will live peacefully in “unwalled villages,” “at rest,” dwelling “safely,” “without walls” (38:11). At this point, they will be attacked by Gog, whose goal is to plunder their prosperous land. In the battles that follow, the Lord will refine Israel while bringing judgment against the nations—both those who attack Israel and those who live in distant lands (cf. Isa. 4:4; Zech. 12:2–3; 14:2–3; Zeph. 3:8; Ezek. 39:2–4, 6, 11, 21–24). Jerusalem will be rebuilt as a divine center, God’s temple will be erected in their midst (chaps. 40–47), and he will reside there, so that Jerusalem will be “called Holy, for the Lord shall be there” (JST Ezek. 48:35).

In this gathering context, Ezekiel spoke of the unification of the so-called “sticks” of Judah and Ephraim (i.e., Israel), a joining that signals not only the beginning of the gathering of Israel (Ezek. 37:15–22; cf. 3 Ne. 20:46; 21:1–3, 7–13) but also the means by which the ultimate gathering—of peoples back to God—will be accomplished (cf. 1 Ne. 22:12; 2 Ne. 6:11).

Latter-day Saints identify Judah’s record as the Bible and Ephraim’s record as the Book of Mormon (D&C 27:5). They understand that when the Book of Mormon was translated and published, it became possible to join the two records. And since the stated purpose of the Book of Mormon is to convince “Jew and Gentile that Jesus is the Christ, the Eternal God, manifesting himself unto all nations” (title page of the Book of Mormon), they see this joining of testimonies as being a principal means whereby Israel will be brought back to God (see BOOK OF MORMON, BIBLICAL PROPHECIES ABOUT).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Meservy, Keith H. “Ezekiel’s Sticks and the Gathering of Israel.” Ensign 17 (Feb. 1987):4–13.
- Sperry, Sidney B. The Voice of Israel’s Prophets, pp. 218–37. Salt Lake City, 1952.

KEITH H. MESERVY

---

EZIAS

Ezias was a prophet of Old Testament times whose prophecies were apparently recorded on the PLATES of brass, a record brought to the Western Hemisphere by the Book of Mormon prophet LEHI. Ezias was mentioned by NEPHI<sub>2</sub> (c. 22 B.C.) in a list of prophets who testified of the coming ministry and redemption of Christ (Hel. 8:13–20).

MELVIN J. THORNE

F

---

---

FAITH IN JESUS CHRIST

Faith in Jesus Christ is the first principle of the GOSPEL OF JESUS CHRIST (A of F 4). One who has this faith believes him to be the living Son of God, trusts in his goodness and power, repents of one's sins, and follows his guidance. Faith in the Lord Jesus Christ is awakened as individuals hear his gospel (Rom. 10:17). By faith they enter the gate of REPENTANCE and BAPTISM, and receive the GIFT OF THE HOLY GHOST, which leads to the way of life ordained by Christ (2 Ne. 31:9, 17–18). Those who respond are “alive in Christ because of [their] faith” (2 Ne. 25:25). Because God's way is the only way that leads to salvation, “it is impossible to please him” without faith (Heb. 11:6). Faith must precede miracles, signs, gifts of the Spirit, and righteousness, for “if there be no faith . . . God can do no miracle” (Ether 12:12). The Book of Mormon prophet MORONI<sup>2</sup> summarized these points:

The Lord God prepareth the way that the residue of men may have faith in Christ, that the Holy Ghost may have place in their hearts, according to the power thereof; and after this manner bringeth to pass the Father, the covenants which he hath made unto the children of men. And Christ hath said: If ye will have faith in me ye shall have power to do whatsoever thing is expedient in me. And he hath said: Repent all ye ends of the earth, and come unto me, and be baptized in my name, and have faith in me, that ye may be saved [Moro. 7:32–34].

Although in common speech people speak of having faith in people, principles, or things, faith in its eternal sense is faith in, and only in, Jesus Christ. It is not sufficient to have faith in just anything; it must be focused on “the only true God, and Jesus Christ” whom he has sent (John 17:3). Having faith means having complete confidence in Jesus Christ alone to save humankind from sin and the finality of death. By his grace “are ye saved through faith” (Eph. 2:8). If “Christ be not risen,” then “your faith is also vain” and “ye are yet in your sins” (1 Cor. 15:14, 17). To trust in the powers of this world is to “trust in the arm of flesh” and, in effect, to reject Christ and his gospel (2 Ne. 4:34).

Paul explained, “Now faith is the substance [or assurance] of things hoped for, the evidence [the demonstration or proof] of things not seen” (Heb. 11:1). Mortals must live by faith, since divine realities are veiled from their physical senses. The invisible truths of the gospel are made manifest by the Holy Spirit and are seen in the lives of people who live by faith, following the daily directions of that Spirit. Though most mortals have not seen the spiritual realities beyond this physical world, they can accept such premises in faith, based on personal spiritual witness(es) and the scriptural record of former and latter-day special witnesses whom God has called and who have experienced these realities firsthand.

True faith is belief plus action. Faith implies not only the mental assent or cognition of belief but also its implementation. Beliefs in things both spiritual and secular impel people to act. Failure to act on the teachings and commandments of Christ implies absence of faith in him. Faith in Jesus Christ impels people to act in behalf of Christ, to follow his example, to do his works. Jesus said, "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven" (Matt. 7:21; italics added). James further emphasized that "faith, if it hath not works, is dead, being alone. Yea, a man may say, Thou hast faith, and I have works: shew me thy faith without thy works, and I will shew thee my faith by my works" (James 2:17–18; see also GRACE).

Christ Healing the Blind Man, by Carl Heinrich Bloch (1834–1890; oil on copper plate; 20" × 30"). Jesus heals a man blind from birth (John 9). Healings and other miracles are one manifestation of faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. Courtesy the Frederiksborg Museum, Hillerød, Denmark.

Righteousness leads to greater faith, while sin and wickedness diminish faith. "The just [man] shall live by his faith" (Hab. 2:4). Violating the commandments of God brings a loss of the Spirit of the Lord and a loss of faith, for faith in Jesus Christ is incompatible with disobedience. The Book of Mormon prophet ALMA<sub>2</sub> characterized the words of Christ as a seed that is tested as people plant it in their hearts and nourish it. If they desire to see the seed grow, they must give it room and nourish it with their faith. If it is a good seed, it will swell and grow, and they will know that it is good. However, if they neglect the seed, it will wither away. But if they will "nourish the word . . . by [their] faith with great diligence," it will grow into a tree of life, and they will taste its fruit, which is eternal life (Alma 32:26–43).

Faith may be nurtured and renewed through scripture study, prayer, and works consistent with the commandments of the gospel. Because those who act on faith, repent, and are baptized receive a remission of sins, they have reason to hope for eternal life (Moro. 7:41). With this hope, their faith in Jesus Christ further inspires individuals to minister to each other in CHARITY, even as Christ would have done (Moro. 7:44), for the "end of the commandment is charity out of . . . faith unfeigned" (1 Tim. 1:5). "Charity is the pure love of Christ, and it endureth forever" (Moro. 7:47). Thus, faith, or "steadfastness in Christ," enables people to ENDURE TO THE END, continuing in faith and charity (2 Ne. 31:20; 1 Tim. 2:15; D&C 20:29). True faith is enduring and leads to an assurance that one's efforts have not gone unnoticed and that God is pleased with one's attitude and effort to implement the principles of the gospel of Jesus Christ in one's personal life.

While Alma explained how faith leads to knowledge, modern LDS commentary also points out how certain kinds of knowledge strengthen faith (MD, pp. 261–67). The knowledge that God exists, a correct understanding of his character, and a reassurance that he approves of one's conduct can help one's faith "become perfect and fruitful, abounding in righteousness" ("Lectures on Faith," pp. 65–66; see LECTURES ON FAITH).

The restoration of the gospel in modern times was initiated by an act of faith by the youthful Joseph Smith. Reading the Bible, he was struck by the encouragement of James to all who lack wisdom that they should "ask in faith, nothing wavering" (James 1:6). The visions that came to Joseph Smith in answer to his prayers (see VISIONS OF JOSEPH SMITH) are evidence that prayers are "answered according to [one's] faith" (Mosiah 27:14). Though God delights to bless his children, he "first, [tries] their faith, . . . then shall the greater things be made manifest" (3 Ne. 26:9). But there will be "no witness until after the trial of your faith" (Ether 12:6), and "without faith you can do nothing" (D&C 8:10). "Signs come by faith, not by the will of men" (D&C 63:10).

Because faith involves the guidance of the Holy Ghost to individuals, it leads them by an invisible hand to "the unity of the faith" (Eph. 4:13). Through the strength of others and increased confidence in the Lord's way, faith provides a shield against the adversary (Eph. 6:16). Similarly, faith has been described as part of one's armor, serving as a "breastplate of faith and love" (1 Thes. 5:8) in protecting the faithful from evil.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Benson, Ezra Taft. The Teachings of Ezra Taft Benson, pp. 65–69. Salt Lake City, 1988.

Kimball, Spencer W. Faith Precedes the Miracle. Salt Lake City, 1973.

"Lectures on Faith." In The Lectures on Faith in Historical Perspective, ed. L. Dahl and C. Tate, pp. 29–104. Provo, Utah, 1990.

DOUGLAS E. BRINLEY

FALL OF ADAM

Latter-day Saints recognize the fall of ADAM and EVE as an actual event that occurred in the GARDEN OF EDEN and has affected the entire earth and everyone in the human family. The Fall was a necessary step in the eternal progress of mankind and introduced the conditions that made the mission of Jesus Christ absolutely necessary for SALVATION. The four STANDARD WORKS and the teachings of many prominent leaders of the Church are the sources for the LDS doctrine of the Fall. These sources dwell at length on the beneficial effects of the Fall as part of God's "great plan of happiness" (Alma 42:8) for his children and testify that Adam and Eve are to be honored for their actions (see PLAN OF SALVATION; PURPOSE OF EARTH LIFE).

The creation of the earth was a multistep process in which the fall of Adam and Eve and their expulsion from the Garden of Eden were the final necessary steps in bringing about the mortal condition. Without the Fall, Adam and Eve would have had no children (2 Ne. 2:23); hence, the human family would not have come into existence upon this earth under the conditions and circumstances in the garden. The prophet LEHI explained, "Adam fell that men might be" (2 Ne. 2:25), and ENOCH declared, "Because that Adam fell, we are" (Moses 6:48).

After the Fall, Adam and Eve were taught the gospel of Jesus Christ and rejoiced in their situation. Adam blessed God, saying, "Because of my transgression my eyes are opened, and in this life I shall have joy, and again in the flesh I shall see God" (Moses 5:10). And Eve was glad, saying, "Were it not for our transgression we never should have had seed, and never should have known good and evil, and the joy of our redemption, and the eternal life which God giveth unto all the obedient" (Moses 5:11).

The Fall was not an accident, not an obstruction to God's plan, and not a wrong turn in the course of humanity. "The Lord . . . created the earth that it should be inhabited" by his children (1 Ne. 17:36), and since Adam and Eve would have had no children in their Edenic condition, the Fall was a benefit to mankind. It was part of the Father's plan, being both foreknown to him and essential to the human family. All these things were "done in the wisdom of him who knoweth all things" (2 Ne. 2:24).

The Fall brought two kinds of death upon Adam, Eve, and their posterity: the separation of the spirit and the physical body, which the scriptures call the "temporal death" (Alma 11:42–43); and being shut out of God's presence, which is called SPIRITUAL DEATH (2 Ne. 9:6; D&C 29:41). Jesus Christ redeems all mankind unconditionally from the two deaths brought by the fall of Adam (see ORIGINAL SIN), raises all mankind from the grave, and restores them to God's presence for a judgment (Hel. 14:16–17). The Atonement also redeems individuals from the consequences of their own sins on conditions of repentance.

The Book of Mormon explains, "The natural man is an enemy to God, and has been from the fall of Adam, and will be, forever and ever, unless he yields to the enticings of the Holy Spirit, and putteth off the natural man and becometh a saint through the atonement of Christ the Lord" (Mosiah 3:19; cf. Alma 22:14; 42:9–15). God "created Adam, and by Adam came the fall of man. And because of the fall of man came Jesus Christ, . . . and because of Jesus Christ came the redemption of man" (Morm. 9:12; cf. 2 Ne. 9:6).

The Doctrine and Covenants states that the Fall occurred as a result of transgression: "The devil tempted Adam, and he partook of the forbidden fruit and transgressed the commandment. . . . Wherefore, I, the Lord God, caused that he should be cast out from the Garden of Eden, from my nothing" (D&C 8:10). "Signs come by faith, not by the will of men" (D&C 63:10).

Because faith involves the guidance of the Holy Ghost to individuals, it leads them by an invisible hand to "the unity of the faith" (Eph. 4:13). Through the strength of others and increased confidence in the Lord's way, faith provides a shield against the adversary (Eph. 6:16). Similarly, faith has been described as part of one's armor, serving as a "breastplate of faith and love" (1 Thes. 5:8) in protecting the faithful from evil.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Benson, Ezra Taft. The Teachings of Ezra Taft Benson, pp. 65–69. Salt Lake City, 1988.

Kimball, Spencer W. Faith Precedes the Miracle. Salt Lake City, 1973.

"Lectures on Faith." In The Lectures on Faith in Historical Perspective, ed. L. Dahl and C. Tate, pp. 29–104. Provo, Utah, 1990.

DOUGLAS E. BRINLEY

FALL OF ADAM

Latter-day Saints recognize the fall of ADAM and EVE as an actual event that occurred in the GARDEN OF EDEN and has affected the entire earth and everyone in the human family. The Fall was a necessary step in the eternal progress of mankind and introduced the conditions that made the mission of Jesus Christ absolutely necessary for SALVATION. The four STANDARD WORKS and the teachings of many prominent leaders of the Church are the sources for the LDS doctrine of the Fall. These sources dwell at length on the beneficial effects of the Fall as part of God's "great plan of happiness" (Alma 42:8) for his children and testify that Adam and Eve are to be honored for their actions (see PLAN OF SALVATION; PURPOSE OF EARTH LIFE).

The creation of the earth was a multistep process in which the fall of Adam and Eve and their expulsion from the Garden of Eden were the final necessary steps in bringing about the mortal condition. Without the Fall, Adam and Eve would have had no children (2 Ne. 2:23); hence, the human family would not have come into existence upon this earth under the conditions and circumstances in the garden. The prophet LEHI explained, "Adam fell that men might be" (2 Ne. 2:25), and ENOCH declared, "Because that Adam fell, we are" (Moses 6:48).

After the Fall, Adam and Eve were taught the gospel of Jesus Christ and rejoiced in their situation. Adam blessed God, saying, "Because of my transgression my eyes are opened, and in this life I shall have joy, and again in the flesh I shall see God" (Moses 5:10). And Eve was glad, saying, "Were it not for our transgression we never should have had seed, and never should have known good and evil, and the joy of our redemption, and the eternal life which God giveth unto all the obedient" (Moses 5:11).

The Fall was not an accident, not an obstruction to God's plan, and not a wrong turn in the course of humanity. "The Lord . . . created the earth that it should be inhabited" by his children (1 Ne. 17:36), and since Adam and Eve would have had no children in their Edenic condition, the Fall was a benefit to mankind. It was part of the Father's plan, being both foreknown to him and essential to the human family. All these things were "done in the wisdom of him who knoweth all things" (2 Ne. 2:24).

The Fall brought two kinds of death upon Adam, Eve, and their posterity: the separation of the spirit and the physical body, which the scriptures call the "temporal death" (Alma 11:42–43); and being shut out of God's presence, which is called SPIRITUAL DEATH (2 Ne. 9:6; D&C 29:41). Jesus Christ redeems all mankind unconditionally from the two deaths brought by the fall of Adam (see ORIGINAL SIN), raises all mankind from the grave, and restores them to God's presence for a judgment (Hel. 14:16–17). The Atonement also redeems individuals from the consequences of their own sins on conditions of repentance.

The Book of Mormon explains, "The natural man is an enemy to God, and has been from the fall of Adam, and will be, forever and ever, unless he yields to the enticings of the Holy Spirit, and putteth off the natural man and becometh a saint through the atonement of Christ the Lord" (Mosiah 3:19; cf. Alma 22:14; 42:9–15). God "created Adam, and by Adam came the fall of man. And because of the fall of man came Jesus Christ, . . . and because of Jesus Christ came the redemption of man" (Morm. 9:12; cf. 2 Ne. 9:6).

The Doctrine and Covenants states that the Fall occurred as a result of transgression: "The devil tempted Adam, and he partook of the forbidden fruit and transgressed the commandment. . . . Wherefore, I, the Lord God, caused that he should be cast out from the Garden of Eden, from my presence, because of his transgression, wherein he became spiritually dead" (D&C 29:40–41). Thereafter, God sent angels to teach Adam and his seed "repentance and redemption, through faith on the name of mine Only Begotten Son" (D&C 29:42; cf. Moses 5:6–8).

The Fall was not a sin against chastity. Adam and Eve were "man and wife" and were commanded by God to multiply (Gen. 1:27–28; Moses 3:21–25; Abr. 5:14–19). Joseph Fielding SMITH, an apostle explained, "The transgression of Adam did not involve sex sin as some falsely believe and teach. Adam and Eve were married by the Lord while they were yet immortal beings in the Garden of Eden and before death entered the world" (DS 1:114–15; cf. JC, pp. 29–31).

An inseparable relationship between the fall of Adam and the ATONEMENT OF JESUS CHRIST is established in ancient and modern scripture. Paul's summation is, "For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive" (1 Cor. 15:22). Latter-day revelation further emphasizes that Christ will redeem all things from death and the effects of the Fall.

The Prophet Joseph SMITH taught that Adam's role was "to open the way of the world" (TPJS, p. 12); thus, he was the first man to enter mortality, and the fall of Adam has a mortal effect upon the entire earth. The earth shall die (D&C 88:25–26), but through the atoning power of Jesus Christ "the earth will be renewed and receive its paradisiacal glory" (A of F 10). "All things shall become new, even the heaven and the earth, and all the fulness thereof, both men and beasts, the fowls of the air, and the fishes of the sea; and not one hair, neither mote, shall be lost, for it is the workmanship of mine hand" (D&C 29:24–25; cf. 101:24–26; Isa. 51:6).

As Lehi declared, "If Adam had not transgressed he would not have fallen, but he would have remained in the Garden of Eden. And all things which were created must have remained in the same state in which they were after they were created; and they must have remained forever, and had no end" (2 Ne. 2:22; cf. Moses 3:9). Various interpretations have been suggested concerning the nature of life on the earth before the Fall and how the Fall physically affected the world, but these go beyond the clearly stated doctrine of the Church. The Church and the scriptures are emphatic, however, that the Fall brought the two kinds of death to Adam and his posterity.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- McConkie, Joseph Fielding, and Robert L. Millet, eds. The Man Adam. Salt Lake City, 1990.
- Packer, Boyd K. "The Law and the Light." In The Book of Mormon: Jacob Through Words of Mormon, to Learn With Joy, pp. 1–31. Provo, Utah, 1990.
- Smith, Joseph Fielding. Man, His Origin and Destiny. Salt Lake City, 1954.

ROBERT J. MATTHEWS

---

FAMILY

[This entry consists of two articles:

Teachings About the Family Family Life

The first article presents the major teachings about the family that tend to set Latter-day Saints apart from other people and focuses on latter-day scriptures and teachings of Church leaders. The second article provides a substantial explanation of the way in which families experience Church membership together, including the fact that the standard orientation of Church programs is toward families. The family is central to LDS theology, religion, society, and culture. In addition to the articles appearing below, see Children; Fatherhood; Marriage; Motherhood; and Mother in Israel. Regarding specific Church policies and practices concerning the family, see Abuse, Spouse and Child; Adoption of Children; Birth Control; Divorce; Family Home Evening; and Family Prayer.]

TEACHINGS ABOUT THE FAMILY

The basic unit of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is the family: "The home is the basis of a righteous life, and no other instrumentality can take its place nor fulfill its essential functions" (McKay, Preface). Within the family, people experience most of life's greatest joys and greatest sorrows. The family relationships of every person on earth are of cardinal importance, and of all the social organizations created for human beings, only the family is intended to continue into the next life.

FAMILIES ON EARTH ARE AN EXTENSION OF THE FAMILY OF GOD. According to the LDS concept of the family, every person is a child of heavenly parents as well as mortal parents. Each individual was created spiritually and physically in the image of God and Christ (Moses 2:27; 3:5). The First Presidency has declared, "All men and women are presence, because of his transgression, wherein he became spiritually dead" (D&C 29:40–41). Thereafter, God sent angels to teach Adam and his seed "repentance and redemption, through faith on the name of mine Only Begotten Son" (D&C 29:42; cf. Moses 5:6–8).

The Fall was not a sin against chastity. Adam and Eve were "man and wife" and were commanded by God to multiply (Gen. 1:27–28; Moses 3:21–25; Abr. 5:14–19). Joseph Fielding SMITH, an apostle explained, "The transgression of Adam did not involve sex sin as some falsely believe and teach. Adam and Eve were married by the Lord while they were yet immortal beings in the Garden of Eden and before death entered the world" (DS 1:114–15; cf. JC, pp. 29–31).

An inseparable relationship between the fall of Adam and the ATONEMENT OF JESUS CHRIST is established in ancient and modern scripture. Paul's summation is, "For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive" (1 Cor. 15:22). Latter-day revelation further emphasizes that Christ will redeem all things from death and the effects of the Fall.

The Prophet Joseph SMITH taught that Adam's role was "to open the way of the world" (TPJS, p. 12); thus, he was the first man to enter mortality, and the fall of Adam has a mortal effect upon the entire earth. The earth shall die (D&C 88:25–26), but through the atoning power of Jesus Christ "the earth will be renewed and receive its paradisiacal glory" (A of F 10). "All things shall become new, even the heaven and the earth, and all the fulness thereof, both men and beasts, the fowls of the air, and the fishes of the sea; and not one hair, neither mote, shall be lost, for it is the workmanship of mine hand" (D&C 29:24–25; cf. 101:24–26; Isa. 51:6).

As Lehi declared, "If Adam had not transgressed he would not have fallen, but he would have remained in the Garden of Eden. And all things which were created must have remained in the same state in which they were after they were created; and they must have remained forever, and had no end" (2 Ne. 2:22; cf. Moses 3:9). Various interpretations have been suggested concerning the nature of life on the earth before the Fall and how the Fall physically affected the world, but these go beyond the clearly stated doctrine of the Church. The Church and the scriptures are emphatic, however, that the Fall brought the two kinds of death to Adam and his posterity.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- McConkie, Joseph Fielding, and Robert L. Millet, eds. The Man Adam. Salt Lake City, 1990.
- Packer, Boyd K. "The Law and the Light." In The Book of Mormon: Jacob Through Words of Mormon, to Learn With Joy, pp. 1–31. Provo, Utah, 1990.
- Smith, Joseph Fielding. Man, His Origin and Destiny. Salt Lake City, 1954.

ROBERT J. MATTHEWS

---

FAMILY

[This entry consists of two articles:

Teachings About the Family Family Life

The first article presents the major teachings about the family that tend to set Latter-day Saints apart from other people and focuses on latter-day scriptures and teachings of Church leaders. The second article provides a substantial explanation of the way in which families experience Church membership together, including the fact that the standard orientation of Church programs is toward families. The family is central to LDS theology, religion, society, and culture. In addition to the articles appearing below, see Children; Fatherhood; Marriage; Motherhood; and Mother in Israel. Regarding specific Church policies and practices concerning the family, see Abuse, Spouse and Child; Adoption of Children; Birth Control; Divorce; Family Home Evening; and Family Prayer.]

TEACHINGS ABOUT THE FAMILY

The basic unit of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints is the family: "The home is the basis of a righteous life, and no other instrumentality can take its place nor fulfill its essential functions" (McKay, Preface). Within the family, people experience most of life's greatest joys and greatest sorrows. The family relationships of every person on earth are of cardinal importance, and of all the social organizations created for human beings, only the family is intended to continue into the next life.

FAMILIES ON EARTH ARE AN EXTENSION OF THE FAMILY OF GOD. According to the LDS concept of the family, every person is a child of heavenly parents as well as mortal parents. Each individual was created spiritually and physically in the image of God and Christ (Moses 2:27; 3:5). The First Presidency has declared, "All men and women are in the similitude of the universal Father and Mother, and are literally the sons and daughters of Deity" (MFP 4:203). Everyone, before coming to this earth, lived with Heavenly Father and Heavenly Mother, and each was loved and taught by them as a member of their eternal family (see PREMORTAL LIFE). Birth unites the spirit with a physical body so that together they can "receive a fulness of joy" (D&C 93:33; cf. 2 Ne. 2:25).

MARRIAGE IS ORDAINED OF GOD. "Whoso forbiddeth to marry is not ordained of God, for marriage is ordained of God unto man" (D&C 49:15). The marriage sanctioned by God provides men and women with the opportunity to fulfill their divine potentials. "Neither is the man without the woman, neither the woman without the man, in the Lord" (1 Cor. 11:11). Husbands and wives are unique in some ways and free to develop their eternal gifts, yet as coequals in the sight of their heavenly parents they are one in the divine goals they pursue, in their devotion to eternal principles and ordinances, in their obedience to the Lord, and in their divine love for each other. When a man and woman who have been sealed together in a temple are united spiritually, mentally, emotionally, and physically, taking full responsibility for nurturing each other, they are truly married. Together they strive to emulate the prototype of the heavenly home from which they came. The Church teaches them to complement, support, and enrich one another.

THE FAMILY CAN BECOME AN ETERNAL UNIT. Worthy members can be sealed by the power of the PRIESTHOOD in holy TEMPLES for TIME AND ETERNITY either in or after marriage. At the time of their temple SEALING, both husband and wife enter "an order of the priesthood [called] the new and everlasting covenant of marriage" (D&C 131:1–4). Without worthiness and authority, a marriage cannot endure eternally and is "of no efficacy, virtue, or force in and after the resurrection from the dead" (D&C 132:7). If a husband and wife are faithful to their temple marriage, they will continue as co-creators in God's celestial kingdom through the eternities. They will administer the affairs of their family in unity with the guidance of the Holy Spirit. Regarding members of the Church not born into such homes or not married in this life through no fault of their own, President Spencer W. KIMBALL taught that those "who would have responded if they had [had] an appropriate opportunity—will receive all those blessings in the world to come" (Kimball, p. 295).

Church leaders encourage families to study the scriptures together. This photograph shows Elder John A. Widtsoe, a member of the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles, his wife Leah Eudora Dunford and two of their children reading the Bible. Photographer: Charles Ellis Johnson. Courtesy Rare Books and Manuscripts, Brigham Young University.

THE POWER TO CREATE LIFE IS A GIFT FROM GOD. Because the procreative powers come from God, sexual purity is spiritual and mental, as well as physical and emotional (see SEXUALITY). Jesus said, "Whosoever looketh on a woman, to lust after her, hath committed adultery already in his heart. Behold, I give unto you a commandment, that ye suffer none of these things to enter into your heart" (3 Ne. 12:28–29). CHASTITY is sacred (cf. Jacob 2:28).

PROCREATION IS A COMMANDMENT OF GOD. Through the sexual experience, husbands and wives enrich their marriage and create physical bodies for spirits to come to earth to achieve divine purposes. Latter-day Saints strive to create a home life dedicated to fulfilling these purposes. It is both a joy and a responsibility for parents to bring heavenly spirits into this world. Adam and Eve were commanded to "be fruitful, and multiply" (Gen. 1:22). Latter-day revelation has given the same instructions. Church members are taught not to postpone or refuse to have children for selfish or materialistic reasons. On questions such as how many children a couple will have, the spacing of children, and BIRTH CONTROL, Latter-day Saints are instructed to use their AGENCY, selecting a course as husband and wife in accordance with divine principles and seeking confirmation from the Holy Spirit.

PARENTS ARE RESPONSIBLE FOR TEACHING THEIR CHILDREN THE GOSPEL OF JESUS CHRIST. "Inasmuch as parents have children . . . that teach them not to understand the doctrine of repentance, faith in Christ the Son of the living God, and of baptism and the gift of the Holy Ghost . . . the sin be upon the heads of the parents. . . . And they shall also teach their children to pray, and to walk uprightly before the Lord" (D&C 68:25, 28). Parents are admonished to be examples to their children, realizing that their children are also their spirit brothers and sisters.

AN ENVIRONMENT OF LOVE IS NECESSARY FOR REARING CHILDREN. The spirit of a righteous home is love. The Lord said, "Thou shalt live together in love" (D&C 42:45)—love of heavenly parents, the Lord Jesus Christ, and the Holy Ghost; of husband and wife; and of parents for children, children for parents, and siblings for each other.

MAKING ONE'S HOME A PLACE OF PEACE AND JOY TAKES EFFORT. The effort that goes into making a peaceful home requires consistent planning, prayer, and cooperation. The Church encourages families to hold weekly FAMILY HOME EVENINGS, in which all members of the family study eternal gospel principles and ordinances and do things together that bring them joy. Two Church Presidents have stated, "The most important of the Lord's work [you] will ever do will be the work you do within the walls of your own homes" (Lee, p. 7), and "No other success can compensate for failure in the home" (McKay, p. iii).

WORTHY FAMILY MEMBERS LOOK FORWARD WITH FAITH AND HOPE TO ETERNAL FAMILY

RELATIONSHIPS. Earthly families expect to live again as extended families with ancestors and descendants who have died. They become those "who received the testimony of Jesus, and believed on his name, . . . and are sealed by the Holy Spirit of promise, which the Father sheds forth upon all those who are just and true" (D&C 76:51, 53).

THE RIGHTEOUS ARE BLESSED. All righteous individuals, who maintain personal worthiness, love, and faithfulness, are promised the RICHES OF ETERNITY, which include the eventual blessings of being sealed to other family members who also qualify for celestial blessings.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Benson, Ezra Taft. God, Family, Country: Our Three Great Loyalties, pp. 167–273. Salt Lake City, 1974.
- Kimball, Spencer W. The Teachings of Spencer W. Kimball, ed. Edward L. Kimball. Salt Lake City, 1982.
- Lee, Harold B. Strengthening the Home (pamphlet). Salt Lake City, 1973.
- McConkie, Oscar W., Jr. "LDS Concept of the Family." Journal of the Collegium Aesculapium 2 (July 1984):46–51.
- McKay, David O. Family Home Evening Manual. Salt Lake City, 1965.
- White, O. Kendall, Jr. "Ideology of the Family in Nineteenth-Century Mormonism." Sociological Spectrum 6 (1986):289–306.

REED H. BRADFORD

FAMILY LIFE

FAMILY DEMOGRAPHICS. The inherent emphasis on family in Latter-day Saint theology is expressed in demographic patterns that are different for Mormons compared to the general population. First, Mormon fertility rates have consistently been higher than national averages. Utah has traditionally had the highest fertility rate of any state in the Union due to the high percentage of Latter-day Saints in the state (approximately 70 percent).

Research shows that the larger than average family size among Latter-day Saints is not due to their reluctance to use various methods of birth control. Heaton and Calkins' research (1983) shows that in a national sample they are just as likely to use modern birth control methods as are the rest of the nation. But for Latter-day Saints, contraceptives often are not used until after child rearing has occurred and is used less frequently so that the desired larger family size can be obtained. Heaton concludes that the larger family size for Latter-day Saints is associated with beliefs of LDS parents regarding the value of having children, involvement with an LDS reference group, and socialization in a context which favors having children (1988, p. 112).

In the general population, as family size increases, so does coercive discipline. Affectional family relationships decrease. But research among Latter-day Saints shows an opposite pattern, with larger families reporting increased affectional relations (Thomas, 1983, p. 274).

Latter-day Saints consistently report lower than national average rates of premarital sexual experience, teenage pregnancy, and extramarital sexual experience (Heaton, 1988). Yet, research reported by Smith (1976) shows that inactive Mormons were changing toward more liberal sexual attitudes and behavior during the 1970s, even while active Latter-day Saints showed no movement toward more liberal attitudes or behavior. The percentages reporting no present premarital sexual activity by active Latter-day Saints actually increased between 1950 and 1972, from 95 percent to 98 percent for men and from 96 percent to 98 percent for women (pp. 79–81).

Current data show that a higher percent of Latter-day Saints will marry than does the general population. They will also marry younger, have a lower divorce rate, and remarry after divorce at a higher rate than is found in the general population (Heaton, 1988, pp. 110–11).

With respect to divorce, it is clear that the most religiously committed Latter-day Saints have divorce rates considerably lower than the inactive or noncommitted Church members, even though Utah is one of the mountain and western states which have generally had higher than national average divorce rates (Thomas, 1983, p. 277). Heaton and Goodman's research (1985) shows that of Latter-day Saints attending church regularly, 10 percent of men and 15 percent of women report divorce, compared to 21 percent of men and 26 percent of women who do not attend regularly. Also, among men with temple marriages, 5.4 percent reported divorce compared to 27.8 percent of the nontemple group. For women with temple marriages, 6.5 were divorced while 32.7 percent were divorced in nontemple marriages.

Families, including young children, attend Church services together on Sunday. Joseph Freeman, Jr., of Kearns, Utah, was one of the first blacks ordained to the priesthood in 1978. Courtesy Doug Martin.

FAMILY ROLES AND THE CHURCH. With the emphasis upon family found within all of the organizations of the Church, from PRIMARY to PRIESTHOOD QUORUMS, the husband and wife become the main points of contact between family and Church. The wife's involvement with the Church will most likely emerge through PRIMARY and RELIEF SOCIETY activities. The husband's contact with the Church can emerge through almost any organization with the exception of the Relief Society, which is limited to women.

Since the Church is organized around a lay male priesthood, more positions of leadership are occupied by husbands than by wives. In addition, the reorganization of Church procedures and functions begun under the general heading of "priesthood correlation" reemphasized the role of the father in conducting family councils, which were seen as part of the councils designed to govern the Church extending all the way to the council of the First Presidency. The family is seen as the most basic unit of the Church, and all Church programs are designed to strengthen the family.

Given the role of the priesthood in LDS Church government, as well as the teachings about the family, Latter-day Saints have been seen generally as encouraging traditional division of labor along gender lines within families, while at the same time emphasizing the authority of the father through priesthood lines. When researchers have asked about who should perform various functions within the family, Latter-day Saints have tended to score high on measures of traditional beliefs regarding who ought to do what in a family (Brinkerhoff and MacKie, 1988). However, in research that asks husbands and wives what they actually do in decision making within the family or how they carry out various duties (that traditionally were seen as belonging to either the husband or the wife), Latter-day Saints have consistently emerged as high on egalitarian measures (Thomas, 1983; Brinkerhoff and MacKie, 1983, 1988). These somewhat paradoxical patterns have not been adequately explained. A common explanation, namely that egalitarian pressures from the larger society is changing the behavior of LDS husbands and wives, is not a convincing one, in light of these recent research findings. Wuthnow advises those who study religious influence to keep a healthy skepticism toward any description of religion "as a force in the service of social conservatism" (1973, p. 128). His advice seems especially relevant to this issue with LDS attitudes and beliefs.

In addition, while the Latter-day Saint father is given responsibility to lead the family, he is expected to do so in a manner which helps every family member grow and develop. LDS beliefs also emphasize the egalitarian nature of men-women relationships. LDS doctrine teaches that there is a MOTHER IN HEAVEN as well as a Father, that EVE's eating of the forbidden fruit furthered God's plan of salvation (see FALL OF ADAM), that women must perform certain essential priesthood ordinances in the temple, and that the highest order of the priesthood and the complete blessings of EXALTATION are available only to the married couple; neither can enter exaltation without the other.

This egalitarian relationship between men and women is symbolized in the LDS portrayal of relationships between Adam and Eve after their expulsion from the Garden of Eden. The two must earn their bread by the sweat of their brows and "Eve did labor with him" (Moses 5:1). They are both commanded to offer sacrifices, and they teach their children all these things (Moses 5:5, 12). Eve along with Adam mourns for the wickedness of their children, and they seek the Lord in prayer together (Moses 5:13-16). After receiving information from God, Eve in turn instructs Adam about some basic points of the gospel (Moses 5:11).

Another egalitarian emphasis emerges in temple ceremonies and ordinances. Without women performing sacred priesthood ordinances in the temple, the highest saving ordinances performed on earth by men and women could not be completed. This is symbolic of men-women relationships generally. Alone they remain incomplete while united man and woman develop their highest divine potential.

PARENTAL BELIEFS AND FAMILY BEHAVIOR. Family commitment is deemed crucial for both husbands and wives, although the wife typically bears the greater responsibility for management of the home and the nurturing of the children. Thomas (1988) studied a sample of LDS parents and documented that the degree to which husbands and wives shared in their child-rearing duties was the second strongest influence on marital satisfaction. More recent research (Thomas and

In the Family Circle, by Dennis Smith (1978, cast bronze), Nauvoo Monument to Women, LDS Church Visitors Center, Nauvoo, Illinois. This life-sized statue, one of thirteen commissioned by the Relief Society for the Nauvoo Monument to Women, carries the inscription: "And they shall also teach their children to pray, and to walk uprightly before the Lord" (D&C 68:28).

Cornwall, 1990) has documented that it is the wife's marital satisfaction that is highly correlated with shared child-rearing, while the husband's marital satisfaction is unrelated to shared child rearing. This finding corroborates a long-standing general pattern in family research which shows that what happens in family life is more central to a wife's definition of satisfaction than a husband's. It also points to the need for LDS husbands to realize that their increased involvement in child care will be one of the best contributions they can make to their wife's marital satisfaction. Also, those families that score high on the measure of home religious observance (FAMILY PRAYER, SCRIPTURE READING, and family council) also report the highest amount of shared child-rearing.

In related findings, whether the couple had been married in the temple was the best indicator of whether the family would carry out their home religious observance. These data support the conclusion that temple marriage is related to family behaviors which include more home religious activities, increased husband involvement in shared child-rearing activities, and thus increased marital satisfaction.

The emphasis among Latter-day Saints on family often can lead to greater involvement with members of the extended family. The Church encourages families to organize across generations to foster FAMILY HISTORY and genealogical work deemed essential to the family's well-being in eternity. Such work is often discussed at family reunions. However, there is not good comparative research available to know to what degree LDS families are different from or similar to other families on extended family interaction.

THE CHURCH AND FAMILY FUNCTIONING. These demographic realities mean that generally LDS families are larger, are more likely to avoid divorce, are characterized by religious commitment and activities centered around child-rearing, and require great financial resources. In addition to providing financially for the family, running the household, and rearing children, adults usually have one or more Church CALLINGS that may involve extensive time in service to others. And, since the number of LDS women who are employed outside the home is virtually equal to the national average in the United States (see Mason, p. 103; Heaton, 1986, p. 184, 190), making home a first priority is a genuine challenge. As children grow, parents are encouraged to include them in doing household tasks, with the goal that the resulting skills and attitudes which they develop can contribute to the quality of family life, as well as prepare them for confidence and competence in the world external to the family. Church leaders are encouraged to minimize the time they and other members spend in their callings and to safeguard family time from constant intruding influences.

Sometimes the focus of Church activities on the two-parent family belies the truth that not all members are in a stage of life where they can rear children with a committed mate. Those who never married, are divorced, are widowed, are single parents, or are married to non-Latter-day Saints are always in LDS WARDS and, ideally, they are included in the community of Saints. Priesthood quorums and the Relief Society are charged both to integrate such families into ward activities as well as provide for special needs. And, when members of any family become involved in such activities as drug abuse, divorce, or family violence, the Church intends that leaders provide a network of emotional support, prevention, and rehabilitation.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Bahr, Howard M.; S. J. Condie; and K. L. Goodman. Life in Large Families. Washington, D.C., 1982.
- Brinkerhoff, Merlin B., and Marlene MacKie. "Religious Sources of Gender Traditionalism." In The Religion and Family Connection: Social Science Perspectives, ed. D. Thomas, pp. 232-57. Provo, Utah, 1988.
- Heaton, Tim B. "The Demography of Utah Mormons." In Utah in Demographic Perspective, ed. T. Martin; T. Heaton; and S. Bahr, pp. 181-93. Salt Lake City, 1986.
- . "Four C's of the Mormon Family: Chastity, Conjugal-ity, Children, and Chauvinism." In The Religion and Family Connection: Social Science Perspectives, ed. D. Thomas, pp. 107-24. Provo, Utah, 1988.
- , and S. Calkins. "Family Size and Contraceptive Use among Mormons: 1965-75." Review of Religious Research 25, no. 2 (1983):103-14.
- , and Kristen L. Goodman. "Religions and Family Formation." Review of Religious Research 26, no. 4 (1985):343-59.
- Lec, Harold B. Strengthening the Home. Salt Lake City, 1973, (pamphlet).
- Mason, Jerry. "Family Economics." In Utah in Demographic Perspective, ed. T. Martin; T. Heaton; and S. Bahr, pp. 91-109. Salt Lake City, Utah, 1986.
- Smith, W. E. "Mormon Sex Standards on College Campuses, or Deal Us Out of the Sexual Revolution." Dialogue 10, no. 2 (1976):76-81.

Thomas, Darwin L. "Future Prospects for Religion and Family Studies: the Mormon Case." In The Religion and Family Connection: Social Science Perspectives, ed. D. Thomas, pp. 357–82. Provo, Utah, 1988.

———. "Family in the Mormon Experience." In Families and Religions: Conflict and Change in Modern Society, ed. W. D'Antonio, and J. Aldous, pp. 267–88. Beverly Hills, Calif., 1983.

———, and Marie Cornwall. "The Religion and Family Interface: Theoretical and Empirical Explorations." Paper presented at the XII World Congress of Sociology, International Sociological Assn., Madrid, Spain, July, 13, 1990.

Wuthnow, R. "Religious Commitment and Conservatism: In Search of an Elusive Relationship." In Religion in Sociological Perspective, ed. C. Glock. Belmont, Calif., 1973.

DARWIN L. THOMAS

FAMILY HISTORY CENTERS

Family History Centers are extensions of the FAMILY HISTORY LIBRARY in Salt Lake City, Utah. The first center opened in 1964. Originally, they were known as branch genealogical libraries. When the Genealogical Library became the Family History Library in 1987, the branches became Family History Centers. In 1990 there were over 1,500 such centers in 49 countries.

Located most often in LDS stake centers, Family History Centers are open to the public, generally twenty hours per week, staffed entirely by volunteers. There is no charge, but space is often limited. At a Family History Center, researchers have access to the Family History Library's microfilm copies of family history records, which can be lent to the center for a specified time. Many local centers also have significant collections of genealogical source material on microfiche, and some have their own collections of research materials specific to their area.

At a Family History Center, patrons find many of the same research tools that are available at the central Family History Library, including microfiche editions of the Family History Library Catalog, the INTERNATIONAL GENEALOGICAL INDEX™ (IGI), the FAMILY REGISTRY™, and a series of instructional handouts that describe how to do research in the United States and many other countries. Many centers also provide access to FAMILYSEARCH™, a computer system that organizes data and simplifies the task of family history research.

Addresses of worldwide Family History Centers are available from the Family History Library.

V. BEN BLOXHAM

FAMILY HISTORY, GENEALOGY

The terms "family history" and "genealogy" are synonymous for Latter-day Saints. Dallin H. Oaks, a member of the Quorum of Twelve Apostles, said, "The process by which we identify our place in our eternal family is called genealogy. Genealogy is family history" (Regional Representatives Seminar, April 3, 1987). To emphasize the family nature of genealogy, the First Presidency in 1987 changed the name of the Genealogical Department to the Family History Department and the name of the Genealogical Library to the FAMILY HISTORY LIBRARY.

LDS interest in family history is based on the fundamental doctrines of SALVATION, AGENCY, and EXALTATION. It is the plan of God that all persons shall have the opportunity to hear the gospel of Jesus Christ and receive the saving ordinances, regardless of when they lived on earth. If they do not hear the gospel preached through the Lord's authorized servants in this life, they will hear it in the SPIRIT WORLD after death. Latter-day Saints identify their ancestors and arrange for baptism and other ordinances to be performed by proxy—that is, with a living person standing in for the deceased person—in a temple. This is not an optional function of LDS belief; it is, rather, a commandment of God. As Elder Oaks further explained, "We are not hobbyists in genealogy work. We do family history work in order to provide the ordinances of salvation for the living and the dead" (1989, p. 6; see also SALVATION OF THE DEAD).

Members of the Church were instructed in the sacred role of family history work in 1894, when President Wilford WOODRUFF declared, "We want the Latter day Saints from this time to trace their genealogies as far as they can, and to be sealed to their fathers and mothers. Have children sealed to their parents, and run this chain through as far as you can get it. . . . This is the will of the Lord to this people" (p. 543; see also SEALING). The purpose of family history, President Woodruff explained, is to obtain names and statistical data so that TEMPLE ORDINANCES can be performed in

Thomas, Darwin L. "Future Prospects for Religion and Family Studies: the Mormon Case." In The Religion and Family Connection: Social Science Perspectives, ed. D. Thomas, pp. 357–82. Provo, Utah, 1988.

———. "Family in the Mormon Experience." In Families and Religions: Conflict and Change in Modern Society, ed. W. D'Antonio, and J. Aldous, pp. 267–88. Beverly Hills, Calif., 1983.

———, and Marie Cornwall. "The Religion and Family Interface: Theoretical and Empirical Explorations." Paper presented at the XII World Congress of Sociology, International Sociological Assn., Madrid, Spain, July, 13, 1990.

Wuthnow, R. "Religious Commitment and Conservatism: In Search of an Elusive Relationship." In Religion in Sociological Perspective, ed. C. Glock. Belmont, Calif., 1973.

DARWIN L. THOMAS

FAMILY HISTORY CENTERS

Family History Centers are extensions of the FAMILY HISTORY LIBRARY in Salt Lake City, Utah. The first center opened in 1964. Originally, they were known as branch genealogical libraries. When the Genealogical Library became the Family History Library in 1987, the branches became Family History Centers. In 1990 there were over 1,500 such centers in 49 countries.

Located most often in LDS stake centers, Family History Centers are open to the public, generally twenty hours per week, staffed entirely by volunteers. There is no charge, but space is often limited. At a Family History Center, researchers have access to the Family History Library's microfilm copies of family history records, which can be lent to the center for a specified time. Many local centers also have significant collections of genealogical source material on microfiche, and some have their own collections of research materials specific to their area.

At a Family History Center, patrons find many of the same research tools that are available at the central Family History Library, including microfiche editions of the Family History Library Catalog, the INTERNATIONAL GENEALOGICAL INDEX™ (IGI), the FAMILY REGISTRY™, and a series of instructional handouts that describe how to do research in the United States and many other countries. Many centers also provide access to FAMILYSEARCH™, a computer system that organizes data and simplifies the task of family history research.

Addresses of worldwide Family History Centers are available from the Family History Library.

V. BEN BLOXHAM

FAMILY HISTORY, GENEALOGY

The terms "family history" and "genealogy" are synonymous for Latter-day Saints. Dallin H. Oaks, a member of the Quorum of Twelve Apostles, said, "The process by which we identify our place in our eternal family is called genealogy. Genealogy is family history" (Regional Representatives Seminar, April 3, 1987). To emphasize the family nature of genealogy, the First Presidency in 1987 changed the name of the Genealogical Department to the Family History Department and the name of the Genealogical Library to the FAMILY HISTORY LIBRARY.

LDS interest in family history is based on the fundamental doctrines of SALVATION, AGENCY, and EXALTATION. It is the plan of God that all persons shall have the opportunity to hear the gospel of Jesus Christ and receive the saving ordinances, regardless of when they lived on earth. If they do not hear the gospel preached through the Lord's authorized servants in this life, they will hear it in the SPIRIT WORLD after death. Latter-day Saints identify their ancestors and arrange for baptism and other ordinances to be performed by proxy—that is, with a living person standing in for the deceased person—in a temple. This is not an optional function of LDS belief; it is, rather, a commandment of God. As Elder Oaks further explained, "We are not hobbyists in genealogy work. We do family history work in order to provide the ordinances of salvation for the living and the dead" (1989, p. 6; see also SALVATION OF THE DEAD).

Members of the Church were instructed in the sacred role of family history work in 1894, when President Wilford WOODRUFF declared, "We want the Latter day Saints from this time to trace their genealogies as far as they can, and to be sealed to their fathers and mothers. Have children sealed to their parents, and run this chain through as far as you can get it. . . . This is the will of the Lord to this people" (p. 543; see also SEALING). The purpose of family history, President Woodruff explained, is to obtain names and statistical data so that TEMPLE ORDINANCES can be performed in

Thomas, Darwin L. "Future Prospects for Religion and Family Studies: the Mormon Case." In The Religion and Family Connection: Social Science Perspectives, ed. D. Thomas, pp. 357–82. Provo, Utah, 1988.

———. "Family in the Mormon Experience." In Families and Religions: Conflict and Change in Modern Society, ed. W. D'Antonio, and J. Aldous, pp. 267–88. Beverly Hills, Calif., 1983.

———, and Marie Cornwall. "The Religion and Family Interface: Theoretical and Empirical Explorations." Paper presented at the XII World Congress of Sociology, International Sociological Assn., Madrid, Spain, July, 13, 1990.

Wuthnow, R. "Religious Commitment and Conservatism: In Search of an Elusive Relationship." In Religion in Sociological Perspective, ed. C. Glock. Belmont, Calif., 1973.

DARWIN L. THOMAS

FAMILY HISTORY CENTERS

Family History Centers are extensions of the FAMILY HISTORY LIBRARY in Salt Lake City, Utah. The first center opened in 1964. Originally, they were known as branch genealogical libraries. When the Genealogical Library became the Family History Library in 1987, the branches became Family History Centers. In 1990 there were over 1,500 such centers in 49 countries.

Located most often in LDS stake centers, Family History Centers are open to the public, generally twenty hours per week, staffed entirely by volunteers. There is no charge, but space is often limited. At a Family History Center, researchers have access to the Family History Library's microfilm copies of family history records, which can be lent to the center for a specified time. Many local centers also have significant collections of genealogical source material on microfiche, and some have their own collections of research materials specific to their area.

At a Family History Center, patrons find many of the same research tools that are available at the central Family History Library, including microfiche editions of the Family History Library Catalog, the INTERNATIONAL GENEALOGICAL INDEX™ (IGI), the FAMILY REGISTRY™, and a series of instructional handouts that describe how to do research in the United States and many other countries. Many centers also provide access to FAMILYSEARCH™, a computer system that organizes data and simplifies the task of family history research.

Addresses of worldwide Family History Centers are available from the Family History Library.

V. BEN BLOXHAM

FAMILY HISTORY, GENEALOGY

The terms "family history" and "genealogy" are synonymous for Latter-day Saints. Dallin H. Oaks, a member of the Quorum of Twelve Apostles, said, "The process by which we identify our place in our eternal family is called genealogy. Genealogy is family history" (Regional Representatives Seminar, April 3, 1987). To emphasize the family nature of genealogy, the First Presidency in 1987 changed the name of the Genealogical Department to the Family History Department and the name of the Genealogical Library to the FAMILY HISTORY LIBRARY.

LDS interest in family history is based on the fundamental doctrines of SALVATION, AGENCY, and EXALTATION. It is the plan of God that all persons shall have the opportunity to hear the gospel of Jesus Christ and receive the saving ordinances, regardless of when they lived on earth. If they do not hear the gospel preached through the Lord's authorized servants in this life, they will hear it in the SPIRIT WORLD after death. Latter-day Saints identify their ancestors and arrange for baptism and other ordinances to be performed by proxy—that is, with a living person standing in for the deceased person—in a temple. This is not an optional function of LDS belief; it is, rather, a commandment of God. As Elder Oaks further explained, "We are not hobbyists in genealogy work. We do family history work in order to provide the ordinances of salvation for the living and the dead" (1989, p. 6; see also SALVATION OF THE DEAD).

Members of the Church were instructed in the sacred role of family history work in 1894, when President Wilford WOODRUFF declared, "We want the Latter day Saints from this time to trace their genealogies as far as they can, and to be sealed to their fathers and mothers. Have children sealed to their parents, and run this chain through as far as you can get it. . . . This is the will of the Lord to this people" (p. 543; see also SEALING). The purpose of family history, President Woodruff explained, is to obtain names and statistical data so that TEMPLE ORDINANCES can be performed in behalf of deceased ancestors who did not have the opportunity to hear the restored gospel during mortal life. He taught on another occasion that “we have got to enter into those temples and redeem our dead—not only the dead of our own family, but the dead of the whole spirit world” (JD 21:192).

Fundamental to the doctrine of the salvation of the dead is the exercise of agency. When persons die, their spirits continue living in the post-mortal spirit world and are capable of making choices. Latter-day Saints perform BAPTISMS FOR THE DEAD so that those who live as spirits may choose whether or not to accept baptism in the true Church of Jesus Christ in the spirit world. If they do not accept the baptism, it is of no effect. The same is true of the other saving ordinances that members perform in the temples in behalf of the dead.

Love is the central motivation for family history work. Identifying ancestors and performing saving ordinances for them are an expression of love. It is the spirit and power of Elijah, who gave the keys of this power to Joseph Smith in the Kirtland Temple in 1836, to “turn the hearts of the fathers to the children, and the children to the fathers” (D&C 110:15; see also Mal. 4:5–6; JS—H 1:39; D&C 2:2). The desire to discover one’s ancestors and complete temple ordinances for them is sometimes referred to as the Spirit of Elijah (see ELIJAH, SPIRIT OF). President Joseph Fielding SMITH associated family history and temple work with love for mankind, declaring that laboring on behalf of the dead is “a work that enlarges the soul of man, broadens his views regarding the welfare of his fellowman, and plants in his heart a love for all the children of our Heavenly Father. There is no work equal to that in the temple for the dead in teaching a man to love his neighbor as himself” (p. 3).

In response to President Woodruff’s teaching regarding family history responsibilities, Latter-day Saints organized the GENEALOGICAL SOCIETY OF UTAH in Salt Lake City in 1894. Over the years, the society, through the Family History Library and its worldwide network of more than 1,500 family history centers, has become a major support of the Church’s efforts to provide instruction in family history through research information (first in book form and later in microfilm and then in compact disc) and through making available a skilled staff to assist researchers to identify their ancestors.

Interest in family history is not limited to Latter-day Saints. There has been remarkable growth of interest in genealogy and family history dating from about 1836, when Elijah committed the keys to the Prophet Joseph Smith. In many countries, thousands of people have joined genealogical and historical societies, and more than half of the patrons of the Family History Library and its associated Family History Centers are members of other faiths. The Church has joined in cooperative efforts with hundreds of genealogical and family history societies, archives, and libraries in identifying family history records and preserving the information found in them (see WORLD CONFERENCES ON RECORDS).

Modern technology has played a significant role in the advance of family history in the second half of the twentieth century. The Church has developed an extensive worldwide microfilming program. Since 1938, it has done microfilming in more than a hundred countries, and has accumulated more than 1.3 billion exposures with approximately 8 billion names. Microfilm records have provided the basis for dramatic expansion of family history research. They have enabled rapid growth of the collections of the Family History Library and has made possible both the distribution of family history information to the Church’s Family History Centers and the NAME EXTRACTION PROGRAMS that have allowed the extensive automation of family history information contained in the FAMILYSEARCH® computer system.

As a result, doing family history research has never been easier than it now is. Through FamilySearch, patrons of the Family History Library and Family History Centers have access to the 147 million names in the INTERNATIONAL GENEALOGICAL INDEX™ and the growing 9.67-million-name lineage-linked Ancestral File™. As name extraction programs convert information from paper records (such as the 1880 U.S. Federal Census and the 1881 British Census) and as people from around the world contribute information to the Ancestral File, the computer resources associated with FamilySearch will make identifying one’s ancestors a much simpler task.

The Church teaches that members’ family history duties are threefold. First, they must develop a desire to help redeem the dead. As members gain a testimony of the principle of salvation of the dead, they feel a personal responsibility to help. They also care about those in the spirit world who are waiting for temple ordinances to be performed.

Second, they must determine what to do. Every Latter-day Saint can do something to further the family history work. Dallin H. Oaks counseled, "Our effort is not to compel everyone to do everything, but to encourage everyone to do something" (1989, p. 6). Accordingly, Latter-day Saints are encouraged to participate in activities relating to the salvation of the dead. What and how much a member does depend on personal circumstances and abilities, what one's family may have already accomplished, individual guidance from the Spirit, and direction from Church leaders. Activities include identifying one's ancestors and performing temple ordinances for them, participating in family organizations, serving in the Name Extraction Program, keeping a personal journal, preparing personal and family histories, and accepting Church callings in temple and family history service. Identifying ancestors of the first few generations usually does not require extensive library research or sophisticated research tools. The beginning of family history research usually involves checking known family records (see JOURNALS), consulting family members either orally or by letter, and looking at readily available public records, such as birth certificates. Identifying ancestors beyond the first few generations usually requires the resources of libraries, computer tools available with systems like FamilySearch, and expert help. Family organizations enable members to pool information and resources to further the family history work. The Name Extraction Program enables persons to convert information found on microfilm copies of paper records—parish registers, census rolls, and so forth—to a computer format to become part of FamilySearch files or to supply needed names to the temples.

Third, members must continue to serve. The work of the Family History Department will not be complete until every name is recorded and every ordinance performed.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Come unto Christ Through Temple Ordinances and Covenants*, 2nd ed. Salt Lake City, 1988.
- Greenwood, Val D. The Researcher's Guide to American Genealogy, 2nd ed. Baltimore, 1990.

Instructions for Priesthood Leaders on Temple and Family History Work. Salt Lake City, 1990.

Oaks, Dallin H. "Family History: 'In Wisdom and Order'." Ensign 19 (June 1989):6–8.

Smith, Joseph Fielding. Church News (Oct. 24, 1970):3.

Woodruff, Wilford. Deseret Weekly (April 21, 1894):543.

DAVID H. PRATT

---

FAMILY HISTORY LIBRARY

The Family History Library in Salt Lake City, supports the LDS practice of family history research that identifies forebears and makes possible the temple work leading to SALVATION OF THE DEAD. It provides services and resources that enable Latter-day Saints and others to identify and learn more about their ancestors. It is also a developmental center where new resources and programs are perfected and made available to Church members worldwide through FAMILY HISTORY CENTERS.

On November 13, 1894, the GENEALOGICAL SOCIETY OF UTAH was organized. One of its purposes was the "establishing and maintaining [of] a genealogical library for the use and benefit of its members and others" (Minutes of the Genealogical Society of Utah, Nov. 13, 1894). From its modest beginnings in an upstairs room of the Church Historian's Office with about 300 books, the collection has grown and its facilities have changed commensurately, so that in 1990 the library occupied a modern five-story building which housed 200,000 books, 300,000 microfiches, and more than 1.6 million rolls of microfilm, making it the largest library of its kind in the world.

During its first fifty years, the library was open only to dues-paying members. In 1944 it was incorporated under the administration of the Church, and its resources were made available to the public. In 1989, the library had 813,000 visitors. Genealogists, historians, demographers, geneticists, and other researchers from many countries travel to Salt Lake City to utilize the wealth of information available in the library. They are attracted by its collections, the expertise of the staff, and the nearly 700 classes offered annually in research sources and methodology.

The biggest attraction is the microfilm collection. Since 1938, the Genealogical Society of Utah and its successor organization, the LDS Church gain a testimony of the principle of salvation of the dead, they feel a personal responsibility to help. They also care about those in the spirit world who are waiting for temple ordinances to be performed.

Second, they must determine what to do. Every Latter-day Saint can do something to further the family history work. Dallin H. Oaks counseled, "Our effort is not to compel everyone to do everything, but to encourage everyone to do something" (1989, p. 6). Accordingly, Latter-day Saints are encouraged to participate in activities relating to the salvation of the dead. What and how much a member does depend on personal circumstances and abilities, what one's family may have already accomplished, individual guidance from the Spirit, and direction from Church leaders. Activities include identifying one's ancestors and performing temple ordinances for them, participating in family organizations, serving in the Name Extraction Program, keeping a personal journal, preparing personal and family histories, and accepting Church callings in temple and family history service. Identifying ancestors of the first few generations usually does not require extensive library research or sophisticated research tools. The beginning of family history research usually involves checking known family records (see JOURNALS), consulting family members either orally or by letter, and looking at readily available public records, such as birth certificates. Identifying ancestors beyond the first few generations usually requires the resources of libraries, computer tools available with systems like FamilySearch, and expert help. Family organizations enable members to pool information and resources to further the family history work. The Name Extraction Program enables persons to convert information found on microfilm copies of paper records—parish registers, census rolls, and so forth—to a computer format to become part of FamilySearch files or to supply needed names to the temples.

Third, members must continue to serve. The work of the Family History Department will not be complete until every name is recorded and every ordinance performed.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Come unto Christ Through Temple Ordinances and Covenants*, 2nd ed. Salt Lake City, 1988.
- Greenwood, Val D. The Researcher's Guide to American Genealogy, 2nd ed. Baltimore, 1990.

Instructions for Priesthood Leaders on Temple and Family History Work. Salt Lake City, 1990.

Oaks, Dallin H. "Family History: 'In Wisdom and Order'." Ensign 19 (June 1989):6-8.

Smith, Joseph Fielding. Church News (Oct. 24, 1970):3.

Woodruff, Wilford. Deseret Weekly (April 21, 1894):543.

DAVID H. PRATT

---

FAMILY HISTORY LIBRARY

The Family History Library in Salt Lake City, supports the LDS practice of family history research that identifies forebears and makes possible the temple work leading to SALVATION OF THE DEAD. It provides services and resources that enable Latter-day Saints and others to identify and learn more about their ancestors. It is also a developmental center where new resources and programs are perfected and made available to Church members worldwide through FAMILY HISTORY CENTERS.

On November 13, 1894, the GENEALOGICAL SOCIETY OF UTAH was organized. One of its purposes was the "establishing and maintaining [of] a genealogical library for the use and benefit of its members and others" (Minutes of the Genealogical Society of Utah, Nov. 13, 1894). From its modest beginnings in an upstairs room of the Church Historian's Office with about 300 books, the collection has grown and its facilities have changed commensurately, so that in 1990 the library occupied a modern five-story building which housed 200,000 books, 300,000 microfiches, and more than 1.6 million rolls of microfilm, making it the largest library of its kind in the world.

During its first fifty years, the library was open only to dues-paying members. In 1944 it was incorporated under the administration of the Church, and its resources were made available to the public. In 1989, the library had 813,000 visitors. Genealogists, historians, demographers, geneticists, and other researchers from many countries travel to Salt Lake City to utilize the wealth of information available in the library. They are attracted by its collections, the expertise of the staff, and the nearly 700 classes offered annually in research sources and methodology.

The biggest attraction is the microfilm collection. Since 1938, the Genealogical Society of Utah and its successor organization, the LDS Church

Family History Department, have been preserving copies of original documents on microfilm. In 1990 the library sponsored approximately 200 microfilming projects in various parts of the world. These efforts have added microfilmed copies of more than 5 million manuscripts to the library's collections. The microfilms show the original records of births, marriages, and deaths; military records; censuses; wills; notaries' records; cemetery records; and other kinds of documents that describe people and families from the past. Other resources include compiled genealogies, local histories, old maps, city directories, and name indexes. The largest collections are from countries in North America and Europe, with substantial collections from Latin America. The library has also acquired written and oral materials from Asia, Africa, Australia, and the islands of the Pacific Ocean.

Computer terminals give patrons access to the FAMILYSEARCH™ system, which guides researchers into the Family History Library Catalog, the INTERNATIONAL GENEALOGICAL INDEX™ (IGI), and ANCESTRAL FILE®. These computer files of family history information are stored on compact discs. The compact-disc edition of the catalog provides access to books and microfilms that contain original records, reference sources, and family histories and genealogies.

Library visitors can also learn how to use PERSONAL ANCESTRAL FILE®. This computer program enables families to manage family history records on their personal computers. In addition, users can easily exchange genealogical information with others who have compatible computer programs or with Ancestral File.

Another resource is the FAMILY REGISTRY™. This service helps both individuals and family organizations to share with others information they may have about deceased individuals and to ask for information about an ancestor who is currently the subject of their research. Library visitors have access to microfiche records listing the ancestors and family organizations that have been registered. This file eases coordination of research with others who may share the same family lines.

At the Family History Library professional genealogical reference consultants, library attendants, and hundreds of volunteers serve library visitors. They are trained to guide patrons to sources identifying their families and to help them interpret the information in these books and documents. Staff members are multilingual and can read handwriting from many countries and time periods.

The Church's Family History Library (c.1988) houses the world's largest collection of genealogical records. More than 2,000 people come here daily to research their family histories. The five-floor library opened in Salt Lake City in 1985. Photographer: Marty Mayo.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Cerny, Johni, and Wendy Elliott, eds., The Library: A Guide to the LDS Family History Library. Salt Lake City, 1988.

Mayfield, David M. "The Genealogical Library of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints." Library Trends 32 (Summer 1983):111-27.

RAYMOND S. WRIGHT, III

---

FAMILY HOME EVENING

Family home evening is a weekly observance of Latter-day Saints for spiritual training and social activity, usually held on Monday evenings. In 1915, the FIRST PRESIDENCY of the Church wrote: "We advise and urge the inauguration of a 'Home Evening' throughout the Church, at which time fathers and mothers may gather their boys and girls about them in the home and teach them the word of the Lord. . . . This 'Home Evening' should be devoted to prayer, singing hymns, songs, instrumental music, scripture-reading, family topics and specific instruction on the principles of the Gospel, and on the ethical problems of life, as well as the duties and obligation of children to parents, the home, the Church, society, and the Nation"

Family History Department, have been preserving copies of original documents on microfilm. In 1990 the library sponsored approximately 200 microfilming projects in various parts of the world. These efforts have added microfilmed copies of more than 5 million manuscripts to the library's collections. The microfilms show the original records of births, marriages, and deaths; military records; censuses; wills; notaries' records; cemetery records; and other kinds of documents that describe people and families from the past. Other resources include compiled genealogies, local histories, old maps, city directories, and name indexes. The largest collections are from countries in North America and Europe, with substantial collections from Latin America. The library has also acquired written and oral materials from Asia, Africa, Australia, and the islands of the Pacific Ocean.

Computer terminals give patrons access to the FAMILYSEARCH™ system, which guides researchers into the Family History Library Catalog, the INTERNATIONAL GENEALOGICAL INDEX™ (IGI), and ANCESTRAL FILE®. These computer files of family history information are stored on compact discs. The compact-disc edition of the catalog provides access to books and microfilms that contain original records, reference sources, and family histories and genealogies.

Library visitors can also learn how to use PERSONAL ANCESTRAL FILE®. This computer program enables families to manage family history records on their personal computers. In addition, users can easily exchange genealogical information with others who have compatible computer programs or with Ancestral File.

Another resource is the FAMILY REGISTRY™. This service helps both individuals and family organizations to share with others information they may have about deceased individuals and to ask for information about an ancestor who is currently the subject of their research. Library visitors have access to microfiche records listing the ancestors and family organizations that have been registered. This file eases coordination of research with others who may share the same family lines.

At the Family History Library professional genealogical reference consultants, library attendants, and hundreds of volunteers serve library visitors. They are trained to guide patrons to sources identifying their families and to help them interpret the information in these books and documents. Staff members are multilingual and can read handwriting from many countries and time periods.

The Church's Family History Library (c.1988) houses the world's largest collection of genealogical records. More than 2,000 people come here daily to research their family histories. The five-floor library opened in Salt Lake City in 1985. Photographer: Marty Mayo.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Cerny, Johni, and Wendy Elliott, eds., The Library: A Guide to the LDS Family History Library. Salt Lake City, 1988.
- Mayfield, David M. "The Genealogical Library of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints." Library Trends 32 (Summer 1983):111-27.

RAYMOND S. WRIGHT, III

---

FAMILY HOME EVENING

Family home evening is a weekly observance of Latter-day Saints for spiritual training and social activity, usually held on Monday evenings. In 1915, the FIRST PRESIDENCY of the Church wrote: "We advise and urge the inauguration of a 'Home Evening' throughout the Church, at which time fathers and mothers may gather their boys and girls about them in the home and teach them the word of the Lord. . . . This 'Home Evening' should be devoted to prayer, singing hymns, songs, instrumental music, scripture-reading, family topics and specific instruction on the principles of the Gospel, and on the ethical problems of life, as well as the duties and obligation of children to parents, the home, the Church, society, and the Nation"

An LDS family meets together for family home evening (Tokyo, 1986). Latter-day prophets encourage families to gather in their homes weekly to discuss and experience the gospel and build family unity. The Church provides a resource manual that families can use to prepare discussions. Courtesy Floyd Holdman.

(IE 18 [June 1915]:733). To assist parents in their STEWARDSHIP, the first home evening manual was prepared that same year and distributed to members of the Church.

This emphasis on home gospel instruction echoes the call of prophets throughout the ages who have instructed parents to teach their children diligently of love and to bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord (Deut. 6:5–7; Eph. 6:4). The Prophet Joseph SMITH received revelations that admonish parents to “bring up your children in light and truth” (D&C 93:40) and to teach them “to understand the doctrine of repentance, faith in Christ the Son of the living God, and of baptism and the gift of the Holy Ghost” (D&C 68:25) and “to pray, and to walk uprightly before the Lord” (D&C 68:28). President Brigham YOUNG urged parents to take time to “call their families together . . . and teach them the principles of the gospel” (MFP 2:288).

Between 1915 and the 1960s, a large proportion of Church membership shifted from a family-centered rural population to an urban one. With that change came renewed emphasis from the First Presidency on the importance of the family. In general conference, April 1964, President David O. MCKAY reminded parents that “No other success can compensate for failure in the home” (IE 67 [June 1964]:445). In 1965, the weekly family home evening program was more fully implemented, and a lesson manual was given each family to aid parents in teaching their children. Families were encouraged to participate in a home night once each week, which could consist of scripture reading, singing, and activities suited to the ages of the children. In 1966, STAKES were urged to set aside a regular night for family home evening and to avoid scheduling Church activities on that night. In 1970, Monday evening was designated as family home evening, Churchwide, with no competing ecclesiastical functions to be held. Revised home evening manuals, with suggested weekly lessons and activities, were provided from 1965 to 1984.

In 1985, a Family Home Evening Resource Book, designed to be used for a decade, was introduced. It provided broader resource material for gospel instruction and additional ideas for family activities, and was designed to be adapted for use by single adults, couples, single-parent families, and families with children of all ages. In 1987, a family home evening video supplement was made available. Nineteen video vignettes were included, treating important educational and moral topics.

A typical family home evening might proceed as follows: A parent or older child, whose turn it is to plan the lesson, selects a lesson, such as “Heavenly Father Provided Us a Savior,” from the Family Home Evening Resource Book. After an opening hymn and prayer, the lesson material, adapted to the needs and interest level of the family members, is presented. After the lesson the family discusses family schedules, family business, and special concerns. A family activity follows that helps strengthen bonds of love among family members. This could be any activity that the family enjoys doing together, such as playing a game, helping the needy, gardening, or attending a cultural event. Following the activity, the family kneels together in family prayer and then often enjoys refreshments. Single adults or others who live alone may join as a group to participate in family home evening activities, or they may observe appropriately modified weekly activities individually. Home evening activities allow for considerable variation in the desires and needs of each family or group. Always, however, the emphasis is spiritual enrichment.

Family home evening is intended to be a regular event that helps parents teach, protect, and prepare children for responsible living. Family councils, personal parent interviews, scripture reading, serving or playing together, family prayer, and meaningful family home evenings all help to build quality family relationships. Families who do these things are promised that "love at home and obedience to parents will increase, and faith will develop in the hearts of the youth of Israel, and they will gain power to combat [the] evil influences and temptations" that beset them (Family Home Evening Manual, 1965, p. v).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Johnson, Sherrie. "Using the New Family Home Evening Resource Book." Ensign 14 (Jan. 1984):6-9.
- Kimball, Spencer W. "Home: The Place to Save Society." Ensign 5 (Jan. 1975):3-10.
- Lec, Harold B. "Priesthood Correlation and the Home Evening." IE 67 (Dec. 1964):1077-81.
- . "The Home Evening." IE 70 (Jan. 1967):22-23.
- Lynn, Wayne B. "Better Home Evenings." Ensign 20 (June 1990):22-25.

JAMES P. MITCHELL
TERRI TANNER MITCHELL

FAMILY ORGANIZATIONS

Latter-day Saints think of families with respect to both this life and the next. They strive to organize family groups at the individual family level and in extended family relationships and organizations.

Family organizations provide social and familial support, historical awareness, instruction, and genealogical information necessary to bind generations together by temple ordinances (see FAMILY HISTORY; TEMPLE ORDINANCES).

From the early days of the Church, LDS families have regularly established family organizations, held reunions, and worked to make strong family identity. In 1978 the Church asked all families to organize themselves at three levels: immediate families, grandparent families, and ancestral families.

The immediate family consists of husband and wife, and begins when they are married. Later, if a couple is blessed with children, the size and concerns of this unit grow. When the children marry and have children of their own, the grandparent organization is initiated. Beyond that, each family is ideally involved in an ancestral organization, which consists of all the descendants of an earlier common progenitors couple.

The immediate family holds FAMILY HOME EVENINGS and family councils, encourages and assists in missionary work, family preparedness, family history, temple work, and teaching the gospel, and provides cultural and social activities for its members. The grandparent organization is involved in similar activities, but is also concerned who do these things are promised that "love at home and obedience to parents will increase, and faith will develop in the hearts of the youth of Israel, and they will gain power to combat [the] evil influences and temptations" that beset them (Family Home Evening Manual, 1965, p. v).

Platt and Wilma Ward (front row), with their children (second row), their children's spouses (third row), grandchildren and great-grandchildren (1988). Family reunions draw the extended family together to support and sustain family traditions and values. Courtesy Craig Law.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Johnson, Sherrie. "Using the New Family Home Evening Resource Book." Ensign 14 (Jan. 1984):6-9.
- Kimball, Spencer W. "Home: The Place to Save Society." Ensign 5 (Jan. 1975):3-10.
- Lec, Harold B. "Priesthood Correlation and the Home Evening." IE 67 (Dec. 1964):1077-81.
- . "The Home Evening." IE 70 (Jan. 1967):22-23.
- Lynn, Wayne B. "Better Home Evenings." Ensign 20 (June 1990):22-25.

JAMES P. MITCHELL
TERRI TANNER MITCHELL

FAMILY ORGANIZATIONS

Latter-day Saints think of families with respect to both this life and the next. They strive to organize family groups at the individual family level and in extended family relationships and organizations.

Family organizations provide social and familial support, historical awareness, instruction, and genealogical information necessary to bind generations together by temple ordinances (see FAMILY HISTORY; TEMPLE ORDINANCES).

From the early days of the Church, LDS families have regularly established family organizations, held reunions, and worked to make strong family identity. In 1978 the Church asked all families to organize themselves at three levels: immediate families, grandparent families, and ancestral families.

The immediate family consists of husband and wife, and begins when they are married. Later, if a couple is blessed with children, the size and concerns of this unit grow. When the children marry and have children of their own, the grandparent organization is initiated. Beyond that, each family is ideally involved in an ancestral organization, which consists of all the descendants of an earlier common progenitors couple.

The immediate family holds FAMILY HOME EVENINGS and family councils, encourages and assists in missionary work, family preparedness, family history, temple work, and teaching the gospel, and provides cultural and social activities for its members. The grandparent organization is involved in similar activities, but is also concerned with family reunions, which include the grandparents' children and grandchildren. The purpose of the ancestral organization is to coordinate genealogical activity on common lines. Such organizations frequently raise money for family history research, publish family histories, and generally direct the activities of the larger family.

Platt and Wilma Ward (front row), with their children (second row), their children's spouses (third row), grandchildren and great-grandchildren (1988). Family reunions draw the extended family together to support and sustain family traditions and values. Courtesy Craig Law.

Many families use the ancestral organization as a repository of photographs, journals, family histories, and other materials that might be used by family members or general researchers as they prepare their own histories. Some families occasionally have an ancestral family reunion, but more usually they have representatives who meet to coordinate family history and genealogical activities. Some may be organized as nonprofit corporations or trusts that may be recognized as charitable organizations if their purposes are limited to religious activities.

The benefits of a family organization can be significant. One benefit is that involvement with family organizations increases one's sense of identity and heritage. For example, in a recent survey of university students who were LDS, Catholic, Protestant, or of no particular religion, the number of ancestors' names and origins known by the LDS students was significantly higher than for the other groups.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Benson, Ezra Taft. "Worthy of All Acceptation." Ensign 8 (Nov. 1978):30-32.
- Jacobson, Cardell K.; Phillip R. Kunz; and Melanie W. Conlin. "Extended Family Ties: Genealogical Researchers." In S. Bahr and E. Peterson, eds., Aging and the Family. Lexington, Mass., 1989.

PHILLIP R. KUNZ

FAMILY PRAYER

It is considered a duty and privilege by Latter-day Saint parents to lead their children in regular family prayer. The scriptural basis for this practice is seen in the Book of Mormon. As the Savior was teaching the Nephites, he said, "Pray in your families unto the Father, always in my name, that your wives and your children may be blessed" (3 Ne. 18:21). President Ezra Taft BENSON has said, "Family prayer is . . . the means to acknowledge appreciation for blessings and to humbly recognize dependence on Almighty God for strength, sustenance, and support" (CR [April 1984] p. 7).

A Guatemalan family kneels in their home for family prayer (1989). Latter-day prophets encourage families to draw closer to God and to each other through daily family prayer (see 3 Ne. 18:21). Courtesy Craig Dimond.

Ideal circumstances find the LDS family kneeling in prayer twice daily, morning and evening. As family members grow older and engage in an increasing variety of activities, finding a convenient time for all members to be present for group prayer is often difficult. Some never meet the challenge, whereas others hold prayer and SCRIPTURE STUDY early in the morning when they are less likely to be interrupted. Another common time for group prayer is just before breakfast and dinner.

Family prayer affords the opportunity for both children and parents to lead in prayer, one at one family prayer and another at the next. Most prayers thank the Lord for blessings received (see THANKSGIVING) and on behalf of the family petition for desired blessings. Challenges facing family members and friends are often placed before Father in Heaven in united supplication. Specific concerns for the well-being of each family member can be enumerated. Sometimes the family fasts with family reunions, which include the grandparents' children and grandchildren. The purpose of the ancestral organization is to coordinate genealogical activity on common lines. Such organizations frequently raise money for family history research, publish family histories, and generally direct the activities of the larger family.

Many families use the ancestral organization as a repository of photographs, journals, family histories, and other materials that might be used by family members or general researchers as they prepare their own histories. Some families occasionally have an ancestral family reunion, but more usually they have representatives who meet to coordinate family history and genealogical activities. Some may be organized as nonprofit corporations or trusts that may be recognized as charitable organizations if their purposes are limited to religious activities.

The benefits of a family organization can be significant. One benefit is that involvement with family organizations increases one's sense of identity and heritage. For example, in a recent survey of university students who were LDS, Catholic, Protestant, or of no particular religion, the number of ancestors' names and origins known by the LDS students was significantly higher than for the other groups.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Benson, Ezra Taft. "Worthy of All Acceptation." Ensign 8 (Nov. 1978):30-32.
- Jacobson, Cardell K.; Phillip R. Kunz; and Melanie W. Conlin. "Extended Family Ties: Genealogical Researchers." In S. Bahr and E. Peterson, eds., Aging and the Family. Lexington, Mass., 1989.

PHILLIP R. KUNZ

FAMILY PRAYER

It is considered a duty and privilege by Latter-day Saint parents to lead their children in regular family prayer. The scriptural basis for this practice is seen in the Book of Mormon. As the Savior was teaching the Nephites, he said, "Pray in your families unto the Father, always in my name, that your wives and your children may be blessed" (3 Ne. 18:21). President Ezra Taft BENSON has said, "Family prayer is . . . the means to acknowledge appreciation for blessings and to humbly recognize dependence on Almighty God for strength, sustenance, and support" (CR [April 1984] p. 7).

A Guatemalan family kneels in their home for family prayer (1989). Latter-day prophets encourage families to draw closer to God and to each other through daily family prayer (see 3 Ne. 18:21). Courtesy Craig Dimond.

Ideal circumstances find the LDS family kneeling in prayer twice daily, morning and evening. As family members grow older and engage in an increasing variety of activities, finding a convenient time for all members to be present for group prayer is often difficult. Some never meet the challenge, whereas others hold prayer and SCRIPTURE STUDY early in the morning when they are less likely to be interrupted. Another common time for group prayer is just before breakfast and dinner.

Family prayer affords the opportunity for both children and parents to lead in prayer, one at one family prayer and another at the next. Most prayers thank the Lord for blessings received (see THANKSGIVING) and on behalf of the family petition for desired blessings. Challenges facing family members and friends are often placed before Father in Heaven in united supplication. Specific concerns for the well-being of each family member can be enumerated. Sometimes the family fasts and joins in family prayer on behalf of family members, friends, neighbors, or others who are ill or in special need of the Lord's blessings.

Family prayer allows individuals and families to focus attention and affection on God. It builds faith and loyalty within the family and epitomizes Christ-centered family WORSHIP. Family prayer affords the opportunity to offer praise to God and gratitude for daily blessings as well as for the Savior's mission, example, and love. Church members believe that the benefits of daily family prayer include family UNITY, strength in the Lord, freeing the heart of evil inclinations, tender moments of divine communication, and an understanding of God's relationship to his children.

Many members who live alone participate in a family prayer experience by choosing to pray aloud for family members and others. They may also join family home evening groups or other friends and associates for regular group prayer.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Groberg, John H. "The Power of Family Prayer." Ensign 12 (May 1982):50-52.
- Hinckley, Gordon B. "The Force of Family Prayer." IE 66 (June 1963):528-32.
- Kimball, Spencer W. "Family Prayer." In Prayer, pp. 84-87. Salt Lake City, 1977.
- Perry, L. Tom. "Our Father Which Art in Heaven." Ensign 13 (Nov. 1983):11-13.

BRUCE L. OLSEN

FAMILY REGISTRY™

Family Registry is a service provided by the Family History Department of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints to help people who are doing research on the same family lines to cooperate with one another and share results, thus avoiding unnecessary duplication of effort and expense. This service provides a way for individuals and family organizations to ask for information about an ancestor who is currently the subject of their research or to share with others information they may have about deceased individuals.

The Family Registry has an alphabetical list of the surnames being researched, together with the names and addresses of persons who have registered. The index is updated periodically and published on microfiche. The January 1990 edition contained 287,000 names. Those who register are expected to respond to others who wish to coordinate research efforts. The Family Registry index can be personally searched by anyone at the FAMILY HISTORY LIBRARY in Salt Lake City, Utah, or at more than 1,500 FAMILY HISTORY CENTERS or other libraries that participate in offering this service. There is no charge for registration or for searching the index.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- "A New Tool for Genealogists." Church News (Dec. 18, 1983):12.
- Nichols, Elizabeth L. "The Family Registry." Genealogy Digest 16 (Summer 1985):26-31.

JOHN C. JARMAN

FAMILYSEARCH™

FamilySearch™ is an automated computer system that simplifies the task of family history research. The FamilySearch system includes search-and-retrieval programs designed to work on personal computers and computer files of family history information. FamilySearch was developed by the Family History Department of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

The information in each file is distributed on compact discs, each capable of storing the equivalent of about 320,000 pages of text. They are read by computers equipped with a compact-disc player and with the FamilySearch software.

FamilySearch is available to the public at the FAMILY HISTORY LIBRARY in Salt Lake City and over time will be distributed to FAMILY HISTORY CENTERS affiliated with the library.

FamilySearch's primary purpose is to help members of the Church identify their ancestors and complete TEMPLE ORDINANCES for them. The power of the program, together with the large files available to it, make FamilySearch a valuable research tool.

When the system was introduced in 1990, it included the following files:

1. The Family History Library Catalog, which has been available for many years in a microfiche edition in the Family History Library in Salt Lake City and in family history centers, describes the collection of the library and provides help in locating and joins in family prayer on behalf of family members, friends, neighbors, or others who are ill or in special need of the Lord's blessings.

Family prayer allows individuals and families to focus attention and affection on God. It builds faith and loyalty within the family and epitomizes Christ-centered family WORSHIP. Family prayer affords the opportunity to offer praise to God and gratitude for daily blessings as well as for the Savior's mission, example, and love. Church members believe that the benefits of daily family prayer include family UNITY, strength in the Lord, freeing the heart of evil inclinations, tender moments of divine communication, and an understanding of God's relationship to his children.

Many members who live alone participate in a family prayer experience by choosing to pray aloud for family members and others. They may also join family home evening groups or other friends and associates for regular group prayer.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Groberg, John H. "The Power of Family Prayer." Ensign 12 (May 1982):50-52.
- Hinckley, Gordon B. "The Force of Family Prayer." IE 66 (June 1963):528-32.
- Kimball, Spencer W. "Family Prayer." In Prayer, pp. 84-87. Salt Lake City, 1977.
- Perry, L. Tom. "Our Father Which Art in Heaven." Ensign 13 (Nov. 1983):11-13.

BRUCE L. OLSEN

FAMILY REGISTRY™

Family Registry is a service provided by the Family History Department of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints to help people who are doing research on the same family lines to cooperate with one another and share results, thus avoiding unnecessary duplication of effort and expense. This service provides a way for individuals and family organizations to ask for information about an ancestor who is currently the subject of their research or to share with others information they may have about deceased individuals.

The Family Registry has an alphabetical list of the surnames being researched, together with the names and addresses of persons who have registered. The index is updated periodically and published on microfiche. The January 1990 edition contained 287,000 names. Those who register are expected to respond to others who wish to coordinate research efforts. The Family Registry index can be personally searched by anyone at the FAMILY HISTORY LIBRARY in Salt Lake City, Utah, or at more than 1,500 FAMILY HISTORY CENTERS or other libraries that participate in offering this service. There is no charge for registration or for searching the index.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- "A New Tool for Genealogists." Church News (Dec. 18, 1983):12.
- Nichols, Elizabeth L. "The Family Registry." Genealogy Digest 16 (Summer 1985):26-31.

JOHN C. JARMAN

FAMILYSEARCH™

FamilySearch™ is an automated computer system that simplifies the task of family history research. The FamilySearch system includes search-and-retrieval programs designed to work on personal computers and computer files of family history information. FamilySearch was developed by the Family History Department of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

The information in each file is distributed on compact discs, each capable of storing the equivalent of about 320,000 pages of text. They are read by computers equipped with a compact-disc player and with the FamilySearch software.

FamilySearch is available to the public at the FAMILY HISTORY LIBRARY in Salt Lake City and over time will be distributed to FAMILY HISTORY CENTERS affiliated with the library.

FamilySearch's primary purpose is to help members of the Church identify their ancestors and complete TEMPLE ORDINANCES for them. The power of the program, together with the large files available to it, make FamilySearch a valuable research tool.

When the system was introduced in 1990, it included the following files:

1. The Family History Library Catalog, which has been available for many years in a microfiche edition in the Family History Library in Salt Lake City and in family history centers, describes the collection of the library and provides help in locating and joins in family prayer on behalf of family members, friends, neighbors, or others who are ill or in special need of the Lord's blessings.

Family prayer allows individuals and families to focus attention and affection on God. It builds faith and loyalty within the family and epitomizes Christ-centered family WORSHIP. Family prayer affords the opportunity to offer praise to God and gratitude for daily blessings as well as for the Savior's mission, example, and love. Church members believe that the benefits of daily family prayer include family UNITY, strength in the Lord, freeing the heart of evil inclinations, tender moments of divine communication, and an understanding of God's relationship to his children.

Many members who live alone participate in a family prayer experience by choosing to pray aloud for family members and others. They may also join family home evening groups or other friends and associates for regular group prayer.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Groberg, John H. "The Power of Family Prayer." Ensign 12 (May 1982):50-52.
- Hinckley, Gordon B. "The Force of Family Prayer." IE 66 (June 1963):528-32.
- Kimball, Spencer W. "Family Prayer." In Prayer, pp. 84-87. Salt Lake City, 1977.
- Perry, L. Tom. "Our Father Which Art in Heaven." Ensign 13 (Nov. 1983):11-13.

BRUCE L. OLSEN

FAMILY REGISTRY™

Family Registry is a service provided by the Family History Department of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints to help people who are doing research on the same family lines to cooperate with one another and share results, thus avoiding unnecessary duplication of effort and expense. This service provides a way for individuals and family organizations to ask for information about an ancestor who is currently the subject of their research or to share with others information they may have about deceased individuals.

The Family Registry has an alphabetical list of the surnames being researched, together with the names and addresses of persons who have registered. The index is updated periodically and published on microfiche. The January 1990 edition contained 287,000 names. Those who register are expected to respond to others who wish to coordinate research efforts. The Family Registry index can be personally searched by anyone at the FAMILY HISTORY LIBRARY in Salt Lake City, Utah, or at more than 1,500 FAMILY HISTORY CENTERS or other libraries that participate in offering this service. There is no charge for registration or for searching the index.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- "A New Tool for Genealogists." Church News (Dec. 18, 1983):12.
- Nichols, Elizabeth L. "The Family Registry." Genealogy Digest 16 (Summer 1985):26-31.

JOHN C. JARMAN

FAMILYSEARCH™

FamilySearch™ is an automated computer system that simplifies the task of family history research. The FamilySearch system includes search-and-retrieval programs designed to work on personal computers and computer files of family history information. FamilySearch was developed by the Family History Department of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

The information in each file is distributed on compact discs, each capable of storing the equivalent of about 320,000 pages of text. They are read by computers equipped with a compact-disc player and with the FamilySearch software.

FamilySearch is available to the public at the FAMILY HISTORY LIBRARY in Salt Lake City and over time will be distributed to FAMILY HISTORY CENTERS affiliated with the library.

FamilySearch's primary purpose is to help members of the Church identify their ancestors and complete TEMPLE ORDINANCES for them. The power of the program, together with the large files available to it, make FamilySearch a valuable research tool.

When the system was introduced in 1990, it included the following files:

1. The Family History Library Catalog, which has been available for many years in a microfiche edition in the Family History Library in Salt Lake City and in family history centers, describes the collection of the library and provides help in locating ing the book, microfilm, or other research tool a patron may need. The automated edition simplifies use of the catalog.

2. The INTERNATIONAL GENEALOGICAL INDEX (IGI), which has been available for many years in a microfiche edition. The automated edition gives information about deceased persons for whom temple ordinances have been performed. It also lists birth, christening, and marriage dates and temple ordinance information.

3. Ancestral File™ is a family-linked file containing genealogies contributed by members of the Church since 1979. Many other genealogies have also been included, and additional contributions of family history information are welcomed.

Other files will be added to FamilySearch as they become available.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

"FamilySearch™ Software," Attachment, First Presidency Letter, April 2, 1990.

Mayfield, David M., and A. Gregory Brown. "FamilySearch." Genealogical Computing 10 (1990):1.

L. REYNOLDS CAHOON

---

FARMS MANAGEMENT CORPORATION

Sec: Business: Church Participation in Business

---

FAR WEST, MISSOURI

Far West, Caldwell County, Missouri, was settled in 1836 as Latter-day Saints sought a home and refuge from persecution in Clay County. It became the county seat, with an estimated 3,000 to 5,000 inhabitants. Far West is important to LDS history because that is where the following happened: (1) a temple site was dedicated and the cornerstones laid; (2) seven revelations now published in the Doctrine and Covenants (113, 114, 115, 117, 118, 119, 120) were received; (3) Joseph F. SMITH, sixth president of the Church, was born (November 13, 1838); (4) the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles officially left from for a mission to Great Britain; (5) a stake of Zion was organized; (6) Joseph SMITH and his family lived (beginning March 14, 1838); (7) and for a short time the headquarters of the Church was located.

Among the notable revelations in the Doctrine and Covenants received at Far West and vicinity are: the proper NAME OF THE CHURCH was given (115:4); four new members of the Twelve Apostles were named and the Twelve as a quorum were called to serve an overseas mission (118:1-6); and the law of TITHING was explained (119, 120).

Joseph Smith and other Church leaders were arrested in Far West on October 31, 1838, by the state militia and taken to Independence, then to Richmond, and from there to Liberty, Missouri, where they were imprisoned. While the Prophet was in prison during the winter and spring of 1838-1839, the Latter-day Saints were driven from Far West and other Missouri sites under Governor Boggs's EXTERMINATION ORDER and relocated in Illinois.

The Church still has interest in Far West and has erected appropriate monuments at the temple site.

[See also History of the Church: c. 1831-1844; Missions of the Twelve to British Isles; Missouri.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Cannon, Donald Q., and Lyndon W. Cook. Far West Record. Salt Lake City, 1983.

Gentry, Leland H. "A History of the Latter-day Saints in Northern Missouri from 1836 to 1839." Ph.D. diss., Brigham Young University, 1965.

LARRY C. PORTER

---

FASTING

The practice of periodic abstinence from food and drink for devotional purposes has been documented since early times. The Bible and the Book of Mormon attest to fasting in its several forms, public or private, institutionalized or spontaneous. In a revelation to the Prophet Joseph Smith, the Lord commanded the Latter-day Saints to "continue in prayer and fasting from this time forth" (D&C 88:76).

Church members fast together generally on the first Sunday of each month, in preparation for FAST AND TESTIMONY MEETING. They usually abstain from food and drink for two consecutive meals, attend Church services, and donate a FAST OFFERING for the care of the needy. Additionally, an individual, family, or congregation may fast for a specific cause such as one who is sick or otherwise ing the book, microfilm, or other research tool a patron may need. The automated edition simplifies use of the catalog.

2. The INTERNATIONAL GENEALOGICAL INDEX (IGI), which has been available for many years in a microfiche edition. The automated edition gives information about deceased persons for whom temple ordinances have been performed. It also lists birth, christening, and marriage dates and temple ordinance information.

3. Ancestral File™ is a family-linked file containing genealogies contributed by members of the Church since 1979. Many other genealogies have also been included, and additional contributions of family history information are welcomed.

Other files will be added to FamilySearch as they become available.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

"FamilySearch™ Software," Attachment, First Presidency Letter, April 2, 1990.

Mayfield, David M., and A. Gregory Brown. "FamilySearch." Genealogical Computing 10 (1990):1.

L. REYNOLDS CAHOON

---

FARMS MANAGEMENT CORPORATION

Sec: Business: Church Participation in Business

---

FAR WEST, MISSOURI

Far West, Caldwell County, Missouri, was settled in 1836 as Latter-day Saints sought a home and refuge from persecution in Clay County. It became the county seat, with an estimated 3,000 to 5,000 inhabitants. Far West is important to LDS history because that is where the following happened: (1) a temple site was dedicated and the cornerstones laid; (2) seven revelations now published in the Doctrine and Covenants (113, 114, 115, 117, 118, 119, 120) were received; (3) Joseph F. SMITH, sixth president of the Church, was born (November 13, 1838); (4) the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles officially left from for a mission to Great Britain; (5) a stake of Zion was organized; (6) Joseph SMITH and his family lived (beginning March 14, 1838); (7) and for a short time the headquarters of the Church was located.

Among the notable revelations in the Doctrine and Covenants received at Far West and vicinity are: the proper NAME OF THE CHURCH was given (115:4); four new members of the Twelve Apostles were named and the Twelve as a quorum were called to serve an overseas mission (118:1-6); and the law of TITHING was explained (119, 120).

Joseph Smith and other Church leaders were arrested in Far West on October 31, 1838, by the state militia and taken to Independence, then to Richmond, and from there to Liberty, Missouri, where they were imprisoned. While the Prophet was in prison during the winter and spring of 1838-1839, the Latter-day Saints were driven from Far West and other Missouri sites under Governor Boggs's EXTERMINATION ORDER and relocated in Illinois.

The Church still has interest in Far West and has erected appropriate monuments at the temple site.

[See also History of the Church: c. 1831-1844; Missions of the Twelve to British Isles; Missouri.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Cannon, Donald Q., and Lyndon W. Cook. Far West Record. Salt Lake City, 1983.

Gentry, Leland H. "A History of the Latter-day Saints in Northern Missouri from 1836 to 1839." Ph.D. diss., Brigham Young University, 1965.

LARRY C. PORTER

---

FASTING

The practice of periodic abstinence from food and drink for devotional purposes has been documented since early times. The Bible and the Book of Mormon attest to fasting in its several forms, public or private, institutionalized or spontaneous. In a revelation to the Prophet Joseph Smith, the Lord commanded the Latter-day Saints to "continue in prayer and fasting from this time forth" (D&C 88:76).

Church members fast together generally on the first Sunday of each month, in preparation for FAST AND TESTIMONY MEETING. They usually abstain from food and drink for two consecutive meals, attend Church services, and donate a FAST OFFERING for the care of the needy. Additionally, an individual, family, or congregation may fast for a specific cause such as one who is sick or otherwise ing the book, microfilm, or other research tool a patron may need. The automated edition simplifies use of the catalog.

2. The INTERNATIONAL GENEALOGICAL INDEX (IGI), which has been available for many years in a microfiche edition. The automated edition gives information about deceased persons for whom temple ordinances have been performed. It also lists birth, christening, and marriage dates and temple ordinance information.

3. Ancestral File™ is a family-linked file containing genealogies contributed by members of the Church since 1979. Many other genealogies have also been included, and additional contributions of family history information are welcomed.

Other files will be added to FamilySearch as they become available.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

"FamilySearch™ Software," Attachment, First Presidency Letter, April 2, 1990.

Mayfield, David M., and A. Gregory Brown. "FamilySearch." Genealogical Computing 10 (1990):1.

L. REYNOLDS CAHOON

---

FARMS MANAGEMENT CORPORATION

Sec: Business: Church Participation in Business

---

FAR WEST, MISSOURI

Far West, Caldwell County, Missouri, was settled in 1836 as Latter-day Saints sought a home and refuge from persecution in Clay County. It became the county seat, with an estimated 3,000 to 5,000 inhabitants. Far West is important to LDS history because that is where the following happened: (1) a temple site was dedicated and the cornerstones laid; (2) seven revelations now published in the Doctrine and Covenants (113, 114, 115, 117, 118, 119, 120) were received; (3) Joseph F. SMITH, sixth president of the Church, was born (November 13, 1838); (4) the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles officially left from for a mission to Great Britain; (5) a stake of Zion was organized; (6) Joseph SMITH and his family lived (beginning March 14, 1838); (7) and for a short time the headquarters of the Church was located.

Among the notable revelations in the Doctrine and Covenants received at Far West and vicinity are: the proper NAME OF THE CHURCH was given (115:4); four new members of the Twelve Apostles were named and the Twelve as a quorum were called to serve an overseas mission (118:1-6); and the law of TITHING was explained (119, 120).

Joseph Smith and other Church leaders were arrested in Far West on October 31, 1838, by the state militia and taken to Independence, then to Richmond, and from there to Liberty, Missouri, where they were imprisoned. While the Prophet was in prison during the winter and spring of 1838-1839, the Latter-day Saints were driven from Far West and other Missouri sites under Governor Boggs's EXTERMINATION ORDER and relocated in Illinois.

The Church still has interest in Far West and has erected appropriate monuments at the temple site.

[See also History of the Church: c. 1831-1844; Missions of the Twelve to British Isles; Missouri.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Cannon, Donald Q., and Lyndon W. Cook. Far West Record. Salt Lake City, 1983.

Gentry, Leland H. "A History of the Latter-day Saints in Northern Missouri from 1836 to 1839." Ph.D. diss., Brigham Young University, 1965.

LARRY C. PORTER

---

FASTING

The practice of periodic abstinence from food and drink for devotional purposes has been documented since early times. The Bible and the Book of Mormon attest to fasting in its several forms, public or private, institutionalized or spontaneous. In a revelation to the Prophet Joseph Smith, the Lord commanded the Latter-day Saints to "continue in prayer and fasting from this time forth" (D&C 88:76).

Church members fast together generally on the first Sunday of each month, in preparation for FAST AND TESTIMONY MEETING. They usually abstain from food and drink for two consecutive meals, attend Church services, and donate a FAST OFFERING for the care of the needy. Additionally, an individual, family, or congregation may fast for a specific cause such as one who is sick or otherwise afflicted. An individual may desire the intimate communication with deity engendered by a prayerful fast when preparing for a difficult task or significant change in the circumstances of life. A person may fast when seeking spiritual enlightenment or guidance in decision making, strength to overcome weakness or endure trial, comfort in sorrow, or help at other times of special need.

General principles of the fast include prayerful preparation concerning the subject of the fast and frequent contemplation and meditation throughout to achieve oneness in purpose and spirit with the Lord; a quiet, humble, and cheerful conduct befitting one seeking blessing or spiritual enlightenment (Matt. 6:16–18; cf. 3 Ne. 13:16–18); and a prayer of gratitude and thanksgiving when ending the fast.

Rich blessings are promised to those who fast and help the needy (Isa. 58:8–9). Self-control, communion with the Lord, and spiritual strength and power accompany compliance with the law. The spirit of the fast is aptly represented in latter-day scripture: “Verily, this is fasting and prayer, or in other words, rejoicing and prayer” (D&C 59:14).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Rieks, Stephen D. “Fasting in the Bible and Book of Mormon.” In Book of Mormon: The Keystone Scripture, ed. Paul R. Cheesman. Provo, Utah, 1988, pp. 127–36.
- Smith, Joseph F. Gospel Doctrine, 10th ed. Salt Lake City, 1956.

DAWN M. HILLS

FAST OFFERINGS

The first Sunday of each month is designated as a Fast Sunday, and Latter-day Saints are asked to fast for twenty-four hours and donate at least the value of the meals not eaten as fast offerings. Fast offerings are cash or in-kind donations given to the BISHOP to help the needy following a short period of fasting.

The concept of fast offerings appears as early as the time of Isaiah, who encouraged people to fast and “deal thy bread to the hungry” and to “bring the poor that are cast out to thy house” when fasting (Isa. 58:7). Fasting was also practiced in the postapostolic Church, in which several early Christian fathers advised that “to help the poor with the food saved, fasting is a good work” (Kittel, Vol. 4, p. 934). By the mid-second century some churches held twice-weekly voluntary fasts, and leaders collected funds for the poor following weekly worship services (Swenson, pp. 373–78).

The Prophet Joseph SMITH, instituted the practice of collecting fast offerings for the poor in KIRTLAND, OHIO (JD 12:115), where Church members had begun gathering in the early 1830s. Later, on May 17, 1845, in Nauvoo, Illinois, the QUORUM OF THE TWELVE APOSTLES sent a general letter to the Church defining “the principles of fasts,” stating:

Let this be an example to all saints, and there will never be any lack for bread: When the poor are starving, let those who have, fast one day and give what they otherwise would have eaten to the bishops for the poor, and everyone will abound for a long time; and this is one great and important principle of fasts approved of the Lord. And so long as the saints will all live to this principle with glad hearts and cheerful countenances they will always have an abundance [HC 7:413].

During the exodus from Nauvoo the pioneers seldom observed a common fast day but often were asked to give to the poor. It appears that the giving of regular fast day donations was reinstituted in the Salt Lake Valley during the drought of 1855–1856. Of that period George A. Smith wrote:

In all these times of scarcity . . . measures were taken to supply those who were unable to furnish themselves. A fast day was proclaimed for the church on the first Thursday of each month, and the food saved in that way distributed among the poor; and thousands of persons, who had abundance of bread put their families on rations, in order to save the same for those who could not otherwise obtain it [CHC 4:109–110].

Since that time, the observation of a monthly fast of two meals on the first Sunday of each month and the donation of fast offerings have become regular practices in the Church. In the pioneer economy most donations—both tithing and fast offerings—were of food or livestock, and members took donations to the local tithing office or BISHOP’S STOREHOUSE. The goods were then distributed to the needy. Today, fast offerings usually consist of cash. Aaronic Priesthood DEACONS often serve as agents of the bishop in collecting fast donations.

WARDS and STAKES are encouraged to be self-reliant in caring for their poor. Bishops are instructed to seek out those in need and to provide them with life’s essentials. Surplus fast offering funds in stakes are forwarded to Church headquarafflicted. An individual may desire the intimate communication with deity engendered by a prayerful fast when preparing for a difficult task or significant change in the circumstances of life. A person may fast when seeking spiritual enlightenment or guidance in decision making, strength to overcome weakness or endure trial, comfort in sorrow, or help at other times of special need.

General principles of the fast include prayerful preparation concerning the subject of the fast and frequent contemplation and meditation throughout to achieve oneness in purpose and spirit with the Lord; a quiet, humble, and cheerful conduct befitting one seeking blessing or spiritual enlightenment (Matt. 6:16–18; cf. 3 Ne. 13:16–18); and a prayer of gratitude and thanksgiving when ending the fast.

Rich blessings are promised to those who fast and help the needy (Isa. 58:8–9). Self-control, communion with the Lord, and spiritual strength and power accompany compliance with the law. The spirit of the fast is aptly represented in latter-day scripture: “Verily, this is fasting and prayer, or in other words, rejoicing and prayer” (D&C 59:14).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Rieks, Stephen D. “Fasting in the Bible and Book of Mormon.” In Book of Mormon: The Keystone Scripture, ed. Paul R. Cheesman. Provo, Utah, 1988, pp. 127–36.
- Smith, Joseph F. Gospel Doctrine, 10th ed. Salt Lake City, 1956.

DAWN M. HILLS

FAST OFFERINGS

The first Sunday of each month is designated as a Fast Sunday, and Latter-day Saints are asked to fast for twenty-four hours and donate at least the value of the meals not eaten as fast offerings. Fast offerings are cash or in-kind donations given to the BISHOP to help the needy following a short period of fasting.

The concept of fast offerings appears as early as the time of Isaiah, who encouraged people to fast and “deal thy bread to the hungry” and to “bring the poor that are cast out to thy house” when fasting (Isa. 58:7). Fasting was also practiced in the postapostolic Church, in which several early Christian fathers advised that “to help the poor with the food saved, fasting is a good work” (Kittel, Vol. 4, p. 934). By the mid-second century some churches held twice-weekly voluntary fasts, and leaders collected funds for the poor following weekly worship services (Swenson, pp. 373–78).

The Prophet Joseph SMITH, instituted the practice of collecting fast offerings for the poor in KIRTLAND, OHIO (JD 12:115), where Church members had begun gathering in the early 1830s. Later, on May 17, 1845, in Nauvoo, Illinois, the QUORUM OF THE TWELVE APOSTLES sent a general letter to the Church defining “the principles of fasts,” stating:

Let this be an example to all saints, and there will never be any lack for bread: When the poor are starving, let those who have, fast one day and give what they otherwise would have eaten to the bishops for the poor, and everyone will abound for a long time; and this is one great and important principle of fasts approved of the Lord. And so long as the saints will all live to this principle with glad hearts and cheerful countenances they will always have an abundance [HC 7:413].

During the exodus from Nauvoo the pioneers seldom observed a common fast day but often were asked to give to the poor. It appears that the giving of regular fast day donations was reinstituted in the Salt Lake Valley during the drought of 1855–1856. Of that period George A. Smith wrote:

In all these times of scarcity . . . measures were taken to supply those who were unable to furnish themselves. A fast day was proclaimed for the church on the first Thursday of each month, and the food saved in that way distributed among the poor; and thousands of persons, who had abundance of bread put their families on rations, in order to save the same for those who could not otherwise obtain it [CHC 4:109–110].

Since that time, the observation of a monthly fast of two meals on the first Sunday of each month and the donation of fast offerings have become regular practices in the Church. In the pioneer economy most donations—both tithing and fast offerings—were of food or livestock, and members took donations to the local tithing office or BISHOP’S STOREHOUSE. The goods were then distributed to the needy. Today, fast offerings usually consist of cash. Aaronic Priesthood DEACONS often serve as agents of the bishop in collecting fast donations.

WARDS and STAKES are encouraged to be self-reliant in caring for their poor. Bishops are instructed to seek out those in need and to provide them with life’s essentials. Surplus fast offering funds in stakes are forwarded to Church headquarters, where they are redistributed to areas of greatest need.

Special fasts are occasionally proclaimed by the FIRST PRESIDENCY when urgent needs arise. Such was the case on May 15, 1845, when "enough was contributed to supply the wants of the poor until harvest" (HC 7:411). In 1985, Church members observed two special fast days and donated $10,465,000 to hunger relief and community development projects in Africa, South America, and elsewhere (see HUMANITARIAN SERVICES).

Historically, fast offerings have seldom been sufficient to provide for all the welfare needs of the Church, and shortages have been met from general Church funds. The counsel of Church President Spencer W. KIMBALL remains in effect: "I think that when we are affluent, as many of us are, that we ought to be very, very generous. . . . I think we should . . . give, instead of the amount we saved by our two meals of fasting, perhaps much, much more—ten times more where we are in a position to do it" (CR [Apr. 1974], p. 184).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Kittel, Gerhard, ed. THEOLOGICAL DICTIONARY OF THE NEW TESTAMENT, Vol. 4, pp. 924–35. Grand Rapids, Mich., 1964.
Swenson, Russel B. "Welfare Work in the Early Christian Church." Instructor 82 (Aug. 1947):373–78.

ISAAC C. FERGUSON

---

FAST AND TESTIMONY MEETING

An LDS fast and testimony meeting is normally held on the first Sunday of each month, where faithful members of the Church are invited to bear a verbal witness of their feelings of the gospel of Jesus Christ. The meeting usually follows a fast by the members, usually from at least two consecutive meals and from liquids also. The fast is officially broken by partaking of the SACRAMENT of the Lord's Supper. In modern scripture, fasting is described as "rejoicing and prayer" (D&C 59:14), which implies that it is more than just abstaining from food. That tone of devotion is also the feeling associated with contributing fast offerings, giving the equivalent cost of the meals, or more, to be used for the poor. The fast and testimony meeting becomes the locus of spiritual sensitivity and contrition, of concentration on the things of God.

A member of the BISHOPRIC or branch presidency conducts the fast and testimony meeting. Usually it begins with an opening hymn and an invocation or prayer, which may be followed by the naming and blessing of newborn children and the confirming of recently baptized members of the Church.

After the sacrament has been administered, the person conducting the meeting expresses his testimony, then invites the members of the congregation of all ages to do likewise. Sometimes they stand in place to speak; at other times they come forward to the pulpit. Each one arises, as prompted by the Spirit, and addresses the congregation extemporaneously. In this setting feelings of profoundest concern are often expressed: appreciation of good family relationships, thanksgiving for the blessings of the gospel, recognition of significant changes in lives, and the fruits of obedience. A faith-promoting experience may be shared or a witness given regarding a point of doctrine or attesting divine inspiration. Such expressions are usually concluded by a prayer or petition in the name of the Lord. The experience is at once enlightening, sobering, and moving. Tears are not uncommon amid acknowledgment of weaknesses and efforts to improve, along with gratitude for divine goodness.

Rarely are such individual expressions longer than five or six minutes. Thus a number of children and adults generally participate in a meeting, which usually lasts a little more than an hour, but may be extended or shortened at the discretion of the presiding officer. In any given year a majority of the membership of the Church, young and old, will have participated in this earnest form of witness on fast Sunday.

One precedent for formal testimony bearing was set at the dedication of the KIRTLAND TEMPLE. On that occasion several stood and, under the outpouring of the Spirit, spoke of things they had seen and felt. In Kirtland it was customary to hold fast meetings on Thursday afternoons. Since 1896 these meetings have usually been held on Sunday.

MARY JOLLEY

---

FATE

Fate, as usually interpreted, is the antithesis of self-determination and responsibility. Latter-day Saints reject on scriptural grounds all appeals to ters, where they are redistributed to areas of greatest need.

Special fasts are occasionally proclaimed by the FIRST PRESIDENCY when urgent needs arise. Such was the case on May 15, 1845, when "enough was contributed to supply the wants of the poor until harvest" (HC 7:411). In 1985, Church members observed two special fast days and donated $10,465,000 to hunger relief and community development projects in Africa, South America, and elsewhere (see HUMANITARIAN SERVICES).

Historically, fast offerings have seldom been sufficient to provide for all the welfare needs of the Church, and shortages have been met from general Church funds. The counsel of Church President Spencer W. KIMBALL remains in effect: "I think that when we are affluent, as many of us are, that we ought to be very, very generous. . . . I think we should . . . give, instead of the amount we saved by our two meals of fasting, perhaps much, much more—ten times more where we are in a position to do it" (CR [Apr. 1974], p. 184).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Kittel, Gerhard, ed. THEOLOGICAL DICTIONARY OF THE NEW TESTAMENT, Vol. 4, pp. 924–35. Grand Rapids, Mich., 1964.
Swenson, Russel B. "Welfare Work in the Early Christian Church." Instructor 82 (Aug. 1947):373–78.

ISAAC C. FERGUSON

---

FAST AND TESTIMONY MEETING

An LDS fast and testimony meeting is normally held on the first Sunday of each month, where faithful members of the Church are invited to bear a verbal witness of their feelings of the gospel of Jesus Christ. The meeting usually follows a fast by the members, usually from at least two consecutive meals and from liquids also. The fast is officially broken by partaking of the SACRAMENT of the Lord's Supper. In modern scripture, fasting is described as "rejoicing and prayer" (D&C 59:14), which implies that it is more than just abstaining from food. That tone of devotion is also the feeling associated with contributing fast offerings, giving the equivalent cost of the meals, or more, to be used for the poor. The fast and testimony meeting becomes the locus of spiritual sensitivity and contrition, of concentration on the things of God.

A member of the BISHOPRIC or branch presidency conducts the fast and testimony meeting. Usually it begins with an opening hymn and an invocation or prayer, which may be followed by the naming and blessing of newborn children and the confirming of recently baptized members of the Church.

After the sacrament has been administered, the person conducting the meeting expresses his testimony, then invites the members of the congregation of all ages to do likewise. Sometimes they stand in place to speak; at other times they come forward to the pulpit. Each one arises, as prompted by the Spirit, and addresses the congregation extemporaneously. In this setting feelings of profoundest concern are often expressed: appreciation of good family relationships, thanksgiving for the blessings of the gospel, recognition of significant changes in lives, and the fruits of obedience. A faith-promoting experience may be shared or a witness given regarding a point of doctrine or attesting divine inspiration. Such expressions are usually concluded by a prayer or petition in the name of the Lord. The experience is at once enlightening, sobering, and moving. Tears are not uncommon amid acknowledgment of weaknesses and efforts to improve, along with gratitude for divine goodness.

Rarely are such individual expressions longer than five or six minutes. Thus a number of children and adults generally participate in a meeting, which usually lasts a little more than an hour, but may be extended or shortened at the discretion of the presiding officer. In any given year a majority of the membership of the Church, young and old, will have participated in this earnest form of witness on fast Sunday.

One precedent for formal testimony bearing was set at the dedication of the KIRTLAND TEMPLE. On that occasion several stood and, under the outpouring of the Spirit, spoke of things they had seen and felt. In Kirtland it was customary to hold fast meetings on Thursday afternoons. Since 1896 these meetings have usually been held on Sunday.

MARY JOLLEY

---

FATE

Fate, as usually interpreted, is the antithesis of self-determination and responsibility. Latter-day Saints reject on scriptural grounds all appeals to ters, where they are redistributed to areas of greatest need.

Special fasts are occasionally proclaimed by the FIRST PRESIDENCY when urgent needs arise. Such was the case on May 15, 1845, when "enough was contributed to supply the wants of the poor until harvest" (HC 7:411). In 1985, Church members observed two special fast days and donated $10,465,000 to hunger relief and community development projects in Africa, South America, and elsewhere (see HUMANITARIAN SERVICES).

Historically, fast offerings have seldom been sufficient to provide for all the welfare needs of the Church, and shortages have been met from general Church funds. The counsel of Church President Spencer W. KIMBALL remains in effect: "I think that when we are affluent, as many of us are, that we ought to be very, very generous. . . . I think we should . . . give, instead of the amount we saved by our two meals of fasting, perhaps much, much more—ten times more where we are in a position to do it" (CR [Apr. 1974], p. 184).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Kittel, Gerhard, ed. THEOLOGICAL DICTIONARY OF THE NEW TESTAMENT, Vol. 4, pp. 924–35. Grand Rapids, Mich., 1964.
- Swenson, Russel B. "Welfare Work in the Early Christian Church." Instructor 82 (Aug. 1947):373–78.

ISAAC C. FERGUSON

---

FAST AND TESTIMONY MEETING

An LDS fast and testimony meeting is normally held on the first Sunday of each month, where faithful members of the Church are invited to bear a verbal witness of their feelings of the gospel of Jesus Christ. The meeting usually follows a fast by the members, usually from at least two consecutive meals and from liquids also. The fast is officially broken by partaking of the SACRAMENT of the Lord's Supper. In modern scripture, fasting is described as "rejoicing and prayer" (D&C 59:14), which implies that it is more than just abstaining from food. That tone of devotion is also the feeling associated with contributing fast offerings, giving the equivalent cost of the meals, or more, to be used for the poor. The fast and testimony meeting becomes the locus of spiritual sensitivity and contrition, of concentration on the things of God.

A member of the BISHOPRIC or branch presidency conducts the fast and testimony meeting. Usually it begins with an opening hymn and an invocation or prayer, which may be followed by the naming and blessing of newborn children and the confirming of recently baptized members of the Church.

After the sacrament has been administered, the person conducting the meeting expresses his testimony, then invites the members of the congregation of all ages to do likewise. Sometimes they stand in place to speak; at other times they come forward to the pulpit. Each one arises, as prompted by the Spirit, and addresses the congregation extemporaneously. In this setting feelings of profoundest concern are often expressed: appreciation of good family relationships, thanksgiving for the blessings of the gospel, recognition of significant changes in lives, and the fruits of obedience. A faith-promoting experience may be shared or a witness given regarding a point of doctrine or attesting divine inspiration. Such expressions are usually concluded by a prayer or petition in the name of the Lord. The experience is at once enlightening, sobering, and moving. Tears are not uncommon amid acknowledgment of weaknesses and efforts to improve, along with gratitude for divine goodness.

Rarely are such individual expressions longer than five or six minutes. Thus a number of children and adults generally participate in a meeting, which usually lasts a little more than an hour, but may be extended or shortened at the discretion of the presiding officer. In any given year a majority of the membership of the Church, young and old, will have participated in this earnest form of witness on fast Sunday.

One precedent for formal testimony bearing was set at the dedication of the KIRTLAND TEMPLE. On that occasion several stood and, under the outpouring of the Spirit, spoke of things they had seen and felt. In Kirtland it was customary to hold fast meetings on Thursday afternoons. Since 1896 these meetings have usually been held on Sunday.

MARY JOLLEY

---

FATE

Fate, as usually interpreted, is the antithesis of self-determination and responsibility. Latter-day Saints reject on scriptural grounds all appeals to precausation whether as "fate," "the stars," "blind chance," or even the PREDESTINATION of man by God. Fate in these forms implies a pre-caused outcome of one's life. Instead, man is seen as having innate autonomies and capacities—the gift of AGENCY—that the divine will guarantees all men: "I the Lord God make you free, therefore ye are free indeed: and the law also maketh you free" (D&C 98:8; cf. 2 Ne. 2:25–27; Alma 12:31; Moses 4:3). People are free to choose obedience or disobedience, good or evil, and most other aspects of their lives, and they are accountable for their choices. The belief that all is fated, stifles, discourages, and hinders the progress and growth possible for the children of God. Fate is considered a negative term in the gospel. Even one's own momentous decisions influence one's so-called fate or destiny only as long as the decisions are maintained. The GOSPEL OF JESUS CHRIST opens to all mankind the opportunity to rise above chance fate in this life and choose eternal life with God.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Gospel Principles. Salt Lake City, 1978, pp. 18–21.

GERALD E. JONES

FATHERHOOD

LDS fathers have primary responsibility for providing spiritual and physical support for all other family members (D&C 68:25, 28; 75:28). Giving Christlike service as a husband and father is the most important work a man can perform during mortality. Far more than mere procreation, fatherhood entails the lifelong care of children and loving support of their mother. Elder Theodore Tuttle wrote that for husbands to be effective fathers they should strive to learn and express those attributes they understand Heavenly Father to possess (pp. 66–68).

Latter-day Saints view parenthood as the highest and most sacred calling from God to his children on earth. Mothers and fathers are taught to labor together in faith and love to bring children into the world, to care for them, and to teach them the gospel of Jesus Christ so that they may receive eternal life, thus as parents following the example of their Father and Mother in Heaven (D&C 93:40). Through sacred covenants with God and with each other, men and women establish in this life families that have the potential to endure forever.

Fatherhood is best represented in men who unselfishly cherish and befriend their wives and promote their children's happiness and righteousness. This includes nurturing and expressing love, establishing obedience of their children through firmness and warmth, and teaching the gospel in home and Church settings. Fathers are also encouraged to lead by example (Benson, 1985).

Boys and men are taught the characteristics that exemplify loving and responsible fathers. As part of the Primary organization curricula, songs and lessons teach children to admire their fathers and to associate manhood and fatherhood with the characteristics of Christ. As members of a PRIESTHOOD QUORUM, young men are taught self-reliance, self-mastery, achievement, honor and respect for women, and chastity. Youth activities, Church sermons, and family programs also emphasize the importance of service to and sacrifice for others as part of fatherhood. Adult men are exposed to continuing emphasis on fatherhood. Formal instruction in Melchizedek Priesthood quorums is often aimed at motivating and inspiring men to esteem women as fellow children of the Father of all human beings, to observe strict marital fidelity, to give appropriate emphasis to the needs of children, and to learn skills that promote happy and successful lives for all family members.

Men in leadership positions are admonished not to neglect their family duties. When necessary, precausation whether as "fate," "the stars," "blind chance," or even the PREDESTINATION of man by God. Fate in these forms implies a pre-caused outcome of one's life. Instead, man is seen as having innate autonomies and capacities—the gift of AGENCY—that the divine will guarantees all men: "I the Lord God make you free, therefore ye are free indeed: and the law also maketh you free" (D&C 98:8; cf. 2 Ne. 2:25–27; Alma 12:31; Moses 4:3). People are free to choose obedience or disobedience, good or evil, and most other aspects of their lives, and they are accountable for their choices. The belief that all is fated, stifles, discourages, and hinders the progress and growth possible for the children of God. Fate is considered a negative term in the gospel. Even one's own momentous decisions influence one's so-called fate or destiny only as long as the decisions are maintained. The GOSPEL OF JESUS CHRIST opens to all mankind the opportunity to rise above chance fate in this life and choose eternal life with God.

LDS fathers lead, teach, play with, and counsel their children as part of their indispensable participation in family life. For Latter-day Saints, no calling or role surpasses a father's personal obligation to guide his children in righteousness. Courtesy Floyd Holdman (Tokyo, 1986).

BIBLIOGRAPHY

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Gospel Principles. Salt Lake City, 1978, pp. 18–21.

GERALD E. JONES

FATHERHOOD

LDS fathers have primary responsibility for providing spiritual and physical support for all other family members (D&C 68:25, 28; 75:28). Giving Christlike service as a husband and father is the most important work a man can perform during mortality. Far more than mere procreation, fatherhood entails the lifelong care of children and loving support of their mother. Elder Theodore Tuttle wrote that for husbands to be effective fathers they should strive to learn and express those attributes they understand Heavenly Father to possess (pp. 66–68).

Latter-day Saints view parenthood as the highest and most sacred calling from God to his children on earth. Mothers and fathers are taught to labor together in faith and love to bring children into the world, to care for them, and to teach them the gospel of Jesus Christ so that they may receive eternal life, thus as parents following the example of their Father and Mother in Heaven (D&C 93:40). Through sacred covenants with God and with each other, men and women establish in this life families that have the potential to endure forever.

Fatherhood is best represented in men who unselfishly cherish and befriend their wives and promote their children's happiness and righteousness. This includes nurturing and expressing love, establishing obedience of their children through firmness and warmth, and teaching the gospel in home and Church settings. Fathers are also encouraged to lead by example (Benson, 1985).

Boys and men are taught the characteristics that exemplify loving and responsible fathers. As part of the Primary organization curricula, songs and lessons teach children to admire their fathers and to associate manhood and fatherhood with the characteristics of Christ. As members of a PRIESTHOOD QUORUM, young men are taught self-reliance, self-mastery, achievement, honor and respect for women, and chastity. Youth activities, Church sermons, and family programs also emphasize the importance of service to and sacrifice for others as part of fatherhood. Adult men are exposed to continuing emphasis on fatherhood. Formal instruction in Melchizedek Priesthood quorums is often aimed at motivating and inspiring men to esteem women as fellow children of the Father of all human beings, to observe strict marital fidelity, to give appropriate emphasis to the needs of children, and to learn skills that promote happy and successful lives for all family members.

Men in leadership positions are admonished not to neglect their family duties. When necessary, men may be released from demanding Church positions in order to give appropriate time to their families. Fathers are taught to spend time with their families; to bring the family together in frequent prayer, scripture study, and family meetings; and to teach children to keep God's commandments, to work, and to respect others (Mosiah 4:14–15; 3 Ne. 18:21).

LDS fathers lead, teach, play with, and counsel their children as part of their indispensable participation in family life. For Latter-day Saints, no calling or role surpasses a father's personal obligation to guide his children in righteousness. Courtesy Floyd Holdman (Tokyo, 1986).

[See also Father's Blessings; Lifestyle; Marriage; Men, Roles of; Motherhood.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Benson, Ezra Taft. "Worthy Fathers, Worthy Sons." Ensign 15 (Nov. 1985):35–37.

Father, Consider Your Ways (pamphlet). Salt Lake City, 1978.

Perry, L. Tom. "Train Up a Child." Ensign 18 (Nov. 1988):73–75.

"The Role of the Father in the Home." In Seek to Obtain My Word: Melchizedek Priesthood Personal Study Guide 1989, pp. 199–204. Salt Lake City, 1988.

Tanner, N. Eldon. "Fatherhood." Ensign 7 (June 1977):2–5.

Tuttle, A. Theodore. "The Role of Fathers." Ensign 4 (Jan. 1974):66–68.

A. LYNN SCORESBY

FATHERS' BLESSINGS

Fathers' blessings are given by the power of the MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOOD following the pattern of the ancient PATRIARCHS, such as ADAM, NOAH, ABRAHAM, Isaac, Jacob, LEHI, MOSIAH, ALMA<sup>2</sup>, and MORMON. All gave blessings to their children. Adam's final blessing upon several of his descendants is described in Doctrine and Covenants 107:53–57. So significant was the ORDINANCE on that occasion that "the Lord appeared unto them, and they rose up and blessed Adam" (TPJS, p. 38).

For the earthly blessing to be honored in heaven, it is necessary that a father has been baptized, has received the HOLY GHOST, and bears the Melchizedek Priesthood. Through these ordinances and COVENANTS, the father may claim the powers of heaven to guide his thoughts and ratify his words. To give such a blessing, the father places his hands upon the head of his child, and assures the child by word and spirit that the blessing, spoken by a loving parent, comes with divine approval and INSPIRATION.

The father may give blessings when requested by his wife or children or when he feels their need.

A father, assisted by other men who hold the Melchizedek Priesthood, gives his infant child a name and a father's blessing during a sacrament meeting (c. 1975; see D&C 20:70). Fathers may also bless their children at other times of need. Courtesy Doug Martin.

He does not force a blessing on anyone, for that would conflict both with the law of AGENCY and the spirit of LOVE. There is no ideal frequency for such blessings, only as the needs of the person and the whisperings of the Spirit suggest. A father will find performing this sacred ordinance easier if his relationships with his children are gentle and kind. If there is a conflict between father and child, it may be necessary to reconcile it before attempting the blessing.

A father's blessing is both an ordinance authorized by God and an action that draws father and child together even as it reassures a mother, who sees her husband spiritually minister to their child. It is a symbolic and official godlike act of pure love.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

"Fathers Blessings and Patriarchal Blessings." Melchizedek Priesthood Personal Study Guide, p. 43. Salt Lake City, 1988.

VICTOR L. BROWN, JR.

FAYETTE, NEW YORK

The township of Fayette, New York, is located in Seneca County between Seneca and Cayuga lakes.

men may be released from demanding Church positions in order to give appropriate time to their families. Fathers are taught to spend time with their families; to bring the family together in frequent prayer, scripture study, and family meetings; and to teach children to keep God's commandments, to work, and to respect others (Mosiah 4:14–15; 3 Ne. 18:21).

[See also Father's Blessings; Lifestyle; Marriage; Men, Roles of; Motherhood.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Benson, Ezra Taft. "Worthy Fathers, Worthy Sons." Ensign 15 (Nov. 1985):35–37.

Father, Consider Your Ways (pamphlet). Salt Lake City, 1978.

Perry, L. Tom. "Train Up a Child." Ensign 18 (Nov. 1988):73–75.

"The Role of the Father in the Home." In Seek to Obtain My Word: Melchizedek Priesthood Personal Study Guide 1989, pp. 199–204. Salt Lake City, 1988.

Tanner, N. Eldon. "Fatherhood." Ensign 7 (June 1977):2–5.

Tuttle, A. Theodore. "The Role of Fathers." Ensign 4 (Jan. 1974):66–68.

A. LYNN SCORESBY

FATHERS' BLESSINGS

Fathers' blessings are given by the power of the MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOOD following the pattern of the ancient PATRIARCHS, such as ADAM, NOAH, ABRAHAM, Isaac, Jacob, LEHI, MOSIAH, ALMA<sup>2</sup>, and MORMON. All gave blessings to their children. Adam's final blessing upon several of his descendants is described in Doctrine and Covenants 107:53–57. So significant was the ORDINANCE on that occasion that "the Lord appeared unto them, and they rose up and blessed Adam" (TPJS, p. 38).

For the earthly blessing to be honored in heaven, it is necessary that a father has been baptized, has received the HOLY GHOST, and bears the Melchizedek Priesthood. Through these ordinances and COVENANTS, the father may claim the powers of heaven to guide his thoughts and ratify his words. To give such a blessing, the father places his hands upon the head of his child, and assures the child by word and spirit that the blessing, spoken by a loving parent, comes with divine approval and INSPIRATION.

The father may give blessings when requested by his wife or children or when he feels their need.

A father, assisted by other men who hold the Melchizedek Priesthood, gives his infant child a name and a father's blessing during a sacrament meeting (c. 1975; see D&C 20:70). Fathers may also bless their children at other times of need. Courtesy Doug Martin.

He does not force a blessing on anyone, for that would conflict both with the law of AGENCY and the spirit of LOVE. There is no ideal frequency for such blessings, only as the needs of the person and the whisperings of the Spirit suggest. A father will find performing this sacred ordinance easier if his relationships with his children are gentle and kind. If there is a conflict between father and child, it may be necessary to reconcile it before attempting the blessing.

A father's blessing is both an ordinance authorized by God and an action that draws father and child together even as it reassures a mother, who sees her husband spiritually minister to their child. It is a symbolic and official godlike act of pure love.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

"Fathers Blessings and Patriarchal Blessings." Melchizedek Priesthood Personal Study Guide, p. 43. Salt Lake City, 1988.

VICTOR L. BROWN, JR.

FAYETTE, NEW YORK

The township of Fayette, New York, is located in Seneca County between Seneca and Cayuga lakes.

men may be released from demanding Church positions in order to give appropriate time to their families. Fathers are taught to spend time with their families; to bring the family together in frequent prayer, scripture study, and family meetings; and to teach children to keep God's commandments, to work, and to respect others (Mosiah 4:14–15; 3 Ne. 18:21).

[See also Father's Blessings; Lifestyle; Marriage; Men, Roles of; Motherhood.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Benson, Ezra Taft. "Worthy Fathers, Worthy Sons." Ensign 15 (Nov. 1985):35–37.

Father, Consider Your Ways (pamphlet). Salt Lake City, 1978.

Perry, L. Tom. "Train Up a Child." Ensign 18 (Nov. 1988):73–75.

"The Role of the Father in the Home." In Seek to Obtain My Word: Melchizedek Priesthood Personal Study Guide 1989, pp. 199–204. Salt Lake City, 1988.

Tanner, N. Eldon. "Fatherhood." Ensign 7 (June 1977):2–5.

Tuttle, A. Theodore. "The Role of Fathers." Ensign 4 (Jan. 1974):66–68.

A. LYNN SCORESBY

FATHERS' BLESSINGS

Fathers' blessings are given by the power of the MELCHIZEDEK PRIESTHOOD following the pattern of the ancient PATRIARCHS, such as ADAM, NOAH, ABRAHAM, Isaac, Jacob, LEHI, MOSIAH, ALMA<sup>2</sup>, and MORMON. All gave blessings to their children. Adam's final blessing upon several of his descendants is described in Doctrine and Covenants 107:53–57. So significant was the ORDINANCE on that occasion that "the Lord appeared unto them, and they rose up and blessed Adam" (TPJS, p. 38).

For the earthly blessing to be honored in heaven, it is necessary that a father has been baptized, has received the HOLY GHOST, and bears the Melchizedek Priesthood. Through these ordinances and COVENANTS, the father may claim the powers of heaven to guide his thoughts and ratify his words. To give such a blessing, the father places his hands upon the head of his child, and assures the child by word and spirit that the blessing, spoken by a loving parent, comes with divine approval and INSPIRATION.

The father may give blessings when requested by his wife or children or when he feels their need.

A father, assisted by other men who hold the Melchizedek Priesthood, gives his infant child a name and a father's blessing during a sacrament meeting (c. 1975; see D&C 20:70). Fathers may also bless their children at other times of need. Courtesy Doug Martin.

He does not force a blessing on anyone, for that would conflict both with the law of AGENCY and the spirit of LOVE. There is no ideal frequency for such blessings, only as the needs of the person and the whisperings of the Spirit suggest. A father will find performing this sacred ordinance easier if his relationships with his children are gentle and kind. If there is a conflict between father and child, it may be necessary to reconcile it before attempting the blessing.

A father's blessing is both an ordinance authorized by God and an action that draws father and child together even as it reassures a mother, who sees her husband spiritually minister to their child. It is a symbolic and official godlike act of pure love.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

"Fathers Blessings and Patriarchal Blessings." Melchizedek Priesthood Personal Study Guide, p. 43. Salt Lake City, 1988.

VICTOR L. BROWN, JR.

FAYETTE, NEW YORK

The township of Fayette, New York, is located in Seneca County between Seneca and Cayuga lakes.

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints was organized in the log cabin of Peter Whitmer, Sr., approximately 4.7 miles northwest of the village of Fayette and 3 miles southwest of modern Waterloo, New York (see ORGANIZATION OF THE CHURCH [1830]).

Joseph SMITH first came to Fayette in the spring of 1829, when David WHITMER, who knew Oliver COWDERY, invited him and the Prophet to come to his father's house from HARMONY, PENNSYLVANIA, to complete the translation of the Book of Mormon. They arrived in Fayette the first week of June and completed the translation by the end of June. They also preached occasionally in the area, baptizing many converts. Joseph Smith received five REVELATIONS in Fayette during that month (D&C 14–18). Soon after the translation was completed, Whitmer, Cowdery, and Martin HARRIS testified that they were shown the plates by a heavenly messenger near the Whitmer home (see BOOK OF MORMON WITNESSES).

In April 1830, the Prophet received a revelation instructing him to organize the Church on APRIL 6, which was accomplished in the home of Peter Whitmer, Sr. (D&C 20–21). In the days and months that followed, many meetings were held in the general area of Fayette and more converts were baptized. The first general conference of the Church was held in Fayette on June 9, 1830.

Because of renewed opposition in Harmony, Pennsylvania, where Joseph and his wife, Emma, had returned after the Church was organized, they moved again to the Whitmer home in Fayette, living there from August 1830 to January 1831. In those months, Joseph continued the work of his inspired translation of the Bible (see JOSEPH SMITH TRANSLATION OF THE BIBLE [JST]), part of which was later published as the BOOK OF MOSES; he also received thirteen additional revelations (D&C 28–40). The second general conference was held in Fayette on September 26, 1830.

In December 1830 and January 1831, revelations were received instructing the Latter-day Saints to move to Ohio to a more friendly environment (D&C 37:1–3; 38:31–32), where LDS missionaries had made many converts. Joseph and Emma Smith left Fayette in the latter part of January 1831, and most of the remaining members left later that spring and summer.

Today the Church has built a VISITORS CENTER, a chapel, and a replica of the Whitmer log cabin on the old Whitmer farm.

Reconstructed log home at the site of the Peter Whitmer, Sr., home in Fayette, New York. Here the Book of Mormon translation was completed, the testimony of the Three Witnesses was signed (June, 1829), and the Church was organized on April 6, 1830. Twenty revelations in the Doctrine and Covenants were received here. Courtesy LaMar C. Berrett.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Porter, Larry C. "A Study of the Origins of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in the States of New York and Pennsylvania, 1816–1831." Ph.D. diss., Brigham Young University, 1971.

LAMAR E. GARRARD

FEAR OF GOD

In ancient SCRIPTURE the phrase "fear of God" typically signified faith, reverence, and trust. Fear of God, so defined and felt, tends to diminish other forms of fear that arise in the absence of genuine faith. Thus, modern REVELATION admonishes against fearing to do good (D&C 6:33), fearing enemies (D&C 122:9; 136:17), fearing Satan (Moses 1:20), and fearing death (D&C 101:36). An undergirding principle permeates Latter-day Saint practice: "If ye are prepared ye shall not fear" (D&C 38:30). In the spiritual realm, unpreparedness can lead to what the scriptures call "a certain fearful looking for of judgment" (Heb. 10:27).

Latter-day Saints are sometimes described, because of an assumed overemphasis on works, as living in "fear and trembling." The phrase is Paul's (Phil. 2:12). Actually, Mormons aspire to follow Paul's teaching and practice to be "anxiously engaged in a good cause," but that anxiety is related to freedom and responsibility (see D&C 58:27).

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints was organized in the log cabin of Peter Whitmer, Sr., approximately 4.7 miles northwest of the village of Fayette and 3 miles southwest of modern Waterloo, New York (see ORGANIZATION OF THE CHURCH [1830]).

Joseph SMITH first came to Fayette in the spring of 1829, when David WHITMER, who knew Oliver COWDERY, invited him and the Prophet to come to his father's house from HARMONY, PENNSYLVANIA, to complete the translation of the Book of Mormon. They arrived in Fayette the first week of June and completed the translation by the end of June. They also preached occasionally in the area, baptizing many converts. Joseph Smith received five REVELATIONS in Fayette during that month (D&C 14–18). Soon after the translation was completed, Whitmer, Cowdery, and Martin HARRIS testified that they were shown the plates by a heavenly messenger near the Whitmer home (see BOOK OF MORMON WITNESSES).

In April 1830, the Prophet received a revelation instructing him to organize the Church on APRIL 6, which was accomplished in the home of Peter Whitmer, Sr. (D&C 20–21). In the days and months that followed, many meetings were held in the general area of Fayette and more converts were baptized. The first general conference of the Church was held in Fayette on June 9, 1830.

Because of renewed opposition in Harmony, Pennsylvania, where Joseph and his wife, Emma, had returned after the Church was organized, they moved again to the Whitmer home in Fayette, living there from August 1830 to January 1831. In those months, Joseph continued the work of his inspired translation of the Bible (see JOSEPH SMITH TRANSLATION OF THE BIBLE [JST]), part of which was later published as the BOOK OF MOSES; he also received thirteen additional revelations (D&C 28–40). The second general conference was held in Fayette on September 26, 1830.

In December 1830 and January 1831, revelations were received instructing the Latter-day Saints to move to Ohio to a more friendly environment (D&C 37:1–3; 38:31–32), where LDS missionaries had made many converts. Joseph and Emma Smith left Fayette in the latter part of January 1831, and most of the remaining members left later that spring and summer.

Today the Church has built a VISITORS CENTER, a chapel, and a replica of the Whitmer log cabin on the old Whitmer farm.

Reconstructed log home at the site of the Peter Whitmer, Sr., home in Fayette, New York. Here the Book of Mormon translation was completed, the testimony of the Three Witnesses was signed (June, 1829), and the Church was organized on April 6, 1830. Twenty revelations in the Doctrine and Covenants were received here. Courtesy LaMar C. Berrett.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Porter, Larry C. "A Study of the Origins of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in the States of New York and Pennsylvania, 1816–1831." Ph.D. diss., Brigham Young University, 1971.

LAMAR E. GARRARD

FEAR OF GOD

In ancient SCRIPTURE the phrase "fear of God" typically signified faith, reverence, and trust. Fear of God, so defined and felt, tends to diminish other forms of fear that arise in the absence of genuine faith. Thus, modern REVELATION admonishes against fearing to do good (D&C 6:33), fearing enemies (D&C 122:9; 136:17), fearing Satan (Moses 1:20), and fearing death (D&C 101:36). An undergirding principle permeates Latter-day Saint practice: "If ye are prepared ye shall not fear" (D&C 38:30). In the spiritual realm, unpreparedness can lead to what the scriptures call "a certain fearful looking for of judgment" (Heb. 10:27).

Latter-day Saints are sometimes described, because of an assumed overemphasis on works, as living in "fear and trembling." The phrase is Paul's (Phil. 2:12). Actually, Mormons aspire to follow Paul's teaching and practice to be "anxiously engaged in a good cause," but that anxiety is related to freedom and responsibility (see D&C 58:27).

They strive to find and fulfill their CALLINGS and fear to fall short of the divine purpose in their lives. They are constantly charged to magnify their callings and not to be weary in well-doing. Modern revelation promises that on condition of “persuasion, by long-suffering, by gentleness and meekness, and by love unfeigned” (D&C 121:41), “[their] confidence [shall] wax strong in the presence of God” (D&C 121:45). This parallels the promise of John: “Perfect love casteth out fear” (1 Jn. 4:18).

JOHN R. CHRISTIANSEN

FELLOWSHIPING MEMBERS

Latter-day Saints consider themselves brothers and sisters (see BROTHERHOOD and SISTERHOOD) responsible to help one another. Their informal aets of friendship and kindness foster congeniality within the Church and assist new members as they move into its social context. In addition, the Church has developed some practices specifically intended to help integrate new members.

A New Zealand Church member is greeted with the traditional “hongi” by John Shaw Welch, president of the LDS Maori Agricultural College (1917). Friendship, understanding, kindness, love, and service are fostered in Latter-day Saint communities through personal fellowshiping and social activities. Courtesy Edith W. Morgan.

After baptism, the full-time and stake missionaries present to new members a series of lessons entitled Discussions for New Members. Home teachers also teach them and help them become part of the local Church unit. The BISHOPRIC, priesthood quorum, and auxiliary leaders also help converts feel welcome. New members are encouraged to attend Church meetings and participate in other scheduled ward activities. Converts are also invited to accept Church CALLINGS (such as teaching a class or serving in an administrative capacity). Women are welcomed into RELIEF SOCIETY activities, and girls into YOUNG WOMEN; male adults and teenagers receive the PRIESTHOOD and begin functioning in their priesthood responsibilities. Newly baptized members grow in love for the gospel as they serve others. After one year of membership, worthy adult members are encouraged to attend the TEMPLE, where they receive TEMPLE ORDINANCES that bind families together as eternal units.

[See also Conversion; Joining the Church; Membership.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Discussions for New Members. Salt Lake City, 1987.

LYNN REED PAYNE

FEMINISM

Feminism is the philosophical belief that advocates the equality of women and men and seeks to remove inequities and to redress injustices against women. Far from a monolithic ideology, feminist theory embraces a variety of views on the nature of women and argues for a pluralistic vision of the world that regards as equally important the experiences of women of all races and classes.

In the United States, “feminism” has been an umbrella term encompassing a coalition of those women and men who share a devotion to the cause of women’s rights but who often differ on specific goals and tactics. Personal, religious, and political values all influence which reforms and measures a specific feminist will support.

They strive to find and fulfill their CALLINGS and fear to fall short of the divine purpose in their lives. They are constantly charged to magnify their callings and not to be weary in well-doing. Modern revelation promises that on condition of “persuasion, by long-suffering, by gentleness and meekness, and by love unfeigned” (D&C 121:41), “[their] confidence [shall] wax strong in the presence of God” (D&C 121:45). This parallels the promise of John: “Perfect love casteth out fear” (1 Jn. 4:18).

JOHN R. CHRISTIANSEN

FELLOWSHIPING MEMBERS

Latter-day Saints consider themselves brothers and sisters (see BROTHERHOOD and SISTERHOOD) responsible to help one another. Their informal acts of friendship and kindness foster congeniality within the Church and assist new members as they move into its social context. In addition, the Church has developed some practices specifically intended to help integrate new members.

A New Zealand Church member is greeted with the traditional “hongi” by John Shaw Welch, president of the LDS Maori Agricultural College (1917). Friendship, understanding, kindness, love, and service are fostered in Latter-day Saint communities through personal fellowshiping and social activities. Courtesy Edith W. Morgan.

After baptism, the full-time and stake missionaries present to new members a series of lessons entitled Discussions for New Members. Home teachers also teach them and help them become part of the local Church unit. The BISHOPRIC, priesthood quorum, and auxiliary leaders also help converts feel welcome. New members are encouraged to attend Church meetings and participate in other scheduled ward activities. Converts are also invited to accept Church CALLINGS (such as teaching a class or serving in an administrative capacity). Women are welcomed into RELIEF SOCIETY activities, and girls into YOUNG WOMEN; male adults and teenagers receive the PRIESTHOOD and begin functioning in their priesthood responsibilities. Newly baptized members grow in love for the gospel as they serve others. After one year of membership, worthy adult members are encouraged to attend the TEMPLE, where they receive TEMPLE ORDINANCES that bind families together as eternal units.

[See also Conversion; Joining the Church; Membership.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Discussions for New Members. Salt Lake City, 1987.

LYNN REED PAYNE

FEMINISM

Feminism is the philosophical belief that advocates the equality of women and men and seeks to remove inequities and to redress injustices against women. Far from a monolithic ideology, feminist theory embraces a variety of views on the nature of women and argues for a pluralistic vision of the world that regards as equally important the experiences of women of all races and classes.

In the United States, “feminism” has been an umbrella term encompassing a coalition of those women and men who share a devotion to the cause of women’s rights but who often differ on specific goals and tactics. Personal, religious, and political values all influence which reforms and measures a specific feminist will support.

They strive to find and fulfill their CALLINGS and fear to fall short of the divine purpose in their lives. They are constantly charged to magnify their callings and not to be weary in well-doing. Modern revelation promises that on condition of “persuasion, by long-suffering, by gentleness and meekness, and by love unfeigned” (D&C 121:41), “[their] confidence [shall] wax strong in the presence of God” (D&C 121:45). This parallels the promise of John: “Perfect love casteth out fear” (1 Jn. 4:18).

JOHN R. CHRISTIANSEN

FELLOWSHIPING MEMBERS

Latter-day Saints consider themselves brothers and sisters (see BROTHERHOOD and SISTERHOOD) responsible to help one another. Their informal aets of friendship and kindness foster congeniality within the Church and assist new members as they move into its social context. In addition, the Church has developed some practices specifically intended to help integrate new members.

A New Zealand Church member is greeted with the traditional “hongi” by John Shaw Welch, president of the LDS Maori Agricultural College (1917). Friendship, understanding, kindness, love, and service are fostered in Latter-day Saint communities through personal fellowshiping and social activities. Courtesy Edith W. Morgan.

After baptism, the full-time and stake missionaries present to new members a series of lessons entitled Discussions for New Members. Home teachers also teach them and help them become part of the local Church unit. The BISHOPRIC, priesthood quorum, and auxiliary leaders also help converts feel welcome. New members are encouraged to attend Church meetings and participate in other scheduled ward activities. Converts are also invited to accept Church CALLINGS (such as teaching a class or serving in an administrative capacity). Women are welcomed into RELIEF SOCIETY activities, and girls into YOUNG WOMEN; male adults and teenagers receive the PRIESTHOOD and begin functioning in their priesthood responsibilities. Newly baptized members grow in love for the gospel as they serve others. After one year of membership, worthy adult members are encouraged to attend the TEMPLE, where they receive TEMPLE ORDINANCES that bind families together as eternal units.

[See also Conversion; Joining the Church; Membership.]

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Discussions for New Members. Salt Lake City, 1987.

LYNN REED PAYNE

FEMINISM

Feminism is the philosophical belief that advocates the equality of women and men and seeks to remove inequities and to redress injustices against women. Far from a monolithic ideology, feminist theory embraces a variety of views on the nature of women and argues for a pluralistic vision of the world that regards as equally important the experiences of women of all races and classes.

In the United States, “feminism” has been an umbrella term encompassing a coalition of those women and men who share a devotion to the cause of women’s rights but who often differ on specific goals and tactics. Personal, religious, and political values all influence which reforms and measures a specific feminist will support.

The doctrine of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints converges in some areas with the ideals of feminism and diverges in others. It insists on the absolute spiritual equality of women and men, proclaiming that "all are alike unto God," both "black and white, bond and free, male and female" (2 Ne. 26:33; Gal. 3:28). GIFTS OF THE SPIRIT are given equally to men and women: "And now, he imparteth his word by angels unto men, yea, not only men but women also" (Alma 32:23). LDS principles argue unequivocally for the development of the full potential of each person, regardless of gender.

So central is the equality of all humankind to Christ's message that during his earthly ministry Christ openly rejected cultural proscriptions that relegated women to an inferior spiritual and political status. He recognized women's spirits and intellects; he taught them directly (Luke 10:38-42); he identified himself as the Messiah to a woman, the first such affirmation recorded in the New Testament (John 4:26); he healed women (Matt. 15:22-28) and raised a woman from the dead (Luke 8:49-56). After his resurrection, he appeared first to a woman, whom he asked to tell his apostles of the glorious event (John 20:11-18), although according to Jewish law women were not considered competent as legal witnesses.

Such equality of women and men is based on the celestial model of heavenly parents, both Father and Mother, who share "all power" and have "all things . . . subject unto them" (D&C 132:20) and who invite their children to emulate their example of perfect love and unity and become as they are. Mormons are taught that righteous power, held by heavenly parents and shared with their children, is never coercive but is characterized "by persuasion, by long-suffering, by gentleness and meekness, and by love unfeigned" (D&C 121:41). While the implications of these expansive beliefs are always subject to individual implementation, Mormon women and men have found in these doctrines sources of spiritual strength, including the desire to know more about MOTHER IN HEAVEN.

LDS doctrine is, however, at odds with several versions of feminism, including those that emphasize female sufficiency apart from men. Because Church doctrine stresses the necessity of overcoming differences and forging a celestial unity between husband and wife in order to achieve EXALTATION (cf. 1 Cor. 11:11), the radical feminist critique of the family as an institution of repression for women and the call for its replacement find little support among Latter-day Saints. While individual families may be repressive and dysfunctional, most Latter-day Saints believe that the defect is not inherent in the structure. Indeed, the family is viewed as the source of both men's and women's greatest work and joy, not only on earth but also in eternity.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Beecher, Manreen Ursenbach, and Lavina Fielding Anderson, eds. Sisters in Spirit: Mormon Women in Historical and Cultural Perspective. Urbana, Ill., 1987.
- Dialogue 6 (Summer 1971) and 14 (Winter 1981). Both issues have a number of essays on women in the Church.
- Donovan, Josephine. Feminist Theory: The Intellectual Traditions of American Feminism. New York, 1985.

MARY STOVALL RICHARDS

---

FINANCES OF THE CHURCH

The financial strength of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints derives primarily from the commitment of its members to the scriptural principle of TITHING and other forms of voluntary contributions and service. The collection and disbursement of all funds are carefully managed according to standard procedures worldwide and under the direct supervision of the FIRST PRESIDENCY. The Church also maintains limited business investments and financial reserves as part of its larger strategy for supporting expanding ecclesiastical programs. The handling of all funds is regularly audited in accordance with sound financial practices.

Latter-day Saints take seriously the commandment to pay tithing and the Lord's promises as given in the Old Testament:

Will a man rob God? Yet ye have robbed me. But ye say, Wherein have we robbed thee? In tithes and offerings. Ye are cursed with a curse: for ye have robbed me, even this whole nation. Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it [Mal. 3:8-10].

This law of finance for God's Church has been reiterated in latter-day scripture. In 1838 the Lord

The doctrine of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints converges in some areas with the ideals of feminism and diverges in others. It insists on the absolute spiritual equality of women and men, proclaiming that "all are alike unto God," both "black and white, bond and free, male and female" (2 Ne. 26:33; Gal. 3:28). GIFTS OF THE SPIRIT are given equally to men and women: "And now, he imparteth his word by angels unto men, yea, not only men but women also" (Alma 32:23). LDS principles argue unequivocally for the development of the full potential of each person, regardless of gender.

So central is the equality of all humankind to Christ's message that during his earthly ministry Christ openly rejected cultural proscriptions that relegated women to an inferior spiritual and political status. He recognized women's spirits and intellects; he taught them directly (Luke 10:38-42); he identified himself as the Messiah to a woman, the first such affirmation recorded in the New Testament (John 4:26); he healed women (Matt. 15:22-28) and raised a woman from the dead (Luke 8:49-56). After his resurrection, he appeared first to a woman, whom he asked to tell his apostles of the glorious event (John 20:11-18), although according to Jewish law women were not considered competent as legal witnesses.

Such equality of women and men is based on the celestial model of heavenly parents, both Father and Mother, who share "all power" and have "all things . . . subject unto them" (D&C 132:20) and who invite their children to emulate their example of perfect love and unity and become as they are. Mormons are taught that righteous power, held by heavenly parents and shared with their children, is never coercive but is characterized "by persuasion, by long-suffering, by gentleness and meekness, and by love unfeigned" (D&C 121:41). While the implications of these expansive beliefs are always subject to individual implementation, Mormon women and men have found in these doctrines sources of spiritual strength, including the desire to know more about MOTHER IN HEAVEN.

LDS doctrine is, however, at odds with several versions of feminism, including those that emphasize female sufficiency apart from men. Because Church doctrine stresses the necessity of overcoming differences and forging a celestial unity between husband and wife in order to achieve EXALTATION (cf. 1 Cor. 11:11), the radical feminist critique of the family as an institution of repression for women and the call for its replacement find little support among Latter-day Saints. While individual families may be repressive and dysfunctional, most Latter-day Saints believe that the defect is not inherent in the structure. Indeed, the family is viewed as the source of both men's and women's greatest work and joy, not only on earth but also in eternity.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Beecher, Manreen Ursenbach, and Lavina Fielding Anderson, eds. Sisters in Spirit: Mormon Women in Historical and Cultural Perspective. Urbana, Ill., 1987.
- Dialogue 6 (Summer 1971) and 14 (Winter 1981). Both issues have a number of essays on women in the Church.
- Donovan, Josephine. Feminist Theory: The Intellectual Traditions of American Feminism. New York, 1985.

MARY STOVALL RICHARDS

---

FINANCES OF THE CHURCH

The financial strength of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints derives primarily from the commitment of its members to the scriptural principle of TITHING and other forms of voluntary contributions and service. The collection and disbursement of all funds are carefully managed according to standard procedures worldwide and under the direct supervision of the FIRST PRESIDENCY. The Church also maintains limited business investments and financial reserves as part of its larger strategy for supporting expanding ecclesiastical programs. The handling of all funds is regularly audited in accordance with sound financial practices.

Latter-day Saints take seriously the commandment to pay tithing and the Lord's promises as given in the Old Testament:

Will a man rob God? Yet ye have robbed me. But ye say, Wherein have we robbed thee? In tithes and offerings. Ye are cursed with a curse: for ye have robbed me, even this whole nation. Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it [Mal. 3:8-10].

This law of finance for God's Church has been reiterated in latter-day scripture. In 1838 the Lord emphasized this important law in a revelation to the Prophet Joseph SMITH and defined tithing as “one-tenth of all their interest [income] annually” (D&C 119:4).

The years preceding the turn of the century were financially difficult for the young, struggling Church because of the 1890s depression and the escheat of Church funds during the long anti-polygamy campaign of the federal government. In May 1899 the aged Lorenzo SNOW, President of the Church, traveled from Salt Lake City to St. George, Utah, to comfort members whose lands had been plagued with severe drought. Streams and wells had dried up, and they faced starvation. During this visit President Snow was inspired to invoke the words of Malachi and promise the Saints in their dire and destitute circumstances that if they would pay an honest tithing, the “windows of heaven would be opened.” The Saints responded, the rains came, and the people were blessed (Cowan, pp. 15–18).

From this event, the principle of tithing received renewed emphasis throughout the Church. Members responded with increased commitment and faith, and within a few years, the Church was financially sound, and has remained so since. Through the faith and sacrifices of its members, the Church has been able to sustain steady worldwide growth. Latter-day Saints regard the payment of tithing as a privilege and often tell of spiritual and financial blessings that have come through obedience to this law.

In addition to paying tithing, members may contribute to several specially designated funds (see FINANCIAL CONTRIBUTIONS). On the first Sunday of each month, members fast for two meals and contribute, at a minimum, the cash equivalent of two meals to a FAST OFFERING fund, used exclusively to provide assistance to the poor and needy. MISSIONARY support is primarily a family responsibility. Since January 1, 1991, the monthly cost to missionaries and their families has been standardized to the average monthly expense of missionaries worldwide. However, members are also encouraged to contribute to assist those missionaries who have insufficient finances.

FINANCIAL ADMINISTRATION. Sound cash management procedures are used in the collection and disbursement of funds. Tithing is contributed at the local WARD or BRANCH and is remitted to designated Church headquarters. AREA or regional offices around the world collect and disburse funds as directed by the presiding officers at Church headquarters.

Fast offering funds are collected in the wards, where they are first used to care for the needy in the ward. Surplus fast offerings not required for use in the local areas are sent to Church headquarters or area offices. Any deficits from the care of the poor in the local unit are supplemented from general surplus fast offerings. Thus, a local BISHOP has the means to take care of his ward's welfare needs.

On July 8, 1838, a revelation was received by the Prophet Joseph Smith making known the method for the disbursement of tithing received by the Church: “Verily, thus saith the Lord, the time is now come, that it [tithing] shall be disposed of by a council, composed of the First Presidency of my Church, and of the bishop and his council, and by my high council” (D&C 120:1).

Subsequently, the Council on the Disposition of Tithes, consisting of the First Presidency of the Church, the QUORUM OF TWELVE APOSTLES, and the PRESIDING BISHOPRIC, was established. This council meets regularly and oversees the expenditures of all Church funds worldwide. It approves budgets and financial strategy and establishes financial policy.

Two subcommittees of the Council on the Disposition of Tithes are the Budget Committee and the Appropriations Committee. Both committees consist of the First Presidency, selected members of the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles, and members of the Presiding Bishopric.

